Hutchinson
Tho. Adams 1730.
William Adams
1808.

THE

WORKS

Of the late LEARNED DIVINE

Stephen Charnock, B.D.

BEING SEVERAL

DISCOURSES

UPON THE

Existence and Attributes

OF GOD.

VOL. I.

To which is added

His DISCOURSE of

DIVINE PROVIDENCE.

LONDON:

Printed for Ben. Griffin, and Tho. Cockeril, and are to be sold at the Three Legs in the Poultrey, over against the Stocks-Market. 1684.

XUM

Mr Toplady, speaking of this volume of Mr. Charnock on the Attributes of God, observes — "Perspicuity & depth; metaphysical sublimity & evangelical simplicity; immense learning & plain, but irrefragable reasoning conspire to render that performance one of the most inestimable productions, that ever did honor to the sanctified judgment & genius of a human being."

LIBRARY OF THE Union Theological Seminary
NEW YORK CITY PRESENTED BY Donor Unknown
AUG 4 1937

1684
C 484
(v.1)
190673

TO THE READER.

THIS long ſince promiſed, and greatly expected Volume of the Reverend Author upon the Divine Attributes, being Tranſcribed out of his own Manuſcripts, by the unwearied diligence of thoſe worthy Perſons that undertook it, is now at laſt come to thy hands: Doubt not but thy Reading will pay for thy waiting, and thy ſatisfaction make full compenſation for thy patience. In the Epiſtle before his Treatiſe of Providence, it was intimated that his following Diſcourſes would not be inferiour to that, and we are perſwaded, that e're thou haſt peruſed one half of this, thou wilt acknowledg that it was modeſtly ſpoken. Enough, aſſure thy ſelf, thou wilt find here for thy entertainment and delight, as well as profit: The ſublimeneſs, variety, and rareneſs of the Truths here handled, together with the elegancy of the Compoſure, neatneſs of the Style, and whatever is wont to make any Book deſirable, will all concur in the recommendation of this. What ſo high and noble a Subject, what ſo fit for his Meditations or thine, as the higheſt and nobleſt Being, and thoſe tranſcendly glorious Perfections wherewith he is clothed? A meer Contemplation of the Divine Excellencies may afford much pleaſure to any man that loves to exerciſe his Reaſon, and is addicted to ſpeculation: But what incomparable ſweetneſs then will holy Souls find, in viewing and conſidering thoſe Perfections now, which they are more fully to behold hereafter; and ſeeing what manner of God, how wiſe and powerful, how great, and good, and holy is he, in whom the Covenant intereſts them, and in the enjoyment of whom their happineſs conſiſts? If rich men delight to ſum up their vaſt Revenues, to read over their Rentals, look upon their Hoords; if they bleſs themſelves in their great Wealth, or, to uſe the Prophets words Jer. 9. 23. glory in their Riches, well may Believers rejoyce and glory in their knowing the Lord, verſ. 24. and pleaſe themſelves in ſeeing how rich they are in having an immenſely full, and All-ſufficient God for their Inheritance. Alas, how little do moſt men know of that Deity they profeſs to ſerve, and own, not as their Soveraign only, but their Portion? To ſuch this Author might ſay, as Paul to the Athenians, Whom you ignorantly worſhip, him declare I unto you. Theſe Treatiſes, Reader, will inform thee who he is, whom thou calleſt thine, preſent thee with a view of thy chief good, and make thee value thy ſelf a thouſand times more upon thy intereſt in God, than upon all external Accompliſhments, and worldly Poſſeſſions. Who but delights to hear well of one whom he loves? God is thy Love if thou be a Believer, and then it cannot but fill thee with delight and raviſhment to hear ſo much ſpoken in his Praiſe. David deſired to dwell in the Houſe of the Lord, that he might there behold his beauty; How much of that beauty (if thou art but capable of ſeeing it) mayeſt thou behold in this Volume, which was our Author's main buſineſs, for about three years before he died, to diſplay before his hearers? True indeed, the Lord's Glory, as ſhining forth before his heavenly Courtiers above, is unapproachable by mortal Men; but what of it is viſible in his Works, Creation, Providence, Redemption, falls under the cognizance of his Inferiour Subjects here; and this is in a great meaſure preſented to view in theſe Diſcourſes, and ſo much we may well ſay, as may (by the help of Grace) be effectual to raiſe thy Admiration, attract thy Love, provoke thy Deſires, and enable thee to make ſome gueſs at what is yet unſeen; and why not likewiſe to clear thy Eyes, and prepare them for future ſight, as well as turn them away from the contemptible Vanities of this preſent Life? Whatever is glorious in this World, yet (as the Apoſtle in another caſe) hath no glory by reaſon of the glory that excels: This excellent Glory is the Subject of this Book, to which all Created beauty is but meer ſhadow and duskyneſs. If thy Eyes be well fixed on this, they will not be eaſily drawn to wander after other Objects: If thy heart be taken with God, it will be mortified to every thing that is not God.

Mr. J. Wichens.
Mr. Aſhton.

Acts 17. 23.

2 Cor. 3. 10.

But thou haſt in this Book, not only an excellent Subject in the general, but great variety of Matter, for the imployment of thy Underſtanding, as well as enlivening thy Affections, and that too ſuch as thou wilt not readily find elſewhere; many excellent excellent things which are out of the rode of ordinary Preachers and VVriters, and which may be grateful to the Curious, no leſs than ſatisfactory to the Wiſe and Judicious. It is not therefore a Book to be play'd with, or ſlept over, but read with the moſt intent and ſerious mind; for though it afford much pleaſure for the Phancy, yet much more work for the heart, and hath indeed enough in it to buſie all the Faculties. The Dreſs is compleat and decent, yet not gariſh or Theatrical; the Rhetorick maſculine and vigorous, ſuch as became a Pulpit, and was never borrowed from the Stage; the Expreſſions full, clear, apt, and ſuch as are beſt ſuted to the weightineſs and ſpirituality of the Truths here delivered. 'Tis plain, he was no empty Preacher, but was more for ſenſe than ſound, filled up his words with matter, and choſe rather to inform his hearers Minds, than to claw any itching Ears. Yet we will not ſay but ſome little things, a Word, or a Phraſe now and then he may have, which no doubt had he lived to tranſcribe his own Sermons, he would have altered. If in ſome leſſer matters he differ from thee, it is but in ſuch as Godly and Learned Men do frequently, and may without breach of Charity differ in among themſelves; in ſome things he may differ from us too, and it may be we from each other; and where are there any two perſons, who have in all, eſpecially the more diſputalbe Points of Religion, exactly the ſame Sentiments, at leaſt expreſs themſelves altogether in the ſame terms? But this we muſt ſay, that though he treat of many of the moſt abſtruſe and myſterious Doctrines of Chriſtianity, which are the Subjects of great Debates and Controverſies in the world, yet we find no one material thing in which he may juſtly be called Heterodox (unleſs old Hereſies be of late grown Orthodox, and his differing from them muſt make him faulty) but generally delivers (as in his * former Pieces) what is moſt conſonant to the Faith of This, and other the beſt Reformed Churches. He was not indeed for that Modern Divinity which is ſo much in vogue with ſome, who would be counted the only ſound Divines; having taſted the old, he did not deſire the new, but ſaid the old is better. Some Errours, eſpecially the Socinian, he ſets himſelf induſtriouſly againſt, and cuts the very ſinews of them, yet, ſometimes, almoſt without naming them.

* Treatiſe of Providence and of Thoughts.

In the Doctrinal Part of ſeveral of his Diſcourſes thou wilt find the depth of Polemical Divinity, and in his inferences from thence the ſweetneſs of Practical; ſome things which may exerciſe the profoundeſt Scholar, and others which may inſtruct and edifie the weakeſt Chriſtian; nothing is more nervous than his Reaſonings, and nothing more affecting than his Applications.

Though he make great uſe of Schoolmen, yet they are certainly more beholden to him, than he to them; he adopts their Notions, but he refines them too, and improves them, and reforms them from the barbarouſneſs in which they were expreſſed, and dreſſeth them up in his own Language (ſo far as the nature of the matter will permit, and more clear terms are to be found) and ſo makes them intelligible to Vulgar Capacities, which in in their original rudeneſs were obſcure and ſtrange, even to Learned Heads.

In a word, he handles the great Truths of the Goſpel, with that Perſpicuity, Gravity, and Majeſty which beſt becomes the Oracles of God; and we have reaſon to believe, that no judicious and unbiaſſed Reader, but will acknowledg this to be incomparably the beſt practical Treatiſe the World ever ſaw in Engliſh upon this Subject. What Dr. Jackson did (to whom our Author gave all due reſpect) was more brief, and in another way. Dr. Preſton did worthily upon the Attributes in his day, but his Diſcourſes likewiſe are more ſuccinct, when this Authors are more full and large. But whatever were the mind of God in it, it was not his Will, that either of theſe two ſhould live to finiſh what he had begun, both being taken away when preaching upon this Subject. Happy Souls! Whoſe laſt breath was ſpent in ſo noble a VVork, praiſing God while* they had any being.

Pſa.*146.2.

His Method is much the ſame in moſt of theſe Diſcourſes, both in the Doctrinal and Practical Part, which will make the whole more plain, and facile to ordinary Readers. He rarely makes Objections, and yet frequently anſwers them, by implying them in thoſe Propoſitions he lays down for the clearing up the Truths he aſſerts. His Dexterity is admirable in the Applicatory work, where he not only brings down the higheſt Doctrines to the loweſt Capacities, but collects great variety of proper, pertinent, uſeful, and yet (many times) unthought of Inferences; and that from thoſe Truths, which however they afford much matter for Inquiſition and Speculation, yet might ſeem (unleſs to the moſt intelligent and judicious Chriſtians) to have a more remote influence upon practices. He is not like ſome School Writers, who attenuate and rarifie the Matter they Diſcourſe of to a degree bordering upon Annihilation; at leaſt beat it ſo thin, that a puff of breath may blow it away; ſpin their Thred ſo fine, that the Cloth, when made up, proves uſeleſs; Solidity dwindles into Niceties, and what we thought we had got by their Aſſertions, we loſe by their Diſtinctions. But if our Author have ſome Subtil-ties and ſuperfine Notions in his Argumentations, yet he condenſeth them again, and conſolidates them into ſubſtantial and profitable Corolaries in his Applications: And in them his main buſineſs is, as to diſcipline a prophane VVorld for its neglect of God and contempt of him in his moſt adorable and ſhining Perfections; ſo likewiſe to ſhew how the Divine Attributes are not only infinitely excellent in themſelves, but a grand Foundation for all true Divine Worſhip, and ſhould be the great Motives to provoke men to the exerciſe of Faith, and Love, and Fear, and Humility, and all that holy Obedience they are called to by the Goſpel: And this without peradventure is the great end of all thoſe rich Diſcoveries God hath in his VVord made of himſelf to us. And Reader, if theſe elaborate Diſcourſes of this holy Man, through the Lord's bleſſing, become a means of promoting Holineſs in thee, and ſtir thee up to love, and live to the God of his praiſe, we are well aſſured that his end in Preaching them is anſwered, and ſo is ours in publiſhing them. Pſal 109. 1.

ties

Thine in the Lord,

EDW. VEEL.

RI. ADAMS.

The

The ſeveral Diſcourſes in this Volume. VIZ.

Page

1. & 47. THE Exiſtence of God, and practical Atheiſm; from Pſal. 14. 1. The Fool hath ſaid in his heart there is no God, &c.

109. & 129. God a Spirit, and Spiritual Worſhip; from John 4. 24. God is a Spirit, and they that worſhip him muſt worſhip him in ſpirit truth.

179. The Eternity of God; from Pſal. 90. 2. Before the Mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadſt formed the Earth and the World: even from everlaſting to everlaſting thou art God.

203. The Immutability of God; from Pſal. 102. 26, 27. They ſhall periſh, but thou ſhalt endure: Yea, all of them ſhall wax old, like a Garment; as a Veſture ſhalt thou change them, and they ſhall be changed. But thou art the ſame, and thy years ſhall have no end,

240. The Omnipreſence of God; from Jer. 23. 24. Can any hide himſelf in ſecret places, that I ſhall not ſee him, ſaith the Lord? Do not I fill Heaven and Earth, ſaith the Lord?

271. God's Infinite Knowledg; from Pſal. 147. 5. Great is our Lord, and of great power: His underſtanding is infinite.

339. God's Infinite Wiſdom; from Rom. 16. 27. To God only wiſe, be glory through Jeſus Chriſt for ever. Amen.

443. God's Infinite Power; from Job. 26. 14. Lo, theſe are parts of his ways, but how little a portion is heard of him; But the Thunder of his Power who can underſtand?

499. God's Infinite Holineſs; from Exod. 15. 11. Who is like unto thee, O Lord, among the Gods? Who is like thee, glorious in holineſs, fearful in praiſes, doing wonders?

574. God's Infinite Goodneſs, from Mark 10. 18. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Why calleſt thou me good? There is none good but one, that is God.

696. The Dominion of God; from Pſal. 103. 19. The Lord hath prepared his Throne in the Heavens; and his Kingdom ruleth over all.

780. God's Infinite Patience; from Nahum 1. 3. The Lord is ſlow to Anger, and great in Power, and will not at all acquit the Wicked: The Lord hath his way in the Whirlwind, and in the Storm, and the Clouds are the Duſt of his feet.

A DISCOURSE UPON THE Existence of God.

Psalm 14. 1.

The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God; they are corrupt, they have done abominable Works: there is none that doth good.

THIS Psalm is a description of the deplorable corruption by Nature of every Son of Adam, since the withering of that Common Root. Some restrain it to the Gentiles, as a Wilderness full of Bryars and Thorns, as not concerning the Jews, the Garden of God, planted by his Grace, and watered by the Dew of Heaven. But the Apostle, the best Interpreter, rectifies this in extending it by name to Jews, as well as Gentiles, Rom. 3. 9. [We have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin.] And v. 10. 11, 12. Cites part of this Psalm, and other passages of Scripture, for the further evidence of it; concluding by Jews and Gentiles, every person in the world naturally in this State of Corruption.

The Psalmist first declares the Corruption of the faculties of the Soul, the fool hath said in his heart. Secondly, The streams issuing from thence, they are corrupt, &c. The first in Atheistical principles, the other in unworthy practices; and lays all the Evil, Tyranny, Lust and Persecutions by men, (as if the World were only for their sake) upon the neglects of God, and the Atheism cherished in their hearts.

The fool, a term in Scripture signifying a wicked man, used also by the Heathen Philosophers to signifie a vicious person, נבל as coming from נבל signifies the extinction of life in Men, Animals and Plants, so the word נבל is taken *, a plant that hath lost all that juyce that made it lovely and useful. So a fool is one that hath lost his Wisdom, and right notion of God and Divine things, which were communicated to man by Creation; one dead in sin, yet one not so much void of rational faculties, as of Grace in those faculties; not one that wants reason, but abuses his reason: In Scripture the word signifies foolish. ‖

* Isa. 40. 7. נבל צץ the flower fadeth Isa. 28. 1.

Said in his heart, that is, he thinks, or he doubts, or he wishes. The thoughts of the heart are in the nature of Words to God, though not to men. Tis used in the like case of the Atheistical person, Psal. 10. 11. 13. He hath said in his heart, God hath forgotten, he hath said in his heart thou wilt not require it. He doth not form a Syllogism, as Calvin speaks, that there is no God: He dares not openly publish it, though he dares secretly think it. He cannot rase out the thoughts of a Deity, though he endeavours to blot those Characters of God in his Soul. He hath some doubts whether there be a God or no: He wishes there were not any, and sometimes hopes there is none at all. He could not so ascertain himself by convincing arguments to produce to the World, but he tampered with his own heart to bring it to that perswasion, and smothered in himself those notices of a Deity; which is so plain against the light of nature, that such a Man may well be called a fool for it.

‖ Mais נכל and לא כחם put together Deut. 32. 6. Oh foolish people and unwise.

* אין אלהים No God * Muis

There is no God *] לית שולטנא non poteſtas Domini, Chaldæ. Tis not Jehovah, which name ſignifies the Eſſence of God, as the Prime and Supream being; but Eloahia, which name ſignifies the Providence of God, God as a Rector and Judge. Not that he denyes the Exiſtence of a Supream being that Created the World, but his regarding the Creatures, his Government of the world, and conſequently his reward of the Righteous or puniſhments of the Wicked.

* Cocceius.

* There is a threefold denial of God, 1. Quoad Exiſtentiam; this is abſolute Atheiſm, 2. Quoad Providentiam, or his inſpection into, or care of the things of the World, bounding him in the Heavens. 3. Quoad Naturam, in regard of one or other of the perfections due to his nature.

Not owning him as the Egyptians called, θεὸν ἐνεδρεύοντα * Fugubin in eloc.

Of the denial of the Providence of God moſt underſtand this * not excluding the abſolute Atheiſt, as Diogaras is reported to be, nor the Sceptical Atheiſt, as Protagoras, who doubted whether there were a God. Thoſe that deny the Providence of God, do in effect deny the being of a God; for they ſtrip him of that Wiſdom, Goodneſs, Tenderneſs, Mercy, Juſtice, Righteouſneſs, which are the Glory of the Deity. And that principle, of a greedy deſire to be uncontroul'd in their Luſts, which induceth men to a denial of Providence, that thereby they might ſtifle thoſe ſeeds of fear which infect and embitter their ſinful pleaſures, may as well lead them to deny that there is any ſuch being as a God.

That at one blow, their fears may be daſht all in peeces and diſſolved by the removal of the Foundation: As men, who deſire liberty to commit works of darkneſs, would not have the lights in the Houſe dimm'd, but extinguiſhed. What men ſay againſt Providence, becauſe they would have no check in their Luſts, they may ſay in their hearts againſt the Exiſtence of God upon the ſame account; little difference between the diſſenting from the one, and diſowning the other.

They are corrupt, they have done abominable works, there is none that doth good.

He ſpeaks of the Atheiſt in the ſingular, the Fool; of the corruption iſſuing in the life in the plural; Intimating that though ſome few may choak in their hearts the ſentiments of God and his Providence, and poſitively deny them, yet there is ſomething of a ſecret Atheiſm in all, which is the fountain of the evil practices in their lives, not an utter diſowning of the Being of a God, but a denial or doubting of ſome of the rights of his nature: * When men deny the God of purity, they muſt needs be polluted in Soul and Body, and grow brutiſh in their actions: When the ſenſe of Religion is ſhaken off, all kind of wickedneſs is eagerly ruſht into, whereby they become as loathſome to God as putrified Carcaſes are to men *: Not one or two evil actions is the product of ſuch a principle, but the whole ſcene of a mans life is corrupted and becomes execrable.

* Atheiſm abſolute is not in all mens Judgements, but practical is in all mens actions.
* The Apoſtle in the Romans applying the later part of it to all mankind, but not the former.
As the word tranſlated corrupt ſignifies.

No man is exempted from ſome ſpice of Atheiſm by the depravation of his nature, which the Pſalmiſt intimates, there is none that doth good: Though there are indelible convictions of the being of a God, that they cannot abſolutely deny it; yet there are ſome Atheiſtical bublings in the hearts of men, which evidence themſelves in their actions: As the Apoſtle, Tit. 1. 16. They profeſs that they know God, but in works they deny him. Evil works are a duſt ſtirred up by an Atheiſtical breath. He that habituates himſelf in ſome ſordid luſt, can ſcarcely be ſaid ſeriouſly and firmly to believe that there is a God in being, and the Apoſtle doth not ſay that they know God, but they profeſs to know him: True knowledge and profeſſion of knowledge are diſtinct. It intimates alſo to us, the unreaſonableneſs of Atheiſm in the Conſequence; when men ſhut their eyes againſt the Beams of ſo clear a Sun, God revengeth himſelf upon them for their impiety, by leaving them to their own wills, lets them fall into the deepeſt ſink and dregs of iniquity; and ſince they doubt of him in their hearts, ſuffers them above others to deny him in their works, this the Apoſtle diſcourſeth at large *.

* Rom. 1. 24.

The Text then is a deſcription of mans Corruption.

1. Of his mind. The fool hath ſaid in his heart. No better title than that of a fool is afforded to the Atheiſt.

2. Of the other faculties, 1. In ſins of Commiſſion, expreſt by the loathſomneſs [corrupt, abominable] 2. In ſins of Omiſſion [there is none that doth good] he lays down the Corruption of the mind as the cauſe, the corruption of the other faculties as the effect.

1. Tis

I. 'Tis a great Folly to deny or doubt of the Exiſtence or Being of God: Or, An Atheiſt is a great Fool.

II. Practical Atheiſm is natural to Man in his corrupt State. 'Tis againſt Nature as conſtituted by God; but natural, as Nature is depraved by Man: The abſolute diſowning of the Being of a God is not natural to men, but the contrary is natural; but an inconſideration of God, or miſ-repreſentation of his Nature, is natural to Man as corrupt.

III. A ſecret Atheiſm, or a partial Atheiſm is the Spring of all the wicked Practices in the world: The diſorders of the Life ſpring from the ill diſpoſitions of the Heart.

For the firſt, Every Atheiſt is a Grand Fool. If he were not a Fool, he would not imagine a thing ſo contrary to the ſtream of the Univerſal Reaſon in the world, contrary to the rational Dictates of his own Soul, and contrary to the Teſtimony of every Creature, and Link in the Chain of Creation? If he were not a Fool, he would not ſtrip himſelf of Humanity, and degrade himſelf lower than the moſt deſpicable Brute.

'Tis a Folly, for tho God be ſo inacceſſible, that we cannot know him perfectly, yet he is ſo much in the light, that we cannot be totally ignorant of him: As he cannot be comprehended in his Eſſence, he cannot be unknown in his Exiſtence; 'tis as eaſie by Reaſon to underſtand that he is, as it is difficult to know what he is.

The demonſtrations Reaſon furniſheth us with for the Exiſtence of God, will be Evidences of the Atheiſt's Folly. One would think there were little need of ſpending time in evidencing this Truth, ſince in the Principle of it, it ſeems to be ſo univerſally own'd, and at the firſt propoſal and demand, gains the aſſent of moſt men.

But 1. Doth not the growth of Atheiſm among us render this Neceſſary? May it not juſtly be ſuſpected, that the ſwarms of Atheiſts are more numerous in our times, than Hiſtory Records to have been in any Age: When Men will not only ſay it in their hearts, but publiſh it with their lips, and boaſt that they have ſhaken off thoſe Shackles which bind other mens Conſciences? Doth not the bare-fac'd Debauchery of men evidence ſuch a ſettled Sentiment, or at leaſt a careleſs Beleif of the Truth, which lies at the root, and ſprouts up in ſuch venemous branches in the world? Can mens hearts be free from that Principle wherewith their Practices are ſo openly depraved? 'Tis true, the light of Nature ſhines too vigorouſly for the Power of Man totally to put it out; yet loathſome Actions impair and weaken the actual thoughts and conſiderations of a Deity, and are like Miſts, that darken the light of the Sun, though they cannot extinguiſh it: their Conſciences, as a Candleſtick, muſt hold it, though their unrighteouſneſs obſcure it, Rom. 1. 18. [Who hold the Truth in Unrighteouſneſs.] The ingraved Characters of the Law of Nature remain, though they daub them with their muddy Luſts to make them illegible: So that ſince the inconſideration of a Deity is the cauſe of all the wickedneſs and extravagances of Men; and as Auſtin ſaith, the Propoſition is alwaies true, The Fool hath ſaid in his heart, &c. And more evidently true in this Age than any; it will not be unneceſſary to diſcourſe of the Demonſtrations of this firſt Principle,

The Apoſtles ſpent little time in urging this Truth, it was taken for granted all over the world, and they were generally devout in the Worſhip of thoſe Idols, they thought to be Gods: That Age run from one God to many, and our Age is running from one God to none at all.

2. The Exiſtence of God is the Foundation of all Religion. The whole Building totters if the Foundation be out of courſe: If we have not deliberate and right Notions of it, we ſhall perform no Worſhip, no Service, yeild no affection to him. If there be not a God, 'tis impoſſible there can be one; for Eternity is Eſſential to the notion of a God; ſo all Religion would be vain, and unreaſonable to pay Homage to that which is not in being, nor can ever be. We muſt firſt believe that he is, and that he is what he declares himſelf to be, before we can ſeek him, adore him, and devote our Affections to him: * We cannot pay God a due and regular Homage, unleſs we underſtand him in his Perfections, what he is; and we can pay him no Homage at all, unleſs we believe that he is. * Heb. 11. 6.

3. 'Tis fit we ſhould know why we believe, that our Beleif of a God, may appear to be upon undeniable Evidence, and that we may give a better reaſon for his Exiſtence, than that we have heard our Parents and Teachers tell us ſo, and our acquaintance think ſo. 'Tis as much as to ſay there is no God, when we know not why we believe there is, and would not conſider the Arguments for his Exiſtence.

4. It is neceſſary to depreſs that ſecret Atheiſm which is in the heart of every man by nature. Though every viſible object, which offers it ſelf to our ſenſe, preſents a Deity to our minds, and exhorts us to ſubſcribe to the truth of it, yet there is a Root of Atheiſm ſpringing up ſometimes in wavering thoughts, and fooliſh imaginations, inordinate actions, and ſecret wiſhes. Certain it is, that every man, that doth not love God, denyes God; now can he, that diſaffects him, and hath a ſlaviſh fear of him, wiſh his Exiſtence, and ſay to his own heart with any chearfulneſs, there is a God, and make it his cheif care to perſwade himſelf of it? He would perſwade himſelf there is no God, and ſtifle the ſeeds of it in his Reaſon and Conſcience, that he might have the greateſt liberty to entertain the allurements of the Fleſh.

'Tis neceſſary to Excite men to daily and actual conſiderations of God and his nature, which would be a bar to much of that wickedneſs which overflows in the lives of men,

5. Nor is it unuſeful to thoſe that effectually believe and love him; * for thoſe who have had a converſe with God, and felt his powerful influences in the ſecrets of their hearts, to take a proſpect of thoſe ſatisfactory accounts which reaſon gives of that God they adore and love; to ſee every Creature juſtifie them in their owning of him, and affections to him: Indeed the Evidences of a God, ſtriking upon the Conſcience of thoſe who reſolve to cleave to ſin as their cheifeſt darling, will daſh their pleaſures with unwelcome mixtures.

* Coccei Sum. Theol. c. 8. § 1.

I ſhall further premiſe this;

That the Folly of Atheiſm is evidenced by the light of Reaſon. Men that will not liſten to Scripture, as having no counterpart of it in their Souls, cannot eaſily deny natural Reaſon, which riſeth up on all ſides for the juſtification of this Truth: There is a natural as well as a revealed Knowledge, and the Book of the Creatures is legible in declaring the Being of a God, as well as the Scriptures are in declaring the Nature of a God; there are outward objects in the World, and common Principles in the Conſcience, whence it may be inferr'd:

For, 1. God in regard of his Exiſtence is not only the diſcovery of Faith, but of Reaſon. God hath revealed not only his Being, but ſome ſparks of his eternal Power and Godhead in his Works, as well as in his Word. Rom. 1. 19, 20. God hath ſhewed it unto them. How? * in his works; by the things that are made, tis a diſcovery to our Reaſon, as ſhining in the Creatures; and an object of our Faith as breaking out upon us in the Scriptures: 'tis an Article of our Faith, and an Article of our Reaſon. Faith ſuppoſeth natural knowledge, as Grace ſuppoſeth nature. Faith indeed is properly of things above Reaſon, purely depending upon Revelation: What can be demonſtrated by natural light, is not ſo properly the object of Faith; though in regard of the addition of a certainty by Revelation, it is ſo.

* Aquin.

The belief that God is, which the Apoſtle ſpeaks of, * is not ſo much of the bare Exiſtence of God, as what God is in Relation to them that ſeek to him, viz. a Rewarder. The Apoſtle ſpeaks of the Faith of Abel, the Faith of Enoch, ſuch a Faith that pleaſes God: But the Faith of Abel teſtified in his ſacrifice, and the Faith of Enoch teſtified in his walking with God, was not ſimply a Faith of the Exiſtence of God. Cain in the time of Abel, other men in the World in the time of Enoch, believed this as well as they: But it was a Faith joyned with the Worſhip of God, and deſirous to pleaſe him in the way of his own appointment; ſo that they believed that God was ſuch as he had declared himſelf to be in his promiſe to Adam, ſuch an one as would be as good as his word, and bruiſe the Serpents head: He that ſeeks to God according to the mind of God, muſt believe that he is ſuch a God that will pardon ſin, and Juſtifie a ſeeker of him; that he is a God of that ability and will, to Juſtifie a ſinner in that way he hath appointed for the clearing the Holineſs of his Nature, and vindicating the Honour of his Law violated by man.

* Heb. 11. 6.

No man can ſeek God, or love God, unleſs he believe him to be thus, and he cannot ſeek God without a diſcovery of his own mind how he would be ſought.

For

For it is not a seeking God in any way of mans Invention, that renders him capable of this desired fruit of a Reward: He that believes God as a Rewarder, must believe the promise of God concerning the Messiah. Men, under the Conscience of sin, cannot tell, without a divine discovery, whether God will reward, or how he will reward the Seekers of him; and therefore cannot act towards him as an object of Faith: Would any man seek God meerly because he is, or love him because he is, if he did not know that he should be acceptable to him? The bare Existence of a thing is not the ground of affection to it, but those qualities of it, and our interest in it, which render it amiable and delightful. How can men whose Consciences fly in their faces, seek God or love him, without this knowledge that he is a Rewarder? Nature doth not shew any way to a Sinner, how to reconcile Gods provoked Justice with his Tenderness. The Faith the Apostles speaks of here, is a Faith that eyes the reward as an encouragement, and the Will of God as the Rule of its acting, he doth not speak simply of the Existence of God.

I have spoken the more of this place, because the Socinians * use this to decry any natural knowledge of God, and that the Existence of God is only to be known by Revelation, so that by that reason any one that lived without the Scripture hath no ground to believe the being of a God.

* Voet. Theol. natural. cap. 3. § 1. p. 22.

[The Scripture ascribes a knowledge of God to all Nations in the World, Rom. 1. 19. not only a faculty of knowing, if they had arguments and demonstrations; as an ignorant man in any art hath a faculty to know; but it ascribes an actual knowledge, ver. 19 manifest in them, ver. 21. They knew God, not they might know him, they knew him when they did not care for knowing him: The notices of God are as intelligible to us by reason, as any object in the World is visible, he is written in every Letter.

2. We are often in the Scripture sent to take a prospect of the Creatures for a discovery of God. The Apostles drew arguments from the Topicks of nature, when they discoursed with those that owned the Scripture, Rom. 1. 19. As well as when they treated with those that were ignorant of it, as Acts 14. 15, 16. And among the Philosophers of Athens, Acts 17. 27, 29. Such arguments the Holy Ghost in the Apostles, thought sufficient to convince men of the Existence, Unity, Spirituality, and Patience of God. * Such arguments had not been used by them and the Prophets from the visible things in the world to silence the Gentiles with whom they dealt, had not this Truth, and much more about God, been demonstrable by natural Reason: They knew well enough that probable arguments would not satisfie piercing and inquisitive minds.

* Voet. Theol. natural. cap. 3. § 1. p. 22.

In Pauls account the Testimony of the Creatures was without contradiction; God himself justifies this way of proceeding by his own example, and remits Job to the consideration of the Creatures, to spell out something of his Divine Perfections. * And this is so convincing an argument of the Existence of God, that God never vouchsafed any Miracle, or put forth any act of Omnipotency, besides what was evident in the Creatures for satisfaction of the Curiosity of any Atheist, or the evincing of his Being, as he hath done for the Evidencing those Truths which were not written in the Book of Nature, or for the restoring a decayed worship, or the protection or deliverance of his people: Those Miracles in publishing the Gospel, indeed did demonstrate the Existence of some supream Power; but they were not seals designedly affixt for that, but for the confirmation of that truth, which was above the ken of purblind Reason, and purely the birth of Divine Revelation: Yet what proves the Truth of any Spiritual Doctrine, proves also in that act the Existence of the Divine Author of it: The Revelation alwayes implies a Revealer, and that which manifests it to be a Revelation, manifests also the supream Revealer of it. By the same light the Sun manifests other things to us, it also manifests it self. But what Miracles could rationally be supposed to work upon an Atheist, who is not drawn to a sence of the Truth proclaimed aloud by so many wonders of the Creation?

* Job. 28. 39, 40. &c. Tis but one truth in Philosophy and Divinity, That which is false in one, cannot be true in another; Truth in what appearance so ever doth never contradict it self.

Let us now proceed to the demonstration of the Atheists Folly.

'Tis a Folly to deny or doubt of a Soveraign being, incomprehensible in his Nature, infinite in his Essence and Perfections, independant in his Operations, who hath given being to the whole frame of sensible and intelligible Creatures, and governs them them according to their ſeveral natures, by an unconceivable Wiſdom; who fills the Heavens with the Glory of his Majeſty, and the Earth with the influences of his Goodneſs.

'Tis a Folly inexcuſable, to renounce in this caſe all appeal to univerſal Conſent, and the joynt aſſurances of the Creatures.

Reaſon 1. Tis a Folly to deny or doubt of that which hath been the acknowledged Sentiment of all Nations, in all Places and Ages There is no Nation but hath owned ſome kind of Religion, and therefore no Nation but hath conſented in the notion of a Supream Creator and Governour.

1. This hath been univerſal.
2. It hath been conſtant and uninterrupted.
3. Natural and innate.

Firſt, 1. It hath been univerſally aſſented to by the Judgments and Practices of all Nations in the World.

1. No Nation hath been exempt from it. All Hiſtories of former and later Ages have not produced any one Nation but fell under the force of this Truth. Though they have differed in their Religions, they have agreed in this Truth; here both Heathen, Turk, Jew, and Chriſtian, center without any Contention. No quarrel was ever commenced on this Score; though about other opinions Wars have been ſharp, and Enmities irreconcilable; The Notion of the Exiſtence of a Deity was the ſame in All, Indians as well as Britains; Americans as well as Jews.

It hath not been an opinion peculiar to this or that people, to this or that Sect of Philoſophers; but hath been as univerſal as the Reaſon whereby men are differenc'd from other Creatures, ſo that ſome have rather defin'd man by animal religioſum, than animal rationale. Tis ſo twiſted with Reaſon, that a man cannot be accounted rational, unleſs he own an object of Religion: Therefore he that underſtands not this renounces his humanity, when he renounceth a Divinity.

No inſtance can be given of any one People in the World that diſclaimed it. It hath been owned by the wiſe and ignorant, by the Learned and Stupid, by thoſe who had no other guide but the dimmeſt Light of Nature, as well as by thoſe whoſe Candles were ſnuft by a more polite Education, and that without any ſolemn debate and contention: Though ſome Philoſophers have been known to change their opinions in the concerns of Nature, yet none can be proved to have abſolutely changed their opinion concerning the being of a God: One died for aſſerting one God, none in the former Ages upon Record hath died for aſſerting no God. Go to the the utmoſt bounds of America, you may find People without ſome broken peices of the Law of Nature, but not without this ſignature and ſtamp upon them, though they wanted commerce with other Nations, except as ſavage as themſelves; in whom the Light of Nature was as it were ſunk into the Socket, who are but one remove from Brutes, who cloath not their bodies, cover not their ſhame, yet were they as ſoon known to own a God, as they were known to be a people: They were poſſeſſed with the Notion of a Supream Being, the Author of the World, had an object of Religious adoration, put up Prayers to the Deity, they owned for the good things they wanted, and the diverting the evils they feared: No people ſo untamed, where abſolute perfect Atheiſm hath gained a footing.

Not one Nation of the World known in the time of the Romans, that were without their Ceremonies, whereby they ſignified their devotion to a Deity. They had their places of Worſhip, where they made their Vows, preſented their Prayers, offered their Sacrifices, and implored the Aſſiſtance of what they thought to be a God, and in their diſtreſſes run immediately, without any deliberation, to their Gods; ſo that the notion of a Deity was as inward and ſetled in them as their own Souls, and indeed runs in the blood of mankind: The diſtempers of the underſtanding, cannot utterly deface it; you ſhall ſcarce find the moſt diſtracted Bedlam in his raving fits to deny a God, though he may blaſpheme and fancy himſelf one.

2. Nor doth the Idolatry and multiplicity of Gods in the World weaken, but confirm this univerſal conſent. Whatſoever unworthy conceits men have had of God in all Nations, or whatſoever degrading repreſentations they have made of him; yet they all concur in this, that there is a Supream Power to be ador'd. Tho one People worshipped the Sun, others the Fire; and the Egyptians, Gods out of their Rivers, Gardens, and Fields; yet the Notion of a Deity existent, who created and governed the World, and conferred daily benefits upon them, was maintained by all, tho applyed to the Stars, and in part to those sordid Creatures. All the Dagons of the World establish this truth, and fall down before it. Had not the Nations owned the being of a God, they had never offered Incense to an Idol: Had there not been a deep impression of the Existence of a Deity, they had never exalted Creatures below themselves to the honour of Altars: Men could not so easily have been deceived by forged Deities, if thy had not had a Notion of a real one. Their fondness to set up others in the place of God, evidenced a natural knowledge that there was One, who had a right to be Worshipped. If there were not this sentiment of a Deity, no man would ever have made an Image of a peice of Wood, Worshipp'd it, pray'd to it, and said *deliver me for thou art my God. They applyed a general Notion to a perticular Image. The difference is in the manner, and immediate object of worship, not in the formal ground of worship. The worship sprung from a true Principle, though it was not applyed to a right object: While they were rational Creatures, they could not deface the Notion; yet while they were corrupt Creatures it was not difficult to apply themselves to a wrong object from a true principle. A blind man knows he hath a way to go as well as one of the clearest sight, but because of his blindness he may miss the way and stumble into a Ditch. No man would be impos'd upon to take a Bristol Stone instead of a Diamond, if he did not know that there were such things as Diamonds in the World: nor any man spread forth his hands to an Idol, if he were altogether without the sense of a Deity. Whether it be a false or a true God men apply to, yet in both, the natural sentiment of a God is evidenc'd; all their mistakes were grafts inserted in this Stock, since they would multiply gods rather than deny a Deity.

they

* Isa. 44. 17

* How should such a general submission be entered into by all the world, so as to adore things of a base alloy, if the force of Religion were not such, that in any fashion a man would seek the satsfaction of his natural instinct to some object of worship? This great diversity confirms this consent to be a good argument, for it evidenceth it not to be a Cheat, combination, or conspiracy to deceive, or a mutual intelligence, but every one finds it in his climate, yea in himself. People would never have given the Title of a God to men or Brutes, had there not been a pre-existing, and unquestioned perswasion, that there was such a being, how else should the Notion of a God come into their minds, the Notion that there is a God must be more ancient.

* Charron de la Sagesse Livr. 1. *Cha.*7. p. 43,44.

* Gassend. Phys. § 1. *lib.*4. *Ca.*2. p. 291.

3. Whatsoever disputes there have been in the World, this of the existence of God was never the subject of contention. All other things have been questioned. What Jarrings were there among Philosophers about natural things, into how many parties were they split, with what animosities did they maintain their several judgements? But we hear of no solemn Controversies about the Existence of a Supream Being: This never met with any considerable contradiction: No Nation, that hath put other things to question, would ever suffer this to be disparaged, so much as by a publick doubt, *We find among the Heathen contentions about the Nature of God, and the number of gods; some asserted an innumerable multitude of gods, some affirmed him to be subject to birth and death, some affirmed the intire World was God; others fancied him to be a circle of a bright Fire; others that he was a Spirit diffused through the whole World: Yet they unanimously concurr'd in this, as the Judgement of Universal Reason, that there was such a Sovereign Being: And those that were sceptical in every thing else, and asserted that the greatest certainty was that there was nothing certain, profest a certainty in this. The question was not whether there was a First Cause, but what it was. *'Tis much the same thing, as the disputes about the nature and matter of the Heavens, the Sun and Planets, tho there be great diversity of Judgements, yet all agree that there are Heavens, Sun, Planets? so all the Contentions among men about the Nature of God, weaken not, but rather confirm, that there is a God, since there was never a publick formal debate about his Existence. Those that have been ready to pull out one anothers

* Amyrant des. Religion p. 501

* Gassend. Phys. § 1. lib. 4. *Ca.*2. p. 291.

eyes

eyes for their diſſent from their Judgments, ſharply cenſured one anothers ſentiments, envied the births of one anothers wits, alwayes ſhook hands with an unanimous conſent in this; never cenſured one another for being of this perſwaſion, never called it into queſtion; as what was never controverted among men profeſſing Chriſtianity, but acknowledged by all, though contending about other things, has reaſon to be judged a certain truth belonging to the Chriſtian Religion; ſo what was never ſubjected to any Controverſie, but acknowledged by the whole World, hath reaſon to be imbraced as a truth without any doubt.

4. This Univerſal Conſent is not prejudiced by ſome few Diſſenters. Hiſtory doth not reckon twenty profeſt Atheiſts in all Ages in the compaſs of the whole World: And we have not the name of any one abſolute Atheiſt upon Record in Scripture: Yet it is queſtioned, whether any of them, noted in Hiſtory with that infamous name, were down-right denyers of the Exiſtence of God, but rather becauſe they diſparaged the Deities commonly worſhipped by the Nations where they lived, as being of a clearer reaſon to diſcern, that thoſe qualities, vulgarly attributed to their Gods, as luſt and Luxury, wantonneſs and quarrels, were unworthy of the nature of a God. But ſuppoſe they were really what they are termed to be, what are they to the multitude of Men, that have ſprung out of the loyns of Adam? not ſo much as one grain of aſhes is to all that were ever turned into that form by any fires in your Chimnies. And many more were not ſufficient to weigh down the contrary conſent of the whole World, and bear down an univerſal impreſſion. Should the Laws of a Country, agreed univerſally to by the whole Body of the People, be accounted vain, becauſe a hundred Men of thoſe millions diſapprove of them, when not their reaſon, but their folly and baſe intereſt, perſwades them to diſlike them, and diſpute againſt them? What if ſome Men be blind, ſhall any conclude from thence that eyes are not natural to men? ſhall we ſay that the notion of the Exiſtence of God is not natural to men, becauſe a very ſmall number have been of a contrary opinion? ſhall a man in a dungeon, that never ſaw the Sun, deny that there is a Sun, becauſe one or two blind men tell him there is none, when thouſands aſſure him there is? Why ſhould then the exceptions of a few, not one to millions, diſcredit that which is voted certainly true by the joynt conſent of the World? Add this too, that if thoſe that are reported to be Atheiſts had had any conſiderable reaſon to ſtep aſide from the common perſwaſion of the whole world, 'tis a wonder it met not with entertainment by great numbers of thoſe, who, by reaſon of their notorious wickedneſs, and inward diſquiets, might reaſonably be thought to wiſh in their hearts that there were no God. 'Tis ſtrange if there were any reaſon on their ſide, that in ſo long a ſpace of time, as hath run out from the Creation of the World, there could not be engaged a conſiderable number to frame a Society for the profeſſion of it. It hath died with the Perſon that ſtarted it, and vaniſh'd as ſoon as it appeared.

Gaſſend. Phyſ. § 1. lib. 4. cap. 7. p. 282.

 Gaſſend. ibid. p. 290.*

To conclude this, is it not folly for any man to deny or doubt of the being of a God, to diſſent from all Mankind, and ſtand in contradiction to humane Nature? What is the general dictate of Nature is a certain Truth. 'Tis impoſſible, that Nature can naturally and univerſally lie. And therefore thoſe that aſcribe all to Nature, and ſet it in the Place of God, contradict themſelves, if they give not credit to it in that which it univerſally affirms. || A general conſent of all Nations is to be eſteemed as a Law of Nature. Nature cannot plant in the minds of all men an aſſent to a falſity, for then the Laws of Nature would be deſtructive to the reaſon and minds of men. How is it poſſible, that a falſity ſhould be a perſwaſion ſpread through all Nations, engraven upon the minds of all men, men of the moſt towring, and men of the moſt creeping underſtanding; that they ſhould conſent to it in all places, and in thoſe places, where the Nations have not had any known Commerce with the reſt of the known World? A Conſent not ſettled by any Law of Man to conſtrain People to a belief of it: And indeed 'tis impoſſible, that any Law of man can conſtrain the belief of the mind. Would not he deſervedly be accounted a fool, that ſhould deny that to be gold, which hath been tryed and examined by a great number of knowing Goldſmiths, and hath paſt the teſt of all their touch-ſtones? What exceſs of folly would it be for him to deny it to be true gold, if it had been tryed by all that had skill in that metal in all Nations in the World?

|| Cicero.

Secondly,

Secondly, 2. It hath been a conſtant and uninterrupted conſent. It hath been as Ancient as the firſt Age of the World; no man is able to mention any time, from the beginning of the World, wherein this Notion hath not been univerſally owned; tis as old as man-kind, and hath run along with the courſe of the Sun, nor can the date be fixed lower than that.

1. Firſt, In all the changes of the World, this hath been maintained. In the overturnings of the Government of States, the alteration of Modes of Worſhip, this hath ſtood unſhaken. The reaſons upon which it was founded were in all Revolutions of time accounted ſatisfactory and convincing, nor could abſolute Atheiſm in the changes of any Laws ever gain the favour of any one Body of people to be eſtabliſhed by a Law. When the Honour of the Heathen Idols was laid in the duſt, this ſuffered no impair. The being of one God was more vigorouſly owned, when the unreaſonableneſs of multiplicity of Gods was manifeſt; and grew taller by the detection of counterfeits. When other parts of the Law of nature have been violated by ſome Nations, this hath maintained its ſtanding. The long ſeries of Ages hath been ſo far from blotting it out, that it hath more ſtrongly confirmed it, and maketh further progreſs in the confirmation of it. Time which hath eaten out the ſtrength of other things and blaſted meer inventions, hath not been able to conſume this. The diſcovery of all other Impoſtures, never made this by any Society of men to be ſuſpected as one. It will not be eaſie to name any Impoſture that hath walked perpetually in the world without being diſcovered, and whipped out by ſome Nation or other. Falſities have never been ſo univerſally and conſtantly owned without publick controul and queſtion. And ſince the world hath detected many errors of the former Age, and learning been increaſed, this hath been ſo far from being dimm'd, that it hath ſhone out clearer with the increaſe of natural knowledge, and received freſh and more vigorous confirmations.

2. The fears and anxieties in the Conſciences of men, have given men ſufficient occaſion to root it out, had it been poſſible for them to do it. If the Notion of the Exiſtence of God, had been poſſible to have been daſht out of the minds of men, they would have done it rather than have ſuffered ſo many troubles in their Souls upon the Commiſſion of ſin; ſince there did want wickedneſs and wit in ſo many corrupt Ages to have attempted it and proſpered in it, had it been poſſible. How comes it therefore to paſs that ſuch a multitude of proffligate perſons, that have been in the World ſince the fall of man, ſhould not have rooted out this principle, and diſpoſſeſt the minds of men of that which gave birth to their tormenting fears? How is it poſſible that all ſhould agree together in a thing which Created fear, and an obligation againſt the Intereſt of the Fleſh, if it had been free for men to diſcharge themſelves of it? No man, as far as corrupt nature bears ſway in him, is willing to live contrould.

The firſt Man would rather be a God himſelf than under one: * Why ſhould men continue this Notion in them, which ſhackled them in their vile inclinations, if it had been in their power utterly to deface it? If it were an Impoſture, how comes it to paſs that all the wicked Ages of the world could never diſcover that to be a cheat, which kept them in continual alarms? Men wanted not will to ſhake off ſuch apprehenſions; As Adam, ſo all his poſterity are deſirous to hide themſelves from God upon the Commiſſion of ſin, * and by the ſame reaſon they would hide God from their Souls. What is the reaſon they could never attain their will, and their wiſh by all their endeavours? Could they poſſibly have ſatisfied themſelves that there were no God, they had diſcarded their fears, the diſturbers of the repoſe of their lives, and been unbridled in their pleaſures. The wickedneſs of the world would never have preſerved that which was a perpetual moleſtation to it, had it been poſſible to be raſed out.

* Gen. 3. 5.

* Gen. 3. 9.

But ſince men, under the turmoils and laſhes of their own Conſciences, could never bring their hearts to a ſettled diſſent from this Truth; it evidenceth, that as it took its birth at the beginning of the world, it cannot expire, no not in the aſhes of it, nor in any thing, but the reduction of the Soul to that nothing from whence it ſprung. This conception is ſo perpetual, that the nature of the Soul muſt be diſſolved before it be rooted out, nor can it be extinct whilſt the Soul endures.

3. Let it be conſidered alſo by us that own the Scripture, that the Devil deems it impoſſible to root out this ſentiment. It ſeems to be ſo perpetually fixed, that the Devil did not think fit to tempt Man to the denial of the Exiſtence of a Deity, but perſwaded him to believe, he might aſcend to that dignity, and become a God himſelf, Gen. 31. Hath God ſaid? and he there owns him, ver. 5. Ye ſhall become as Gods. He owns God in the queſtion he asks the Woman, and perſwades our firſt Parents to be Gods themſelves. And in all Stories both Ancient and Modern, the Devil was never able to tincture Mens minds with a profeſſed denial of the Deity, which would have opened a door to a world of more wickedneſs than hath been acted, and took away the bar, to the breaking out of that evil, which is naturally in the hearts of men, to the greater prejudice of humane Societies. He wanted not malice to raſe out all the Notions of God, but power: He knew it was impoſſible to effect it, and therefore in vain to attempt it. He ſet up himſelf in ſeveral places of the ignorant world as a God, but never was able to overthrow the opinion of the being of a God: The impreſſions of a Deity were ſo ſtrong, as not to be ſtruck out by the malice and power of Hell.

What a folly is it then in any to contradict or doubt of this Truth, which all the periods of time have not been able to wear out; which all the Wars and Quarrels of men with their own Conſciences, have not been able to deſtroy; which Ignorance and Debauchery, its two greateſt Enemies, cannot weaken; which all the falſhoods and errors, which have reigned in one or other part of the World, have not been able to baniſh; which lives in the conſents of men in ſpight of all their wiſhes to the contrary, and hath grown ſtronger and ſhone clearer by the improvements of natural reaſon?

3. Natural and innate; which pleads ſtrongly for the perpetuity of it. Tis natural, tho ſome think it not a Principle writ in the heart of Man; * tis ſo natural that every man is born with a reſtleſs inſtinct to be of ſome kind of Religion or other, which implies ſome object of Religion. The Impreſſion of a Deity is as common as Reaſon, and of the ſame age with Reaſon. * Tis a Relique of knowledge after the fall of Adam, like fire under aſhes, which ſparkles as ſoon as ever the heap of aſhes is opened. A notion ſealed up in the Soul of every man; * elſe how could thoſe people, who were unknown to one another, ſeparate by Seas and Mounts, differing in various Cuſtoms and manner of living, had no mutual intelligence one with another, light upon this as a common Sentiment, if they had not been guided by one uniform reaſon in all their minds, by one nature common to them all; tho their Climates be different, their tempers and conſtitutions various, their imaginations in ſome things as diſtant from one another as Heaven is from Earth, the Ceremonies of their Religion not all of the ſame kind; Yet where ever you find humane Nature, you find this ſettled perſwaſion. So that the Notion of a God ſeems to be twiſted with the Nature of Man, and is the firſt natural branch of Common Reaſon, or upon either the firſt inſpection of a man into himſelf and his own ſtate and conſtitution, or upon the firſt ſight of any external viſible Object. Nature within Man, and Nature without Man agree upon the firſt meeting together to form this Sentiment, that there is a God. Tis as natural as any thing we call a common Principle. One thing which is called a Common Principle and Natural, is, that the whole is greater than the parts. If this be not born with us, yet the exerciſe of Reaſon, eſſential to man, ſettles it as a certain Maxim; upon the dividing any thing into ſeveral parts, he finds every part leſs than when they were altogether. By the ſame exerciſe of Reaſon, we cannot caſt our eyes upon any thing in the world, or exerciſe our underſtandings upon our ſelves, but we muſt preſently imagine, there was ſome cauſe of thoſe things, ſome cauſe of my ſelf and my own being; ſo that this Truth is as natural to man, as any thing he can call moſt natural or a Common Principle.

* Pink. Eph. 6. pag. 10, 11.

* King on Jonah, pag. 16.

* Amyrant des Religious, p. 6, 7, 8, 9.

It muſt be confeſt by all, that there is a Law of Nature writ upon the hearts of men, which will direct them to commendable actions, if they will attend to the writing in their own Conſciences. This Law cannot be conſidered without the notice of a Law-giver. For 'tis but a natural and obvious concluſion, that ſome ſuperiour hand engrafted thoſe principles in man, ſince he finds ſomething in him twitching him upon the purſuit of uncomely actions, tho his heart be mightily inclined to them; man knows he never planted this principle of Reluctancy in his own Soul; he can never be the cauſe of that, which he cannot be friends with. If he were the cauſe of it, why doth he not rid himſelf of it? No man would endure a thing that doth frequently moleſt and diſquiet him, if he could aſſheir it. Tis therefore ſown in Man by ſome hand more powerful than man, which riſeth ſo high and is rooted ſo ſtrong, that all the force that that man can use cannot pull it up. If therefore this principle be natural in man, and the Law of Nature be natural, the Notion of a Law-giver must be as natural as the Notion of a Printer, or that there is a Printer is obvious upon the sight of a stampt impress: After this the multitude of effects in the World step in to strengthen this beam of natural light, and the direct Conclusion from thence is, that that power, which made those outward objects, implanted this inward principle: This is sown in us, born with us, and sprouts up with our growth; or as one saith, * tis like Letters carved upon the bark of a young plant, which grows up together with us and the longer it grows the Letters are more legible. * Charleton

This is the ground of this universal consent, and why it may well be termed natural.

This will more evidently appear to be natural because,

1. This consent could not be by meer Tradition.
2. Nor by any mutual intelligence of Governors to keep people in awe, which are two things the Atheist pleads: The first hath no strong foundation, and that other is as absurd and foolish, as it is wicked and abominable.
3. Nor was it Fear first introduced it.

1. It could not be by meer Tradition. Many things indeed are entertained by posterity, which their Ancestors delivered to them, and that out of a common reverence to their Fore-fathers, and an opinion, that they had a better prospect of things than the increase of the corruption of succeeding Ages would permit them to have.

But if this be a Tradition handled from our Ancestors, they also must receive it from theirs, we must then ascend to the first man, we cannot else escape a confounding our selves with running into infinite; was it then the only Tradition he left to them, is it not probable he acquainted them with other things in conjunction with this, the Nature of God, the way to Worship him, the manner of the Worlds Existence, his own state? We may reasonably suppose him to have a good stock of knowledge, what is become of it? It cannot be supposed, that the first man should acquaint his posterity with an object of worship, and leave them ignorant of a Mode of worship, and of the end of worship, we find in Scripture his immediate posterity did the first in Sacrifices, and without doubt they were not ignorant of the other: How come Men to be so uncertain in all other things, and so confident of this, if it were only a Tradition? How did debates and irreconcilable questions start up concerning other things, and this remain untouch'd, but by a small number? whatsoever Tradition the first Man left besides this, is lost, and no way recoverable, but by the Revelation God hath made in his Word.

How comes it to pass, this of a God is longer liv'd than all the rest, which we may suppose Man left to his immediate descendents? How come men to retain the one, and forget the other? What was the reason this surviv'd the ruin of the rest, and surmounted the uncertainties into which the other sunk? Was it likely it should be handed down alone without other attendants on it at first? VVhy did it not expire among the Americans, who have lost the account of their own descent, and the Stock from whence they sprung, and cannot reckon above eight hundred or a thousand years at most? VVhy was not the manner of the worship of a God transmitted as well as that of his Existence? How came men to dissent in their Opinions concerning his Nature, whether he was corporeal or incorporeal, finite or infinite, omnipresent or limited? VVhy were not men as negligent to transmit this of his Existence as that of his Nature? No reason can be rendred for the security of this above the other, but that there is so clear a tincture of a Deity upon the minds of men, such traces and shadows of him in the creatures, such indelible instincts within, and invincible arguments without to keep up this universal consent. The Characters are so deep that they cannot possibly be rased out, which would have been one time or other, in one Nation or other, had it depended only upon Tradition, since one Age shakes off frequently the Sentiments of the former.

I cannot think of above one which may be called a Tradition, which indeed was kept up among all Nations, viz. Sacrifices, which could not be natural but instituted: VVhat ground could they have in Nature, to imagine that the blood of Beasts could expiate and wash off the guilt and stains of a rational Creature? Yet they had had in all places (but among the Jews, and ſome of them only) loſt the knowledg of the reaſon and end of the Inſtitution, which the Scripture acquaints us was to typifie and ſignifie the Redemption by the Promiſed Seed. This tradition hath been ſuperannuated and laid aſide in moſt parts of the World, while this Notion of the Exiſtence of a God hath ſtood firm.

But ſuppoſe it were a Tradition, was it likely to be a meer intention and figment of the firſt Man? Had there been no reaſon for it, his Poſterity would ſoon have found out the weakneſs of its Fouudation: What advantage had it been to him to tranſmit ſo great a falſhood to kindle the fears or raiſe the hopes of his Poſterity, if there were no God? It cannot be ſuppoſed he ſhould be ſo void of that natural affection, men in all ages bear to their Deſcendents, as ſo groſly to deceive them, and be ſo contrary to the ſimplicity and plainneſs which appears in all things neareſt their Original.

2. Neither was it by any mutual Intelligence of Governours among themſelves to keep people in ſubjection to them. If it were a political deſign at firſt, it ſeems it met with the general nature of Mankind very ready to give it entertainment.

1. It is unaccountable how this ſhould come to paſs. It muſt be either by a joynt Aſſembly of them, or a mutual Correſpondence. If by any Aſſembly, who were the perſons? Let the Name of any one be mentioned; when was the time? Where was the place of this appearance? By what Authority did they meet together? VVho made the firſt motion, and firſt ſtarted this great Principle of Policy? By what means could they aſſemble from ſuch diſtant parts of the VVorld? Humane Hiſtories are utterly ſilent in it, and the Scripture, the antienteſt Hiſtory, gives an account of the attempt of Babel, but not a word of any deſign of this nature.

VVhat mutual Correſpondence could ſuch have, whoſe Intereſts are for the moſt part different, and their deſigns contrary to one another? How could they, who were divided by ſuch vaſt Seas, have this mutual Converſe? How could thoſe, who were different in their Cuſtoms and manners, agree ſo unanimouſly together in one thing to gull the People? If there had been ſuch a Correſpondence between the Governours of all Nations, what is the reaſon ſome Nations ſhould be unknown to the world till of late times? How could the buſineſs be ſo ſecretly managed, as not to take Vent, and iſſue in a diſcovery to the World? Can reaſon ſuppoſe ſo many in a joynt Conſpiracy, and no mans Conſcience in this life under ſharp Afflictions, or on his death bed, when Conſcience is moſt awakened, conſtrain him to reveal openly the cheat that beguil'd the World? How came they to be ſo unanimous in this Notion, and to differ in their Rites almoſt in every Country? Why could they not agree in one Mode of Worſhip throughout all the VVorld, as well as in this univerſal Notion? If there were not a mutual intelligence, it cannot be conceived how in every Nation ſuch a ſtate Engineer ſhould riſe up with the ſame trick to keep people in aw. VVhat is the reaſon we cannot find any Law in any one Nation, to conſtrain men to the belief of the Exiſtence of a God, ſince politick Stratagems have been often fortified by Laws? Beſides, ſuch men make uſe of Principles received to effect their Contrivances, and are not ſo impolitick as to build deſigns upon Principles that have no Foundation in nature: Some Heathen Law-givers have pretended a converſe with their Gods to make their Laws be received by the people with a greater veneration, and fix with ſtronger obligation the obſervance and perpetuity of them; but this was not the introducing of a new Principle, but the ſuppoſition of an old receiv'd Notion, that there was a God, and an application of that Principle to their preſent deſign. The pretence had been vain had not the notion of a God been ingrafted: Politicians are ſo little poſſeſſed with a Reverence of God, that the firſt mighty one in the Scripture, (which may reaſonably gain with the Atheiſt the credit of the Antienteſt Hiſtory in the VVord) is repreſented without any fear of God. * An Invader and Oppreſſor of his Neighbors, and reputed the Introducer of a new VVorſhip, and being the firſt that built Cities after the flood, (as Cain was the firſt Builder of them before the flood,) built alſo Idolatry with them. And erected a new VVorſhip, and was ſo far from ſtrengthning that Notion the people had of God, that he endeavoured to corrupt it; The firſt Idolatry in common Hiſtories being noted to proceed from that part of the VVorld; the Antienteſt Idol being at Babylon, and ſuppoſed to be firſt invented by this Perſon: VVhence by the way perhaps haps Rome is in the Revelations called Babylon, with respect to that similitude of their Saint-Worship, to the Idolatry first set up in that place. * Tis evident Politicians have often changed the Worship of a Nation, but it is not upon record, that the first thoughts of an object of Worship ever entred into the minds of people by any trick of theirs.

* Gen. 10. 9. Nimrod was a mighty hunter before the Lord.

* Or if we understand it, as some think, that he defended his invasions under a pretext of the preserving Religion, it assures us that there was a notion of an object of Religion before, since no Religion can be without an object of Worship.

But to return to the present Argument, the Being of a God is owned by some Nations, that have scarce any form of pollicy among them. Tis as wonderful how any wit should hit upon such an Invention, as it is absurd to ascribe it to any humane device, if there were not prevailing Arguments to constrain the consent. Besides, how is it possible they should deceive themselves? What is the reason the greatest Politicians have their fears of a Deity upon their unjust practices, as well as other men, they intended to befool? How many of them have had forlorn Consciences upon a Death Bed, upon the consideration of a God to answer an account to in another World? Is it credible they should be frighted by that wherewith they knew they beguiled others? No man satisfying his pleasures would impose such a deceit upon himself, or render and make himself more miserable than the Creatures he hath dominion over.

2. It is unaccountable how it should indure so long a time. That this Policy should be so fortunate as to gain ground in the Consciences of men, and exercise an Empire over them, and meet with such an universal success. If the Notion of a God were a a State-Engine, and introduced by some Politick Grandees for the ease of Government, and preserving people with more felicity in order? How comes it to pass the first broachers of it were never upon record? There is scarce a false opinion vented in the World, but may as a stream be traced to the first head and fountain. The Inventors of perticular forms of Worship are known, and the reasons why they prescribed them known; but what Grandee was the Author of this? who can pitch a time and person that sprung up this Notion? If any be so insolent as to impose a cheat, he can hardly be supposed to be so successful as to deceive the whole world for many Ages: Impostures pass not free through the whole world without Examination and discovery; Falsities have not been universally and constantly owned without controul and question. If a cheat imposeth upon some Towns and Countries, he will be found out by the more piercing enquiries of other places; and it is not easie to name any Imposture that hath walked so long in its disguise in the World, without being unmasked and whipped out by some Nation or other: If this had been a meer trick, there would have been as much craft in some to discern it as there was in others to contrive it. No Man can be imagined so wise in a Kingdom, but others may be found as wise as himself: And it is not conceivable, that so many clear sighted men in all Ages, should be ignorant of it, and not endeavour to free the world from so great a falsity. * It cannot be found that a trick of State should always beguile men of the most piercing insights, as well as the most credulous: That a few crafty men should befool all the wise men in the world; and the world lie in a belief of it, and never like to be freed from it. What is the reason the succeeding Politicians never knew this Stratagem, since their Maxims are usually handed to their Successors?

* Fotherby a Theomastrix, p. 64.

And there is not a Richlieu, but leave s his Axioms to a Mazerine.

This perswasion of the Existence of God, ows not it self to any Imposture or subtilty of Men: If it had not been agreeable to common Nature and Reason, it could not so long have born sway. The imposed yoke would have been cast off by Multitudes; Men would not have charged themselves with that which was attended with consequences displeasing to the Flesh, and hindred them from a full swing of their rebellious Passions; such a shackle would have mouldred of it self, or been broke by the extravagances humane nature is inclin'd unto: The wickedness of men without question, hath prompted them to endeavour to unmask it, if it were a Cosenage; but could never yet be so successful as to free the world from a perswasion, or their own Consciences from the tincture of the Existence of a Deity. It must be therefore of an ancienter Date than the Craft of States men, and descend into the World with the first appearance of humane nature. Time, which hath rectified many Errors, improves this Notion, makes it shock down its roots deeper, and spread its branches larger.

It must be a natural Truth that shines clear by the detection of those Errors that have befooled the World, and the wit of Man is never able to name any humane

Au-

Author that firſt inſinuated it into the beliefs of men.

3. Nor was it Fear firſt introduced it. Fear is the Conſequent of wickedneſs. As Man was not created with any inherent ſin, ſo he was not created with any terrifying fears, the one had been againſt the Holineſs of the Creator, the other againſt his goodneſs: Fear did not make this Opinion, but the Opinion of the Being of a Deity was the cauſe of this Fear, after his ſenſe of angring the Deity by his wickedneſs. The Object of Fear is before the Act of Fear; there could not be an Act of Fear exerciſed about the Deity, till it was believed to be exiſtent, and not only ſo, but Offended: For God, as exiſtent only, is not the Object of Fear or Love; 'tis not the Exiſtence of a thing that excites any of thoſe Affections, but the Relation a thing bears to us in particular. God is good, and ſo the object of love, as well as juſt, and thereby the object of Fear. He was as much called Love, * and Mens, or Mind, in regard of his Goodneſs and Underſtanding, by the Heathens, as much as by any other Name. Neither of thoſe names were proper to inſinuate Fear; neither was fear the firſt Principle that made the Heathens worſhip a God; they offered Sacrifices out of Gratitude to ſome, as well as to others out of Fear: the fear of Evils in the world, and the hopes of Belief and Aſſiſtance from their Gods, and not a terrifying Fear of God, was the principal Spring of their worſhip: VVhen Calamities from the hands of Men, or Judgements by the influences of Heaven were upon them, they implored that which they thought a Deity; It was not their Fear of him, but a hope in his Goodneſs, and Perſwaſion of Remedy from him, for the averting thoſe Evils that rendred them Adorers of a God: If they had not had preexiſtent Notions of his Being and Goodneſs, they would never have made addreſſes to him, or ſo frequently ſought to that they only apprehended as a terrifying Object: * VVhen you hear men calling upon God in a time of affrighting thunder, you cannot imagin that the fear of thunder did firſt introduce the Notion of a God, but implies, that it was before apprehended by them, or ſtampt upon them, though their Fear doth at preſent actuate that Belief, and engage them in a preſent Exerciſe of Piety: and whereas the Scripture ſaith, the fear of God is the beginning of Wiſdom, or of all Religion; *'tis not underſtood of a diſtracted and terrifying Fear, but a reverential Fear of him, becauſe of his holineſs, or a worſhip of him, a ſubmiſſion to him, and ſincere ſeeking of him.

* Ἔρως

* Gaſſend. Phyſ. ſect. 1. l. 4. c. 2. p. 291, 292.

* Pro. 9. 10. Pſal. 111. 10.

VVell then is it not a folly for an Atheiſt to deny that which is the reaſon and common Sentiment of the whole world, to ſtrip himſelf of humanity, run counter to his own Conſcience, prefer a private before a univerſal Judgment, give the lie to his own nature and reaſon, aſſert things impoſſible to be proved, nay impoſſible to be acted, Forge irrationalities for the ſupport of his fancy againſt the common perſwaſion of the world, and againſt himſelf, and ſo much of God as is manifeſt in him and every man *?

* Rom. 1. 19.

II. It is a folly to deny that which all Creatures, or all things in the World manifeſt. Let us view this in Scripture ſince we acknowledge it, and after conſider the arguments from natural reaſon.

Jupiter eſt quodcunque vides, &c.

The Apoſtle reſolves it, Rom. 1. 19, 20. The inviſible things of him from the Creation of the World are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his Eternal power and Godhead, ſo that they are without excuſe: They know or might know, by the things that were made, the Eternity and power of God; their ſenſe might take Circuit about every object, and their minds collect the being and ſomething of the perfections of the Deity: The firſt diſcourſe of the mind upon the ſight of a delicate peice of workman-ſhip, is the Concluſion of the being of an Artificer and the admiration of his skill and induſtry. The Apoſtle doth not ſay, the inviſible things of God are believed, or they have an opinion of them, but they are ſeen and clearly ſeen: They are like Chryſtal glaſſes which give a clear repreſentation of the Exiſtence of a Deity, like that Mirrour reported to be in a Temple in Arcadia, which repreſented to the Spectator, not his own face, but the Image of that Deity which he worſhipped.

The whole world is like a Looking-glaſs, which whole and entire repreſents the Image of God, and every broken piece of it, every little ſhred of a Creature doth the like, not only the great ones, Elephants and the Leviathan, but Ants, Flies, Worms, whoſe bodies rather then names we know: The greater Cattle and the Creeping things Gen. 1. 24. Not naming there any intermediate Creature, to direct us to view him in the the ſmaller Letters, as well as the greater Characters of the World. His name is Glorious, and his Attributes are excellent in all the Earth, * in every Creature, as the glory of the Sun is in every beam and ſmaller flaſh; he is ſeen in every Inſect, in every Spire of graſs: The voice of the Creator is in the moſt contemptible Creature: * The Apoſtle adds that they are ſo clearly ſeen, that men are inexcuſable if they have not ſome knowledge of God by them; if they might not certainly know them, they might have ſome excuſe: So that his Exiſtence is not only probably but demonſtratively proved from the things of the world.

* Pſal. 8. 1.

* Banes in Aquin. Par. 2. Qu. 2. Artic. 2. pa. 78. Col. 2.

Eſpecially the Heavens declare him, which God ſtretches out like a Curtain, * or as ſome render the word, a Skin, whereby is ſignified, that Heaven is as an open book, which was Anciently made of the skins of beaſts, that by the knowledge of them we may be taught the knowledge of God. Where Scripture was not revealed the world ſerved for a witneſs of a God; what ever arguments the Scripture uſes to prove it, are drawn from nature, (though indeed it doth not ſo much prove as ſuppoſe the Exiſtence of a God) but what Arguments it uſes are from the Creatures, and particularly the Heavens, which are the publick Preachers of this Doctrine: The breath of God ſounds to all the World through thoſe Organ-pipes. His Being is viſible in their Exiſtence, his Wiſdom in their frame, his Power in their motion, his Goodneſs in their uſefulneſs: * They have a voice, and their voice is as intelligible as any common Language. And thoſe are ſo plain Heralds of a Deity, that the Heathen miſtook them for Deities, and gave them a particular adoration which was due to that God they declared. The firſt Idotatry ſeems to be of thoſe Heavenly bodies, which began probably in the time of Nimrod. In Jobs time it is certain they admired the Glory of the Sun, and the brightneſs of the Moon, not without kiſſing their hands, a ſign of Adoration*. Tis evident a man may as well doubt whether there be a Sun when he ſees his beams guilding the Earth, as doubt whether there be a God when he ſees his works ſpread in the World.

* Pſal. 104. 2.

* For their voice goeth to the end of the Earth, Pſal. 19. 1, 2.

* Job. 31. 26, 27.

The things in the world declare the Exiſtence of a God.

1. In their Production, 2. Harmony, 3. Preſervation, 4. Anſwering their ſeveral ends.

First, 1. In their production. The declaration of the Exiſtence of God was the chief end for which they were Created, that the Notion of a Supream and Independent Eternal Being, might eaſier incur into the active underſtanding of man from the objects of ſenſe diſperſed in every corner of the World, that he might pay a homage and devotion to the Lord of all, Iſa. 40. 12, 13, 18, 19. &c. Have you not underſtood from the foundation of the Earth, tis he that ſits upon the Circle of the Heaven, &c. How could this great heap be brought into being unleſs a God had framed it? Every plant, every Atome, as well as every Star, at the firſt meeting whiſpers this in our Ears, I have a Creator, I am witneſs to a Deity? who ever ſaw Statues or Pictures, but preſently thinks of a Statuary and Limner? Who beholds Garments, Ships or Houſes, but underſtands there was a Weaver, a Carpenter, an Architect? * Who can caſt his eyes about the world, but muſt think of that power that formed it, and that the goodneſs which appears in the formation of it hath a perfect Reſidence in ſome Being? [thoſe things that are good muſt flow from ſomething perfectly good: that which is chief in any kind is the cauſe of all of that kind. Fire which is moſt hot is the cauſe of all things which are hot. There is ſome Being therefore which is the cauſe of all that Perfection, which is in the Creature; and this is God. Aquin. 1. qu. 2. Artic. 3.] All things that are, demonſtrate ſomething from whence they are. All things have a contracted perfection, and what they have is Communicated to them. Perfections are parcelled out among ſeveral Creatures. Any thing that is imperfect cannot exiſt of it ſelf. We are led therefore by them to conſider a fountain which bubbles up in all perfection; a hand which diſtributes thoſe ſeveral degrees of Being and Perfection to what we ſee; we ſee that which is imperfect, our minds conclude ſomething perfect to exiſt before it; our eye ſees the ſtreams, but our underſtanding riſeth to the head: as the eye ſees the ſhadow, but the underſtanding informs us whether it be the ſhadow of a man, or of a beaſt.

* Philo. ex Petav. Theolo. Dog. Tom. 1. li. 1. cap. 1. pa. 4. ſomewhat changed.

God hath given us Senſe to behold the objects in the World, and Underſtanding to reaſon his Exiſtence from them; the underſtanding cannot conceive a thing to have made it ſelf; that is againſt all reaſon. * As they are made they ſpeak out a Maker; and cannot not be a trick of chance, ſince they are made with ſuch an immenſe Wiſdom, that is too big for the graſp of all humane underſtanding. Thoſe that doubt whether the Exiſtence of God be an implanted Principle, yet agree that the effects in the world lead to a ſupream and univerſal cauſe: And that if we have not the knowledge of it rooted in our Natures, yet we have it by diſcourſe, ſince by all Maſters of reaſon a Proceſſus in Infinitum muſt be accounted impoſſible in ſubordinate cauſes.

* Rom. 1. 20.

This will appear in ſeveral things.

First, 1. The World and every Creature had a beginning. The Scripture Aſcertains this to us* ; David, who was not the firſt man, gives the praiſe to God of his being curiouſly wrought, &c. Pſal. 139. 14, 15. God gave being to Men, and Plants, and Beaſts, before they being to one another. He gives being to them now as the Fountain of all being, though the ſeveral Modes of being are from the ſeveral natures of ſecond cauſes.

* Gen. 1.

Tis true indeed we are aſcertained that they were made by the true God, that they were made by his word*, that they were made of nothing, and not only this lower world wherein we live, but according to the Jewiſh diviſion, the world of Men, the world of Stars, and the world of Spirits, and Souls: We do not waver in it, or doubt of it, as the Heathen did in their diſputes ; he know they are the workmanſhip of the true God, of that God we adore, not of falſe Gods: By his Word, without any inſtrument or engine, as in earthly Structures ; of things which do not appear, without any preexiſtent matter, as all Artificial works of men are framed.

* By Faith we underſtand that the worlds were framed by the word of God,&c. * Heb. 11. 3.

Yet the proof of the beginning of the world is affirmed with good reaſon ; and if it had a beginning, it had alſo ſome higher cauſe than it ſelf: Every effect hath a cauſe.

* The World was not Eternal or from Eternity. The matter of the world cannot be Eternal: Matter cannot ſubſiſt without form, nor put on any form without the action of ſome cauſe, this cauſe muſt be in being before it acted ; that which is not cannot act. The cauſe of the world muſt neceſſarily exiſt before any matter was endued with any form ; that therefore cannot be Eternal before which another did ſubſiſt ; if it were from Eternity it would not be ſubject to mutation: If the whole was from Eternity why not alſo the parts, what makes the changes ſo viſible then, if Eternity would exempt it from mutability ?

* Daile 20. Serm. Pſa. 102. 26. pa. 13,14.

1. Time cannot be infinite, and therefore the World not Eternal ; * All motion hath its beginning, if it were otherewiſe, we muſt ſay the number of Heavenly revolutions of days and nights, which are paſt to this inſtant, is actually infinite, which cannot be in nature: If it were ſo, it muſt needs be granted, that apart is equal to the whole ; becauſe infinite being equal to infinite, the number of days paſt in all Ages to the beginning of one year being Infinite (as they would be, ſuppoſing the world had no beginning) would by conſequence be equal to the number of days, which ſhall paſs to the end of the next ; whereas that number of days paſt is indeed but a part, and ſo a part would be equal to the whole.

* Daile ut Supra.

2. Generations of Men, Animals and Plants could not be from Eternity, * If any Man ſay the world was from Eternity, then there muſt be propagations of living Creatures in the ſame manner as are at this day: For without this the World could not conſiſt ; what we ſee now done muſt have been perpetually done, if it be done by a neceſſity of nature: But we ſee nothing now that doth ariſe but by a mutual propagation from another: If the world were Eternal therefore, it muſt be ſo in all Eternity: Take any particular ſpecies, ſuppoſe a man, if men were from Eternity, then there were perpetual generations, ſome were born into the World and ſome died: Now the natural condition of generation is, that a man doth not generate a man, nor a Sheep a Lamb, as ſoon as ever it ſelf is brought into the World, but gets ſtrength and vigour by degrees, and muſt arrive to a certain ſtated age before they can produce the like, for whilſt any thing is little and below the due age, it cannot increaſe its kind ; Men therefore and other Creatures did propagate their kind, by the ſame Law, not as ſoon as ever they were born, but in the interval of ſome time, and Children grew up by degrees in the Mothers Womb till they were fit to be brought forth: If this be ſo, then there could not be an Eternal ſucceſſion of propagating: For there is no Eternal continuation of time: Time is always to be conceived as having one part before another: But that perpetuity of Nativities is always always after some time, wherein it could not be for the weakness of age: If no man then can conceive a propagation from Eternity, there must be then a beginning of Generation in time, and consequently the Creatures were made in time.

* Petav. Theo. Dogmat. Tom. 1. lib. 1. cap. 2. pag. 15.

*[If the World were Eternal, it must have been in the same posture as it is now, in a state of Generation and Corruption; and so Corruption must have been as Eternal as Generation, and then things that do generate and corrupt must have Eternally been and Eternally not have been: There must be some first way to set Generation on work.] We must lose our selves in our conceptions; we cannot conceive a Father before a Child, as well as we cannot conceive a Child before a Father: And reason is quite bewildred, and cannot return into a right way of Conception till it conceive one first of every kind: One first Man, one first Animal, one first Plant, from whence others do proceed. The Argument is unanswerable, and the wisest Atheist (if any Atheist can be called wise) cannot unlose the knot. We must come to something that is first in every kind, and this first must have a Cause, not of the same kind, but Infinite and Independent; otherwise Men run into unconceivable Labyrinths and contradictions.

* To express it in the words of one of our own. Wolseley of Atheism, pa. 47.

Man, the noblest Creature upon Earth, hath a beginning. No Man in the World but was some years ago no man. If every man we see had a beginning: then the first Man had also a beginning, then the World had a beginning: For the Earth which was made for the use of man, had wanted that end for which it was made. We must pitch upon some one man that was unborn, that first man must either be Eternal, that cannot be, for he that hath no beginning hath no end; or must spring out of the Earth, as Plants and Trees do, that cannot be, why should not the Earth produce men to this day, as it doth Plants and Trees? He was therefore made; and whatsoever is made hath some cause that made it, which is God. *If the World were uncreated it were then immutable, but every Creature upon the Earth is in a continual flux, always changing: If things be mutable, they were created; if created, they were made by some Author; whatsoever hath a beginning must have a maker, if the World hath a beginning, there was then a time when it was not; it must have some cause to produce it. That which makes is before that which is made, and this is God.

* Petav. ut supra, p. 10.

* Damason.

Secondly, II. Which will appear further in this proposition, No Creature can make it self: The World could not make it self.

If every man had a beginning, every man than was once nothing; he could not then make himself, because nothing cannot be the cause of something, Psal. 100. 3. The Lord he is God, he hath made us, and not we our selves, [whatsoever begun in time, was not; and when it was nothing, it had nothing, and could do nothing: And therefore could never give to it self nor to any other to be, or to be able to do: For then it gave what it had not, and did what it could not. * Since Reason must acknowledge a first of every kind, a first Man, &c. it must acknowledge him created and made, not by himself: Why have not other men since rise up by themselves? not by Chance; why hath not Chance produced the like in that long time the World hath stood? If we never knew any thing give being to it self, how can we imagine any thing ever could? If the cheifest part of this lower World cannot, nor any part of it hath been known to give being to it self, then the whole cannot be supposed to give any being to it self: Man did not form himself: His body is not from himself, it would then have the power of moving it self, but that is not able to live or act without the presence of the Soul: Whilst the Soul is present the body moves, when that is absent the body lies as a senseless log, not having the least action or motion. His Soul could not form it self, can that which cannot form the least mote, the least grain of dust, form it self, a nobler substance than any upon the earth?

* Petav. Theol. Dog. Tom. 1. lib. 1. cap. 2. pa. 14.

This will be evident to every mans reason, if we consider,

1. Nothing can act before it be. The first Man was not, and therefore could not make himself to be: For any thing to produce it self is to act; if it acted before it was, it was then something and nothing at the same time; it had then a being before it had a being; it acted when it brought it self into being. How could it act without a being, without it was? So that if it were the cause of it self, it must be before it self as well as after it self; it was before it was; it was as a cause before it was as an effect. Action always supposes a principle from whence it flows; as nothing hath no Existence, so it hath no operation; there muſt be therefore ſomething of real Exiſtence to give a Being to thoſe things that are, and every cauſe muſt be an effect of ſome other before it be a cauſe: To be and not be at the ſame time, is a manifeſt contradiction, which would be, if any thing made it ſelf: That which makes is always before that which is made: Who will ſay the Houſe is before the Carpenter, or the Picture before the Limner? The world as a Creator, muſt be before it ſelf as a Creature.

2. That which doth not underſtand it ſelf, and order it ſelf, could not make it ſelf. If the firſt Man fully underſtood his own nature, the excellency of his own Soul, the manner of its operations, why was not that underſtanding conveyed to his poſterity? Are not many of them found, who underſtand their own nature, almoſt as little as a Beaſt underſtands it ſelf; or a Roſe underſtands its own ſweetneſs; or a Tulip its own Colours? The Scripture indeed gives us an account how this came about, viz. by the deplorable Rebellion of Man, whereby Death was brought upon them (a Spiritual Death, which includes ignorance as well as an inability to Spiritual action *). Thus he fell from his Honour and became like the Beaſts that periſh, and not retaining God in his knowledge, retained not himſelf in his own knowledge.

* Gen. 2. 17. Pſal. 49. 8.

But what reply can an Atheiſt make to it, who acknowledges no higher cauſe than nature? If the Soul made it ſelf, how comes it to be ſo muddy, ſo wanting in its knowledge of it ſelf, and of other things? If the Soul made its own underſtanding whence did the defect ariſe? If ſome firſt principle was ſetled by the firſt man in himſelf, where was the ſtop that he did not implant all in his own mind, and conſequently in the minds of all his deſcendants? Our Souls know little of themſelves, little of the World, are every day upon new enquiries, have little ſatisfaction in themſelves, meet with many an invincible rub in their way; and when they ſeem to come to ſome reſolution in ſome caſes, ſtagger again, and like a ſtone roll'd up to the top of the Hill, quickly find themſelves again at the foot. How come they to be ſo purblind in Truth? So ſhort of that which they judge true goodneſs? How comes it to paſs they cannot order their own rebellious affections, and ſuffer the reins they have to hold over their affections to be taken out of their hands by the unruly fancy and fleſh?

This no man that denies the being of a God, and the Revelation in Scripture, can give an account of. Bleſſed be God that we have the Scripture, which gives us an account of thoſe things, that all the wit of men could never inform us of; and that when they are diſcovered and known by Revelation, they appear not contrary to reaſon.

3. If the firſt Man made himſelf, how came he to limit himſelf? If he gave himſelf being, why did he not give himſelf all the perfections and Ornaments of being? Nothing that made it ſelf could ſit down contented with a little, but would have had as much power to give it ſelf that which is leſs, as to give it ſelf being, when it was nothing. The excellencies it wanted had not been more difficult to gain than the other which it poſſeſſed, as belonging to its nature. If the firſt man had been independent upon another, and had his perfection from himſelf, he might have acquired that perfection he wanted, as well as have beſtowed upon himſelf that perfection he had; and then there would have been no bounds ſet to him. He would have been Omniſcient and immutable. He might have given himſelf what he would; if he had had the ſetting his own bounds, he would have ſet none at all; For what ſhould reſtrain him? No man now wants Ambition to be what he is not; and if the firſt man had not been determined by another, but had given himſelf being, he would not have remained in that determinate being, no more than a Toad would remain a Toad, if it had power to make it ſelf a man, and that power it would have had, if it had given it ſelf a being. Whatſoever gives it ſelf being, would give it ſelf all degrees of being, and ſo would have no imperfection, becauſe every imperfection, is a want of ſome degree of being. * He that could give himſelf matter and life, might give himſelf every thing. The giving of life is an act of Omnipotence, and what is Omnipotent in one thing, may be in all. Beſides, if the firſt man had made himſelf, he would have conveyed himſelf to all his poſterity in the ſame manner, every man would have had all the perfections of the firſt man, as every Creature hath the perfections of the ſame kind, from whence it naturally Iſſues, all are deſirous to communicate what they can to their poſterity. Communicative goodneſs belongs to every nature. Every Plant propagates its kind in the ſame perfection it hath it ſelf; and and the nearer any thing comes to a rational nature, the greater affection it hath to that which descends from it; therefore this affection belongs to a rational nature much more. The first man therefore, if he had had power to give himself being, and consequently all perfection, he would have had as much power to convey it down to his posterity; no impediment could have stopt his way; then all Souls proceeding from that first man would have been equally intellectual. What should hinder them from inheriting the same perfections? whence should they have divers qualifications and differences in their understandings? No man then would have been subject to those weaknesses, doubtings, and unsatisfied desires of knowledge and perfection. But being all Souls are not alike, 'tis certain they depend upon some other cause for the communication of that excellency they have. If the perfections of Man be so contracted and kept within certain bounds, 'tis certain that they were not in his own power, and so were not from himself. Whatsoever hath a determinate being must be limited by some superior cause. There is therefore some superior power, that hath thus determined the Creature by set bounds and distinct measures, and hath assigned to every one its proper nature, that it should not be greater or less than it is; who hath said of every one as of the waves of the Sea, * Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further; and this is God. Man could not have reserved any perfection from his Posterity. For since he doth propagate not by choice but nature, he could no more have kept back any perfection from them, than he could, as he pleased, have given any perfection belonging to his nature to them. * Job 38. 11.

* Therefore the Heathens called God τὸ ὄν, the only being: Other things were not beings, becauſe they had not all degrees of being.

4. That which hath power to give it self being, cannot want power to preserve that being. Preservation is not more difficult than Creation. If the first man made himself, why did he not preserve himself? He is not now among the living in the world. How came he to be so feeble as to sink into the Grave? Why did he not inspire himself with new heat and moisture, and fill his languishing limbs and declining body with new strength? Why did he not chase away Diseases and Death at the first approach? What creature can find the dust of the first Man? All his posterity traverse the Stage and retire again; in a short space their Age departs, and is removed from them as a Shepherds Tent, and is cut off with pining Sickness. * The life of Man is as a wind, and like a cloud that is consumed and vanishes away, * The Eye that sees him shall see him no more, he returns not to his house, neither doth his place know him any more. The Scripture gives us the reason of this, and layes it upon the score of sin against his Creator; which no Man without revelation can give any satisfactory account of. * Isa. 38. 12. * Job 7. 6, 7, 8, 9.

Had the first Man made himself, he had been sufficient for himself, able to support himself without the assistance of any creature. He would not have needed animals and plants, and other helps to nourish and refresh him, nor Medicines to cure him. He could not be beholding to other things for his support, which he is certain he never made for himself. His own nature would have continued that vigour, which once he had conferred upon himself. He would not have needed the heat and light of the Sun; he would have wanted nothing sufficient for himself in himself; he needed not have sought without himself for his own preservation and comfort. What depends upon another is not of it self, and what depends upon things inferior to it self is less of it self. Since nothing can subsist of it self, since we see those things upon which Man depends for his nourishment and subsistence, growing and decaying, starting into the world and retiring from it, as well as man himself; some preserving cause must be concluded upon which all depends.

5. If the first Man did produce himself, why did he not produce himself before?

It hath been already proved, that he had a beginning, and could not be from Eternity. Why then did he not make himself before? Not because he would not. For having no being, he could have no will; he could neither be willing nor not willing. If he could not then, how could he afterwards? if it were in his own power he could have done it, he would have done it; if it were not in his own power, then it was in the power of some other cause, and that is God. How came he by that power to produce himself? If the power of producing himself were communicated by another, then Man could not be the cause of himself. That is the cause of it which communicated that power to it. But if the power of being was in and from himſelf and in no other, nor communicated to him, man would always have been in act, and always have Exiſted; no hinderance can be conceived. For that which had the power of being in it ſelf was invincible by any thing that ſhould ſtand in the way of its own being.

We may conclude from hence, the excellency of the Scripture; that it is a Word not to be refuſed credit. It gives us the moſt rational account of things in the 1. and 2. of Geneſis, which nothing in the world elſe is able to do.

Thirdly, III. Propoſition, No Creature could make the World. No Creature can create another. If it creates of nothing, tis then Omnipotent and ſo not a creature. If it makes ſomething of matter unfit for that which is produced out of it, then the inquiry will be, who was the cauſe of the matter? and ſo we muſt arrive to ſome uncreated being, the cauſe of all. Whatſoever gives being to any other muſt be the higheſt being, and muſt poſſeſs all the perfections of that which it gives being to. what viſible Creature is there which poſſeſſes the perfections of the whole world? If therefore an inviſible Creature made the world, the ſame enquiries will return whence that Creature had its being? For he could not make himſelf. If any Creature did Create the World, he muſt do it by the ſtrength and vertue of another, which firſt gave him being; and this is God. For whatſoever hath its Exiſtence and vertue of acting from another, is not God. If it hath its vertue from another tis then a ſecond cauſe, and ſo ſuppoſeth a firſt cauſe. It muſt have ſome cauſe of it ſelf, or be Eternally Exiſtent. If Eternally Exiſtent, tis not a ſecond cauſe, but God; if not Eternally Exiſtent, we muſt come to ſomething at length which was the cauſe of it, or elſe be bewildred without being able to give an account of any thing. VVe muſt come at laſt to an Infinite Eternal Independent Being, that was the firſt cauſe of this Structure and Fabrick wherein we and all Creatures dwell. The Scripture proclaims this aloud, * I am the Lord and there is none elſe : I Form the light and I Create darkneſs. Man the Nobleſt Creature cannot of himſelf make a man, the chiefeſt part of the World. If our Parents only without a Superior power made our Bodies or Souls, they would know the frame of them; as he that makes a Lock knows the VVards of it; he that makes any curious peice of Arras, knows how he ſets the various colours together, and how many threads went to each diviſion in the VVeb; he that makes a VVatch, having the Idea of the whole work in his mind, knows the motions of it, and the reaſon of thoſe motions. But both Parents and Children are equally ignorant of the nature of their Souls and Bodies, and of the reaſon of their motions. God only that had the Supream hand in informing us, in whoſe Book all our members are written, which in continuance were faſhioned, knows what we all are ignorant of. If man hath in an ordinary courſe of generation his being chiefly from an higher cauſe than his Parents, the World then certainly had its being from ſome infinitely wiſe intelligent Being, which is God. If it were, as ſome fancy, made by an aſſembly of Atomes, there muſt be ſome infinite intelligent cauſe that made them, ſome cauſe that ſeparated them, ſome cauſe that mingled them together for the piling up ſo comely a ſtructure as the world. Tis the moſt abſurd thing to think they ſhould meet together by hazard, and rank themſelves in that order we ſee without a higher and a wiſe Agent. So that no Creature could make the world. For ſuppoſing any Creature was formed before this viſible world, and might have a hand in diſpoſing things, yet he muſt have a cauſe of himſelf, and muſt act by the virtue and ſtrength of another; and this is God.

* Iſa. 45. 6, 7. Deut. 4. 35.

Pſal. 139. 16.

Fourthly, IV. Propoſition. From hence it follows, that there is a firſt cauſe of things, which we call God. There muſt be ſomething ſupream in the order of nature, ſomething which is greater than all, which hath nothing beyond it or above it; otherwiſe we muſt run in Infinitum. We ſee not a River but we conclude a Fountain; a VVatch but we conclude an Artificer. As all number begins from unity, ſo all the multitude of things in the VVorld begins from ſome Unity, Oneneſs, as the principle of it. Tis natural to ariſe from a view of thoſe things, to the conception of a nature more perfect than any. As from heat mixed with cold, and light mixed with darkneſs, men conceive and ariſe in their underſtanding to an intenſe heat and a pure light: And from a corporeal or bodily ſubſtance joyned with an incorporeal, (as man is an earthly body, and a Spiritual Soul,) we aſcend to a conception of a ſubſtance purely incorporeal corporeal and Spiritual. So from a multitude of things in the world, Reaſon leads us to one choice being above all. And ſince in all Natures in the World, we ſtill find a ſuperiour nature; the nature of one Beaſt, above the nature of another; the nature of Man above the nature of Beaſts; and ſome inviſible nature, the worker of ſtrange effects in the Air and Earth, which cannot be aſcribed to any viſible cauſe, we muſt ſuppoſe ſome nature above all thoſe of unconceivable perfection.

* Every Sceptick, one that doubts whether there be any thing real or no in the World, that counts every thing an appearance, muſt neceſſarily own a firſt Cauſe. They cannot reaſonably doubt, but that there is ſome firſt Cauſe, which makes the things appear ſo to them. They cannot be the cauſe of their own appearance. For as nothing can have a Being from it ſelf, ſo nothing can appear by it ſelf and its own force. Nothing can be and not be, at the ſame time. But that which is not, and yet ſeems to be; if it be the cauſe why it ſeems to be what it is not, it may be ſaid to be and not to be. But certainly ſuch Perſons muſt think themſelves to exiſt. If they do not, they cannot think; and if they do exiſt, they muſt have ſome cauſe of that Exiſtence. So that which way ſoever we turn our ſelves, we muſt in reaſon own a firſt Cauſe of the World. * Coccei ſum. Theol. cap. 8. § 33. &c.

Well then might the Pſalmiſt term an Atheiſt a Fool, that diſowns a God, againſt his own Reaſon. Without owning a God as the firſt cauſe of the world, no man can give any tolerable or ſatisfactory account of the world to his own reaſon.

And this firſt Cauſe,

1. Muſt neceſſarily exiſt. * Tis neceſſary that he by whom all things are, ſhould be before all things, and nothing before him. And if nothing be before him, he comes not from any other; and then he alwayes was, and without beginning. He is from himſelf; not that he once was not, but becauſe he hath not his Exiſtence from another, and therefore of neceſſity he did exiſt from all Eternity. Nothing can make it ſelf, or bring it ſelf into being; therefore there muſt be ſome being which hath no cauſe, that depends upon no other, never was produced by any other, but was what he is from Eternity, and cannot be otherwiſe; and is not what he is by will, but nature, neceſſarily exiſting, and alwayes exiſting without any capacity or poſſibility ever not to be. * Petav. Theol. Dog. Tom. 1. lib. 1. cap. 2. pa. 10, 11.

2. Muſt be infinitely perfect. Since man knows he is an imperfect being, he muſt ſuppoſe the imperfections he wants, are ſeated in ſome other being, which hath limited him, and upon which he depends. VVhatſoever we conceive of excellency or perfection muſt be in God. For we can conceive no perfection but what God hath given us a power to conceive. And he that gave us a power to conceive a tranſcendent perfection above whatſoever we ſaw or heard of, hath much more in himſelf; or elſe he could not give us ſuch a conception.

Secondly, II. As the production of the World, ſo the harmony of all the parts of it declare the being and wiſdom of a God. VVithout the acknowledging God the Atheiſt can give no account of thoſe things. The multitude, elegancy, variety, and beauty of all things are ſteps whereby to aſcend to one fountain and original of them.

Is it not a folly to deny the being of a wiſe Agent, who ſparkles in the beauty and motions of the Heavens; rides upon the wings of the VVind, and is writ upon the flowers and fruits of Plants. As the cauſe is known by the effects, ſo the wiſdom of the Cauſe is known by the elegancy of the VVork, the proportion of the parts to one another. VVho can imagine the VVorld could be raſhly made, and without conſultation, which in every part of it is ſo artificially framed? * No work of Art ſprings up of its own accord. The world is framed by an excellent Art, and therefore made by ſome skilful Artiſt. As we hear not a melodious inſtrument, but we conclude there is a Muſician that touches it, as well as ſome skilful hand that framed and diſpoſed it for thoſe Leſſons. And no man that hears the pleaſant ſound of a Lute but will fix his thoughts not upon the Inſtrument itſelf, but upon the skill of the Artiſt, that made it, and the art of the Muſician that ſtrikes it, though he ſhould not ſee the firſt, when he ſaw the Lute, nor ſees the other, when he hears the harmony. So a rational Creature confines not his thoughts to his Senſe, when he ſees the Sun in its Glory, and the Moon walking in its brightneſs; but riſeth up in a contemplation and admiration of that infinite Spirit that compoſed, and filled them with ſuch ſweetneſs. * Philo. Judæ. Petav. Theol. Dogmat. Tom. 1. lib. 1. cap. 1. pag. 9.

This appears,

1. It,

1. In the linking contrary qualities together. All things are compounded of the Elements. Thoſe are indued with contrary qualities, dryneſs and moiſture, heat and cold. Theſe would alwayes be contending with and infeſting one anothers rights, till the conteſt ended in the deſtruction of one or both. Where fire is predominant, it would ſuck up the water; where water is prevalent, it would quench the fire. The heat would wholly expel the cold, or the cold over-power the heat. Yet we ſee them chained and linkt one within another in every body upon the Earth, and rendring mutual offices for the benefit of that body wherein they are ſeated, and all conſpiring together in their particular quartels for the publick intereſt of the body. How could thoſe contraries, that of themſelves obſerve no order, that are alwayes preying upon one another, joyntly accord together of themſelves, for one common end, if they were not linkt in a common band, and reduced to that order by ſome incomprehenſible wiſdom and power, which keeps a hand upon them, orders their motions, and directs their events, and makes them friendly paſs into one anothers Natures? Confuſion had been the reſult of the diſcord and diverſity of their Natures. No compoſition could have been of thoſe conflicting qualities for the frame of any body, nor any harmony aroſe from ſo many jarring ſtrings, if they had not been reduced into concord by one that is ſupream Lord over them, and knows how to diſpoſe their varieties and enmities for the publick good. * If a Man ſhould ſee a large City or Country conſiſting of great multitudes of men of different tempers, full of Frauds and Factions and Animoſities in their natures againſt one another, yet living together in good order and peace, without oppreſſing and invading one another, and joyning together for the publick good; he would preſently conclude, there were ſome excellent Governor, who tempered them by his Wiſdom, and preſerved the publick Peace, though he had never yet beheld him with his eye. Tis as neceſſary to conclude a God, who moderates the contrarieties in the world; as to conclude a wiſe Prince, who over-rules the contrary diſpoſitions in a ſtate, making every one to keep his own bounds and confines. Things that are contrary to one another ſubſiſt in an admirable order.

* Athanaſius Petav. Theol. Dog. Tom. 1. li. 1. cap. 1. pa. 4,5.

2. In the ſubſerviency of one thing to another. All the Members of living Creatures are curiouſly fitted for the ſervice of one another, deſtin'd to a particular end, and endued with a vertue to attain that end, and ſo diſtinctly placed, that one is no hinderance to the other in its operations. Is not this more admirable than to be the work of chance, which is uncapable to ſettle ſuch an order and fix particular and general ends, cauſing an exact correſpondency of all the parts with one another, and every part to conſpire together for one common end? One thing is fitted for another. The Eye is fitted for the Sun, and the Sun fitted for the Eye. Several ſorts of food are fitted for Several Creatures, and thoſe Creatures fitted with Organs for the partaking of that food.

* Gaſſend. Phyſic. ſect. 1. lib. 4. cap. 2. pag. 315.

* Leſſius.

1. Subſerviency of Heavenly bodies. * The Sun, the heart of the world, is not for it ſelf but for the good of the World, as the heart of man is for the good of the body. How conveniently is the Sun placed, at a diſtance from the Earth, and the upper Heavens to enlighten the Stars above and enliven the Earth below? If it were either higher or lower, one part would want its influences. Tis not in the higher parts of the Heavens; the Earth then which lives and fructifies by its influence would have been expoſed to a perpetual Winter and chilneſs, unable to have produced any thing for the ſuſtenance of man or beaſt. If ſeated lower, the Earth had been parch'd up, the world made uninhabitable and long ſince had been conſumed to Aſhes by the ſtrength of its heat. Conſider the motion as well as the Scituation of the Sun. Had it ſtood ſtill, one part of the World had been cheriſhed by its beams, and the other left in a deſolate Widow-hood, in a diſconſolate darkneſs. Beſides, the Earth would have had no ſhelter from its perpendicular beams ſtriking perpetually and without any remiſſion upon it. The ſame incommodities would have followed upon its fixedneſs as upon its too great nearneſs. By a conſtant day the beauty of the Stars had been obſcured, the knowledge of their motions been prevented, and a conſiderable part of the Glorious wiſdom of the Creator in thoſe choice works of his fingers * had been vail'd from our eyes. It moves in a fixed line, viſits all parts of the Earth, ſcatters in the day its refreſhing bleſſings in every creek of the Earth, and removes the maſk from the other beauties of Heaven in the night, which ſparkle out to the glory of the Creator. It spreads its Light, warms the Earth, cherisheth the Seeds, excites the Spirit in the Earth, and brings Fruit to maturity. View also the Air, the vast extent between Heaven and Earth, which serves for a Water-course, a Cistern for water, to bedew the face of the Sun-burnt Earth, to satisfie the desolate ground, and to cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth * : Could Chance appoint the Clouds of the Air to interpose as fans before the scorching heat of the Sun, and the faint bodies of the Creatures? Can that be the Father of the Rain or begat the drops of dew * ? Could any thing so blind settle those ordinances of Heaven for the preservation of Creatures on the Earth? Can this either bring or stay the bottles of Heaven, when the dust grows into hardness, and the Clods cleave fast together * ?

* Pſal. 8. 3.

of

* Job. 38. 25, 27.

* Job. 38. 28.

* Job. 38. 37, 38.

2. Subserviency of the lower World, the Earth, and Sea, which was Created to be inhabited, Isa. 45. 18. The Sea affords water to the Rivers, the Rivers like so many veins are spread through the whole body of the Earth to refresh and enable it to bring forth fruit for the sustenance of man and beast, Psal. 104. 10, 11. He sends the Springs into the Vallies, which run among the Hills, they give drink to every Beast of the Field, the wild Asses quench their thirst. He causes the Grass to grow for the Cattle, and the herb for the service of man, that he may bring forth food out of the Earth, v. 14. The Trees are provided for shades against the extremity of heat, a refuge for the panting beasts, an habitation for Birds wherein to make their nests. ver. 17. and a Basket for their provision. How are the Vallies and Mountains of the Earth disposed for the pleasure and profit of man? Every year are the Fields covered with Harvests, for the nourishing the Creatures, no part is Barren but beneficial to man. The Mountains that are not cloathed with grass for his food are set with stones to make him an Habitation; they have their peculiar services of metals and minerals for the conveniency and comfort and benefit of man. Things which are not fit for his food are medicines for his cure under some painful sickness. Where the Earth brings not forth Corn, it brings forth Roots, for the service of other Creatures. Wood abounds more in those Countries where the cold is stronger than in others. Can this be the result of chance, or not rather of an infinite Wisdom?

Consider the usefulness of the Sea, for the supply of Rivers to refresh the Earth, Which go up by the Mountains and down by the Vallies into the place God hath founded for them, Psal. 104. 8. A store-house for fish for the nourishment of other Creatures, a shop of Medicines for cure, and Pearls for ornament. The band that ties remote Nations together, by giving opportunity of passage to, and commerce with one another. How should that natural inclination of the Sea to cover the Earth submit to this subserviency to the Creatures? Who hath pounded in this fluid mass of water in certain limits, and confin'd it to its own Channel, for the accommodation of such Creatures, who by its common Law can only be upon the Earth? Naturally the Earth was covered with the deep as with a Garment, the waters stood above the Mountains, Who set a bound that they might not pass over, that they return not again to cover the Earth? * Was it blind Chance, or an Infinite Power, that shut up the Sea with doors, and made thick darkness a swadling band for it, and said hitherto shalt thou come and no further, and here shall thy proud waves be staid * ?

* Psa. 104. 6, 9.

* Job. 38. 8, 9, 11.

All things are so ordered that they are not propter se but propter aliud. What advantage acrues to the Sun by its unwearied rolling about the world? Doth it increase the perfection of its nature by all its Circuits? No, but it serves the inferior world, it impregnates things by its heat. Not the most abject thing, but hath its end and use. There is a strait connexion, the Earth could not bring forth fruit without the Heavens, the Heavens could not water the Earth without vapours from it.

3. All this subserviency of Creatures centers in man. Other Creatures are served by those things as well as our selves, and they are provided for their nourishment and refreshment as well as ours; * yet both they and all Creatures meet in man as lines in their Centers: Things that have no life or sense are made for those that have both life and sense, and those that have life and sense are made for those that are endued with reason. When the Psalmist admiringly considers the Heavens, Moon, and Stars, he intimats man to be the end for which they were Created, Psal. 8. 3, 4. What is man that thou art mindful of him? He expresseth more particularly the Dominion

* Amirald. de Trinitate pa. 13. and Pag. 18.

Dominion that Man hath over the beaſts of the fields, the fowl of the Air, and whatſoever paſſes through the paths of the Sea, ver. 6, 7, 8. and concludes from thence the excellency of Gods Name in all the Earth. All things in the World one way or other Center in an uſefulneſs for man, ſome to feed him, ſome to cloath him, ſome to delight him, others to inſtruct him, ſome to exerciſe his wit, and others his ſtrength. Since man did not make them, he did not alſo order them for his own uſe. If they conſpire to ſerve him who never made them, they direct man to acknowledg another, who is the joynt Creator both of the Lord, and the Servants under his Dominion. And therefore as the inferior natures are ordered by an inviſible hand for the good of man; ſo the nature of man is by the ſame hand ordered to acknowledge the Exiſtence and the glory of the Creator of him. This viſible order man knows he did not conſtitute, he did not ſettle thoſe Creatures in ſubſerviency to himſelf; they were placed in that order before he had any acquaintance with them, or Exiſtence of himſelf, which is a queſtion God puts to Job, to conſider of, Job 38. 4. Where waſt thou when I laid the foundation of the Earth, declare if thou haſt underſtanding? All is ordered for Mans uſe, the Heavens anſwer to the Earth as a roof to a floor, both compoſing a delightful habitation for man; vapours aſcend from the Earth, and the Heavens concocts them, and returns them back in welcom ſhowers for the ſupplying of the Earth. * The light of the Sun deſcends to beautifie the Earth, and imploys its heat to midwife its fruits, and this for the good of the community, whereof Man is the head; and though all Creatures have diſtinct natures, and muſt act for particular ends, according to the Law of their Creation; yet there is a joynt combination for the good of the whole, as the common end; juſt as all the Rivers in the world, from what part ſoever they come, whether North or South, fall into the Sea for the ſupply of that maſs of waters; which loudly proclaims ſome infinitely wiſe nature, who made thoſe things in ſo exact an harmony. * [As in a Clock, the hammer which ſtrikes the bell, leads us to the next Wheel, that to another, the little wheel to a greater, whence it derives its motion, this at laſt to the ſpring, which acquaints us that there was ſome Artiſt that framed them in this ſubordination to one another for this orderly motion.]

* Jer. 10. 13.

* Morn. de verit. cap. 1. pag. 7.

4. This order or Subſerviency is regular and uniforme. Every thing is determined to its peculiar nature. * The Sun and Moon make day and night, months and years, determine the ſeaſons, never are defective in coming back to their ſtation and place, they wander not from their Roads, ſhock not againſt one another, nor hinder one another in the functions aſſigned them. From a ſmall grain or ſeed a Tree ſprings, with body, root, bark, leaves, fruit of the ſame ſhape, figure, ſmell, taſt; that there ſhould be as many parts in one as in all of the ſame kind, and no more, and that in the Womb of a ſenſitive Creature, ſhould be formed one of the ſame kind, with all the due members and no more, and the Creature that produceth it knows not how it is formed or how tis perfected. If we ſay this is nature; this nature is an intelligent being; if not, how can it direct all cauſes to ſuch uniforme ends. If it be intelligent, this nature muſt be the ſame we call God; Who ordered every herb to yeild ſeed, and every fruit-Tree to yeild fruit after its kind, and alſo every Beaſt and every creeping thing after its kind, Gen. 11, 12, 24.

* Amirant.

And every thing is determined to its particular ſeaſon. The ſap riſeth from the Root at its appointed time, enlivening and cloathing the branches with a new Garment at ſuch a time of the Suns returning, not wholly hindered by any accidental coldneſs of the weather, it being often colder at its return, than it was at the Suns departure. All things have their Seaſons of flouriſhing, budding, bloſſoming, bringing forth fruit; they ripen in their ſeaſons, caſt their leaves at the ſame time; throw off their old cloaths, and in the ſpring appear with new Garments, but ſtill in the ſame faſhion.

* The Winds and the Rain have their ſeaſons, and ſeem to be adminiſtred by Laws for the profit of man: No ſatisfactory cauſe of thoſe things can be aſcribed to the Earth, the Sea, to the Air or Stars. Can any underſtand the ſpreading of his clouds or the noiſe of his Tabernacle? Job 38. 29. The natural reaſon of thoſe things cannot be demonſtrated without recourſe to an infinite and intelligent being: Nothing can be rendred capable of the direction of thoſe things but a God.

* Coccei ſum. Theol. cap. 8. §77.

This regularity in Plants and Animals is in all Nations. The Heavens have the same motion in all parts of the world? all men have the same Law of nature in their mind; all Creatures are stampt with the same law of Creation: In all parts the same Creatures serve for the same use; and though there be different Creatures in India and Europe, yet they have the same subordination, the same subserviency to one another, and ultimately to man; which shews that there is a God, and but one God, who tunes all those different strings to the same notes in all places. Is it nature meerly conducts these natural causes in due measures to their proper effects, without interfering with one another? Can meer nature be the cause of those musical proportions of time? You may as well conceive a Lute to sound its own strings without the hand of an Artist; a City well Governed without a Governor; an Army keep its Stations without a General, as imagine so exact an order, without an Orderer: Would any Man, when he hears a Clock strike, by fit intervals, the hour of the day, imagine this regularity in it, without the direction of one that had understanding to manage it? He would not only regard the motion of the Clock, but commend the diligence of the Clock-Keeper.

ſame

5. This order and Subserviency is constant. Children change the customs and manners of their Fathers: Magistrates change the Laws they have received from their Ancestors, and enact new ones in their room: But in the world all things consist as they were created at the beginning; the Law of nature in the Creatures hath met with no change. * Who can behold the Sun rising in the morning; the Moon shining in the night; increasing and decreasing in its due spaces; the Stars in their regular motions night after night, for all ages, and yet deny a President over them? And this motion of the Heavenly bodies, being contrary to the nature of other Creatures, who move in order to rest; must be from some higher cause. But those ever since the setling in their places, have been perpetually rounding the world: * What nature, but one powerful and intelligent, could give that perpetual motion to the Sun, which being bigger than the Earth a hundred sixty six times, runs many thousand miles with a mighty swiftness in the space of an hour, with an unwearied diligence, performing its daily task, and as a strong man, rejoycing to run its race, for above five thousand years together, without intermission, but in the time of Joshuah? * Tis not natures Sun, but Gods Sun, which he makes to rise upon the just and unjust. *

So a Plant receives its nourishment from the Earth, sends forth its juyce to every branch, forms a bud which spreads it into a blossom and flower, the leaves of this drop off, and leave a fruit of the same colour and taste, every year; which being ripened by the Sun, leaves seeds behind it for the propagation of its like, which contains in the nature of it, the same kind of buds, blossoms, fruit which were before, and being nourished in the Womb of the Earth, and quickened by the power of the Sun, discovers it self at length, in all the progresses, and motions which its predecessor did: Thus in all ages, in all places, every year it performs the same task, spinns out fruit of the same colour, taste, vertue, to refresh the several Creatures, for which they are provided.

This setled state of things comes from that God who laid the foundations of the Earth, that it should not be removed for ever; * and set ordinances for them to act by a stated law; * according to which they move as if they understood themselves to have made a Covenant with their Creator. *

3. Add to this union of contrary qualities, and the subserviency of one thing to another, the admirable variety and diversity of things in the World. What variety of Metals, living Creatures, Plants what variety and distinction in the shape of their leaves, flowers, smell, resulting from them? Who can number up the several sorts of Beasts on the Earth, Birds in the Air, Fish in the Sea? How various are their motions? Some Creep, some Go, some Fly, some Swim; and in all this variety each Creature hath Organs or members, fitted for their peculiar motion. If you consider the multitude of Stars, which shine like Jewels in the Heavens, their different magnitudes; Or the variety of colours in the Flowers and Tapestry of the Earth, you could no more conclude they made themselves, or were made by chance, than you can imagine a piece of Arras, with a diversity of figures and colours, either wove it self, or were knit together by hazzard.

*Petav. ex Athanas. Theol. Dog. Tom. 1. lib. 1. cap. 1. § 4.

* (Whether it be the Sun, or the Earth that moves, it is all one: Whence have either of them this constant and uniform motion?)

* Josh. 10. 13.

* Mat. 5. 45.

* Psal. 104. 5.

* Job. 38. 33.

* Jer. 33. 20.

How delicious is the ſap of the Vine, when turned into Wine, above that of a Crab? Both have the ſame Womb of Earth to conceive them, both agree in the nature of Wood and Twigs, as Channels to convey it into fruit: What is that which makes the one ſo ſweet, the other ſo ſowre, or makes that ſweet, which was a few weeks before unpleaſantly ſharp? Is it the Earth? No: They both have the ſame ſoil; the branches may touch each other; the ſtrings of their Roots may under ground entwine about one another. Is it the Sun? Both have the ſame beams: Why is not the taſt and colour of the one as gratifying as the other? Is it the root? The taſt of that is far different from that of the fruit it bears. VVhy do they not when they have the ſame Soil, the ſame Sun, and ſtand near one another, borrow ſomething from one anothers natures? No reaſon can be rendred, but that there is a God of infinite wiſdom hath determin'd this variety, and bound up the nature of each Creature within it ſelf. * [Every thing follows the Law of its Creation, and it is worthy obſervation, that the Creator of them hath not given that power to Animals, which ariſe from different ſpecies, to propagate the like to themſelves; as Mules that ariſe from different ſpecies: No reaſon can be rendred of this, but the fixt determination of the Creator, that thoſe ſpecies which were Created by him ſhould not be loſt in thoſe mixtures, which are contrary to the Law of the Creation.] This cannot poſſibly be aſcribed to that which is commonly called nature, but unto the God of nature, who will not have his Creatures exceed their bounds or come ſhort of them.

* Amirald. de Trinitate pa. 21.

Now ſince among thoſe varieties, there are ſome things better than other, yet all are good in their kind, and partake of Goodneſs, * there muſt be ſomething better, and more excellent than all thoſe, from whom they derive that goodneſs, which inheres in their nature and is communicated by them to others: And this excellent being muſt inherit in an eminent way in his own nature, the goodneſs of all thoſe varieties, ſince they made not themſelves, but were made by another. All that Goodneſs which is ſcattered in thoſe varieties muſt be infinitely concentred in that nature, which diſtributed thoſe various perfections to them, Pſal. 94. 9. He that planted the Ear ſhall not he hear; he that formed the Eye, ſhall not he ſee; he that teacheth Man knowledge ſhall not he know? The Creator is greater than the Creature, and whatſoever is in his effects, is but an Impreſſion of ſome excellency in himſelf; there is therefore ſome chief fountain of goodneſs, whence all thoſe various goodneſſes in the world do flow.

* Gen. 1. 31.

From all this it follows, if there be an Order, and Harmony, there muſt be an Orderer, one that made the Earth by his Power, eſtabliſhed the world by his Wiſdom, and ſtretched out the Heavens by his diſcretion, Jer. 10. 12. Order being the effect, cannot be the cauſe of it ſelf: Order is the diſpoſition of things to an end, and is not intelligent, but implies an intelligent Orderer: And therefore it is as certain that there is a God, as it is certain there is order in the world: Order is an effect of Reaſon and Counſel; this reaſon and Counſel muſt have its reſidence in ſome being, before this order was fixed: The things ordered are always diſtinct from that Reaſon and Counſel whereby they are ordered, and alſo after it as the effect is after the cauſe. No Man begins a piece of work, but he hath the Model of it in his own mind: No Man builds an Houſe, or makes a Watch, but he hath the Idea or Copy of it in his own head: This beautiful world beſpeaks an Idea of it, or a model: Since there is ſuch a magnificent wiſdom in the make of each Creature, and the proportion of one Creature to another, this model muſt be before the VVorld, as the pattern is always before the thing that is wrought by it. This therefore muſt be in ſome intelligent and wiſe agent, and this is God: Since the reaſon of thoſe things exceed the reaſon and all the art of Man, who can aſcribe them to any inferior cauſe? Chance it could not be; the motions of Chance are not conſtant, and at ſeaſons, as the motions of Creatures are: That which is by Chance is contingent, this is neceſſary; Uniformity can never be the birth of Chance: VVho can imagine that all the parts of a watch can meet together and put themſelves in order and motion by Chance? [* Nor can it be nature only which indeed is a diſpoſition of ſecond cauſes: If nature hath not an underſtanding, it cannot work ſuch effects: If nature therefore uſes Councel to begin a thing, reaſon to diſpoſe it, art to effect it, vertue to compleat it and power to govern it, why ſhould it be called nature rather than God?] Nothing ſo ſure as that which hath an end to which it tends, hath a cauſe by which it is ordered to that end:

* Lactant.

Since

Since therefore all things are ordered in subserviency to the good of man, they are so ordered by him that made both man and them; And man must acknowledge the wisdom and goodness of his Creator, and act in subserviency to his Glory, as other Creatures act in subserviency to his good: Sensible objects were not made only to gratifie the sense of man, but to hand something to his mind as he is a rational Creature; to discover God to him as an object of love and desire to be enjoyed: * If this be not the effect of it, the order of the Creature, as to such an one, is in vain and falls short of its true end.

* Coccei. sum. Theol. cap. 8, § 63, 64.

To conclude this; As when a Man comes into a Palace, built according to the exactest rule of art, and with an unexceptionable conveniency for the Inhabitants, he would acknowledge both the being and skill of the Builder: So whosoever shall observe the disposition of all the parts of the World, their connexion, comelinesse, the variety of seasons, the swarms of different Creatures, and the mutual offices they render to one another, cannot conclude less, than that it was contrived by an Infinite Skill, effected by Infinite Power, and governed by Infinite Wisdom. None can imagine a Ship to be orderly conducted without a Pilot; Nor the parts of the World to perform their several functions without a wise guide; considering the Members of the Body, cannot perform theirs, without the active presence of the Soul. The Atheist then is a fool, to deny that which every Creature in his constitution asserts, and thereby renders himself, unable to give a satisfactory account of that constant uniformity in the motions of the Creatures.

Thirdly, III. As the production and harmony, so particular Creatures, pursuing and attaining their ends, manifest that there is a God. All particular Creatures have natural instincts, which move them for some end: The intending of an end, is a property of a rational Creature; since the lower Creatures cannot challenge that title, they must act by the understanding and direction of another: And since man cannot challenge the honor of inspiring the Creatures with such instincts, it must be ascribed to some nature infinitely above any Creature in understanding. No Creature doth determine it self. Why do the fruits and grain of the Earth nourish us, when the Earth which instrumentally gives them that fitness, cannot nourish us, but because their several ends are determined by one higher than the world?

1. Several Creatures have several Natures. How soon will all Creatures, as soon as they see the light, move to that whereby they must live, and make use of the natural arms God hath given their kind, for their defence, before they are grown to any maturity to afford them that defence? The Scripture makes the appetite of Infants to their milk a foundation of the divine Glory, Psal. 8. 3. Out of the Mouths of Babes and Sucklings, hast thou ordained strength; that is, matter of Praise and acknowledgment of God, in the natural appetite they have to their milk, and their relish of it. All Creatures have a natural affection to their young ones; all young ones by a natural instinct, move to, and receive the nourishment that is proper for them: Some are their own Physitians as well as their own Caterers, and naturally discern what preserves them in life, and what restores them when sick. The Swallow flies to its Celendine, and the Toad hastens to its Plantain.

Can we behold the Spiders Nets, or Silkworms Web, the Bees Closets, or the Ants Granaries, without acknowledging a higher being than a Creature, who hath planted that Genius in them? The consideration of the nature of several Creatures God commended to Job, (Chap. 39. where he discourseth to Job of the natural instincts, of the Goat, the Ostrich, Horse and Eagle, &c.) to perswade him to the acknowledgment and admiration of God and humiliation of himself.

The Spider, as if it understood the art of weaving, fits its web both for its own Habitation, and a Net to catch its prey. The Bee builds a Cell which serves for Chambers to reside in and a repository for its provision. Birds are observed to build their Nests with a clammy matter without, for the firmer duration of it, and with a soft moss and down within for the conveniency and warmth of their young: The Stork knows his appointed time. Jer. 8. 7. And the Swallows observe the time of their coming; they go and return according to the seasons of the year: This they gain not by consideration, it descends to them with their nature: They neither gain nor increase it by rational deductions. Tis not in vain to speak of these. How little do we improve by Meditation those objects, which daily offer themselves to our view, full of inſtruction for us? And our Saviour ſends his diſciples to ſpell God in the Lillies. * Tis obſerved alſo that the Creatures offenſive to man go ſingle: If they went by troops, they would bring deſtruction upon man and beaſt. This is the nature of them for the preſervation of others.

* Mat. 6. 28.

2. They know not their end. They have a Law in their natures, but have no rational underſtanding, either of the end to which they are appointed, or the means fit to attain it: They naturally do what they do, and move by no Counſel of their own, but by a Law impreſt by ſome higher hand upon their natures.

What Plant knows why it ſtrikes its root into the earth? Doth it underſtand what ſtorms it is to conteſt with, or why it ſhoots up its branches towards Heaven? Doth it know it needs the droppings of the clouds to preſerve it ſelf, and make it fruitful? Theſe are acts of underſtanding: The root is downward to preſerve its own ſtanding, the branches upwards to preſerve other Creatures: This underſtanding is not in the Creature it ſelf, but originally in another. Thunders and Tempeſts know not why they are ſent, yet by the direction of a mighty hand they are inſtruments of Juſtice upon a wicked world.

* Coccei. ſum. Theolog. cap. 8. § 67. &c.

*Rational Creatures that act for ſome end, and know the end they aim at, yet know not the manner of the natural motion of the members to it. When we intend to look upon a thing, we take no counſel about the natural motion of our eyes, we know not all the principles of their operations; or how that dull matter whereof our bodies are compoſed, is ſubject to the order of our minds. * We are not of Counſel with our ſtomachs about the concoction of our meat, or the diſtribution of the nouriſhing juyce to the ſeveral parts of the body. Neither the Mother nor the Fœtus ſit in Council how the formation ſhould be made in the Womb. We know no more than a plant knows what Stature it is of, and what medicinal vertue its fruit hath for the good of man; yet all thoſe natural operations are perfectly directed to their proper end, by an higher wiſdom than any humane underſtanding is able to conceive, ſince thy exceed the ability of an inanimate or fleſhly nature, yea and the wiſdom of a man. Do we not often ſee reaſonable Creatures acting for one end, and perfecting a higher than what they aimed at, or could ſuſpect? When Joſephs Brethren ſold him for a Slave, their end was to be rid of an Informer: * But the action iſſued in preparing him to be the preſerver of them and their Families. Cyrus his end was to be a Conqueror, but the action ended in being the Jews deliverer, Prov. 16. 9. A mans heart deviſeth his way, but the Lord directs his ſteps.

* Peirſon, on the Creed, p. 35.

* Gen. 37. 12.

3. Therefore there is ſome Superior underſtanding and nature which ſo acts them. That which acts for an end unknown to its ſelf, depends upon ſome over-ruling wiſdom that knows that end. Who ſhould direct them in all thoſe ends, but he that beſtowed a being upon them for thoſe ends,* who knows what is convenient for their life, ſecurity and propagation of their natures? An exact knowledge is neceſſary, both of what is agreable to them, and the means whereby they muſt attain it; which ſince it is not inherent in them, is in that wiſe God, who puts thoſe inſtincts into them, and governs them in the exerciſe of them to ſuch ends. Any man that ſees a dart flung, knows it cannot hit the mark without the skill and ſtrength of an Archer. Or he that ſees the hand of a Dial pointing to the hours ſucceſſively, knows that the Dial is ignorant of its own end, and is diſpoſed and directed in that motion by an other. All Creatures ignorant of their own natures could not univerſally in the whole kind, and in every Climate and Country, without any difference in the whole world, tend to a certain end, if ſome over-ruling wiſdom did not preſide over the world and guide them: And if the Creatures have a Conductor, they have a Creator: All things are turned round about by his Council, that they may do whatſoever he commands them upon the face of the world in the Earth. *

* Leſſius de proviſen. lib. 1. pag. 652.

* Job 37. 12.

So that in this reſpect the folly of Atheiſm appears. Without the owning a God no account can be given of thoſe actions of Creatures, that are an imitation of Reaſon: To ſay the Bees, &c. are rational, is to equal them to man; nay make them his ſuperiors, ſince they do more by nature than the wiſeſt man can do by art: Tis their own counſel whereby they act, or anothers; If it be their own, they are reaſonable Creatures; If by anothers, tis not meer nature that is neceſſary; Then other Creatures would not be without the ſame skill: There would be no difference among them: If nature be reſtrained by another, it hath a ſuperior; if not tis a free agent:

agent: Tis an underſtanding being that directs them: And then it is ſomething ſuperior to all Creatures in the world, and by this therefore we may aſcend to the acknowledgment of the neceſſity of a God.

Fourthly, IV. Add to the production and order of the World and the Creatures acting for their end, the preſervation of them. Nothing can depend upon it ſelf in its preſervation, no more than it could in its being. If the order of the world was not fixed by it ſelf, the preſervation of that order cannot be continued by it ſelf.

Tho the matter of the world after Creation, cannot return to that nothing whence it was fetched, without the power of God that made it, (becauſe the ſame power is as requiſite to reduce a thing to nothing as to raiſe a thing from nothing,) yet without the actual exerting of a power that made the Creatures, they would fall into confuſion. Thoſe conteſting qualities, which are in every part of it, could not have preſerved, but would have conſumed, and extinguiſh one another, and reduced the world to that confuſed Chaos, wherein it was before the Spirit moved upon the waters: As contrary parts could not have met together in one form, unleſs there had been one that had conjoyned them: So they could not have kept together after their conjunction unleſs the ſame hand had preſerved them. Natural contrarieties cannot be reconciled. Tis as great power to keep diſcords knit, as at firſt to link them. Who would doubt, but that an Army made up of ſeveral Nations and humors, would fall into a Civil War, and ſheath their Swords in one anothers bowels, if they were not under the management of ſome wiſe General, or a Ship daſh againſt the Rocks without the skill of a Pilot? * As the body hath neither life nor motion, without the active preſence of the Soul, which diſtributes to every part the vertue of acting; ſets every one in the exerciſe of its proper function, and reſides in every part: So there is ſome powerful cauſe which doth the like in the world, that rules and tempers it. There is need of the ſame power and action, to preſerve a thing, as there was at firſt to make it. When we conſider that we are preſerved, and know that we could not preſerve our ſelves; we muſt neceſſarily run to ſome firſt cauſe which doth preſerve us. All works of art depend upon nature, and are preſerved while they are kept by the force of nature: As a Statue depends upon the matter whereof it is made, whether ſtone or braſs; this nature therefore muſt have ſome Superior by whoſe influx it is preſerved. Since therefore we ſee a ſtable order in the things of the world, that they conſpire together for the good and beauty of the Univerſe; that they depend upon one another: There muſt be ſome principle upon which they do depend; ſomething to which the firſt link of the chain is faſtened, which himſelf depends upon no ſuperior, but wholly reſts in his own eſſence and being: Tis the title of God to be the preſerver of man and beaſt. * The Pſalmiſt elegantly deſcribeth it, Pſal. 104. 24. &c. The Earth is full of his riches, all wait upon him, that he may give them their meat in due ſeaſon; when he opens his hand he fills them with good; when he hides his face they are troubled, if he take away their breath they die and return to duſt; he ſends forth his Spirit, and they are Created, and renews the face of the Earth, the Glory of the Lord ſhall endure for ever, and the Lord ſhall rejoyce in his works: Upon the conſideration of all which the *Pſalmiſt v.*34. takes a pleaſure in the Meditation of God, as the cauſe and manager of all thoſe things; which iſſues into a joy in God and a praiſing of him. And why ſhould not the conſideration of the power and wiſdom of God in the Creatures produce the ſame effect in the hearts of us, if he be our God? Or as ſome render it, my Meditation ſhall be ſweet, or acceptable to him, whereby I find matter of praiſe in the things of the world, and offer it to the Creator of it.

* Gaſſend. Phyſ. ſect. 6. lib. 4. cap. 2. pa. 101.

* Pſa. 36. 6.

Thirdly, III. Reaſon, Tis a folly to deny that which a mans own nature witneſſeth to him. The whole frame of bodies and Souls bears the impreſs of the infinite power and wiſdom of the Creator. A body framed with an admirable Architecture, a Soul endowed with Underſtanding, Will, Judgement, Memory, Imagination. Man is the Epitome of the World, contains in himſelf the ſubſtance of all natures, and the fulneſs of the whole univerſe; not only in regard of the univerſalneſs of his knowledge, whereby he comprehends the reaſons of many things; but as all the perfections of the ſeveral natures of the world are gathered and united in man, for the perfection of his own, in a ſmaller volum. In his Soul he partakes of Heaven, in his body of the earth. There is the life of Plants, the ſenſe of beaſts, and the intellectual tellectual nature of Angels. * The Lord breathed into his Noſtril the breath of life, and man, &c. חיים of lifes. Not one ſort of, lifes; but ſeveral, not only an Animal, but a Rational life; a Soul of a Nobler extract and nature, than what was given to other Creatures.

The third Reaſon.

* Gen. 2. 7.

So that we need not ſtep out of doors, or caſt our eyes any further than our ſelves, to behold a God. He ſhines in the capacity of our Souls and the vigour of our Members. We muſt flie from our ſelves and be ſtript of our own humanity, before we can put off the Notion of a Deity: He that is ignorant of the Exiſtence of God, muſt be poſſeſſed with ſo much folly, as to be ignorant of his own make and frame.

1. In the parts whereof he doth conſiſt, Body and Soul.

Firſt, I. Take a proſpect of the Body. The Pſalmiſt counts it a matter of praiſe and admiration, Pſal. 139. 15, 16. I will praiſe thee, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made; when I was made in ſecret and curiouſly wrought in the loweſt parts of the Earth, in thy book all my Members were written. The Scheme of man and every Member was drawn in his book: All the Sinews, Veins, Arteries, Bones, like a peice of Embroidery or Tapeſtry, were wrought by God, as it were with deliberation; like an Artificer that draws out the model of what he is to do in writing, and ſets it before him when he begins his work.

And indeed the Fabrick of mans body, as well as his Soul, is an argument for a Divinity. The artificial ſtructure of it, the Elegancy of every part, the proper Situation of them, their proportion one to another, the fitneſs for their ſeveral functions, drew from Galen, * (a Heathen and one that had no raiſed ſentiments of a Deity,) a confeſſion of the admirable Wiſdom and power of the Creator, and that none but God could frame it.

* Lib. 3, de uſu partium. Petav. Theol. Dog. Tom. 1. lib. 1. cap. 1. pa. 6.

1. In the order, fitneſs and uſefulneſs of every part. The whole model of the body is grounded upon reaſon. Every member hath its exact proportion, diſtinct office, regular motion. Every part hath a particular comlineſs, and convenient temperament beſtowed upon it, according to its place in the Body. The Heart is hot to enliven the whole. The Eye clear to take in objects to preſent them to the Soul: Every member is fitted for its peculiar ſervice and action: Some are for ſenſe, ſome for motion, ſome for preparing, and others for diſpenſing nouriſhment to the ſeveral parts: They mutually depend upon, and ſerve one another. What ſmall ſtrings faſten the particular members together, as the Earth that hangs upon nothing? * Take but one part away, and you either deſtroy the whole, or ſtamp upon it ſome Mark of deformity. All are knit together by an admirable ſymmetry; all orderly perform their functions, as acting by a ſetled Law; none ſwerving from their rule, but in caſe of ſome predominant humor: And none of thoſe in ſo great a multitude of parts, ſtifled in ſo little a Room, or juſtling againſt one another to hinder their mutual actions; none can be better diſpoſed. And the greateſt wiſdom of man could not imagine it, till his eyes preſent them with the ſight and connexion of one part and member with another.

* Job. 26. 7.

1. The Heart. * How ſtrongly it is guarded with ribs like a Wall, that it might not be eaſily hurt! It draws blood from the Liver, through a channel made for that purpoſe: Rarifies it and makes it fit to paſs through the Arteries and Veins and to carry heat and life to every part of the body: And by a perpetual motion, it ſucks in the blood and ſpouts it out again; which motion depends not upon the command of the ſoul, but is pure natural.

* Theod. de providentiâ. Orat. 3.

2. The Mouth, takes in the meat, the teeth grind it for the ſtomack, the ſtomack prepares it, nature ſtrains it through the milky veins, the liver refines it and mints it into blood, ſeparates the purer from the droſſy parts, which go to the heart, circuites through the whole body, running through the Veins like Rivers through ſo many channels of the world, for the watering of the ſeveral parts: Which are framed of a thin skin for the ſtraining the blood through, for the ſupply of the members of the body, and framed with ſeveral valves or doors, for the thruſting the blood forwards to perform its circular motion.

3. The Brain, fortified by a ſtrong skul to hinder outward accidents, a tough membrane or skin to hinder any oppreſſion by the skull; the ſeat of ſenſe; that which coins the animal ſpirits by purifying and refining thoſe which are ſent to

it,

it, and ſeems like a curious piece of Needlework.

4. The Ear, framed with windings and turnings, to keep any thing from entring to offend the Brain; ſo diſpoſed as to admit ſounds with the greateſt ſafety and delight; * filled with an air within, by the motion whereof the ſound is tranſmitted to the Brain: As ſounds are made in the Air by diffuſing themſelves, as you ſee Circles made in the water by the flinging in a ſtone, This is the Gate of knowledge, whereby we hear the Oracles of God, and the inſtruction of men for arts: 'Tis by this they are expoſed to the mind, and the mind of another Man framed in our underſtandings. * Eccleſ. 12. 4.

5. What a curious Workmanſhip is that of the Eye, which is in the body, as the Sun in the World; ſet in the head as in a Watch-Tower, having the ſofteſt nerves for the receiving the greater multitude of Spirits neceſſary for the act of Viſion? How is it provided with defence, by the variety of Coats to ſecure and accommodate the little humor and part whereby the viſion is made? Made of a round figure and convex, as moſt commodious to receive the ſpecies of objects; ſhaded by the eye-brows and eye-lids, ſecured by the eye-lids which are its ornament and ſafety; which refreſh it when it is too much dried by heat, hinder too much light from inſinuating it ſelf into it to offend it, cleanſe it from impurities, by their quick motion preſerve it from any invaſion, and by contraction confer to the more evident diſcerning of things: Both the eyes ſeated in the hollow of the bone for ſecurity; yet ſtanding out that things may be perceived more eaſily on both ſides: And this little Member can behold the earth: and in a moment view things as high as Heaven.

6. * The Tongue for ſpeech framed like a Muſical inſtrument; the Teeth ſerving for variety of ſounds; the Lungs ſerving for Billows to blow the Organs as it were, to cool the Heart; by a continual motion tranſmitting a pure Air to the Heart, expelling that which was ſmoky and ſuperfluous. 'Tis by the Tongue that communication of Truth hath a paſſage among men; it opens the ſenſe of the mind; there would be no converſe and commerce without it: Speech among all Nations hath an elegancy and attractive force, maſtering the affections of men. * Coccei. ſum. Theolg. cap. 8. § 49.

Not to ſpeak of other parts, or of the multitude of Spirits that act every part; the quick flight of them where there is a neceſſity of their preſence. Solomon 12. Eccleſiaſt. Makes an elegant deſcription of them, in his Speech of old age: And Job ſpeaks of this formation of the body, Job 10. 9, 10, 11. &c. Not the leaſt part of the body is made in vain. The hairs of the head have their uſe, as well as are an ornament. The whole Symmetry of the body is a raviſhing object. Every Member hath a ſignature and mark of God and his Wiſdom: He is viſible in the formation of the members, the beauty of the parts, and the vigor of the body: This ſtructure could not be from the body, that only hath a paſſive Power, and cannot act in the abſence of the Soul: Nor can it be from the Soul. How comes it then to be ſo ignorant of the manner of its formation? The Soul knows not the internal parts of its own body, but by information from others, or inſpection into other bodies: It knows leſs of the inward frame of the body than it doth of it ſelf: But he that makes the Clock can tell the number and motions of the wheels within, as well as what figures are without.

This ſhort diſcourſe is uſeful to raiſe our admirations of the Wiſdom of God, as well as to demonſtrate, that there is an Infinite, Wiſe Creator: And the conſideration of our ſelves every day, and the wiſdom of God in our frame would maintain Religion much in the world; ſince all are ſo framed that no man can tell any error in the conſtitution of him. If thus the body of man is fitted for the ſervice of his Soul by an infinite God, the body ought to be ordered for the ſervice of this God, and in obedience to him.

2. In the admirable difference of the features of Men. Which is a great argument that the world was made by a wiſe Being: This could not be wrought by Chance or be the work of meer nature, ſince we find never or very rarely two perſons exactly alike. This diſtinction is a part of infinite wiſdom; otherwiſe what confuſion would be introduced into the World? Without this, Parents could not know their Children, nor Children their Parents, nor a Brother his Siſter, nor a Subject his Magiſtrate: Without it there had been no comfort of Relations, no Govern-

Government, no commerce: Debtors would not have been known from ſtrangers, nor good men from bad: Propriety could not have been preſerved, nor juſtice executed; the innocent might have been apprehended for the nocent; wickedneſs could not have been ſtopt by any Law.

The Faces of men are the ſame for parts, not for features: A diſſimilitude in a likeneſs. Man, like to all the reſt in the World, yet unlike to any, and differenced by ſome mark from all, which is not to be obſerved in any other ſpecies of Creatures. This ſpeaks ſome wiſe Agent which framed man; ſince for the preſervation of human ſociety and order in the world, this diſtinction was neceſſary.

Secondly, II. As mans own nature witneſſeth a God to him in the ſtructure of his body, ſo alſo in the nature of his Soul. * We know that we have an underſtanding in us; a ſubſtance we cannot ſee, but we know it by its operations; as thinking, reaſoning, willing, remembring; and as operating about things that are inviſible and remote from ſenſe: This muſt needs be diſtinct from the body, for that being but duſt and Earth in its original, hath not the power of reaſoning, and thinking; for then it would have that power, when the Soul were abſent, as well as when it is preſent. Beſides, if it had that power of thinking, it could think only of thoſe things which are ſenſible and made up of matter, as it ſelf is. This Soul hath a greater excellency, it can know it ſelf, rejoyce in it ſelf, which other Creatures in this world are not capable of: The Soul is the greateſt glory of this lower world, and as one ſaith; * there ſeems to be no more difference between the Soul and an Angel, than between a Sword in the Scabbard and when it is Out of the Scabbard.

* Coccei. Sum. Theolog. cap. 8. § 50. 51.

* More.

Firſt, I. Conſider the vaſtneſs of its capacity. The underſtanding can conceive the whole world, and paint in it ſelf the inviſible Pictures of all things. 'Tis capable of apprehending and diſcourſing of things ſuperior to its own nature [* 'Tis ſuted to all objects, as the Eye to all Colours, or the Ear to all ſounds.] How great is the Memory to retain ſuch varieties, ſuch diverſities? The Will alſo can accommodate other things to it ſelf. It invents Arts for the uſe of Man; preſcribes rules for the Government of States; ranſacks the bowels of nature; makes endleſs concluſions, and ſteps in reaſoning from one thing to another, for the knowledge of Truth; it can contemplate and form notions of things higher than the world.

* Calverwel.

2. The quickneſs of its motions. [* Nothing is more quick in the whole courſe of nature; the Sun runs through the World in a day this can do it in a moment. It can with one flight of fancy aſcend to the battlements of Heaven.] The miſts of the Air that hinder the ſight of the Eye, cannot hinder the flights of the Soul; it can paſs in a moment from one end of the World to the other, and think of things a thouſand miles diſtant. It can think of ſome mean thing in the World, and preſently by one caſt in the twinkling of an Eye, mount up as high as Heaven. As its deſires are not bounded by ſenſual objects, ſo neither are the motions of it reſtrained by them. It will break forth with the greateſt vigour, and conceive things infinitely above it; though it be in the body, it acts as if it were aſhamed to be Cloyſtered in it. This could not be the reſult of any material cauſe: Who ever knew meer matter underſtand, think, will? And what it hath not, it cannot give. That which is deſtitute of Reaſon and Will, could never confer Reaſon and Will.

* Theodoret.

* Coccei. Sum. Theolog. cap. 8. § 51. 52.

* 'Tis not the effect of the Body, for the Body is fitted with members to be ſubject to it: 'Tis in part ruled by the activity of the Soul, and in part by the Counſel of the Soul; 'Tis uſed by the Soul and knows not how it is uſed. Nor could it be from the Parents, ſince the ſouls of the Children often tranſcend thoſe of the Parents in vivacity, acuteneſs and comprehenſiveneſs: One man is ſtupid and begets a ſon with a capacious underſtanding; one is debauched and beaſtly in morals, and begets a ſon who from his Infancy teſtifies ſome vertuous inclinations, which ſprout forth in delightful fruit with the ripeneſs of his age. Whence ſhould this difference ariſe, a fool begat the wiſe man, and a debauched the vertuous man? the wiſdom of the one could not deſcend from the fooliſh ſoul of the other; nor the vertues of the ſon, from the deformed and polluted ſoul of the Parent; it lies not in the Organs of the Body; For if the folly of the Parent proceeded not from their ſouls, but the ill diſpoſition of the Organs of their bodies, how comes it to paſs that the bodies of the Children, are better Organiz'd beyond the goodneſs of their immediate cauſe? We muſt recur to ſome inviſible hand, that makes the difference,

I do not diſpute whether the Soul were generated or no; Suppoſe the ſubſtance of it was generated by the Parents, yet thoſe more excellent qualities were not the reſult of them.

ference, who bestows upon one at his pleasure richer qualities, than upon another: You can see nothing in the World endowed with some excellent quality, but you must imagine some bountiful hand did inrich it with that dowry: None can be so foolish as to think that a Vessel ever inricht it self with that spritely Liquor, wherewith it is filled; or that any thing worse than the Soul should indow it with that knowledge and activity which sparkles in it. Nature could not produce it: That nature is intelligent, or not; if it be not, then it produceth an effect more excellent than it self, in as much as an understanding Being surmounts a Being that hath no understanding; If the supream Cause of the Soul be intelligent, why do we not call it God as well as Nature? We must arise from hence to the notion of a God; a Spiritual nature cannot proceed but from a Spirit higher than it self, and of a transcendent perfection above it self: If we believe we have Souls and understand the state of our own faculties, we must be assured that there was some invisible hand which bestowed those faculties and the riches of them upon us: A Man must be ignorant of himself before he can be ignorant of the Existence of God: By considering the nature of our Souls, we may as well be assured that there is a God, as that there is a Sun by the shining of the beams in at our Windows: And indeed the Soul is a Statue and representation of God, as the Land-Skip of a Country or Map represents all the parts of it, but in a far less proportion than the Country it self is. The Soul fills the body, and God the world; the Soul sustains the body, and God the World; the Soul sees, but is not seen; God sees all things, but is himself invisible. How base are they then that prostitute their Souls an image of God to base things unexpressibly below their own nature?

3. I might add the union of Soul and Body. Man is a kind of compound of Angel and beast, of Soul and body; if he were only a Soul, he were a kind of Angel; if only a body, he were another kind of brute: Now that a body as vile and dull as earth, and a Soul that can mount up to Heaven, and rove about the world with so quick a motion, should be linkt in so strait an acquaintance; that so noble a Being as the Soul should be an Inhabitant in such a Tabernacle of Clay, must be owned to some infinite power that hath so chained it.

3. Man witnesseth to a God in the operations and reflections of Conscience, Rom. 2. 15. Their thoughts are accusing or excusing. An inward comfort attends good actions, and an inward torment follows bad ones; for there is in every mans Conscience, fear of punishment and hope of reward: There is therefore a sense of some superior Judge, which hath the power both of rewarding, and punishing: If man were his supream rule, what need he fear punishment, since no man would inflict any evil or torment on himself; nor can any man be said to reward himself, for all rewards refer to another, to whom the action is pleasing, and is a conferring some good a man had not before: If an action be done by a Subject or Servant, with hopes of reward, it can not be imagined, that he expects a reward from himself, but from the Prince or person whom he eyes in that action, and for whose sake he doth it.

1. There is a Law in the minds of Men, which is a rule of good and evil. There is a Notion of Good and Evil in the Consciences of men, which is evident by those Laws which are common in all Countries, for the preserving human societies, the encouragement of vertue, and discouragement of Vice; What Standard should they have for those Laws, but a common reason? The design of those Laws was to keep men within the bounds of Goodness, for mutual commerce; whence the Apostle calls the Heathen Magistrate a Minister of God for Good, Rom. 13. 4. and the Gentiles do by nature the things contain'd in the Law, Rom. 2. 14.

Man in the first instant of the use of reason, finds natural principles within himself, directing and choosing them; he finds a distinction between good and evil; how could this be, if there were not some rule in him to try and distinguish good and evil? If there were not such a law and rule in man, he could not sin; for where there is no Law there is no transgression. If man were a Law to himself and his own will his Law, there could be no such thing as evil; whatsoever he willed would be good and agreeable to the Law; and no action could be accounted sinful: The worst act would be as commendable as the best. Every thing at mans appointment would be good or evil. If there were no such Law, how should men that are naturally inclined to evil, disapprove of that which is unlovely, and approve of that good which they practiſe not. No man but inwardly thinks well of that which is good, while he neglects it; and thinks ill of that which is evil, while he commits it. Thoſe that are vitious, do praiſe thoſe that practiſe the contrary vertues. Thoſe that are evil would ſeem to be good, and thoſe that are blameworthy, yet will rebuke evil in others. This is really to diſtinguiſh between good and evil; whence doth this ariſe, by what rule do we meaſure this, but by ſome innate principle?

And this is univerſal, the ſame in one man as in another, the ſame in one Nation as in another, they are born with every man, and inſeparable from his nature, Prov. 27. 19. As in water face anſwers to face, ſo the heart of man to man. Common reaſon ſuppoſeth, that there is ſome hand which hath fixed this diſtinction in man: How could it elſe be univerſally impreſt? No Law can be without a Law-giver; no ſparks but muſt be kindled, by ſome other: Whence ſhould this Law then derive its original? Not from man; he would fain blot it out, and cannot alter it when he pleaſes: Natural generation never intended it; 'tis ſettled therefore by ſome higher hand, which as it imprinted it, ſo it maintains it againſt the violences of men; who, were it not for this Law, would make the world more than it is, an Aceldema and field of blood: For had there not been ſome ſupream good, the meaſure of all other goodneſs in the world, we could not have had ſuch a thing as good, The Scripture gives us an account that this good was diſtinguiſht from evil before man fell, they were objecta ſcibilia; good was commanded and evil prohibited, and did not depend upon man: From this a man may rationally be inſtructed that there is a God: For he may thus argue; I find my ſelf naturally obliged to do this thing and avoid that, I have therefore a ſuperior that doth oblige me; I find ſomething within me that directs me to ſuch actions, contrary to my ſenſitive appetite, there muſt be ſomething above me therefore that put this principle into mans nature: If there were no ſuperior, I ſhould be the ſupream Judge of good and evil: Were I the Lord of that Law which doth oblige me, I ſhould find no contradiction within my ſelf between reaſon and appetite,

2. From the Tranſgreſſion of this law of nature, fears do ariſe in the Conſciences of men. Have we not known or heard of men ſtruck by ſo deep a dart, that could not be drawn out by the ſtrength of men, or appeaſed by the pleaſure of the world, and men crying out with horrour upon a death-bed of their paſt life, when their fear hath come as a deſolation, and deſtruction as a whirlwind, Prov. 1. 27. And often in ſome ſharp affliction, the duſt hath been blown off from mens Conſciences, which for a while hath obſcured the writing of the law. If men ſtand in awe of puniſhment, there is then ſome ſuperior to whom they are accountable: If there were no God, there were no puniſhment to fear. What reaſon of any fear, upon the diſſolution of the knot between the Soul and body, if there were not a God to puniſh, and the Soul remained not in being to be puniſhed?

How ſuddenly will Conſcience work upon the appearance of an affliction, rouze it ſelf from ſleep like an armed man, and fly in a mans face before he is aware of it? It will ſurprize the Hypocrites. Iſa. 38. 14. It will bring to mind actions committed long ago, and ſet them in order before the face, as Gods deputy acting by his authority and Omniſcience, As God hath not left himſelf without a witneſs among the Creatures, Acts 14. 17. So he hath not left himſelf without a witneſs in a mans own breaſt.

1. This operation of Conſcience hath been univerſal. No Nation hath been any more exempt from it, than from reaſon: Not a man but hath one time or other more or leſs ſmarted under the ſting of it. All over the world Conſcience hath ſhot its darts. It hath torn the hearts of Princes in the midſt of their pleaſures: It hath not flattered them whom moſt men flatter, nor feared to diſturb their reſt, whom no man dares to provoke. Judges have trembled on a Tribunal, when Innocents have rejoyced in their condemnation: The Iron bars upon Pharaohs Conſcience, were at laſt broke up, and he acknowledged the Juſtice of God in all that he did, Exod. 9. 27. I have ſinned, the Lord is righteous, and I and my people are wicked. Had they been like Childiſh frights at the apprehenſion of bug-bears, why hath not reaſon ſhaken them off? But on the contrary the ſtronger reaſon grows, the ſmarter thoſe laſhes are: Groundleſs fears had been ſhort liv'd: Age and Judgment would have worn them off, but they grow ſharper with the growth of perſons. The Scripture informs us they have been of as ancient a date as the revolt of the firſt man, Gen. 3. 10. I was afraid, ſaith Adam, becauſe I was naked; which was an expectation of the Judgement of God. All his posterity inherit his fears, when God expresseth himself in any tokens of his Majesty and Providence in the world. Every mans Conscience testifies that he is unlike what he ought to be according to that law engraven upon his heart. In some indeed Conscience may be seared, or dimmer; or suppose some men may be devoid of Conscience, shall it be denyed to be a thing belonging to the nature of man? Some men have not their eyes, yet the power of seeing the light is natural to man, and belongs to the integrity of the body: Who would argue, that because some men are mad and have lost their reason by a distemper of the brain, that therefore reason hath no reality, but is an imaginary thing? But I think it is a standing truth, that every man hath been under the scourge of it, one time or other, in a less or greater degree: For since every man is an offender, it cannot be imagined, Conscience which is natural to man and an active faculty, should always lie idle, without doing this part of its office? The Apostle tells us of the thoughts, accusing or excusing one another, (or by turns) according as the actions were. Nor is this truth weakned by the corruptions in the world, whereby many have thought themselves bound in Conscience to adhere to a false and superstitious worship and Idolatry, as much as any have thought themselves bound to adhere to a worship commanded by God. This very thing infers that all men have a reflecting principle in them; it is no argument against the being of Conscience, but only infers that it may Err in the application of what it naturally owns. We can no more say, that because some men walk by a false rule, there is no such thing as Conscience, than we can say that because men have errors in their minds, therefore they have no such faculty as an Understanding; or because men will that which is evil, they have no such faculty as a will in them.

poſterity

2. These operations of Conscience, are when the wickedness is most secret. These tormenting fears of Vengeance, have been frequent in men, who have had no reason to fear man, since their wickedness being unknown to any but themselves, they could have no accuser but themselves. They have been in many acts which their companions have justified them in: Persons above the stroak of human laws, yea such as the people have honoured as Gods, have been haunted by them. Conscience hath not been frighted by the power of Princes, or brib'd by the pleasures of Courts: David was pursued by his horrors, when he was by reason of his dignity above the punishment by the Law, or at least was not reacht by the Law; since though the Murder of Uriah was intended by him, it was not acted by him. Such examples are frequent in human Records: When the crime hath been above any punishment by man, they have had an Accuser, Judge and Executioner in their own breasts: Can this be originally from a mans self? He who loves and cherishes himself, would fly from any thing that disturbs him: Tis a greater Power and Majesty from whom man cannot hide himself, that holds him in those fetters. What should affect their minds for that which can never bring them shame or punishment in this World, if there were not some Supream Judge, to whom they were to give an account, whose instrument Conscience is? Doth it do this of it self; hath it received an Authority from the man himself to sting him? It is some supream power, that doth direct and commission it against our Wills.

3. These operations of Conscience cannot be totally shaken off by Man. If there be no God, why do not men silence the clamors of their Consciences, and scatter those fears that disturb their rest and pleasures? How inquisitive are men after some remedy against those convulsions? Sometimes they would render the charge insignificant and sing a rest to themselves, though they walk in the wickedness of their own hearts: * How often do men attempt to drown it by sensual pleasures, and perhaps over-power it for a time; but it revives, reinforceth it self and Acts a revenge for its former stop. It holds sin to a mans view, and fixes his eyes upon it, whether he will or no: The wicked are like a troubled Sea, and cannot rest, Isa. 57. 20. They would wallow in sin without controul, but this inward principle will not suffer it; nothing can shelter men from those blows. What is the reason it could never be cried down? Man is an Enemy to his own disquiet; what man would continue upon the rack, if it were in his power to deliver himself? VVhy have all human remedies been without success; and not able to extinguish those operations, though all the wickedness of the heart hath been ready to assist and second the attempt? It hath pursued men notwithstanding all the violence uſed againſt it, and renewed its ſcourges with more ſeverity, as men deal with their reſiſting Slaves. Man can as little ſilence thoſe Thunders in his Soul, as he can the Thunders in the Heavens: He muſt ſtrip himſelf of his humanity before he can be ſtript of an accuſing and affrighting Conſcience; It ſticks as cloſe to him as his nature: Since man cannot throw out the Proceſs it makes againſt him, 'tis an evidence that ſome higher power ſecures its Throne and ſtanding: Who ſhould put this ſcourge into the hand of Conſcience, which no Man in the world is able to wreſt out?

* Deut. 29. 19.

4. We may add, the comfortable reflections of Conſcience. There are excuſing as well as accuſing reflections of Conſcience, when things are done as works of the law of nature, Rom. 2. 15. As it doth not forbear to accuſe and torture, when a wickedneſs tho unknown to others is committed; So when a man hath done well, though he be attackt with all the calumnies the wit of Man can forge, yet his Conſcience juſtifies the action, and fills him with a ſingular contentment. As there is torture in ſinning, ſo there is peace and joy in well doing: Neither of thoſe it could do, if it did not underſtand a Soveraign Judge, who puniſhes the Rebels and rewards the well-doer. Conſcience is the foundation of all Religion; and the two Pillars upon which it is built, are the being of God and the bounty of God to thoſe that diligently ſeek him. *

* Heb. 11. 6.

This proves the Exiſtence of God: If there were no God, Conſcience were uſeleſs; the operations of it would have no foundation, if there were not an eye to take notice, and a hand to puniſh or reward the action. The accuſations of Conſcience evidence the Omniſcience and the Holineſs of God; The terrors of Conſcience, the juſtice of God; The approbations of Conſcience, the Goodneſs of God: All the order in the world owes it ſelf, next to the Providence of God, to Conſcience; Without it the world would be a Golgotha. As the Creatures witneſs, there was a firſt cauſe that produced them, ſo this principle in Man evidenceth it ſelf to be ſet by the ſame hand, for the good of that which it had ſo framed: There could be no Conſcience if there were no God, and man could not be a rational Creature, if there were no Conſcience. As there is a Rule in us, there muſt be a Judge whether our actions be according to the Rule. And ſince Conſcience in our corrupted ſtate is in ſome particular miſled, there muſt be a power ſuperior to Conſcience to judge how it hath behaved it ſelf, in its deputed office: We muſt come to ſome ſupream Judge, who can Judge Conſcience it ſelf. As a man can have no ſurer evidence, that he is a Being, than becauſe he thinks; he is a thinking being: So there is no ſurer evidence in nature, that there is a God, than that every man hath a natural principle in him, which continually cites him before God, and puts him in mind of him, and makes him one way or other fear him, and reflects upon him whether he will or no: A man hath leſs power over his Conſcience, than over any other faculty: He may chooſe whether he will exerciſe his underſtanding about, or move his will to ſuch an object, but he hath no ſuch Authority over his Conſcience; he cannot limit it, or cauſe it to ceaſe from acting and reflecting; and therefore both that, and the law about which it acts, are ſettled by ſome ſupream Authority in the mind of man, and this is God.

Fourthly, IV. The evidence of a God reſults from the vaſtneſs of deſires in man, and the real diſſatisfaction he hath in every thing below himſelf. Man hath a boundleſs appetite after ſome Soveraign Good: As his underſtanding is more capacious, than any thing below, ſo is his Appetite larger. This affection of deſire exceeds all other affections. Love is determined, to ſomething known. Fear to ſomething apprehended; but deſires approach nearer to Infiniteneſs, and purſue, not only what we know, or what we have a glimps of, but what we find wanting in what we already enjoy. That which the deſire of man is moſt naturally carryed after, is Bonum; ſome fully ſatisfying good. We deſire knowledge by the ſole impulſe of reaſon; but we deſire Good before the excitement of reaſon, and the deſire is always after good, but not always after Knowledge.

Now the Soul of man finds an imperfection in every thing here, and cannot ſcrape up a perfect ſatisfaction and felicity. In the higheſt fruitions of worldly things, 'tis ſtill purſuing ſomething elſe, which ſpeaks a defect in what it already hath. The world may afford a felicity for our duſt, the body, but not for the inhabitant in it; 'tis too mean for that. Is there any one Soul among the Sons of men, that that can upon a due enquiry ſay, it was at reſt and wanted no more, that hath not ſometimes had deſires after an immaterial Good? The Soul follows hard after ſuch a thing, and hath frequent looks after it, Pſal. 63. 8. Man deſires a ſtable Good, but no ſublunary thing is ſo: And he that doth not deſire ſuch a Good, wants the rational nature of a man: This is as natural as Underſtanding, Will and Conſcience: Whence ſhould the Soul of man have thoſe deſires? How came it to underſtand that ſomething is ſtill wanting to make its nature more perfect; if there were not in it ſome notion of a more perfect being, which can give it reſt?

Can ſuch a capacity be ſuppoſed to be in it without ſomething in being able to ſatisfie it? If ſo, the nobleſt Creature in the world is miſerableſt, and in a worſe condition than any other: Other Creatures obtain their ultimate deſires, they are filled with good, Pſal. 104. 28. And ſhall man only have a vaſt deſire without any poſſibility of enjoyment? Nothing in man is in vain: He hath objects for his affections, as well as affections for objects. Every Member of his body hath its end, and doth attain it. Every affection of his Soul hath an object, and that in this World, and ſhall there be none for his deſire, which comes neareſt to infinite of any affection planted in him? This boundleſs deſire had not its original from man himſelf: Nothing would render it ſelf reſtleſs; ſomething above the bounds of this world implanted thoſe deſires after a higher Good, and made him reſtleſs in every thing elſe. And ſince the Soul can only reſt in that which is infinite, there is ſomething infinite for it to reſt in: Since nothing in the world, though a man had the whole, can give it a ſatisfaction, there is ſomething above the world only capable to do it, otherwiſe the Soul would be always without it, and be more in vain than any other Creature.

There is therefore ſome infinite being that can only give a contentment to the Soul, and this is God. And that goodneſs which implanted ſuch deſires in the Soul, would not do it to no purpoſe, and mock it in giving it an infinite deſire of ſatisfaction, without intending it the pleaſure of enjoyment, if it doth not by its own folly deprive it ſelf of it. The felicity of human nature muſt needs exceed that which is allotted to other Creatures.

4. And laſt Reaſon. As 'tis a folly to deny that which all Nations in the World have conſented to, which the frame of the world evidenceth, which man in his Body, Soul, Operations of Conſcience witneſſeth to: So 'tis a folly to deny the Being of God, which is witneſſed unto by extraordinary occurrences in the World. Fourth Reaſon.

1. In extraordinary Judgments. When a juſt revenge follows abominable crimes, eſpecially when the Judgment is ſuted to the ſin, by a ſtrange Concatenation and ſucceſſion of Providences, methodized to bring ſuch a particular puniſhment; when the ſin of a Nation or perſon is made legible in the inflicted Judgment, which teſtifies that it cannot be a caſual thing. The Scripture gives us an account of the neceſſity of ſuch Judgments, to keep up the reverential thoughts of God in the World. Pſal. 9. 16. The Lord is known by the judgment which he executes, the wicked is ſnared in the work of his own hand. And Jealouſy is the name of God, Exod. 34. 14. Whoſe name is Jealous: He is diſtinguiſht from falſe Gods by the Judgments which he ſends, as men are by their names.

Extraordinary Prodigies in many Nations have been the Heralds of extraordinary Judgments, and preſages of the particular Judgments which afterwards they have felt, of which the Roman Hiſtories, and others are full. That there are ſuch things is undeniable, and that the events have been anſwerable to the threatning, unleſs we will throw away all human Teſtimonies, and count all the Hiſtories of the World Forgeries. Such things are evidences of ſome inviſible Power which orders thoſe affairs. And if there be inviſible Powers, there is alſo an efficacious cauſe which moves them: A Government certainly there is among them, as well as in the world, and then we muſt come to ſome ſupream Governour which preſides over them.

Judgments upon notorious offenders have been evident in all ages; the Scripture gives many inſtances. I ſhall only mention that of Herod Agrippa, which Joſephus mentions. * He receives the flattering applauſe of the people, and thought himſelf a God. But by the ſudden ſtroak upon him, was forced by his torture to confeſs another. I am God ſaith he in your account, but a higher calls me away! The Will will of the Heavenly Deity is to be endured. The Angel of the Lord ſmote him. The Judgment here was ſuted to the ſin; he that would be a God is eaten up of Worms, the vileſt Creatures. Tully Hoſtilius a Roman King, who counted it the moſt unroyal thing to be Religious, or own any other God but his Sword, was conſumed himſelf and his whole Houſe by lightning from Heaven.

* Lib. 19. Antiq. Act. 12. 21, 22, 23.

Many things are unaccountable unleſs we have recourſe to God: The ſtrange Revelations of Murderers, that have moſt ſecretly committed their crimes: The making good ſome dreadful imprecations, which ſome wretches have uſed to confirm a lie, and immediately have been ſtruck with that Judgement they wiſhed: The raiſing often unexpected perſons to be inſtruments of Vengeance on a ſinful and perfidious Nation: The overturning the deepeſt and ſureſt Counſels of men, when they have had a ſucceſsful progreſs, and came to the very point of Execution; the whole deſign of mens preſervation hath been beaten in pieces by ſome unforeſeen circumſtance, ſo that Judgments have broken in upon them without controul, and all their ſubtilties been out-witted. The ſtrange croſſing of ſome in their Eſtates, though the moſt wiſe, induſtrious and frugal perſons, and that by ſtrange and unexpected ways: And it is obſervable how often every thing contributes to carry on a Judgment intended, as if they rationally deſigned it. All thoſe loudly proclaim a God in the world: If there were no God, there would be no ſin; if no ſin, there would be no puniſhment.

2. In Miracles. The courſe of nature is uniform; and when it is put out of its courſe, it muſt be by ſome ſuperior power inviſible to the world; and by whatſoever inviſible inſtruments they are wrought, the efficacy of them muſt depend upon ſome firſt cauſe above nature. Pſal. 72. 18. Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, who only doth wondrous things, by himſelf and his ſole power.

That which cannot be the reſult of a natural cauſe, muſt be the reſult of ſomething ſupernatural: What is beyond the reach of nature, is the effect of a power ſuperior to nature. For it is quite againſt the order of nature, and is the elevation of ſomething to ſuch a pitch, which all nature could not advance it to. Nature cannot go beyond its own limits: If it be determined by another, as hath been formerly proved, it cannot lift it ſelf above it ſelf, without that power, that ſo determined it. Natural agents act neceſſarily: The Sun doth neceſſarily ſhine, fire doth neceſſarily burn. That cannot be the reſult of nature, which is above the Ability of nature. That cannot be the work of nature, which is againſt the order of nature: Nature cannot do any thing againſt it ſelf, or invert its own courſe.

We muſt own that ſuch things have been, or we muſt accuſe all the Records of former ages to be a pack of lies; which whoſoever doth, deſtroys the greateſt and beſt part of human knowledge. The Miracles mentioned in the Scripture, wrought by our Saviour, are acknowledged by the Heathen, by the Jews at this day, though his greateſt enemies. There is no diſpute whether ſuch things were wrought, the dead raiſed, the blind reſtored to ſight. The Heathens have acknowledged the Miraculous Eclipſe of the Sun, at the Paſſion of Chriſt, quite againſt the rule of nature, the Moon being then in oppoſition to the Sun. The propagation of Chriſtianity contrary to the Methods whereby other Religions have been propagated, that in a few years the Nations of the world ſhould be ſprinkled with this Doctrine, and give in a greater Catalogue of Martyrs courting the devouring flames, than all the Religions of the world.

To this might be added, the ſtrange hand that was over the Jews, the only people in the world profeſſing the true God, that ſhould ſo often be befriended by their Conquerors, ſo as to rebuild their Temple, though they were looked upon as a people apt to rebel. Dion and Seneca obſerve, that wherever they were tranſplanted, they proſpered and gave laws to the Victors: So that this proves alſo the Authority of the Scripture, the truth of Chriſtian Religion, as well as the being of a God, and a ſuperior power over the world.

To this might be added, the bridling the tumultuous paſſions of men for the preſervation of human ſocieties, which elſe would run the world into unconceivable confuſions, Pſal. 65. 7. Which ſtilleth the noiſe of the Sea, and the tumults of the people. As alſo the Miraculous deliverance of a perſon or Nation, when upon the very brink of ruin; the ſudden anſwer of Prayer when God hath been ſought to, and the turning away a Judgment, which in reaſon could not be expected to be averted, and the raiſing a ſunk people from a ruin which ſeemed inevitable, by unexpected ways.

when

3 Accompliſhments of Prophecies. Thoſe things which are purely contingent, and cannot be known by Natural ſigns and in their cauſes, as Eclipſes and Changes in Nations, which may be diſcerned by an obſervation of the ſigns of the times; ſuch things that fall not within this compaſs, if they be foretold and come to paſs, are ſolely from ſome higher hand, and above the cauſe of Nature. This in Scripture is aſſerted to be a notice of the true God, Iſa. 41. 23. Shew the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that you are God; and Iſa. 46. 10. I am God declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times, the things that are not yet done, ſaying, my Counſel ſhall ſtand, and I will do all my pleaſure. And Prophecy was conſented to by all the Philoſophers to be from Divine illumination: That power which diſcovers things future, which all the foreſight of men cannot kenn and conjecture, is above nature. And to foretel them ſo certainly as if they did already exiſt, or had exiſted long ago, muſt be the reſult of a mind infinitely intelligent: Becauſe it is the higheſt way of knowing, and a higher cannot be imagined: And he that knows things future in ſuch a manner, muſt needs know things preſent and paſt. Cyrus was Propheſied of by Eſay, ch. 44. 28. & 45. 1. Long before he was born: His Victories, Spoils, all that ſhould happen in Babylon, his bounty to the Jews came to paſs, according to that Prophecy; and the ſight of that Prophecy which the Jews ſhewed him, as other Hiſtorians report, was that which moved him to be favourable to the Jews.

Alexanders ſight of Daniels Prophecy concerning his Victories moved him to ſpare Jeruſalem. And are not the four Monarchies plainly deciphered in that Book, before the fourth roſe up in the world? That power which foretells things beyond the reach of the wit of man, and orders all cauſes to bring about thoſe predictions, muſt be an infinite power, the ſame that made the world, ſuſtains it and governs all things in it according to his pleaſure, and to bring about his own ends: And this Being is God.

Uſe 1. 1: If Atheiſm be a folly; 'Tis then pernicious to the world, and to the Atheiſt himſelf. Wiſdom is the band of human ſocieties, the glory of man. Folly is the diſturber of Families, Cities, Nations: The diſgrace of human nature.

First, I. 'Tis pernicious to the World.

1. It would root out the foundations of Government. It demoliſheth all order in Nations. The being of a God is the guard of the world: The ſenſe of a God is the foundation of Civil order; without this there is no tye upon the Conſciences of men. What force would there be in Oaths for the deciſions of controverſies, what right could there be in Appeals made to one that had no being? A City of Atheiſts would be a heap of confuſion; there could be no ground of any commerce, when all the ſacred bands of it in the Conſciences of men were ſnapt aſunder, which are torn to pieces and utterly deſtroyed by denying the Exiſtence of God: What Magiſtrate could be ſecure in his ſtanding, what private perſon could be ſecure in his right? * Can that then be a truth that is deſtructive of all publick good? If the Atheiſts ſentiment, that there were no God, were a truth; and the contrary that there were a God, were a falſity; it would then follow, that falſity made men good and ſerviceable to one another: that error were the foundation of all the beauty and order, and outward felicity of the world; the fountain of all good to man. If there were no God, to beleive there is one would be an error, and to beleive there is none would be the greateſt wiſdom, becauſe it would be the greateſt truth. And then as it is the greateſt wiſdom to fear God, upon the apprehenſion of his Exiſtence; * So it would be the greateſt error to fear him, if there were none. It would unqueſtionably follow, that Error is the ſupport of the world, the ſpring of all human advantages; and that every part of the world were obliged to a falſity for being a quiet habitation, which is the moſt abſurd thing to imagine. 'Tis a thing impoſſible to be tolerated by any Prince, without laying an Axe to the root of the Government.

* Leſſius de Provid. pa. 663.

* Pſal. 111. 19.

2. It would introduce all evill into the World. If you take away God, you take away way Conſcience, and thereby all meaſures and rules of good and evil. And how could any Laws be made when the meaſure and ſtandard of them were removed? All good Laws are founded upon the dictates of Conſcience and reaſon, upon common ſentiments in human nature, which ſpring from a ſenſe of God: So that if the foundation be demoliſht, the whole ſuperſtructure muſt tumble down: A man might be a Thief, a Murderer, an Adulterer, and could not in a ſtrict ſenſe be an offender. The worſt of actions could not be evil, if a Man were a God to himſelf, a Law to himſelf. Nothing but evil deſerves a cenſure, and nothing would be evil, if there were no God, the Rector of the world againſt whom evil is properly committed: No Man can make that morally evil that is not ſo in it ſelf. As where there is a faint ſenſe of God, the heart is more ſtrongly inclin'd to wickedneſs; ſo where there is no ſenſe of God, the bars are removed, the flood-gates ſet open for all wickedneſs to ruſh in upon Mankind. Religion pinions Men from abominable practices, and reſtrains them from being Slaves to their own paſſions: An Atheiſts arms would be looſe to do any thing. * Nothing ſo villanous and unjuſt but would be acted, if the natural fear of a Deity were extinguiſht. The firſt conſequence iſſuing from the apprehenſion of the Exiſtence of God, is his Government of the world. If there be no God, then the natural conſequence is, that there is no ſupream Government of the world: Such a Notion would caſhier all ſentiments of good, and be like a Trojan Horſe, whence all impurity, tyranny and all ſorts of miſchiefs would break out upon Mankind: Corruption and abominable works in the text are the fruit of the fools perſwaſion that there is no God. The perverting the ways of men, oppreſſion and extortion owe their riſe to a forgetfulneſs of God, Jer. 3. 21. They have perverted their way, and they have forgotten the Lord their God. Ezek. 22. 12. Thou haſt greedily gained by extortion and haſt forgotten me, ſaith the Lord. The whole Earth would be filled with violence, all fleſh would corrupt their way, as it was before the deluge, when probably Atheiſm did abound more than Idolatry; and if not a diſowning the Being, yet denying the Providence of God by the Poſterity of Cain: Thoſe of the Family of Seth only calling upon the Name of the Lord, Gen. 6. 11, 12. compared, with Gen. 4. 26.

* Leſſius de Provid. p. 664.

The greateſt ſenſe of a Deity in any, hath been attended with the greateſt innocence of life and uſefulneſs to others: And a weaker ſenſe hath been attended with a baſer impurity. * If there were no God, Blaſphemy would be praiſe-worthy: As the reproach of Idols is praiſe-worthy, becauſe we teſtifie that there is no Divinity in them. What can be more contemptible than that which hath no being? Sin would be only a falſe opinion of a violated Law, and an offended Deity. If ſuch apprehenſions prevail, what a wide door is opened to the worſt of villanies? If there be no God, no reſpect is due to him; all the Religion in the world is a trifle, and Error, and thus the Pillars of all human ſociety, and that which hath made Commonwealths to flouriſh, are blown away.

* Leſſius de Provid. p. 665.

Secondly, 2. 'Tis pernicious to the Atheiſt himſelf. If he fear no future puniſhment, he can never expect any future reward: All his hopes muſt be confined to a Swiniſh and deſpicable manner of life, without any imaginations of ſo much as a dram of reſerved happineſs. He is in a worſe condition than the ſilleſt animal, which hath ſomething to pleaſe it in its life: Whereas an Atheiſt can have nothing here to give him a full content, no more than any other Man in the World, and can have leſs ſatisfaction hereafter. He depoſeth the noble end of his own being, which was to ſerve a God and have a ſatisfaction in him, to ſeek a God and be rewarded by him: And he that departs from his end, recedes from his own nature. All the content any Creature finds, is in performing its end, moving according to its natural inſtinct; As it is a joy to the Son to run its race: * In the ſame manner it is a ſatisfaction to every other Creature, and its delight to obſerve the Law of its Creation. What content can any man have that runs from his end, oppoſeth his own nature, denies a God by whom and for whom he was Created, whoſe Image he bears, which is the Glory of his nature; and ſinks into the very dregs of bruitiſhneſs? How elegantly is it deſcribed by Bildad, * His own Counſel ſhall caſt him down, terrors ſhall make him afraid on every ſide, deſtruction ſhall be ready at his ſide, the firſt born of Death ſhall devour his ſtrength, his confidence ſhall be rooted out,

* Pſal. 19. 5.

* Job 18. 7, 8. &c. to the end.

out, and it shall bring him to the King of Terrors: Brimstone shall be scattered upon his Habitation, he shall be driven from light into darkness, and chased out of the World; they that come after him shall be astonished at his day, as they that went before were affrighted: and this is the place of him that knows not God. * If there be a future reckoning, (as his own Conscience cannot but sometimes inform him of) his condition is desperate, and his misery dreadful and unavoidable: 'Tis not righteous a Hell should entertain any else, if it refuse him. * Ver. 21.

2. How lamentable is it, that in our times this folly of Atheism should be so rife? That there should be found such Monsters in human nature, in the midst of the improvements of Reason, and shinings of the Gospel, who not only make the Scripture the matter of their Jeers, but Scoff at the Judgments and Providences of God in the World, and envy their Creator a being, without whose goodness they had had none themselves; who contradict in their carriage what they assert to be their sentiment, when they dreadfully imprecate damnation to themselves? Whence should that damnation they so rashly wish, be poured forth upon them, if there were not a revenging God? Formerly Atheism was as rare as prodigious, scarce two or three known in an age. * And those that are reported to be so in former ages, are rather thought to be counted so, for mocking at the senseless Deities, the common people ador'd, and laying open their impurities. A meer natural strength would easily discover that those they adored for Gods, could not deserve that title, since their original was known, their uncleanness manifest and acknowledged by their worshippers. And probably it was so, * since the Christians were termed ἄθεοι, because they acknowledged not their vain Idols. Use 2. * As Justin informs us.

I question whether there ever was, or can be in the world, an uninterrupted and internal denyal of the being of God, or that men, (unless we can suppose Conscience utterly dead) can arrive to such a degree of impiety: For before they can stifle such sentiments in them, (whatsoever they may assert) they must be utter strangers to the common conceptions of reason, and despoil themselves of their own humanity. He that dares to deny a God with his lips, yet sets up something or other as a God in his heart. Is it not lamentable that this sacred truth, consented to by all Nations, which is the band of civil societies, the source of all order in the world, should be denyed with a bare face, and disputed against in Companies; And the glory of a wise Creator ascribed to an unintelligent nature, to blind chance? are not such worse then Heathens? They worshipped many Gods, these none: They preserved a notion of God in the world under a disguise of Images: These would banish him both from Earth and Heaven, and demolish the Statues of him in their own Consciences: They degraded him, these would destroy him: They coupled Creatures with him; Rom. 1. 25. Who worshipped the Creature with the Creator, as it may most properly be rendred: And these would make him worse than the Creature, a meer nothing. Earth is hereby become worse than Hell. Atheism is a perswasion, which finds no footing any where else. Hell that receives such persons, in this point reforms them: They can never deny or doubt of his being, while they feel his stroaks. The Devil that rejoyces at their wickedness, knows them to be in an error; for he believes and trembles at the belief. * This is a fore-runner of Judgment: Boldness in sin is a presage of vengeance, especially when the honour of God is more particularly concern'd therein. It tends to the overturning human society, taking off the Bridle from the wicked inclinations of men. And God appears not in such visible Judgments against sin immediately committed against himself, as in the case of those sins that are destructive to human society. Besides, God as Governor of the world will uphold that, without which all his ordinances in the world would be useless. Atheism is point blank against all the Glory of God in Creation, and against all the glory of God in Redemption, and pronounceth at one breath, both the Creator, and all Acts of Religion and Divine Institutions useless and insignificant. * Jam. 2. 19.

Since most have had one time or other, some risings of doubt, whether there be a God, tho few do in expressions deny his being, it may not be unnecessary to propose some things for the further impressing this truth, and guarding themselves against such temptations.

1. 'Tis utterly impossible to demonstrate there is no God. He can choose no Me- dium, but will fall in as a proof for his Exiſtence, and a manifeſtation of his excellency, rather than againſt it. The pretences of the Atheiſt are ſo ridiculous, that they are not worth the mentioning.

They never ſaw God, and therefore know not how to believe ſuch a Being; they cannot comprehend him. He would not be God, if he could fall within the narrow Model of an humane Underſtanding: He would not be infinite, if he were comprehenſible, or to be terminated by our ſight. How ſmall a thing muſt that be which is ſeen by a bodily Eye, or graſpt by a weak Mind? If God were viſible or comprehenſible, he would be limited: Shall it be a ſufficient Demonſtration from a blind man, that there is no fire in the Room, becauſe he ſees it not, tho he feel the warmth of it? The knowledge of the effect is ſufficient to conclude the exiſtence of the cauſe. Who ever ſaw his own Life? Is it ſufficient to deny a man lives, becauſe he beholds not his Life, and only knows it by his motion? He never ſaw his own Soul, but knows he hath one by his thinking power: The Air renders it ſelf ſenſible to Men in its Operations, yet was never ſeen by the eye.

If God ſhould render himſelf viſible, they might queſtion as well as now, whether that which was ſo viſible, were God or ſome deluſion. If he ſhould appear glorious, we can as little behold him in his Majeſtick Glory, as an Owl can behold the Sun in its brightneſs; we ſhould ſtill but ſee him in his Effects, as we do the Sun by his Beams. If he ſhould ſhew a new Miracle, we ſhould ſtill ſee him but by his Works; ſo we ſee him in his Creatures, every one of which would be as great a Miracle as any can be wrought, to one that had the firſt proſpect of them. To require to ſee God, is to require that which is impoſſible, 1 Tim. 6. 16. He dwells in the Light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath ſeen nor can ſee. 'Tis viſible that he is, for he covers himſelf with Light as with a Garment, Pſal 104. 2. 'Tis inviſible what he is, for he makes Darkneſs his ſecret place, Pſal. 18. 11. Nothing more clear to the Eye than Light, and nothing more difficult to the underſtanding than the nature of it: as Light is the firſt Object obvious to the Eye, ſo is God the firſt Object obvious to the Underſtanding. The Arguments from Nature do with greater ſtrength evince his Exiſtence, than any pretences can manifeſt there is no God. No man can aſſure himſelf by any good reaſon there is none: For as for the likeneſs of Events to him that is righteous and him that is wicked, to him that ſacrificeth and to him that ſacrificeth not, Eccleſ. 9. 2. It is an Argument for a reſerve of Judgment in another State, which every mans Conſcience dictates to him; when the Juſtice of God ſhall be glorified in another world, as much as his patience is in this.

2. Whoſoever doubts of it, makes himſelf a Mark, againſt which all the Creatures fight. All the Stars fought againſt Siſera for Iſrael: All the Stars in Heaven, and the Duſt on Earth fight for God againſt the Atheiſt. He hath as many Arguments againſt him as there are Creatures in the whole compaſs of Heaven and Earth: He is moſt unreaſonable, that denies or doubts of that whoſe Image and Shadow he ſees round about him; he may ſooner deny the Sun that warms him, the Moon that in the Night walks in her brightneſs, deny the Fruits he enjoys from the Earth, yea and, deny that he doth exiſt. He muſt tear his own Conſcience, fly from his own thoughts, be changed into the nature of a Stone which hath neither reaſon nor ſenſe, before he can diſingage himſelf from thoſe Arguments which evince the Being of a God. He that would make the natural Religion profeſſed in the world a meer Romance, muſt give the lye to the common ſenſe of Mankind; he muſt be at an irreconcileable enmity with his own Reaſon, reſolve to hear nothing that it ſpeaks, if he will not hear what it ſpeaks in this caſe, with a greater evidence than it can aſcertain any thing elſe. God hath ſo ſetled himſelf in the reaſon of Man, that he muſt vilify the nobleſt Faculty God hath given him, and put off Nature it ſelf before he can blot out the Notion of a God.

3. No queſtion but thoſe that have been ſo bold as to deny that there was a God, have ſometimes been much afraid they have been in an Error, and have at leaſt ſuſpected there was a God, when ſome ſuddain Prodigy hath preſented it ſelf to them and rouſed their fears. And whatſoever Sentiments they might have in their blinding Proſperity, they have had other kind of motions in them in their ſtormy afflictions: and like Jonah's Mariners have been ready to cry to him for help, whom they diſdained to own ſo much as in being, while they ſwam in their pleaſures. The thoughts of a Deity cannot be ſo extinguiſht, but they will revive and ruſh upon a Man, at leaſt under ſome ſharp ffliction. Amazing judgments will make them queſtion their own apprehenſions. God ſends ſome Meſſengers to keep alive the apprehenſion of him as a Judge, while men reſolve not to own or reverence him as a Governour. A man cannot but keep a ſcent of what was born with him: As a Veſſel that hath been ſeaſoned firſt with a ſtrong juice will preſerve the ſcent of it, whatſoever liquors are afterwards put into it.

Af-

4. What is it for which ſuch men rack their wits, to form Notions, that there is no God? Is it not that they would indulge ſome vitious habit, which hath gained the poſſeſſion of their Soul, which they know cannot be favoured by that holy God, Whoſe Notion they Would raze out * ? Is it not for ſome brutiſh affection, as degenerative of human Nature, as derogatory to the Glory of God; a luſt as unmanly as ſinful? * Pſal. 94. 6,7.

The terrours of God are the effects of guilt; and therefore men would wear out the apprehenſions of a Deity, that they might be brutiſh without controul. They would fain believe there were no God, that they might not be men, but Beaſts. How great a folly is it to take ſo much pains in vain, for a ſlavery and torment? to caſt off that which they call a yoke, for that which really is one? There is more pains and toughneſs of Soul requiſite to ſhake off the apprehenſions of God, than to believe that he is, and cleave conſtantly to him. What a madneſs is it in any to take ſo much pains to be leſs than a man, by razing out the apprehenſions of God, when with leſs pains, he may be more than an earthly man, by cheriſhing the Notions of God, and walking anſwerably thereunto.

5. How unreaſonable is it for any man to hazard himſelf at this rate in the denial of a God? The Atheiſt ſaith he knows not that there is a God; but may he not reaſonably think, there may be one for ought he knows? and if there be, what a deſperate confuſion will he be in, when all his bravado's ſhall prove falſe? What can they gain by ſuch an Opinion? a freedom ſay they from the burdenſom yoke of Conſcience, a liberty to do what they liſt: That doth not ſubject them to Divine Laws. 'Tis an hard matter to perſwade any that they can gain this. They can gain but a ſordid pleaſure, unworthy the Nature of man. But it were well, that ſuch would argue thus with themſelves: If there be a God, and I fear and obey him, I gain a happy Eternity; but if there be no God, I loſe nothing but my ſordid luſts by firmly believing there is one. If I be deceived at laſt, and find a God, can I think to be rewarded by him, for diſowning him? Do not I run a deſperate hazard to loſe his favour, his Kingdom and endleſs felicity, for an endleſs torment? By confeſſing a God I venture no loſs; but by denying him I run the moſt deſperate hazard, if there be one.

He is not a reaſonable Creature, that will not put himſelf upon ſuch a reaſonable arguing.

What a doleful meeting will there be between the God who is denyed, and the Atheiſt that denyes him, who ſhall meet with reproaches on Gods part, and terrors on his own? All that he gains is a liberty to defile himſelf here, and a certainty to be deſpiſed hereafter, if he be in an errour, as undoubtedly he is.

6. Can any ſuch perſon ſay he hath done all that he can to inform himſelf of the being of God, or of other things which he denyes? Or rather they would fain imagine there is none, that they may ſleep ſecurely in their luſts and be free (if they could) from the thunder-claps of Conſcience? Can ſuch ſay they have uſed their utmoſt indeavours to inſtruct themſelves in this, and can meet with no ſatisfaction? Were it an abſtruſe Truth it might not be wondred at: But not to meet with ſatisfaction in this which every thing minds us of, and helpeth, is the fruit of an extream negligence, ſtupidity, and a willingneſs to be unſatisfied, and a judicial proceſs of God againſt them. 'Tis ſtrange any man ſhould be ſo dark in that upon which depends the conduct of his life, and the expectation of happineſs hereafter.

I do not know what ſome of you may think, but I believe theſe things are not uſeleſs to be propoſed for our ſelves to anſwer temptations: We know not what wicked temptation in a debauched and ſceptick Age, meeting with a corrupt heart, may prompt men to: And tho there may not be any Atheiſt here preſent, yet I know there is more than one, who have accidentally met with ſuch, who openly denyed a Deity. And if the like occaſion happen, theſe conſiderations may not be unuſeful to apply to their Conſciences. But I muſt confeſs, that ſince thoſe that live in this ſentiment, do not judge themſelves worthy of their own care, they are not worthy of the care of others; and a man muſt have all the Charity of the Chriſtian Religion, which they deſpiſe, not to contemn them, and leave them to their own folly. As we are to pity mad men, who ſink under an unavoidable diſtemper, we are as much to abominate them, who will fully hug this prodigious frenzy.

Uſe 3. If it be the Atheiſts folly to deny or doubt of the being of God, 'Tis our Wiſdom to be firmly ſettled in this Truth, That God is. we ſhould never be without our Arms in an Age wherein Atheiſm appears bare fac'd without a diſguiſe.

You may meet with ſuggeſtions to it; though the Devil formerly never attempted to demoliſh this notion in the world, but was willing to keep it up, ſo the worſhip due to God might run in his own Channel; and was neceſſitated to preſerve it, without which he could not have erected that Idolatry, which was his great deſign in oppoſition to God: Yet ſince the Foundations of that are torn up, and never like to be rebuilt, he may endeavour, as his laſt refuge, to baniſh the Notion of God out of the world; that he may reign as abſolutely without it, as he did before by the miſtakes about the divine Nature. But we muſt not lay all upon Satan; the corruption of our own hearts miniſters matter to ſuch Sparks. 'Tis not ſaid, Satan hath ſuggeſted to the Fool, but the Fool hath ſaid in his heart there is no God. But let them come from what principle ſoever, ſilence them quickly, give them their diſmiſs; oppoſe the whole Scheme of Nature to fight againſt them, as the Stars did againſt Siſera. Stir up ſentiments of Conſcience to oppoſe ſentiments of corruption. Reſolve ſooner to believe, that your ſelves are not, than that God is not: And if you ſuppoſe they at any time come from Satan, object to him that you know he believes the contrary, to what he ſuggeſts. Settle this principle firmly in you, let us behold Him that is inviſible, as Moſes did: * Let us have the ſentiments following upon the Notion of a God; to be reſtrained by a fear of him, excited by a love to him, not to violate his Laws and offend his Goodneſs. He is not a God careleſs of our actions, negligent to inflict puniſhment, and beſtow rewards, he forgets not the labour of our love, * nor the integrity of our ways: He were not a God, if he were not a Governor: And puniſhments and rewards are as eſſential to Government, as a Foundation to a building: His being and his Government in rewarding, which implies puniſhment, (for the neglects of him are linkt together,) * are not to be ſeparated in our thoughts of him.

* Heb. 11. 27.

* Heb. 6. 10.

* Heb. 11. 6.

1. Without this truth fixed in us, we can never give him the worſhip due to his Name. When the knowledge of any thing is fluctuating and uncertain, our actions about it are careleſs. We regard not that which we think doth not much concern us. If we do not firmly believe there is a God, we ſhall pay him no ſteady worſhip; and if we believe not the excellency of his nature, we ſhall offer him but a ſlight ſervice. * The Jews * call the knowledge of the being of God, The Foundation and Pillar of Wiſdom. The whole frame of Religion is diſſolved without this apprehenſion, and totters if this apprehenſion be wavering. Religion in the heart is as water in a weather glaſs which riſeth or falls according to the ſtrength or weakneſs of this belief: How can any man worſhip that which he believes not to be, or doubts of? Could any man omit the paying an homage to one, whom he did believe to be an Omnipotent, Wiſe Being, poſſeſſing, (infinitely above our conceptions) the perfections of all Creatures? He muſt either think there is no ſuch Being, or that he is an eaſie, drowſy, inobſervant God, and not ſuch a one as our natural Notions of him, if liſtened to, as well as the Scripture, repreſent him to be.

* Mal. 1. 13. 14.
* Maimon. funda. Legis cap. 1.

2. Without being rooted in this, we cannot order our lives. All our baſeneſs, ſtupidity, dulneſs, wandrings, vanity, ſpring from a wavering and unſetledneſs in this principle. This gives ground to brutiſh pleaſures, not only to ſollicite, but conquer us. Abraham expected violence in any place were God was not owned, Gen. 20. 11. Surely the fear of God is not in this place, and they will ſlay me for my Wifes ſake. The natural knowledge of God firmly impreſt, would choak that which would ſtifle our reaſon and deface our Souls. The belief that God is, and what he is, would have a mighty influence to perſwade us to a real Religion, and ſerious Conſideration, and caſting about how to be like to him and united with him.

3. Without it we cannot have any comfort of our Lives. Who would willingly live in a ſtormy world, void of a God? If we waver in this Principle, to whom ſhould we make our complaints in our afflictions? Where ſhould we meet with ſupports? How could we ſatisfie our ſelves with the hopes of a future Happineſs? There is a Sweetneſs in the Meditation of his Exiſtence, and that he is a Creator. * Thoughts of other things have a Bitterneſs mixed with them: Houſes, Lands, Children now are, ſhortly they will not be; but God is, that made the World: His Faithfulneſs as he is a Creator, is a Ground to depoſite our Souls and Concerns in our innocent Sufferings. * So far as we are weak in the acknowledgement of God, we deprive our ſelves of our content in the view of his infinite perfections.

in

* Pſal. 104.24.

* 1 Pet. 4. 19.

4. Without the rooting of this Principle, we cannot have a firm belief of Scripture. The Scripture will be a ſlight thing to one that hath weak ſentiments of God. The Belief of a God muſt neceſſarily precede the belief of any Revelation; The latter cannot take place without the former as the foundation. We muſt firmly believe the being of a God, wherein our Happineſs doth conſiſt, before we can believe any means which conduct us to him: Moſes begins with the Author of Creation, before he treats of the Promiſe of Redemption. Paul preached God as a Creator to a Univerſity, before he preached Chriſt as Mediator. * What influence can the Teſtimony of God have in his Revelation upon one that doth not firmly aſſent to the truth of his being? All would be in vain that is ſo often repeated [thus ſaith the Lord] if we do not believe there is a Lord that ſpeaks it. There could be no awe from his Soveraignty in his commands, nor any comfortable taſte of his Goodneſs in his Promiſes. The more we are ſtrengthened in this Principle, the more credit we ſhall be able to give to divine Revelation, to reſt in his Promiſe, and to reverence his Precept; the Authority of all depends upon the being of the Revealer.

* Act 17. 24.

To this purpoſe, ſince we have handled this diſcourſe by natural Arguments,

1. Study God in the Creatures as well as in the Scriptures. The primary uſe of the Creatures, is to acknowledge God in them; they were made to be witneſſes of himſelf and his Goodneſs, and Heralds of his Glory, which Glory of God as Creator ſhall endure for ever, Pſal. 104. 31. that whole Pſalm is a Lecture of Creation and Providence. The World is a ſacred Temple; Man is introduced to contemplate it, and behold with Praiſe the Glory of God in the pieces of his Art. As Grace doth not deſtroy Nature, ſo the Book of Redemption blots not out that of Creation: Had he not ſhewn himſelf in his Creatures, he could never have ſhewn himſelf in his Chriſt: The order of things required it. God muſt be read where ever he is legible; the Creatures are one book, wherein he hath writ a part of the excellency of his name, * as many Artiſts do in their Works and Watches. Gods Glory like the Filings of Gold is too precious to be loſt where ever it drops: nothing ſo vile and baſe in the World, but carries in it an inſtruction for Man, and drives in further the Notion of a God. As he ſaid of his Cottage; Enter here, Sunt hic etiam Dii, God diſdains not this place: So the leaſt Creature ſpeaks to man, every Shrub in the Field, every Fly in the Air, every Limb in a Body; conſider me, God diſdains not to appear in me; he hath diſcovered in me his being and a part of his Skill, as well as in the higheſt. The Creatures manifeſt the being of God and part of his Perfections. We have indeed a more excellent way, a Revelation ſetting him forth in a more excellent manner, a firmer Object of dependence, a brighter Object of Love, raiſing our hearts from ſelf confidence to a confidence in him. Though the appearance of God in the one be clearer than in the other, yet neither is to be neglected: The Scripture directs us to Nature to view God; it had been in vain elſe for the Apoſtle to make uſe of natural arguments: Nature is not contrary to Scripture, nor Scripture to Nature; unleſs we ſhould think God contrary to himſelf, who is the Author of both.

* Pſal. 8. 9.

2. View God in your own experiences of him. There is a taſte and ſight of his Goodneſs, though no ſight of his Eſſence. * By the taſte of his Goodneſs you may know the reality of the fountain, whence it ſprings and from whence it flows: This ſurpaſſeth the greateſt Capacity of a meer natural Underſtanding. Experience of the ſweetneſs of the ways of Chriſtianity is a mighty preſervative againſt Atheiſm. Many a Man knows not how to prove Hony to be ſweet by his reaſon, but by his ſenſe; and if all the reaſon in the world be brought againſt it, he will not be reaſoned out of what he taſts.

* Pſal. 34. 38.

Have not many found the delightful illapſes of God into their Souls, often ſprinkled led with his inward bleſſings upon their ſeeking of him; had ſecret warnings in their approaches to him; and gentle rebukes in their Conſciences upon their ſwervings from him? Have not many found ſometimes an inviſible hand raiſing them up when they were dejected; ſome unexpected providence ſtepping in for their relief; and eaſily perceived that it could not be a work of chance, nor many times the intention of the inſtruments he hath uſed in it? You have often found that he is, by finding that he is a rewarder, and can ſet to your ſeals that he is what he hath declared himſelf to be in his word, Iſa. 43. 12: I have declared, and have ſaved, therefore you are my witneſſes ſaith the Lord, that I am God. The ſecret touches of God upon the heart and inward converſes with him are a greater evidence of the Exiſtence of a ſupream and infinitely good Being, than all nature.

Uſe 4. 4. Is it a folly to deny or doubt of the being of God? 'Tis a folly alſo not to worſhip God, when we acknowledge his Exiſtence: 'Tis our Wiſdom then to Worſhip him. As it is not indifferent whether we believe there is a God or no: So it is not indifferent whether we will give Honour to that God or no. A worſhip is his right as he is the Author of our being, and fountain of our happineſs. By this only we acknowledge his Deity: Tho we profeſs his being, yet we deny that profeſſion in neglects of worſhip. To deny him a Worſhip is as great a folly, as to deny his being. He that renounceth all homage to his Creator, envies him the being which he cannot deprive him of. The natural inclination to worſhip is as univerſal as the Notion of a God; Idolatry elſe had never gained footing in the world. The Exiſtence of God was never owned in any Nation, but a Worſhip of him was appointed. And many people who have turned their backs upon ſome other parts of the Law of nature, have paid a continual homage to ſome ſuperior and inviſible being. The Jews give a reaſon why Man was Created in the Evening of the Sabbath, becauſe he ſhould begin his Being with the Worſhip of his Maker. As ſoon as ever he found himſelf to be a Creature, his firſt ſolemn act ſhould be a particular reſpect to his Creator. * To fear God and keep his Commandment, is the whole * Eccl. 12. * Heb. of Man, or is * whole man; he is not a man but a beaſt, without obſervance of God. Religion is as requiſite as reaſon to compleat a man: He were not reaſonable if he were not Religious; becauſe by neglecting Religion, he neglects the chiefeſt dictate of reaſon. Either God framed the world with ſo much order, Elegancy, and variety to no purpoſe, or this was his end at leaſt, that reaſonable Creatures ſhould admire him in it, and Honour him for it. The Notion of God was not ſtampt upon men, the ſhadows of God did not appear in the Creatures, to be the Subject of an idle contemplation, but the motive of a due homage to God: He Created the world for his glory, a people for himſelf, that he might have the Honour of his works: That ſince we live and move in him and by him, we ſhould live and move to him and for him. It was the condemnation of the Heathen world, that when they knew * Rom. 1. 21. there was a God, they did not give him the Glory due to him. * He that denyes his being is an Atheiſt to his Eſſence: He that denyes his worſhip is an Atheiſt to his Honour.

5. If it be a folly to deny the Being of God, It will be our Wiſdom then, ſince we acknowledge his being, often to think of him. Thoughts are the firſt iſſue of a Creature * Pro. 4. 23. as reaſonable: * He that hath given us the faculty whereby we are able to think, ſhould be the principal object about which the power of it ſhould be exerciſed. 'Tis a Juſtice to God the Author of our underſtandings, a Juſtice to the nature of our underſtandings, that the Nobleſt faculty ſhould be imployed about the moſt excellent object. Our minds are a beam from God; and therefore, as the Beams of the Sun, when they touch the Earth, ſhould reflect back upon God: As we ſeem to deny the being of God, not to think of him; we ſeem alſo to unſoul our Souls, in miſimploying the activity of them any other way: like Flies to be oftner on Dunghils than Flowers.

'Tis made the black mark of an ungodly Man or an Atheiſt, that God is not in all his thoughts, Pſal. 10. 4. What comfort can be had in the being of God without thinking of him with Reverence and delight? A God forgotten is as good as no God to us.

A DISCOURSE UPON PRACTICAL ATHEISM.

Psalm 14. 1.

Doct. 2. PRACTICAL Atheism is natural to Man in his depraved state, and very frequent in the hearts and lives of Men.

The Fool hath said in his heart there is no God. He regards him as little as if he had no being: He said in his heart, not with his tongue, nor in his head: He never firmly thought it, nor openly asserted it: Shame put a Bar to the first, and natural reason to the second. Yet perhaps he had sometimes some doubts whether there were a God or no: He wished there were not any, and sometimes hoped there were none at all: He could not raze out the Notion of a Deity in his mind, but he neglected the fixing the sense of God in his heart, and made it too much his business to deface and blot out those Characters of God in his Soul, which had been left under the ruines of original nature.

Men may have Atheistical hearts without Atheistical heads. Their reasons may defend the Notion of a Deity, while their hearts are empty of affection to the Deity: Jobs Children may curse God in their hearts, tho not with their lips. *

* Job 1. 5.

There is no God. Most understand it of a denial of the Providence of God; as I have said in opening the former Doctrine.

He denies some essential Attribute of God, or the exercise of that Attribute in the world. *

*So the Chaldee reads: ליתּ שולטנא Non potestas, denying the authority of God in the world.

He that denies any essential Attribute, may be said to deny the being of God. Whosoever denies Angels or Men to have reason and Will, denies the human and Angelical nature, because Understanding and Will are essential to both those Natures; there could neither be Angel nor Man without them. No Nature can subsist without the perfections essential to that Nature, nor God be conceived of without his: The Apostle tells us, Eph. 2. 12. that the Gentiles were without God in the World: So in some sence all unbelievers may be termed Atheists; for rejecting the Mediator appointed by God, they reject that God who appointed him.

But this is beyond the intended scope, Natural Atheism being the only subject: Yet this is deducible from it. That the title of ἄθεοι, doth not only belong to those who denyed the Existence of God, or to those who contemn all sence of a Deity, and would root the Conscience and Reverence of God out of their Souls: But it belongs alſo to theſe who give not that Worſhip to God which is due to him: Who Worſhip many Gods, or who Worſhip one God in a falſe and ſuperſtitious manner; when they have not right conceptions of God, nor intend an adoration of him according to the excellency of his Nature: All thoſe that are unconcerned for any particular Religion, fall under this Character. Though they own a God in general, yet are willing to acknowledge any God that ſhall be coined by the powers under whom they live. The Gentiles were without God in the World; without the true Notion of God, not without a God of their own framing.

it

This general or practical Atheiſm is natural to men.

1. Not natural by Created, but by corrupted Nature: 'Tis againſt nature, as nature came out of the hand of God: But univerſally natural, as nature hath been ſophiſticated and infected by the Serpents breath. Inconſideration of God, or miſrepreſentations of his nature, are as agreeable to corrupt nature, as the diſowning the being of a God is contrary to common reaſon. God is not denied naturâ ſed vitiis. *

* Auguſtin de Civit. Dei.

2. 'Tis univerſally natural: The wicked are eſtranged from the Womb, Pſa. 58. 3. They go aſtray as ſoon as they be born, their poyſon is like the poyſon of a Serpent. The wicked: And who by his birth hath a better title? They go aſtray from the dictates of God and the rule of their Creation as ſoon as ever they be born; their poyſon is like the poyſon of a Serpent, which is radically the ſame in all of the ſame ſpecies. 'Tis ſeminally and fundamentally in all men, though there may be a ſtronger reſtraint by a Divine hand upon ſome men, than upon others. This principle runs through the whole ſtream of Nature. The natural bent of every mans heart is diſtant from God: When we attempt any thing pleaſing to God, 'tis like the climbing up a Hill, againſt nature; when any thing is diſpleaſing to him, 'tis like a Current running down the Channel in its natural courſe: When we attempt any thing that is an acknowledgment of the Holineſs of God, we are fain to ruſh with Arms in our hands through a multitude of natural paſſions, and fight the way through the oppoſitions of our own ſenſitive appetite. How ſoftly do we naturally ſink down into that which ſets us at a greater diſtance from God? There is no active, potent, efficacious ſence of a God by nature. The heart of the Sons of men is fully ſet in them to do evil, Eccl. 8. 11. The heart in the ſingular number; as if there were but one Common heart beat in all mankind, and bent as with one pulſe, with a joynt conſent and force to wickedneſs, without a ſenſe of the Authority of God in the Earth; as if one heart acted every Man in the World.

* Rom. 3. 9, 10, 11, 12.

The great Apoſtle cites the Text to verifie the charge he brought againſt all mankind. * In his interpretation, the Jews, who owned one God, and were dignified with ſpecial priviledges, as well as the Gentiles that maintained many Gods, are within the compaſs of this Character: The Apoſtle leaves out the firſt part of the Text, the fool hath ſaid in his heart, but takes in the latter part, and the verſes following: He charges all, becauſe all, every man of them was under ſin: There is none that ſeeks God, and ver. 19. He adds what the law ſaith, it ſpeaks to thoſe that are under the Law. That none ſhould imagine he included only the Gentiles and exempted the Jews from this deſcription. The Leproſie of Atheiſm had infected the whole Maſs of human nature: No man among Jews or Gentiles did naturally ſeek God; and therefore all were void of any ſpark of the practical ſence of the Deity. The effects of this Atheiſm are not in all externally of an equal ſize: Yet in the fundamentals and radicals of it, there is not a hairs difference between the beſt and the worſt men that ever traverſed the world. The diſtinction is laid either in common grace, bounding and ſuppreſſing it; or in ſpecial Grace killing and crucifying it. 'Tis in every one either triumphant or militant, reigning or depoſed. No Man is any more born with ſenſible acknowledgments of God, than he is born with a clear knowledge of the nature of all the Stars in the Heavens, or Plants upon the Earth. None ſeeks after God. * None ſeeks God as his rule, as his end, as his happineſs, which is a debt the Creature naturally owes to God; he deſires no communion with God: He places his happineſs in any thing inferior to God: He prefers every thing before him, glorifies every thing above him; he hath no delight to know him; he regards not thoſe paths which lead to him; he loves his own filth better than Gods Holineſs; his actions are tinctured, and dyed with ſelf, and are void of that reſpect which is due from him to God.

* * Coccei.

The

The Nobleſt Faculty of Man, his Underſtanding, wherein the remaining Lineaments of the Image of God are viſible; the higheſt Operation of that Faculty, which is Wiſdom, is in the Judgment of the Spirit of God Deviliſh, whiles it is earthly and ſenſual * : And the Wiſdom of the beſt man is no better by nature; a legion of impure Spirits poſſeſs it. Deviliſh, as the Devil, who though he believe there is a God, yet acts as if there were none, and wiſhes he had no Superior to preſcribe him a Law, and inflict that puniſhment upon him which his Crimes have merited. Hence the Poyſon of Man by nature is ſaid to be like the Poyſon of a Serpent, alluding to that ſerpentine temptation which firſt infected Mankind, and changed the nature of Man into the likeneſs of that of the Devil. * So that notwithſtanding the Harmony of the World that preſents Men not only with the Notice of the Being of a God, but darts into their minds ſome remarks of his Power and Eternity; yet the thoughts and reaſonings of Man are ſo corrupt, as may well be called Diabolical, and as contrary to the Perfection of God and the original Law of their Nature, as the actings of the Devil are: For ſince every natural Man is a Child of the Devil, and is acted by the Diabolical Spirit, he muſt needs have that nature which his Father hath, and the Infuſion of that Venom which the Spirit that acts him, is poſſeſſed with; though the full Diſcovery of it may be reſtrained by various Circumſtances, Eph. 2. 2. To conclude, though no Man, or at leaſt very few arrive to a round and poſitive Concluſion in their hearts that there is no God, yet there is no Man that naturally hath in his heart any reverence of God.

* Jam. 3. 15.

* Pſal. 58. 4.

In general, before I come to a particular proof, take ſome Propoſitions.

Propoſition 1. Actions are a greater diſcovery of a Principle than words. The Teſtimony of Works is louder and clearer than that of Words, and the Frame of Mens hearts muſt be meaſured, rather by what they do, than by what they ſay. There may be a mighty diſtance between the Tongue and the Heart, but a Courſe of Actions is as little guilty of lying as intereſt is, according to our common ſaying: All outward Impieties are the branches of an Atheiſm at the root of our Nature, as all peſtilential ſores are expreſſions of the Contagion in the Blood. Sin is therefore frequently called Ungodlineſs in our Engliſh Dialect. Mens Practices are the beſt Indexes of their Principles: The Current of a Mans Life, is the counter-part of the Frame of his heart: Who can deny an Error in the Spring or Wheels, when he perceives an Error in the hand of the Dial? Who can deny an Atheiſm in the Heart, when ſo much is viſible in the Life? The Taſt of the water diſcovers what Mineral 'tis ſtrained through. A practical denial of God is worſe than a verbal, becauſe Deeds have uſually more of deliberation than Words; words may be the fruit of a Paſſion, but a ſet of evil actions are the fruit and evidence of a predominant evil Principle in the Heart: All ſlighting words of a Prince do not argue an habitual Treaſon, but a ſucceſſion of overt Treaſonable Attempts ſignifie a ſetled Treaſonable diſpoſition in the Mind: Thoſe therefore are more deſervedly termed Atheiſts, who acknowledge a God and walk as if there were none, than thoſe (if there can be any ſuch) that deny a God and walk as if there were one.

A Senſe of God in the heart, would burſt out in the Life: Where there is no reverence of God in the Life, 'tis eaſily concluded there is leſs in the Heart.

What doth not influence a Man when it hath the addition of the Eyes, and cenſures of outward Spectators, and the care of a Reputation (ſo much the God of the world) to ſtrengthen it and reſtrain the action, muſt certainly have leſs power over the heart when it is ſingle without any other concurrence. The Flames breaking out of a Houſe diſcover the Fire to be much ſtronger and fiercer within. The Apoſtle judgeth thoſe of the Circumciſion, who gave heed to Jewiſh Fables, to be denyers of God, though he doth not tax them with any notorious Prophaneſs Tit. 1. 16. They profeſs that they know God, but in works they deny him; he gives them Epithites contrary to what they arrogated to themſelves: * They boaſted themſelves to be holy, the Apoſtle calls them abominable; They bragged that they fulfilled the Law and obſerved the Traditions of their Fathers, the Apoſtle calls them diſobedient, or unperſwadable; They boaſted that they only had the Rule of Righteouſneſs, and a ſound Judgment concerning it, the Apoſtle ſaid they had a Reprobate Senſe and unfit for any good work; and judges againſt all their vain glorious braggs, that they had not a Reverence of God in their Hearts; there was more of the Denial of

* Illyric.

God in their Works than there was Acknowledgment of God in their words: Thoſe that have neither God in their Thoughts, nor in their Tongues, nor in their Works, cannot properly be ſaid to acknowledge him: Where the Honour of God is not practically owned in the lives of men, the Being of God is not ſenſibly acknowledged in the hearts of Men: The principle muſt be of the ſame kind with the Actions; if the Actions be Atheiſtical, the Principle of them can be no better.

Prop. 2. All ſin is founded in a ſecret Atheiſm. Atheiſm is the Spirit of every Sin; all the Floods of impieties in the World break in at the Gate of a ſecret Atheiſm: And though ſeveral ſins may diſagree with one another, yet like Herod and Pilate againſt Chriſt, they joyn hand in hand againſt the intereſt of God. Though luſts and pleaſures be divers, yet they are all united in Diſobedience to him. * All the wicked inclinations in the heart, and ſtrugling motions, ſecret repinings, ſelf applauding confidences in our own wiſdom, ſtrength, &c. envy, ambition, revenge, are ſparks from this latent fire; the language of every one of theſe is, I would be a Lord to my ſelf, and would not have a God Superior to me.

* Tit. 3. 3.

The variety of ſins againſt the firſt and ſecond Table, the neglects of God and violences againſt Man are derived from this in the Text, firſt the fool hath ſaid in his heart, and then follows a Legion of Devils: As all vertuous actions ſpring from an acknowledgment of God; ſo all vitious actions riſe from a lurking Denial of him. All licentiouſneſs goes glib down where there is no ſenſe of God. Abraham judged himſelf not ſecure from Murder, nor his Wife from Defilement in Gerar, if there were no Fear of God there. * He that makes no Conſcience of Sin has no regard to the Honour, and conſequently none to the Being of God. By the Fear of God men depart from Evil, Pro. 16. 6. By the non-regarding of God men ruſh into Evil. Pharaoh oppreſt Iſrael becauſe he knew not the Lord. If he did not deny the Being of a Deity, yet he had ſuch an unworthy Notion of God as was inconſiſtent with the Nature of a Deity; he a poor Creature thought himſelf a Mate for the Creator.

* Gen. 20. 11.

In ſins of Omiſſion we own not God, in neglecting to perform what he enjoyns: In ſins of Commiſſion we ſet up ſome luſt in the place of God, and pay to that the Homage which is due to our Maker: In both we diſown him; in the one by not doing what he commands, in the other by doing what he forbids.

We deny his Soveraignty when we violate his Laws; we diſgrace his Holineſs when we caſt our filth before his Face; we diſparage his Wiſdom when we ſet up another Ruſe as the Guide of our Actions than that Law he hath fixed; we ſlight his Sufficiency when we prefer a ſatisfaction in ſin before a happineſs in him alone, and his Goodneſs, when we judge it not ſtrong enough to attract us to him. Every ſin invades the Rights of God, and ſtrips him of one or other of his Perfections: 'Tis ſuch a vilifying of God as if he were not God; as if he were not the ſupream Creator and Benefactor of the World; as if we had not our Being from Him; as if the Air we breathed in, the Food we lived by, were our own by right of Supremacy, not of Donation: For a Subject to ſlight his Soveraign, is to ſlight his Royalty; or a Servant a Maſter, is to deny his Superiority.

Prop. 3. Sin implies that God is unworthy of a Being. Every Sin is a kind of curſing God in the Heart *; an aim at the deſtruction of the Being of God; not actually, but vertually; not in the intention of every Sinner, but in the nature of every ſin. That affection which excites a man to break his Law, would excite him to annihilate his Being if it were in his power. A Man in every ſin aims to ſet up his own will as his Rule, and his own glory as the end of his actions againſt the will and glory of God; and could a ſinner attain his end, God would be deſtroyed: God cannot out-live his Will and his glory: God cannot have another Rule but his own Will, nor another end but his own honour: Sin is called a turning the back upon God, * a kicking againſt him, * as if he were a ſlighter perſon than the meaneſt beggar. What greater contempt can be ſhew'd to the meaneſt, vileſt perſon, than to turn the back, lift up the heel, and thruſt away with indignation? All which actions, though they ſignifie that ſuch a one hath a Being; yet they teſtifie alſo that he is unworthy of a Being, that he is an unuſeful Being in the World, and that it were well the World were rid of him.

* Job. 1. 5.

* Jer. 32. 33.
* Deut. 32. 15.

* Numb. 15. 30.
Ezek. 20. 27.

All ſin againſt Knowledge is called a Reproach of God. * Reproach is a vilifying a man as unworthy to be admitted into Company. We naturally Judge God unfit to be converſed with. God is the term turned from by a ſinner: Sin is the term turned to; which implies a greater excellency in the nature of ſin, than in the nature of God. And as we naturally Judge it more worthy to have a being in our affections, ſo conſequently more worthy to have a being in the world, than that infinite nature from whom we derive our beings, and our all; and upon whom with a kind of diſdain we turn our backs. Whoſoever thinks the Notion of a Deity unfit to be cheriſhed in his mind by warm Meditation, implies that he cares not whether he hath a being in the world or no. Now tho the light of a Deity ſhines ſo clearly in Man, and the ſtings of Conſcience are ſo ſmart, that he cannot abſolutely deny the being of a God; yet moſt Men endeavour to ſmother this knowledge, and make the Notion of a God a ſapleſs and uſeleſs thing, Rom. 1. 28. They like not to retain God in their knowledge.

It is ſaid, Cain went out from the preſence of the Lord, Gen. 4. 16. That is, from the Worſhip of God. Our refuſing or abhorring the preſence of a man implies a careleſſneſs whether he continue in the World or no: 'Tis a uſing him, as if he had no being, or as if we were not concerned in it. Hence all men in Adam, under the Emblem of the Prodigal, are ſaid to go into a far Country. Not in reſpect of place, becauſe of Gods Omnipreſence; but in reſpect of acknowledgment and affection; they mind and love any thing but God. And the deſcriptions of the Nations of the world, lying in the Ruines of Adams fall, and the dregs of that revolt, is that they know not God: They forget God, as if there were no ſuch being above them; and indeed he that doth the works of the Devil, owns the Devil to be more worthy of obſervance, and conſequently of a being, than God, whoſe nature he forgets and whoſe preſence he abhors.

Propoſition 4. Every ſin in its own nature would render God a fooliſh and impure Being. Many Tranſgreſſors eſteem their acts, which are contrary to the Law of God, both Wiſe and Good: If ſo, the Law againſt which they are committed, muſt be both fooliſh and impure: What a reflection is there then upon the Law-giver? The Moral Law is not properly a meer act of Gods Will conſidered in it ſelf, or a Tyrannical Edict, like thoſe of whom it may well be ſaid, ſtat pro ratione voluntas: But it commands thoſe things, which are good in their own nature, and prohibits thoſe things, which are in their own nature evil; and therefore is an act of his Wiſdom and Righteouſneſs; the reſult of his wiſe Counſel, and an extract of his pure nature; as all the Laws of juſt Law-givers, are not only the acts of their Will, but of a Will governed by Reaſon and Juſtice, and for the good of the publick, whereof they are conſervators. If the Moral commands of God were only acts of his will, and had not an intrinſick neceſſity, reaſon and goodneſs, God might have commanded the quite contrary, and made a contrary Law, whereby that which we now call Vice, might have been canonized for Vertue: He might then have forbid any Worſhip of him, Love to him, fear of his name: He might then have commanded Murders, Thefts, Adulteries. In the firſt he would have united the link of duty from the Creature, and diſſolved the obligations of Creatures to him, which is impoſſible to be conceived; for from the Relation of a Creature to God, obligations to God, and duties upon thoſe obligations, do neceſſarily reſult. It had been againſt the rule of Goodneſs and Juſtice, to have commanded the Creature not to love him, and fear and obey him: This had been a Command againſt Righteouſneſs, Goodneſs, and intrinſick obligations to gratitude: And ſhould Murder, Adulteries, Rapines have been commanded inſtead of the contrary, God would have deſtroyed his own Creation; he would have acted againſt the rule of goodneſs and order; he had been an unjuſt tyrannical Governor of the world: Publick ſociety would have been crackt in pieces, and the world become a Shambles, a Brothel Houſe, a place below the common ſentiments of a meer man. All ſin therefore being againſt the Law of God, the Wiſdom and holy rectitude of Gods Nature is denyed in every Act of diſobedience: And what is the conſequence of this, but that God is both fooliſh and unrighteous in commanding that, which was neither an Act of Wiſdom, as a Governour, nor an Act of goodneſs, as a benefactor to his Creature?

As was ſaid before, preſumptuous ſins are called reproaches of God, Num. 15. 30. The Soul that doth ought preſumptuouſly, reproacheth the Lord. Reproaches of men are either for natural, moral, or intellectual defects. All reproaches of God muſt imply a charge, either of unrighteouſneſs, or ignorance: If of unrighteouſneſs 'tis a denial of his Holineſs: If of Ignorance, 'tis a blemiſhing his Wiſdom. If Gods Laws were not wiſe and holy, God would not enjoyn them: And if they are ſo, we deny infinite Wiſdom and Holineſs in God by not complying with them. As when a man believes not God when he promiſes, he makes him a lyar, 1 John 5. 10. So he that obeys not a wiſe and holy God commanding, makes him guilty either of folly, or unrighteouſneſs.

Now ſuppoſe you knew an abſolute Atheiſt, who denied the Being of a God, yet had a life free from any notorious ſpot or defilement; would you in reaſon count him ſo bad as the other that owns a God in being, yet lays, by his courſe of action, ſuch a black imputation of folly and impurity upon the God he profeſſeth to own; an imputation which renders any man a moſt deſpicable Creature?

Propoſition 5. Sin in its own nature endeavours to render God the moſt miſerable Being. 'Tis nothing, but an oppoſition to the will of God: The will of no Creature is ſo much contradicted, as the Will of God is by Devils and Men: And there is nothing under the Heavens that the affections of human nature ſtand more point blank againſt, than againſt God. There is a ſlight of him in all the faculties of Man; our Souls are as unwilling to know him, as our Wills are averſe to follow him, Rom. 8. 7. The carnal mind is enmity againſt God, 'tis not ſubject to the Law of God, nor can be ſubject. 'Tis true, Gods will cannot be hindered of its effect, for then God would not be ſupremely bleſſed, but unhappy and miſerable: All miſery ariſeth from a want of that, which a nature would have, and ought to have: Beſides, if any thing could fruſtrate Gods Will, it would be ſuperior to him: God would not be Omnipotent, and ſo would loſe the perfection of the Deity, and conſequently the Deity it ſelf; for that which did wholly defeat Gods will, would be more powerful than he. But ſin is a contradiction to the will of Gods Revelation; to the Will of his Precept, and therein doth naturally tend to a ſuperiority over God, and would uſurp his Omnipotence, and deprive him of his bleſſedneſs. For if God had not an infinite power to turn the deſigns of it to his own Glory, but the will of ſin could prevail, God would be totally deprived of his bleſſedneſs. Doth not ſin endeavour to ſubject God to the extravagant and contrary wills of men, and make him more a ſlave than any Creature can be? For the Will of no Creature, not the meaneſt and moſt deſpicable Creature, is ſo much croſt, as the Will of God is by ſin, Iſa. 43. 24. Thou haſt made me to ſerve with thy ſins: Thou haſt endeavoured to make a meer ſlave of me by ſin: Sin endeavours to ſubject the bleſſed God to the humour and luſt of every perſon in the world.

Propoſition 6. Men ſometimes in ſome circumſtances do wiſh the not being of God. This ſome think to be the meaning of the Text, the fool hath ſaid in his heart there is no God, that is, he wiſhes there were no God: Many tamper with their own hearts to bring them to a perſwaſion that there is no God. And when they cannot do that, they conjure up wiſhes that there were none. Men naturally have ſome Conſcience of ſin, and ſome notices of Juſtice; Rom, 1. 32. They know the Judgment of God, and they know the demerit of ſin; they know the Judgment of God, and that they which do ſuch things are worthy of death. What is the conſequent of this but fear of puniſhment? and what is the iſſue of that fear, but a wiſhing the Judge either unwilling or unable to vindicate the Honour of his violated Law? When God is the object of ſuch a wiſh, 'tis a vertual undeifying of him: Not to be able to puniſh, is to be impotent; not to be willing to puniſh, is to be unjuſt; Imperfections inconſiſtent with the Deity: God cannot be ſuppoſed without an infinite Power to act, and an infinite Righteouſneſs as the Rule of acting. Fear of God is natural to all men; not a Fear of offending him, but a Fear of being puniſhed by him: The wiſhing the Extinction of God has its degree in men, according to the degree of their Fears of his juſt Vengeance: And though ſuch a Wiſh be not in its Meridian but in the Damned in Hell, yet it hath its ſtarts and motions in affrighted and awakened Conſciences on the Earth: Under this Rank of Wiſhers that there were no God, or that God were deſtroyed, do fall,

1. Terrified Conſciences, that are Magor miſſabib, ſee nothing but matter of fear round about. As they have lived without the bounds of the Law, they are afraid to fall under the ſtroak of his Juſtice: Fear wiſhes the deſtruction of that which it apprehends hurtful: It conſiders him as a God to whom Vengeance belongs, as the Judge of all the Earth. * The leſs hopes ſuch a one hath of his Pardon, the more joy he would have to hear that his Judge ſhould be ſtript of his Life: He would entertain with delight any reaſons, that might ſupport him in the conceit that there were no God: In his preſent State ſuch a Doctrine would be his ſecurity from an Account: He would as much rejoyce, if there were no God to enflame an Hell for him, as any guilty Malefactor would if there were no Judge to order a Gibbet for him. Shame may bridle mens words, but the heart will be caſting about for ſome Arguments this way, to ſecure it ſelf: Such as are at any time in Spira's Caſe, would be willing to ceaſe to be Creatures, that God might ceaſe to be Judge. The Fool hath ſaid in his heart, there is no Elohim, no Judge, fancying God without any exerciſe of his judicial Authority. And there is not any wicked man under anguiſh of Spirit, but, were it within the reach of his power, would take away the Life of God, and rid himſelf of his fears, by deſtroying his Avenger. * Pſal. 94. 12.

to

2. Debaucht Perſons are not without ſuch wiſhes ſometimes: An obſtinate Servant wiſhes his Maſters death, from whom he expects Correction for his Debaucheries. As man ſtands in his corrupt Nature, 'tis impoſſible but one time or other moſt debaucht perſons, at leaſt have ſome kind of velleities, or imperfect wiſhes. 'Tis as natural to men to abhor thoſe things which are unſutable and troubleſome, as it is to pleaſe themſelves in things agreeable to their minds and humours: And ſince Man is ſo deeply in love with Sin, as to count it the moſt eſtimable good, he cannot but wiſh the abolition of that Law which checks it, and conſequently the change of the Law-Giver which Enacted it; and in wiſhing a change in the holy Nature of God he wiſhes a deſtruction of God, who could not be God, if he ceaſed to be immutably holy. They do as certainly wiſh, that God had not a holy Will to command them, as deſpairing Souls wiſh, that God had not a righteous Will to puniſh them; and to wiſh Conſcience extinct for the moleſtations they receive from it, is to wiſh the power Conſcience repreſents out of the world alſo.

Since the State of Sinners is a State of diſtance from God, and the Language of Sinners to God is departed from us: * They deſire as little the continuance of his being as they deſire the knowledge of his Ways: The ſame reaſon which moves them to deſire Gods diſtance from them, would move them to deſire Gods not Being: Since the greateſt diſtance would be moſt agreeable to them, the Deſtruction of God muſt be ſo too: Becauſe there is no greater diſtance from us, than in not being. Men would rather have God not to be, than themſelves under controul, that ſenſuality might range at pleaſure: He is like a Heifer ſliding from the Yoke, Hoſ. 4. 16. The Curſing of God in the Heart feared by Job of his Children, intimates a wiſhing God deſpoiled of his Authority, that their pleaſure might not be dampt by his Law, Beſides, is there any natural man that ſins againſt actuated knowledge, but either thinks or wiſhes that God might not ſee him, that God might not know his actions? And is not this to wiſh the Deſtruction of God, who could not be God unleſs he were immenſe and omniſcient? * Job. 21. 14.

3. Under this rank fall thoſe, who perform external Duties only out of a Principle of ſlaviſh Fear. Many men perform thoſe Duties that the Law enjoyns with the ſame Sentiments that Slaves perform their drudgery, and are conſtrained in their Duties by no other conſiderations but thoſe of the Whip and the Cudgel. Since therefore they do it with reluctancy, and ſecretly murmur while they ſeem to obey, they would be willing that both the Command were recall'd, and the Maſter that commands them were in another World. The Spirit of Adoption makes men act towards God as a Father, a Spirit of Bondage only eyes him as a Judge. Thoſe that look upon their Superiors as tyrannical, will not be much concerned in their welfare; and would be more glad to have their Nails pared, than be under perpetual fear of them.

Many men regard not the infinite goodneſs in their ſervice of him, but conſider him as cruel, tyrannical, injurious to their Liberty. Adam's Poſterity are not free from the Sentiments of their common Father, till they are regenerate. You know what Conceit was the Hammer whereby the Helliſh Jael ſtruck the Nail into our firſt Parents, which conveyed Death, together with the ſame Imagination to all their their Poſterity, Gen. 3. 5. God knows that in the day you eat thereof, your eyes ſhall be opened, and you ſhall be as Gods knowing Good and Evil: Alas poor Souls! God knew what he did when he forbad you that Fruit: He was jealous you ſhould be too happy: It was a cruelty in him to deprive you of a Food ſo pleaſant and delicious. The apprehenſion of the ſeverity of Gods Commands riſeth up no leſs in deſires that there were no God over us, than Adam's apprehenſion of Envy in God for the reſtraint of one Tree mov'd him to attempt to be equal with God: Fear is as powerful to produce the one in his Poſterity, as Pride was to produce the other in the Common-Root. When we apprehend a thing hurtful to us, we deſire ſo much evil to it, as may render it uncapable of doing us the hurt we fear. As we wiſh the preſervation of what we love or hope for; ſo we are naturally apt to wiſh the not being of that whence we fear ſome hurt or trouble. We muſt not underſtand this as if any man did formally wiſh the deſtruction of God, as God. God in himſelf is an infinite Mirror of Goodneſs and raviſhing Lovelineſs: He is infinitely good, and ſo univerſally good, and nothing but good; and is therefore ſo agreeable to a Creature, as a Creature, that it is impoſſible that the Creature, while it bears it ſelf to God as a Creature, ſhould be guilty of this, but thirſt after him and cheriſh every motion to him. As no man wiſhes the deſtruction of any Creature, as a Creature, but as it may conduce to ſomething which he counts may be beneficial to himſelf; ſo no man doth, nor perhaps can wiſh the ceſſation of the Being of God, as God; for then he muſt wiſh his own Being to ceaſe alſo; But as he conſiders him clothed with ſome perfections, which he apprehends as injurious to him; as his Holineſs in forbidding Sin, his Juſtice in puniſhing Sin: And God being judged in thoſe perfections contrary to what the revolted Creature thinks convenient and good for himſelf, he may wiſh God ſtript of thoſe perfections, that thereby he may be free from all fear of trouble and grief from him in his fallen State. In wiſhing God deprived of thoſe, he wiſhes God deprived of his Being; becauſe God cannot retain his Deity without a love of Righteouſneſs and Hatred of Iniquity; and he could not teſtifie his Love to the one, or his loathing of the other, without encouraging goodneſs, and witneſſing his Anger againſt Iniquity.

Let us now appeal to our ſelves, and examin our own Conſciences: Did we never pleaſe our ſelves ſometimes in the thoughts, how happy we ſhould be, how free in our vain pleaſures, if there were no God? Have we not deſired to be our own Lords without controul, ſubject to no Law but our own, and be guided by no Will but that of the Fleſh? Did we never rage againſt God under his afflicting Hand? Did we never wiſh God ſtript of his Holy Will to command, and his Righteous Will to puniſh, &c.

Thus much for the general.

For the proof of this, many conſiderations will bring in Evidence: Moſt may be reduced to theſe two generals.

Man would ſet himſelf up, Firſt as his own Rule. Secondly as his own End and Happineſs.

1. Man would ſet himſelf up as his own Rule inſtead of God: This will be evidenced in this Method.

1. Man naturally diſowns the Rule Gods ſets him.
2. He owns any other Rule rather than that of Gods preſcribing.
3. Theſe he doth in order to the ſetting himſelf up as his own Rule.
4. He makes himſelf not only his own Rule, but would make himſelf the Rule of God, and give Laws to his Creator.

1. Man naturally diſowns the Rule God ſets him. 'Tis all one to deny his Royalty and to deny his Being: When we diſown his Authority, we diſown his Godhead: 'Tis the Right of God to be the Soveraign of his Creatures; and it muſt be a very looſe and trivial aſſent that ſuch men have to Gods Superiority over them, (and conſequently to the Excellency of his Being, upon which that Authority is founded) who are ſcarce at eaſe in themſelves, but when they are invading his Rights, breaking his Bands, caſting away his Cords, and contradicting his Will.

Every man naturally is a Son of Belial, would be without a Yoke, and leap over Gods Incloſures; and in breaking out againſt his Soveraignty, we diſown his Being as God: For to be God and Soveraign are inſeparable: He could not be God, if he were were not Supreme; nor could he be a Creator without being a Law-giver. To be God and yet inferior to another, is a contradiction. To make Rational Creatures without prescribing them a Law, is to make them without Holiness, Wisdom and Goodness.

1. There is in Man naturally an unwillingness to have any acquaintance with the Rule God sets him, Psal. 14. 2. None that did understand and seek God. The refusing Instruction and casting his word behind the back is a part of Atheism. * We are heavy in hearing the Instructions either of Law or Gospel, * and slow in the Apprehension of what we hear. The people that God had hedged in from the Wilderness of the World for his own Garden, were foolish and did not know God; were sottish and had no understanding of him. * The Law of God is accounted a strange thing; * a thing of a different Climate, and a far Country from the heart of man; wherewith the mind of man had no natural acquaintance, and had no desire to have any; or they regarded it as a sordid thing: What God accounts great and valuable, they account mean and despicable. Men may shew a Civility to a Stranger, but scarce contract an Intimacy: There can be no Amicable Agreement between the holy Will of God and the heart of a depraved Creature: One is holy, the other unholy; one is universally good, the other stark naught. The purity of the Divine Rule renders it nauseous to the impurity of a carnal heart. Water and Fire may as well friendly kiss each other and live together without quarrelling and hissing, as the holy Will of God and the unregenerate heart of a fallen Creature.

* Psal. 50. 17.
* Heb 5. 11, 12.
* Jer. 4. 22.
* Hos. 8. 12.

The nauseating a Holy Rule is an Evidence of Atheism in the heart, as the nauseating wholesome Food is of putrified Flegm in the Stomack. 'Tis found more or less in every Christian, in the Remainders, though not in a full Empire. As there is a Law in his Mind whereby he delights in the Law of God, so there is a Law in his Members whereby he wars against the Law of God, Rom. 7. 22, 23, 25. How predominant is this loathing of the Law of God, when corrupt Nature is in its full strength, without any principle to controul it? There is in the Mind of such a one a Darkness whereby it is ignorant of it, and in the Will a Depravedness whereby it is repugnant to it. If Man were naturally willing and able to have an intimate acquaintance with, and delight in the Law of God, it had not been such a signal favour for God to promise to write the Law in the heart. A Man may sooner engrave the Chronicle of a whole Nation, or all the Records of God in the Scripture upon the hardest Marble with his bare finger, than write one Syllable of the Law of God in a Spiritual manner upon his heart. For,

1. Men are negligent in using the means for the knowledge of Gods Will. All natural men are fools, who know not how to use the price God puts into their hands; * They put not a due estimate upon opportunities and means of Grace, and account that Law folly which is the Birth of an infinite and holy Wisdom. The knowledge of God which they may glean from Creatures, and is more pleasant to the natural gust of men, is not improved to the Glory of God, if we will believe the Indictment the Apostle brings against the Gentiles. * And most of those that have dived into the depths of Nature, have been more studious of the qualities of the Creatures, than of the excellency of the nature, or the discovery of the mind of God in them; who regard only the rising and motions of the Star, but follow not with the wise men, its conduct to the King of the Jews. How often do we see Men filled with an eager thirst for all other kind of Knowledge, that cannot acquiesce in a twilight discovery, but are inquisitive into the causes and reasons of effects, yet are contented with a weak and languishing knowledge of God and his Law, and are easily tired with the Proposals of them?

* Pro. 17. 16.
* Rom. 1. 21.

He now that nauseates the means whereby he may come to know and obey God, has no intention to make the Law of God his Rule: There is no Man that intends seriously an end, but he intends means in order to that end: As when a man intends the preservation or recovery of his health, he will intend means in order to those ends, otherwise he cannot be said to intend his health: So he that is not diligent in using means to know the mind of God, has no sound intention to make the Will and Law of God his Rule. Is not the inquiry after the Will of God made a work by the by, and fain to lacquy after other concerns of an inferior nature, if it hath any place at all in the Soul? which is a despising the Being of God: The Notion of the Soveraignty of God, bears the same date with the Notion of his Godhead; and and by the ſame way that he reveals himſelf, he reveals his Authority over us; whether it be by Creatures without, or Conſcience within. All Authority over Rational Creatures conſiſts in commanding and directing; the duty of Rational Creatures in compliance with that Authority conſiſts in obeying: Where there is therefore a careleſs neglect of thoſe means which convey the knowledge of Gods Will and our Duty, there is an utter diſowning of God as our Soveraign and our Rule.

2. When any part of the Mind and Will of God breaks in upon Men, they endeavour to ſhake it off; As a Man would a Sergeant that comes to arreſt him; they like not to retain God in their Knowledge, Rom. 1. 28. A natural Man receives not the things of the Spirit of God; that is, into his Affection; he puſheth them back as men do troubleſome and importunate Beggers: They have no kindneſs to beſtow upon it: They thruſt with both ſhoulders againſt the Truth of God, when it preſſeth in upon them; and daſh as much contempt upon it as the Phariſees did upon the Doctrine our Saviour directed againſt their Covetouſneſs. As Men naturally delight to be without God in the world, ſo they delight to be without any off-ſpring of God in their thoughts. Since the Spiritual Palate of Man is depraved, Divine Truth is unſavoury and ungrateful to us, till our taſte and reliſh is reſtor'd by Grace: Hence men damp and quench the motions of the Spirit to Obedience and Compliance with the Dictates of God; ſtrip them of their Life and Vigor, and kill them in the Womb. How unable are our Memories to retain the ſubſtance of ſpiritual Truth; but like Sand in a Glaſs, put in at one part and runs out at the other? Have not many a ſecret wiſh, that the Scripture had never mentioned ſome truths, or that they were blotted out of the Bible, becauſe they face their Conſciences, and diſcourage thoſe boiling Luſts they would with eagerneſs and delight purſue? Me thinks that interruption John gives our Saviour when he was upon the reproof of their Pride, looks little better * than a deſign to divert him from a diſcourſe ſo much againſt the grain, by telling him a ſtory of their prohibiting one to caſt out Devils, becauſe he followed not them. How glad are men when they can raiſe a Battery againſt a Command of God, and raiſe ſome ſmart Objection whereby they may ſhelter themſelves from the ſtrictneſs of it?

* Mark 9. 33, 38.

3. When men cannot ſhake off the Notices of the Will and Mind of God, they have no pleaſure in the conſideration of them. Which could not poſſibly be, if there were a real and fixed deſign to own the Mind and Law of God as our Rule: Subjects or Servants that love to obey their Prince and Maſter, will delight to read and execute their Orders. The Devils underſtand the Law of God in their minds, but they loath the impreſſions of it upon their Wills: Thoſe miſerable Spirits are bound in Chains of Darkneſs, evil Habits in their Wills, that they have not a thought of obeying that Law they know. It was an unclean Beaſt under the Law, that did not chew the Cud: 'Tis a corrupt Heart, that doth not chew Truth by Meditation. A natural man is ſaid not to know God, or the things of God; he may know them notionally, but he knows them not affectionately. A ſenſual Soul can have no delight in a Spiritual Law. To be ſenſual and not to have the Spirit are inſeparable, Jude 19.

Natural Men may indeed meditate upon the Law and Truth of God, but without delight in it: if they take any pleaſure in it, 'tis only as 'tis knowledge, not as it is a Rule; for we delight in nothing that we deſire, but upon the ſame account that we deſire it. Natural Men deſire to know God and ſome part of his Will and Law, not out of a ſenſe of their practical excellency, but a natural thirſt after knowledge: And if they have a delight, 'tis in the Act of knowing, not in the Object known, not in the Duties that ſtream from that Knowledge; they deſign the furniſhing their Underſtandings, not the quickning their Affections; like idle Boys that ſtrike Fire, not to warm themſelves by the heat, but ſport themſelves with the Sparks; Whereas a gracious Soul accounts not only his Meditation, or the Operations of his Soul about God and his Will to be ſweet, but he hath a joy in the object of that Meditation. * Many have the knowledge of God, who have no delight in him or his Will. Owls have Eyes to perceive that there is a Sun, but by reaſon of the weakneſs of their ſight have no pleaſure to look upon a Beam of it: So neither can a man by Nature love, or delight in the Will of God, becauſe of his natural corruption: That Law that riſeth up in men for Conviction and Inſtruction,

* Pſal. 104. 34.

they

they keep down under the power of Corruption; making their Souls not the Sanctuary, but Prison of Truth, Rom. 1. 18. They will keep it down in their hearts, if they cannot keep it out of their heads, and will not endeavour to know and taste the Spirit of it.

4. There is further, a rising and swelling of the Heart against the Will of God. (1.) Internal. Gods Law cast against a hard Heart, is like a ball thrown against a stone Wall, by reason of the resistance rebounding the further from it: The meeting of a Divine Truth and the Heart of Man, is like the meeting of two Tides, the weaker swells and foams: We have a natural Antipathy against a Divine Rule; and therefore when it is clapt close to our Consciences, there is a snuffing at it, high reasonings against it, corruption breaks out more strongly: As water poured on Lime sets it on fire by an Antiperistasis, and the more Water is cast upon it, the more furiously it burns: Or as the Sun Beams shining upon a Dung-hill makes the steams the thicker and the stench the noysomer, neither being the positive cause of the smoke in the Lime, or the stench in the Dung-hill; but by accident the causes of the eruption, Rom. 7. 8. But Sin taking occasion by the Commandment, wrought in me all manner of Concupiscence, for without the Law Sin was dead. Sin was in a languishing posture, as if it were dead; like a lazy Garrison in a City, till upon an Alarm from the Adversary it takes Arms and revives its courage; all the sin in the heart gathers together its force, to maintain its standing; like the vapours of the Night, which unite themselves more closely to resist the Beams of the rising Sun. Deep Conviction often provokes fierce Opposition; sometimes disputes against a Divine Rule end in Blasphemies, Acts 13. 45. Contradicting and Blaspheming are coupled together. Men naturally desire things that are forbidden, and reject things commanded, from the corruption of Nature, which affects an unbounded Liberty, and is impatient of returning under that Yoke it hath shaken off; and therefore rageth against the bars of the Law, as the Waves roar against the restraint of a bank: When the understanding is dark and the Mind Ignorant, sin lies as dead; * [a man scarce knows he hath such Motions of Concupiscence in him, he finds not the least breath of wind, but a full calm in his Soul; but when he is awakened by the Law, then the vitiousness of nature being sensible of an Invasion of its Empire, arms it self against the Divine Law, and the more the Command is urged, the more vigorously it bends its strength, and more insolently lifts up it self against it] he perceives more and more Atheistical Lusts than before; all manner of Concupiscence, more leprous and contagious than before: When there are any motions to turn to God, a reluctancy is presently perceived; Atheistical thoughts bluster in the mind like the wind, they know not whence they come, nor whither they go: So unapt is the heart to any acknowledgment of God as his Ruler, and any re-union with him. Hence men are said to resist the Holy Ghost, Acts. 7. 51. to fall against it, as the word signifies, as a stone or any ponderous body falls against that which lies in its way: They would dash to pieces or grind to powder that very motion which is made for their instruction, and the Spirit too which makes it, and that not from a fit of passion, but an habitual repugnance. Ye always resist, &c. (2.) External; 'tis a fruit of Atheism, in the fourth verse of this Psalm; Who eat up my people as they eat bread. How do the revelations of the Mind of God meet with opposition? And the Carnal World like dogs bark against the shining of the Moon? So much men hate the Light, that they spurn at the Lanthorns that bear it: And because they cannot endure the Treasure, often fling the earthen vessels against the ground wherein it is held. If the entrance of Truth render the Market worse for Diana's Shrines, the whole City will be in an uproar. * When Socrates upon natural Principles confuted the Heathen Idolatry, and asserted the unity of God, the whole cry of Athens, a learned University, is against him; and because he opposed the publick received Religion, though with an undoubted Truth, he must end his Life by Violence: How hath every Corner of the World steam'd with the blood of those, that would maintain the Authority of God in the World! The Devils Children will follow the steps of their Father, and endeavour to bruise the Heel of Divine Truth, that would endeavour to break the Head of corrupt Lust.

* Thef. Salmur. De Spiritu Servitutis Thef. 15.

* Act. 19. 24, 28, 29.

5. Men often seem desirous to be acquainted with the Will of God, not out of any respect to his Will and to make it their Rule, but upon some other Consideration. Truth is ſcarce received as truth. There is more of Hypocriſie than ſincerity in the pale of the Church, and attendance on the Mind of God. The outward dowry of a religious Profeſſion makes it often more deſirable than the Beauty. Judas was a follower of Chriſt for the Bag, not out of any affection to the Divine Revelation: Men ſometime pretend a deſire to be acquainted with the Will of God, to ſatisfie their own paſſions, rather than to conform to Gods Will: The Religion of ſuch is not the judgment of the Man, but the paſſion of the Brute. Many entertain a Doctrine for the perſons ſake, rather than a perſon for the Doctrine's ſake; and believe a thing becauſe it comes from a Man they eſteem, as if his lips were more Canonical than Scripture.

The Apoſtle implies in the Commendation he gives the Theſſalonians, * that ſome receive the Word for human intereſt, not as it is in truth the Word and Will of God, to command and govern their Conſciences by its Soveraign Authority: Or elſe they have the Truth of God (as St. James ſpeaks of the Faith of Chriſt) with reſpect of perſons: * and receive it not for the ſake of the Fountain, but of the Channel: So that many times the ſame Truth delivered by another, is diſregarded, which when dropping from the fancy and mouth of a Mans own Idol, is cryed up as an Oracle. This is to make not God, but Man the Rule: For though we entertain that which materially is the Truth of God, yet not formally as his Truth, but as conveyed by one we affect: And that we receive a Truth and not an Error, we ow the obligation to the honeſty of the Inſtrument, and not to the ſtrength and clearneſs of our own Judgment. Wrong conſiderations may give admittance to an unclean as well as a clean beaſt into the Ark of the Soul: That which is contrary to the Mind of God, may be entertained, as well as that which is agreeable. 'Tis all one to ſuch that have no reſpect to God, what they have; As it is all one to a Spunge to ſuck up the fouleſt water or the ſweeteſt wine, when either is applyed to it.

* 1 Theſ. 2. 13.

* Jam. 2. 2.

6. Many that entertain the Notions of the Will and Mind of God, admit them with unſetled and wavering Affections. There is a great Levity in the heart of Man. The Jews that one day applaud our Saviour with Hoſannahs as their King, vote his Crucifixion the next, and uſe him as a Murderer. VVe begin in the Spirit and end in the Fleſh. Our hearts like Lute-ſtrings are changed with every change of weather, with every appearance of a Temptation; ſcarce one motion of God in a thouſand prevails with us for a ſetled abode. 'Tis a hard task to make a ſignature of thoſe Truths upon our affections, which will with eaſe paſs currant with our underſtandings; Our affections will as ſoon looſe them, as our underſtandings embrace them. The heart of Man is unſtable as water. * Some were willing to rejoyce in Johns Light, which reflected a luſtre on their minds; but not in his Heat, which would have conveyed a warmth to their hearts: and the light was pleaſing to them but for a ſeaſon, * while their corruptions lay as if they were dead, not when they were awakened. Truth may be admitted one day, and the next day rejected. As Auſtin ſaith of a wicked Man, he loves the Truth ſhining, but he hates the Truth reproving. This is not to make God, but our own humor our rule and meaſure.

* Gen. 49. 4.
* Jam. 1. 8.

* Joh. 5. 35.

7. Many deſire an acquaintance with the Law and Truth of God, with a deſign to improve ſome luſt by it. To turn the word of God to be a Pander to the Breach of his Law. This is ſo far from making Gods VVill our Rule, that we make our own vile affections the Rule of his Law. How many forced Interpretations of Scripture have been coyned to give content to the luſts of men; and the Divine Rule forced to bend and be ſquared to mens looſe and carnal apprehenſions! 'Tis a part of the inſtability or falſeneſs of the heart to wreſt the Scriptures to their own deſtruction; * which they could not do, if they did not firſt wring them to countenance ſome deteſtable Error or filthy Crime. In Paradiſe the firſt Interpretation made of the firſt Law of God, was point blank againſt the mind of the Law-giver, and venemous to the whole Race of Mankind. Paul himſelf feared that ſome might put his Doctrine of Grace to ſo ill a uſe, as to be an Altar and Sanctuary to ſhelter their preſumption, Rom. 6. 1, 15. ſhall we then continue in ſin, that Grace may abound? Poyſonous Conſequences are often drawn from the ſweeteſt Truths: As when Gods Patience is made a Topick, whence to argue againſt his Providence, * or an encouragement to commit Evil more greedily; as though becauſe he had not preſently a revenging hand, he had not an all ſeeing Eye: Or when the Doctrine of Juſtification

* 2 Pet. 3. 16.

* Pſal 94. 1.

tion by Faith, is made uſe of to depreſs a holy life; or Gods readineſs to receive returning ſinners, an encouragement to defer repentance till a death bed. A Lyar will hunt for ſhelter in the reward God gave the Midwives that lyed to Pharaoh for the preſervation of the Males of Iſrael, and Rahabs ſaving the Spies by falſe intelligence. God knows how to diſtinguiſh between grace and corruption, that may lie cloſe together; or between ſomething of moral goodneſs and moral evil, which may be mixed: We find their fidelity rewarded, which was a moral good; but not their lye approved, which was a moral evil. Nor will Chriſts converſing with ſinners, be a plea for any to thruſt themſelves into evil Company. Chriſt converſed with ſinners, as a Phyſitian with diſeaſed perſons, to cure them, not approve them; others with profligate perſons to receive infection from them, not to communicate holineſs to them. Satans Children have ſtudied their Fathers art, who wanted not perverted Scripture to ſecond his Temptations againſt our Saviour. * How often do carnal hearts turn Divine Revelation to carnal ends, as the Sea freſh water into ſalt? As men ſubject the precepts of God to carnal intereſts, ſo they ſubject the truths of God to carnal fancies. When men will allegorize the Word, and make a humorous and crazy fancy the Interpreter of Divine Oracles, and not the Spirit ſpeaking in the word; This is to enthrone our own imaginations as the rule of Gods Law, and depoſe his Law from being the rule of our reaſon: This is to rifle truth of its true mind and intent. 'Tis more to rob a man of his reaſon, the eſſential conſtitutive part of man, than of his eſtate. This is to refuſe an intimate acquaintance with his Will. We ſhall never tell what is the matter of a precept, or the matter of a promiſe, if we impoſe a ſenſe upon it contrary to the plain meaning of it: Thereby we ſhall make the Law of God to have a diſtinct ſenſe according to the variety of mens imaginations, and ſo make every mans fancy a Law to himſelf.

* Mat. 4. 4, 6.

Now that this unwillingneſs to have a Spiritual acquaintance with Divine Truth, is a diſowning God as our rule, and a ſetting up ſelf in his ſtead, is evident; becauſe this unwillingneſs reſpects Truth,

1. As it is moſt Spiritual and Holy. A fleſhly mind is moſt contrary to a Spiritual Law, and particularly as it is a ſearching and diſcovering Law, that would dethrone all other rules in the Soul. As men love to be without a Holy God in the world, ſo they love to be without a holy Law, the tranſcript and image of Gods Holineſs in their hearts; and without holy men, the lights kindled by the Father of lights. As the holineſs of God, ſo the holineſs of the Law moſt offends a carnal heart. Iſa. 30. 11. Cauſe the holy one of Iſrael to ceaſe from before us, prophecy to us right things: They could not endure God as a holy one. Herein God places their Rebellion, rejecting him as their rule, ver. 9. Rebellious Children that will not hear the Law of the Lord. The more pure and precious any diſcovery of God is, the more it is diſreliſht by the world: As Spiritual ſins are ſweeteſt to a carnal heart, ſo Spiritual truths are moſt diſtaſtful. The more of the brightneſs of the Sun any beam conveys, the more offenſive it is to a diſtempered eye.

2. As it doth moſt relate to, or lead to God. The Devil directs his fierceſt batteries againſt thoſe Doctrines in the VVord, and thoſes Graces in the heart, which moſt exalt God, debaſe man, and bring men to the loweſt ſubjection to their Creator; Such is the Doctrine and grace of juſtifying faith. That men hate not knowledge as knowledge, but as it directs them to chooſe the fear of the Lord, was the determination of the Holy Ghoſt long ago. Prov. 1. 29. for that they hated knowledge and did not chooſe the fear of the Lord. Whatſoever reſpects God, clears up guilt, witneſſes mans revolt to him, rouzeth up Conſcience, and moves to a return to God, a man naturally runs from, as Adam did from God, and ſeeks a ſhelter in ſome weak buſhes of error, rather than appear before it. Not that men are unwilling to inquire into and contemplate ſome Divine Truths, which lie furtheſt from the heart, and concern not themſelves immediatly with the rectifying the Soul: They may view them with ſuch a pleaſure as ſome might take in beholding the Miracles of our Saviour, who could not endure his ſearching Doctrine. The light of ſpeculation may be pleaſant, but the light of conviction is grievous; that which galls their Conſciences, and would affect them with a ſenſe of their duty to God.

Is it not eaſy to perceive, that when a men begins to be ſerious in the concerns of the Honour of God and the duty of his Soul, he feels a reluctancy within him, even againſt the pleas of Conſcience; which evidenceth that ſome unworthy principle has got footing in the hearts of Men which fights againſt the declarations of God without, and the impreſſions of the Law of God within, at the ſame time when a mans own Conſcience takes part with it, which is the ſubſtance of the Apoſtles diſcourſe, Rom. 7. 15, 16, &c.

Cloſe diſcourſes of the Honour of God, and our duty to him are irkſome, when men are upon a merry pin: They are like a damp in a Mine that takes away their breath; they ſhuffle them out as ſoon as they can, and are as unwilling to retain the ſpeech of them in their mouths, as the knowledge of them in their hearts. Gracious ſpecches, inſtead of bettering many men, diſtemper them, as ſometimes ſweet perfumes affect a weak head with aches.

3. As 'tis moſt contrary to ſelf. Men are unwilling to acquaint themſelves with any truth that leads to God, becauſe it leads from ſelf. Every part of the Will of God, is more or leſs diſpleaſing, as it ſounds harſh againſt ſome carnal intereſt men would ſet above God, or as a Mate with him. Man cannot deſire any intimacy with that Law which he regards as a Bird of prey, to pick out his right eye, or gnaw off his right hand, his luſt dearer than himſelf. The reaſon we have ſuch hard thoughts of Gods Will, is becauſe we have ſuch high thoughts of our ſelves. 'Tis a hard matter to Believe or Will that, which hath no affinity with ſome principle in the underſtanding, and no intereſt in our Will and Paſſions: Our unwillingneſs to be acquainted with the Will of God ariſeth from the diſproportion between that and our corrupt hearts, We are alienated from the life of God in our minds, Eph. 4. 18, 19. As we live not like God, ſo we neither think, or Will as God: There is an antipathy in the heart of man againſt that Doctrine, which teaches us to deny our ſelves and be under the rule of another: But whatſoever favours the ambition, luſts, and profits of men, is eaſily entertainable. Many are fond of thoſe Sciences, which may enrich their underſtandings, and grate not upon their ſenſual delights. Many have an admirable dexterity in finding out Philoſophical reaſons, Mathematical demonſtrations, or raiſing obſervations upon the Records of Hiſtory, and ſpend much time and many ſerious and affectionate thoughts in the ſtudy of them; In thoſe they have not immediatly to do with God, their beloved pleaſures are not impaired: 'Tis a ſatisfaction to ſelf without the exerciſe of any hoſtility againſt it. But had thoſe Sciences been againſt ſelf, as much as the Law and Will of God, they had long ſince been rooted out of the World. VVhy did the Young-man turn his back upon the Law of Chriſt? Becauſe of his worldly ſelf: VVhy did the Phariſees mock at the Doctrine of our Saviour and not at their own traditions? Becauſe of Covetous ſelf. VVhy did the Jews ſlight the perſon of our Saviour and put him to death, after the reading ſo many Credentials of his being ſent from Heaven? becauſe of ambitious ſelf, that the Romans might not come and take away their Kingdom. If the Law of God were fitted to the humours of ſelf, it would be readily and cordially obſerved by all men: Self is the meaſure of a world of ſeeming Religious actions; while God ſeems to be the object, and his Law the motive, ſelf is the rule and end; Zach. 7. 5. Did you faſt unto me, &c.

2. As men diſcover their diſowning the VVill of God as a rule by unwillingneſs to be acquainted with it, ſo they diſcover it by the contempt of it, after they cannot avoid the Notions and ſome impreſſions of it. The rule of God is burthenſome to a ſinner, he flies from it as from a frightful bug-bear, and unpleaſant Yoke: Sin againſt the knowledge of the Law is therefore called, a going back from the Commandment of Gods lips, Job 23. 12. A caſting Gods word behind them, * as a contemptible thing, fitter to be trodden in the dirt, than lodged in the heart: Nay it is a caſting it off as an abominable thing, for ſo the word זנח ſignifies, Hoſ. 8. 3. Iſrael hath caſt off the thing that is good; an utter refuſal of God, Jer. 44. 16. As for the word which thou haſt ſpoken to us in the name of the Lord, we will not hearken. In the ſlight of his precepts his eſſential perfections are ſlighted. In diſowning his Will as a Rule, we diſown all thoſe attributes which flow from his VVill, as Goodneſs, Righteouſneſs and Truth. As an Act of the Divine underſtanding is ſuppoſed to precede the Act of the Divine VVill, ſo we ſlight the infinite reaſon of God. Every Law, tho it proceeds from the VVill of the Law-giver, and doth formally conſiſt in an Act of the VVill, yet it doth preſuppoſe an act of the underſtanding. If the Commandment be holy, juſt and good, good, as it is Rom. 7. 12. If it be the Image of Gods holineſs, a tranſcript of his righteouſneſs, and the efflux of his goodneſs; then in every breach of it durt is caſt upon thoſe Attributes which ſhine in it, and a ſlight of all the regards he hath to his own Honour, and all the proviſions he makes for his Creature. This Atheiſm or contempt of God, is more taken notice of by God than the matter of the ſin it ſelf: As a reſpect to God in a weak and imperfect obedience is more than the matter of the obedience it ſelf, becauſe it is an acknowledgment of God: So a contempt of God in an act of diſobedience, is more than the matter of diſobedience. The Creature ſtands in ſuch an Act not only in a poſture of diſtance from God, but defiance of him: It was not the bare act of Murder and Adultery which Nathan charged upon David, but the Atheiſtical principle which Spirited thoſe evil acts. The deſpiſing the Commandment of the Lord, was the venom of them. * Tis poſſible to break a Law without contempt; But when Men pretend to believe there is a God, and that this is the Law of God, it ſhews a contempt of his Majeſty: Men naturally account Gods Laws too ſtrict, his Yoak too heavy, and his limits too ſtrait: And he that liveth in a contempt of this Law, curſeth God in his life: How can they believe there is a God, who deſpiſe him as a Ruler? How can they believe him to be a guide, that diſdain to follow him? To think we firmly believe a God without living conformable to his Law, is an idle and vain imagination. The true and ſenſible Motion of a God cannot ſubſiſt with diſorder and an affected unrighteouſneſs.

* Pſal. 50. 17.

* 2 Sam. 12. 9, 10. * Claud.

This contempt is ſeen,

1. In any preſumptuous breach of any part of his Law. Such ſins are frequently called in Scripture Rebellions, which are a denial of the Allegiance we owe to him. By a wilful refuſal of his right in one part we root up the foundation of that rule he doth juſtly challenge over us: His Right is as extenſive to command us in one thing, as in another: And if it be diſowned in one thing, 'tis vertually diſowned in all, and the whole Statute Book of God is contemned. Jam. 2. 10, 11. Whoſoever ſhall keep the whole Law, and yet offend in one point is guilty of all. A willing breaking one part, tho there be a willing obſervance of all the other points of it, is a breach of the whole, becauſe the Authority of God, which gives ſanction to the whole is ſlighted: The obedience to the reſt is diſſembled: For the love, which is the root of all obedience, is wanting; For Love is the fulfilling the whole Law: * The reſt are obeyed becauſe they croſs not carnal deſire ſo much as the other, and ſo 'tis an obſervance of himſelf, not of God. Beſides, the Authority of God, which is not prevalent to reſtrain us from the breach of one point, would be of as little force with us to reſtrain us from the breach of all the reſt, did the allurements of the fleſh give us as ſtrong a diverſion from the one, as from the other: And tho the Command that is tranſgreſt be the leaſt in the whole Law, yet the Authority which enjoyns it is the ſame with that which enacts the greateſt. And it is not ſo much the matter of the command, as the Authority commanding which lays the obligation.

* Rom. 13. 10.

2. In the natural averſeneſs to the declarations of Gods will and mind, which way ſo ever they tend. Since Man affected to be as God, he deſires to be boundleſs; he would not have Fetters, tho they be golden ones, and conduce to his happineſs; tho the Law of God be a ſtrength to them, yet they will not, Iſa. 30. 15. In returning ſhall be your ſtrength and you would not. They would not have a bridle to reſtrain them from running into the pit, nor be hedged in by the Law, tho for their ſecurity: As if they thought it too ſlaviſh and low Spirited a thing to be guided by the Will of another: Hence man is compared to a Wild-Aſs, that loves to ſnuff up the wind in the Wilderneſs at her pleaſure, rather than come under the guidance of God; * From whatſoever quarter of the Heavens you purſue her ſhe will run to the other.

* Jer. 2. 24.

The Iſraelites could not endure what was Commanded, * tho in regard of the Moral part, agreeable to what they found written in their own Nature; And to the obſervance whereof, they had the higheſt obligations of any people under Heaven, ſince God had by many prodigies delivered them from a cruel ſlavery: The memory of which preface'd the Decalogue; Exod. 20. 2. I am the Lord thy God which have brought thee out of the Land of Egypt, out of the Houſe of bondage: They could not think of the rule of their duty, but they muſt reflect upon the grand incentive of it in their Redemption from Ægyptian thraldom: Yet this people were croſs to God,

* Heb. 12. 20.

which

which way ſoever he moved: When they were in the brick-kilns, they cryed for deliverance; when they had heavenly Manna, they longed for their Onions and Garlick. In Num. 14. 3. They repent of their deliverance from Egypt, and talk of returning again to ſeek the Remedy of their Evils in the hands of their cruelleſt Enemies; and would rather put themſelves into the Irons, whence God had delivered them, than believe one word of the promiſe of God for giving them a fruitful Land: But when Moſes tells them Gods order, that they ſhould turn back by the way of the Red Sea, * and that God had confirmed it by an Oath, that they ſhould not ſee the Land of Canaan *: They then run croſs to this Command of God, and inſtead of marching towards the Red-Sea, which they had wiſhed for before, they will go up to Canaan, as in ſpight of God and his threatning. We will go to the Place which the Lord hath promiſed, ver. 40. which Moſes calls a Tranſgreſſing the Commandment of the Lord, ver. 41. They would preſume to go up, notwithſtanding Moſes his Prohibition, and are ſmitten by the Amalekites: When God gives them a Precept, with a Promiſe to go up to Canaan, they long for Egypt; when God commands them to return to the Red-Sea, which was nearer to the place they longed for; they will ſhift ſides and go up to Canaan. * And when they found they were to traverſe the Solitudes of the Deſart, they took Pett againſt God, and inſtead of thanking him for the late Victory againſt the Canaanites, they reproach him for his Conduct from Egypt, and the Manna wherewith he nouriſhed them in the Wilderneſs: They would not go to Canaan, the way God had choſen, nor preſerve themſelves by the means God had ordained: They would not be at Gods diſpoſal, but complain of the badneſs of the way, and the lightneſs of Manna, empty of any neceſſary juyce to ſuſtain their Nature. They murmuringly ſollicite the Will and Power of God to change all that order which he had reſolved in his Council, and take another, conformable to their vain fooliſh deſires: And they ſignified thereby that they would invade his Conduct, and that he ſhould act according to their fancy; which the Pſalmiſt calls a tempting of God, and limiting the Holy One of Iſrael, Pſal. 78. 41.

* ver. 25.
* ver. 28.
* Num 21.4,5. & Daill. Serm. 1 Cor. 10. Ser. 9. p. 234. 235. 40.

To what point ſoever the Declarations of God ſtand, the Will of Man turns the quite contrary way. Is not the carriage of this Nation, the beſt then in the world? A diſcovery of the depth of our natural corruption, how croſs Man is to God: And that charge God brings againſt them, may be brought againſt all men by Nature, that they deſpiſe his Judgments, and have a rooted Abhorrency of his Statutes in their Soul, Levit. 26. 43. No ſooner had they recovered from one Rebellion, but they revolted to another: So difficult a thing it is for mans nature to be rendred capable of conforming to the Will of God: The carriage of his People is but a Copy of the Nature of Mankind, and is written for our admonition, 1 Cor. 10. 11. From this, temper men are ſaid to make void the Law of God *: To make it oft no obligation an antiquated and moth-eaten Record. And the Phariſees by ſetting up their Traditions againſt the Will of God, are ſaid to make his Law of none effect, to ſtrip it of all its Authority, as the word ſignifies, Mat. 15. 6. ἠκυρώσατε.

* Pſal. 119. 126.

3. We have the greateſt ſlight of that Will of God which is moſt for his Honour and his greateſt Pleaſure. 'Tis the Nature of Man, ever ſince Adam, to do ſo, Hoſ. 6. 6, 7. God deſired Mercy and not Sacrifice, the Knowledge of himſelf more than burnt Offering; but they like men, as Adam, have tranſgreſſed the Covenant, invade Gods Rights, and not let him be Lord of one Tree.

We are more curious Obſervers of the Fringes of the Law, than of the greater concerns of it. The Jews were diligent in Sacrifices and Offerings, which God did not urge upon them as Principals, but as Types of other things; but negligent of the Faith which was to be eſtabliſhed by him: Holineſs, Mercy, Pity, which concerned the Honour of God, as Governour of the World, and were imitations of the Holineſs and goodneſs of God, they were Strangers to. This is Gods Complaint, Iſa. 1. 11, 12. and 16, 17.

We ſhall find our hearts moſt averſe to the obſervation of thoſe Laws which are Eternal and Eſſential to Righteouſneſs; ſuch that he could not but command, as he is a Righteous Governour; in the obſervation of which, we come neareſt to him and expreſs his Image more clearly: As thoſe Laws for an inward and Spiritual Worſhip, a ſupreme Affection to him. God in regard of his Righteouſneſs and Holineſs of his Nature, and the Excellency of his Being, could not command the contrary to these: But this part of his Will our hearts most swell against, our corruption doth most snarle at; whereas those Laws which are only positive and have no intrinsick Righteousness in them, but depend purely upon the Will of the Law-giver, and may be changed at his pleasure, (which the other, that have an intrinsick Righteousness in them, cannot) we better comply with, than that part of his Will that doth express more the Righteousness of his Nature; * such as the Ceremonial part of Worship, and the Ceremonial Law among the Jews: We are more willing to observe Order in some outward attendances and glavering devotions, than discard secret affections to evil, crucify inward lusts and delightful thoughts: A hanging down the head like a bulrush is not difficult, but the breaking the heart like a Potters vessel to shreds and dust, (a sacrifice God delights in, whereby the excellency of God and the vileness of the Creature is owned) goes against the grain: To cut off an outward branch is not so hard, as to hack at the root. What God most loaths, as most contrary to his Will, we most love: No sin did God so severely hate, and no sin were the Jews more enclined unto, than that of Idolatry. The Heathen had not changed their God, as the Jews had changed their glory, Jer. 2. 11. And all men are naturally tainted with this sin, which is so contrary to the holy and excellent nature of God: By how much the more defect there is of purity in our respects to God, by so much the more respect there is to some Idol within or without us, to humor, custom and interest, &c.

ry

* Psal. 50. 8. 17, 19.

Never did any Law of God meet with so much opposition as Christianity, which was the design of God from the first promise to the exhibiting the Redeemer, and from thence to the end of the World: All people drew Swords at first against it: The Romans prepared Yokes for their Neighbors, but provided Temples for the Idols, those people Worshipped. But Christianity, the choicest design and most delightful part of the Will of God, never met with a kind entertainment at first in any place: Rome, that entertained all others, persecuted this with Fire and Sword, tho sealed by greater Testimonies from Heaven, than their own Records could report in favour of their Idols.

4. In running the greatest hazards, and exposing our selves to more trouble to cross the Will of God, than is necessary to the observance of it. 'Tis a vain charge men bring against the Divine precepts, that they are rigorous, severe, difficult: When, besides the contradiction to our Saviour, who tells us his Yoke is easy, and his Burthen light, they thwart their own calm reason and Judgment. Is there not more difficulty to be Vicious, Covetous, Violent, Cruel, than to be Vertuous, Charitable, Kind? Doth the Will of God enjoyn that, that is not conformable to right reason, and secretly delightful in the exercise and issue? And on the Contrary what doth Satan and the world engage us in, that is not full of molestation and hazard? Is it a sweet and comely thing to combat continually against our own Consciences, and resist our own light, and commence a perpetual quarrel against our selves, as we ordinarily do when we sin? They in the Prophet, Mich. 6. 6, 7, 8. would be at the expence of thousands of Rams, and ten thousand Rivers of Oyl, if they could compass them; yea, would strip themselves of their Natural affection to their first-born to expiate the sin of their Soul, rather then to do Justice, love mercy and walk humbly with God; things more conducible to the Honour of God, the welfare of the world, the security of their Souls, and of a more easie practice than the offerings they wished for.

Do not men then disown God when they will walk in ways hedged with thorns, wherein they meet with the Arrows of Conscience at every turn in their sides, and slide down to an everlasting punishment, sink under an intolerable slavery to contradict the Will of God? When they will prefer a sensual satisfaction, with a combustion in their Consciences, violation of their reasons, gnawing cares and weary travels, before the Honour of God, the dignity of their Natures, the happiness of peace and health, which might be preserved at a cheaper rate, than they are at to destroy them?

5. In the unwillingness and awkardness of the heart, when it is to pay God a service. Men do evil with both hands earnestly, * but do good with one hand faintly; no life in the heart, nor any diligence in the hand. What slight and loose thoughts of God doth this unwillingness imply? 'Tis a wrong to his providence, as tho we were not under his Government, and had no need of his assistance. A wrong to his excellency, as tho there were no aimableneſs in him to make his ſervice deſirable. An injury to his goodneſs and power, as if he were not able or willing to reward the Creatures obedience, or careleſs, not to take notice of it. 'Tis a ſign we receive little ſatisfaction in him, and that there is a great unſutableneſs between him and us.

* Mich. 7. 3.

lency

1. There is a kind of conſtraint in the firſt engagement. We are rather preſt to it than enter our ſelves Volunteers. What we call ſervice to God, is done naturally, much againſt our Wills; tis not a delightful food, but a bitter potion; we are rather haled, than run to it. There is a contradiction of ſin within us againſt our ſervice, as there was a contradiction of ſinners without our Saviour againſt his doing the VVill of God. Our hearts are unweildy to any Spiritual ſervice of God; we are fain to uſe a violence with them ſometimes. Hezekiah, it is ſaid, walked before the Lord with a perfect heart. 2 Kings 20. 9. he walked, he made himſelf to walk: Man naturally cares not for a walk with God: If he hath any Communion with him, 'tis with ſuch a dulneſs and heavineſs of Spirit, as if he wiſhed himſelf out of his Company. Mans nature, being contrary to holineſs, hath an averſion to any act of homage to God; becauſe Holineſs muſt at leaſt be pretended: In every duty wherein we have a Communion with God, Holineſs is requiſite: Now as men are againſt the truth of Holineſs, becauſe it is unſutable to them, ſo they are not friends to thoſe duties which require it, and for ſome ſpace divert them from the thoughts of their beloved luſts. The word of the Lord is a Yoke, Prayer a drudgery, Obedience a ſtrange Element. We are like fiſh, that drink up iniquity like water, * and come not to the bank without the force of an Angle: No more willing to do ſervice for God, than a fiſh is of it ſelf to do ſervice for Man. 'Tis a conſtrained act to ſatisfie Conſcience, and ſuch are ſervile, not Son-like performances, and ſpring from bondage more than affection: If Conſcience, like a task Maſter, did not ſcourge them to duty, they would never perform it.

* Job 15. 16.

Let us appeal to our ſelves, whether we are not more unwilling to ſecret, Cloſet, hearty duty to God, than to joyn with others in ſome external ſervice; as if thoſe inward ſervices, were a going to the rack, and rather our pennance than priviledg. How much ſervice hath God in the world from the ſame principle that Vagrants perform their task in Bridewel? How glad are many of evaſions to back them in the neglect of the Commands of God, of Corrupt reaſonings from the fleſh to waylay an Act of obedience, and a multitude of excuſes to blunt the edge of the precept? The very ſervice of God ſhall be a pretence to deprive him of the obedience due to him. Saul will not be ruled by Gods VVill in the deſtroying the Cattle of the Amalekites, but by his own; and will impoſe upon the VVill and VViſdom of God, Judging God miſtaken in his Command, and that the Cattle God thought fitteſt to be meat to the fouls, were fitter to be Sacrifices on the Altar. *

* 1 Sam. 15. 3, 9, 15, 21.

If we do perform any part of his VVill, is it not for our own ends to have ſome deliverance from trouble? Iſa. 26. 16. In trouble have they viſited thee, they poured out a Prayer, when thy Chaſtening was upon them. In affliction he ſhall find them kneeling in Homage and Devotion. In proſperity, he ſhall feel them kicking with contempt; they can pour out a Prayer in diſtreſs, and ſcarce drop one when they are delivered.

2. There is a ſlightneſs in our ſervice of God. VVe are loth to come into his preſence, and when we do come, we are loth to continue with him. VVe pay not an Homage to him heartily, as to our Lord and Governour; we regard him not as our Maſter, whoſe work we ought to do, and whoſe Honour we ought to aim at.

1. In regard of the matter of ſervice. VVhen the torn, the lame, and the ſick is offered to God; * ſo thin and lean a Sacrifice, that you might have thrown it to the ground with a puff, ſo ſome underſtand the meaning of (you have ſnuffi at it.) Men have naturally ſuch ſlight thoughts of the Majeſty and Law of God, that they think any ſervice is good enough for him, and conformable to his Law. The dulleſt and deadeſt times we think fitteſt to pay God a ſervice in; when ſleep is ready to cloſe our eyes and we are unfit to ſerve our ſelves, we think it a fit time to open our hearts to God. How few Morning Sacrifices hath God from many perſons and Families? Men leap out of their beds to their carnal pleaſures or worldly employments, without any thought of their Creator and Preſerver, or any reflection upon his VVill as the rule of our dayly obedience. And as many reſerve the dregs of their

* Mal. 1. 13, 14.

their Lives, their Old-age, to offer up their Souls to God: So they reſerve the Dreggs of the Day, their ſleeping time for the offering up their ſervice to him: How many grudge to ſpend their beſt time in the ſerving the Will of God, and reſerve for him the ſickly and rheumatick part of their Lives; the remainder of that which the Devil and their own Luſts have fed upon?

VVould not any Prince or Governour judge a Preſent half eaten up by wild-beaſts, or that which died in a Ditch, a contempt of his Royalty? a corrupt thing is too baſe and vile for ſo great a King as God is, whoſe Name is dreadful. * VVhen by Age Men are weary of their own Bodies, they would preſent them to God; yet grudgingly, as if a tired body were too good for him, ſnuffing at the Command for Service. God calls for our beſt, and we give him the worſt. * Mal. 1. 24.

2. In reſpect of Frame. VVe think any frame will ſerve Gods turn, which ſpeaks our ſlight of God as a Ruler. Man naturally performs duty with an unholy heart, whereby it becomes an abomination to God, Pro. 28. 9. He that turns away his Ear from hearing the Law, even his prayers ſhall be an abomination to God. The Services which he commands, he hates for their evil frames or corrupt ends, Amos, 5. 21. I hate, I deſpiſe your Feaſt-days, I will not ſmell in your Solemn Aſſemblies: God requires gracious ſervices, and we give him corrupt ones: VVe do not rouze up our hearts, as David called upon his Lute and Harp to awake, Pſal. 57. 8. Our hearts are not given to him, we put him off with bodily exerciſe: The heart is but Ice to what it doth not affect, [1.] There is not that natural vigor in the obſervance of God, which we have in worldly buſineſs: VVhen we ſee a livelineſs in men in other things, change the Scene into a motion towards God, how ſuddenly doth their vigor ſhrink and their hearts freeze into ſluggiſhneſs? Many times we ſerve God as languiſhingly as if we were afraid he ſhould accept us, and pray as coldly as if we were unwilling he ſhould hear us, and take away that luſt by which we are Governed, and which Conſcience forces us to pray againſt; as if we were afraid God ſhould ſet up his own throne and Government in our hearts. How fleeting are we in Divine Meditation, how ſleepy in Spiritual exerciſes? but in other exerciſes active: The Soul doth not awaken it ſelf, and excite thoſe animal and vital Spirits, which it will in bodily recreations and ſports; much leſs the powers of the Soul; whereby 'tis evident we prefer the latter before any ſervice to God: Since there is a fulneſs of Animal Spirits, why might they not be excited in holy duties as well as in other operations, but that there is a reluctancy in the Soul to exerciſe its Supremacy in this caſe, and perform any thing becoming a Creature in ſubjection to God as a Ruler?

2. 'Tis evident alſo in the diſtractions we have in his ſervice: How loth are we to ſerve God fixedly one hour, nay a part of an hour, notwithſtanding all the thoughts of his Majeſty, and the Eternity of glory ſet before our eye? VVhat man is there ſince the fall of Adam, that ſerved God one hour without many wandrings and unſutable thoughts unfit for that ſervice? How ready are our hearts to ſtart out and unite themſelves with any worldly objects that pleaſe us?

3. Wearineſs in it evidenceth it. To be weary of our dulneſs ſignifies a deſire; to be weary of ſervice ſignifies a diſcontent to be ruled by God: How tired are we in the performance of Spiritual duties, when in the vain triflings of time we have a perpetual motion: How will many willingly revel whole nights, when their hearts will flag at the Threſhold of a Religious ſervice? Like Dagon, * loſe, both our heads to think, and hands to act, when the Ark of God is preſent: Some in the Prophet wiſhed the new Moon and the Sabbath over, that they might ſell their Corn, and be buſied again in their worldly affairs: * A ſlight and wearineſs of the Sabbath, was a ſlight of the Lord of the Sabbath, and of that freedom from the Yoke and rule of ſin, which was ſignified by it. The deſign of the Sacrifices in the new Moon, was to ſignifie a reſt from the tyranny of ſin, and a conſecration to the Spiritual ſervice of God. Servants that are quickly weary of their work, are weary of the Authority of their Maſter, that enjoyns it: If our hearts had a value for God, it would be with us as with the needle to the Load-ſtone; there would be upon his beck a ſpeedy motion to him, and a fixed union with him. VVhen the Judgments and affections of the Saints ſhall be fully refined in glory, they ſhall be willing to behold the face of God and be under his Govern- * 1 Sam. 5. 4. * Amos 8. 5.

ment to Eternity, without any wearineſs. As the holy Angels, have owned God as their Soveraign near theſe ſix thouſand years, without being weary of running on his Errands: But alas while the fleſh clogs us, there will be ſome Reliques of unwillingneſs to hear his Injunctions, and wearineſs in performing them; tho men may excuſe thoſe things by extrinſick cauſes, yet Gods unerring Judgment calls it a wearineſs of himſelf, Iſa. 43. 22. Thou haſt not called upon me, oh Jacob, but thou haſt been weary of me, oh Iſrael. Of this he taxeth his own people, when he tells them he would have the beaſts of the Field; The Dragons and the Owls; the Gentiles, that the Jews counted no better than ſuch, to honour him and acknowledge him their rule in a way of duty, ver. 20. 21.

6. This contempt is ſeen in a deſerting the rule of God, when our expectations are not anſwered upon our ſervice. When ſervices are performed from carnal principles, they are ſoon caſt off when carnal ends meet not with deſired ſatisfaction. But when we own our ſelves Gods Servants, and God our Maſter, our eyes will wait upon him till he have mercy on us. * 'Tis one part of the duty we owe to God as our Maſter in heaven, to continue in Prayer, Col. 4. 1, 2 And by the ſame reaſon in all other ſervice, and to watch in the ſame with thankſgiving: To watch for occaſions of praiſe, to watch with chearfulneſs for further manifeſtations of his will, ſtrength to perform it, ſucceſs in the performance, that we may from all draw matter of praiſe: As we are in a poſture of obedience to his precepts, ſo we ſhould be in a poſture of waiting for the bleſſing of it.

* Pſal. 123. 2.

But naturally we reject the duty we owe to God, if he do not ſpeed the bleſſing we expect from him. How many do ſecretly mutter the ſame as they in Job 21. 15. What is the Almighty that we ſhould ſerve him, and what profit ſhall we have if we Pray to him? They ſerve not God out of Conſcience to his Commands, but for ſome carnal profit; and if God make them to wait for it, they will not ſtay his leiſure, but ceaſe ſolliciting him any longer. Two things are expreſt that God was not worthy of any Homage from them. What is the Almighty that we ſhould ſerve him; And that the ſervice of him would not bring them in a good Revenue or an advantage of that kind they expected. Intereſt drives many men on to ſome kind of ſervice, and when they do not find an advance of that, they will acknowledge God no more; but like ſome beggers, if you give them not upon their asking, and calling you good Maſter, from bleſſing they will turn to curſing.

How often do men do that ſecretly, practically, if not plainly, which Jobs Wife adviſed him to, Curſe God, and caſt off that diſguiſe of integrity they had aſſumed? Job. 2. 9. Doſt thou ſtill retain thy integrity? Curſe God. What a ſtir and puling and crying is here? Caſt off all thoughts of Religious ſervice, and be at Daggers drawing with that God, who for all thy ſervice of him has made thee ſo wretched a ſpectacle to men, and a banquet for worms. The like temper is deciphered in the Jews Mal. 3. 14. 'Tis in vain to ſerve God, and what profit is it, that we have kept his ordinances, that we have walked mournfully before the Lord? What profit is it that we have regarded his Statutes, and carryed our ſelves in a way of ſubjection to God, as our Soveraign, when we inherit nothing but ſorrow, and the Idolatrous Neighbors ſwim in all kind of pleaſures? As if it were the moſt miſerable thing to acknowledge God. If men have not the benefits they expect, they think God unrighteous in himſelf, and injurious to them, in not conferring the favour they imagine they have merited: And if they have not that recompence, they will deny God that ſubjection they owe to him as Creatures. Grace moves to God upon a ſenſe of duty; corrupt nature upon a ſenſe of Intereſt: Sincerity is encouraged by gracious returns, but is not melted away by Gods delay or refuſal: Corrupt nature would have God at its beck, and ſteers a courſe of duty by hope of ſome carnal profit, not by a ſenſe of the Soveraignty of God.

7. This contempt is ſeen in breaking promiſes with God. * [One while the Conſcience of a man makes vows of new obedience, and perhaps binds himſelf with many an Oath, but they prove like Jonahs Gourd, withering the next day after their birth. This was Pharaohs temper; under a ſtorm he would ſubmit to God, and let Iſrael go; but when the ſtorm is ended, he will not be under Gods controul, and Iſraels ſlavery ſhall be increaſed: The fear of Divine wrath makes many a ſinner turn his back upon his ſin, and the love of his ruling luſt makes him turn his back, upon his true Lord. This is from the prevalency of ſin, that diſputes with God for the Soveraignty.]

* Reyn.

When

When God hath ſent a ſharp diſeaſe, as a meſſenger to bind men to their beds, and make an interruption of their ſinful pleaſures, their mouths are full of promiſes of a new life, in hope to eſcape the juſt vengeance of God: The ſenſe of Hell which ſtrikes ſtrongly upon them, makes them full of ſuch pretended reſolutions when they howl upon their beds. But if God be pleaſed in his Patience, to give them a reſpite, to take off the Chains wherewith he ſeemed to be binding them for deſtruction, and recruit their ſtrength, they are more earneſt in their ſins, than they were in their promiſes of a reformation; as if they had got the maſtery of God, and had outwitted him. How often doth God charge them * of not returning to him after a ſucceſſion of Judgments? So hard it is, not only to allure, but to ſcourge men to an acknowledgment of God as their Ruler. * Amos 4. 6. to ver. 11.

Conſider then,

Are we not naturally inclined to diſobey the known Will of God? Can we ſay, Lord, for thy ſake we refrain the thing to which our hearts encline? Do we not allow our ſelves to be licentious, earthly, vain, proud, revengeful, tho we know it will offend him? Have we not been peeviſhly croſs to his declared Will? Run Counter to him and thoſe Laws which expreſs moſt of the glory of his holineſs? Is not this to diſown him as our Rule? Did we never wiſh there were no Law to bind us, no precept to check our Idols? What is this, but to wiſh that God would depoſe himſelf from being our Governour, and leave us to our own conduct? or elſe to wiſh that he were as unholy as our ſelves, as careleſs of his own laws as we are, that is, that he were no more a God then we, a God as ſinful and unrighteous as our ſelves? He whoſe heart riſeth againſt the Law of God to unlaw it, riſeth againſt the Author of that Law to undeifie him. He that caſts contempt upon the deareſt thing God hath in the world, that which is the image of his holineſs, the delight of his Soul; that which he hath given a ſpecial charge to maintain, and that becauſe it is holy, juſt and good; would not ſtick to rejoyce at the deſtruction of God himſelf. If Gods Holineſs and righteouſneſs in the beam be deſpiſed, much more will an immenſe goodneſs and holineſs in the fountain be rejected: He that wiſheth a beam far from his eyes, becauſe it offends and ſcorcheth him, can be no friend to the Sun, from whence that beam doth iſſue. How unworthy a Creature is man, ſince he only, a rational Creature, is the ſole being that withdraws it ſelf from the Rule of God in this Earth? And how miſerable a Creature is he alſo, Since departing from the order of Gods goodneſs, he falls into the order of his Juſtice; and while he refuſeth God to be the rule of his life, he cannot avoid him being the Judge of his puniſhment? 'Tis this is the original of all ſin, and the fountain of all our miſery.

This is the firſt thing man diſowns, the Rule which God ſets him.

Secondly, 2. Man naturally owns any other rule rather than that of Gods preſcribing. The Law of God orders one thing, the heart of Man deſires another. There is not the baſeſt thing in the world, but man would ſooner ſubmit to be guided by it, rather than by the holineſs of God; and when any thing that God commands croſſes our own Wills, we value it no more, than we would the advice of a poor deſpicable beggar.

How many are lovers of pleaſure, more than lovers of God? * To make ſomething which contributes to the perfection of nature, as learning, wiſdom, moral vertues, our Rule, would be more tolerable: But to pay that homage to a ſwiniſh pleaſure, which is the right of God, is an inexcuſable contempt of him. The greateſt excellency in the world is infinitely below God; much more a beſtial delight, which is both diſgraceful and below the nature of man. If we made the vileſt Creature on Earth our Idol, 'tis more excuſable than to be the ſlave of a brutiſh pleaſure. The viler the thing is that doth poſſeſs the throne in our heart, the greater contempt it is of him who can only claim a right to it and is worthy of it. Sin is the firſt object of mans election, as ſoon as the faculty whereby he chooſes comes to exerciſe its power: And it is ſo dear to man, that it is, in the eſtimate of our Saviour, counted as the right hand, and the right eye, dear, precious and uſeful members. * 2 Tim. 3. 4.

1. The rule of Satan is owned before the rule of God. The natural man would rather be under the guidance of Satan than the Yoke of his Creator. Adam choſe him to be his Governour in Paradice. No ſooner had Satan ſpoke of God in a way of deriſion, Gen. 3. 1, 5. Yea, hath God ſaid? but man follows his Counſel and approves.

proves of the ſcoff; and the greateſt part of his poſterity, have not been wiſer by his ill, but would rather ramble in the Devils Wilderneſs, than to ſtay in Gods fold. 'Tis by the ſin of man that the Devil is become the God of the world, as if men were the Electors of him to the Government: Sin is an Election of him for a Lord, and a putting the Soul under his Government. Thoſe that live according to the courſe of the world, and are loth to diſpleaſe it, are under the Government of the Prince of it. The greateſt part of the works done in the world is to enlarge the Kingdom of Satan. For how many ages were the Laws whereby the greateſt part of the world was governed in the affairs of Religion, the fruits of his uſurpation and policy? When Temples were erected to him, Prieſts conſecrated to his ſervice; The rites uſed in moſt of the Worſhip of the world were either of his own Coyning, or the miſapplying the Rites, God had ordained to himſelf, under the notion of a God: Whence the Apoſtle calls all Idolatrous Feaſts, the table of Devils, the cup of Devils, Sacrifice to Devils, fellowſhip with Devils, * Devils being the real object of the Pagan Worſhip, tho not formally intended by the Worſhipper; tho in ſome parts of the Indies, the direct and peculiar worſhip is to the Devil, that he might not hurt them. And tho the intention of others was to offer to God, and not the Devil, yet ſince the action was contrary to the Will of God, he regards it as a Sacrifice to Devils. It was not the intention of Jeroboam to eſtabliſh Prieſts to the Devil, when he Conſecrated them to the ſervice of his Calves, for Jehu afterwards calls them the Servants of the Lord, 2 King. 10. 23. See if there be here none of the Servants of the Lord, to diſtinguiſh them from the Servants of Baal, ſignifying that the true God was Worſhipped under thoſe Images, and not Baal, nor any of the Gods of the Heathens; yet Scripture couples the Calves and Devils together, and aſcribes the Worſhip given to one, to be given to the other. * He ordained him Prieſts for the high places, and for the Devils, and for the Calves which he had made; ſo that they were Sacrifices to Devils, notwithſtanding the intention of Jeroboam and his Subjects that had ſet them up and worſhipped them, becauſe they were contrary to the mind of God, and agreeable to the Doctrine and mind of Satan, tho the object of their worſhip in their own intention were not the Devil but ſome deified man or ſome Canonized Saint: The intention makes not a good action: If ſo, when men kill the beſt Servants of God with a deſign to do God ſervice, as our Saviour foretels, * the action would not be Murder; yet who can call it otherwiſe, ſince God is wronged in the perſons of his Servants? Since moſt of the worſhip of the world, which mens corrupt natures incline them to, is falſe and different from the revealed will of God, 'tis a practical acknowledgment of the Devil, as the Governour, by acknowledging and practiſing thoſe Doctrines, which have not the ſtamp of Divine Revelation upon them, but were minted by Satan to depreſs the Honour of God in the World: It doth concern men then to take good heed, that in their acts of worſhip they have a Divine rule; otherwiſe it is an owning the Devil as the rule; for there is no medium: Whatſoever is not from God, is from Satan.

* 1 Cor. 10. 20, 21.

* 2 Chron. 11. 15.

* Joh. 16. 2.

But to bring this cloſer to us, and conſider that which is more common among us: Men that are in a natural condition and Wedded to their luſts, are under the paternal Government of Satan, Joh. 8. 44. Ye are of your Father the Devil, and the luſts of your Father you will do. If we divide ſin into Spiritual and carnal, which diviſion comprehends all, the Devils Authority is owned in both; In Spiritual, we conform to his example, becauſe thoſe he commits: In carnal, we obey his will, becauſe thoſe he directs: He acts the one, and ſets us a Copy: He tempts to the other, and gives us a kind of a precept. Thus man by nature being a willing ſervant of ſin, is more deſirous to be bound in the Devils Iron Chains, than in Oods ſilken Cords.

What greater Atheiſm can there be, than to uſe God as if he were inferior to the Devil? to take the part of his greateſt Enemy, who drew all others into the faction againſt him? to pleaſure Satan by offending God, and gratifie our adverſary with the injury of our Creator? For a Subject to take arms againſt his Prince with the deadlieſt Enemy, both himſelf and Prince hath in the whole word, adds a greater blackneſs to the Rebellion.

2. The more viſible rule preferred before God in the World, is man. The opinion of the world is more our rule than the precept of God; and many mens abſtinence from ſin, is not from a ſenſe of the Divine Will, no, nor from a principle of reaſon, but but from an affection to ſome man on whom they depend, or fear of puniſhment from a ſuperior: The ſame principle with that in a ravenous beaſt, who abſtains from what he deſires for fear only of a ſtick or Club: Men will walk with the Herds, go in faſhion with the moſt, ſpeak and act as the moſt do: While we conform to the world, we cannot perform a reaſonable ſervice to God, nor prove, nor approve practically what the good and acceptable Will of God is: The Apoſtle puts them in oppoſition to one another. * * Rom. 12.1,2.

This appears,

1. In complying more with the dictates of men, than the Will of God. Men draw encouragement from Gods forbearance to ſin more freely againſt him; but the fear of puniſhment for breaking the Will of Man, lays a reſtraint upon them: The fear of man is a more powerful curb, to reſtrain men in their duty, than the fear of God: So we may pleaſe a Friend, a Maſter, a Governour, we are regardleſs whether we pleaſe God or no: Men pleaſers are more than God pleaſers: Man is more advanced as a rule, than God, when we ſubmit to human orders and ſtagger and diſpute againſt Divine. Would not a Prince think himſelf ſlighted in his authority, if any of his Servants ſhould decline his commands, by the order of one of his Subjects? And will not God make the ſame account of us, when we deny or delay our obedience, for fear of one of his Creatures? In the fear of man, we as little acknowledge God for our Soveraign, as we do for our comforter: Iſa. 51. 12, 13. I, even I am he, that comforteth you, who art thou, that thou ſhouldſt be afraid of a man that ſhall die, &c. and forgetteſt the Lord thy maker, &c. We put a ſlight upon God, as if he were not able to bear us out in our duty to him; and uncapable to ballance the ſtrength of an arm of fleſh.

2. In obſerving that which is materially the Will of God, not becauſe 'tis his Will, but the injunctions of men. As the word of God may be received, yet not as his word, ſo the Will of God may be performed, yet not as his Will. 'Tis materially done, but not formally obeyed: An action, and obedience in that action are two things: as when man Commands the ceaſing from all works of the ordinary calling on the Sabbath, 'tis the ſame that God enjoyns; the Ceſſation, or attendance of his Servants on the hearing the word, are conformable in the matter of it to the Will of God; but it is only conformable in the obediential part of the acts to the Will of man, when it is done only with reſpect to a human precept. As God hath a right to enact his Laws without conſulting his Creature in the way of his Government; So man is bound to obey thoſe Laws, without conſulting whether they be agreeable to mens laws or no: If we act the Will of God, becauſe the Will of our ſuperiors concurs with it, we obey not God in that, but man; a human Will being the rule of our obedience; and not the Divine: This is to vilifie God, and make him inferior to man in our eſteem, and a valuing the rule of man above that of our Creator.

Since God is the higheſt perfection and infinitely good, whatſoever rule he gives the Creature muſt be good, elſe it cannot proceed from God. A baſe thing cannot be the product of an infinite excellency; and an unreaſonable thing cannot be the product of an infinite wiſdom and goodneſs: Therefore as the reſpecting Gods Will before the VVill of man is excellent and worthy of a Creature, and is an acknowledging the excellency, goodneſs and wiſdom of God; So the eying the VVill of man before and above the VVill of God, is, on the contrary, a denyal of all thoſe in a lump, and a preferring the wiſdom, goodneſs and power of man in his Law above all thoſe perfections of God in his. VVhatſoever men do that looks like moral virtue or abſtinence from vices, not out of obedience to the rule God hath ſet, but becauſe of cuſtom, neceſſity, example or imitation, they may in the doing of it be rather ſaid to be Apes than Chriſtians.

3. In obeying the Will of man, when 'tis contrary to the Will of God. As the Iſraelites willingly walked after the Commandment; * Not of God, but of Jeroboam in the caſe of the Calves: And made the Kings heart glad with their lies. * They cheered him with their ready obedience to his Command for Idolatry (which was a lie in it ſelf, and a lie in them) againſt the Commandment of God and the warnings of the Prophets; rather than cheer the heart of God with their obedience to his worſhip inſtituted by him: Nay, and when God offered them, to cure them their wound, their * Hoſ. 5. 11. * Hoſ. 7. 3.

their iniquity breaks out afreſh; they would neither have him as a Lord to rule them, nor a Phyſician to cure them, Hoſ. 7. 1. When I would have healed Iſrael, then the iniquity of Ephraim was diſcovered. The whole Perſian Nation ſhrunk at once from a duty due by the light of nature to the Deity, upon a decree that neither God or man ſhould be petitioned to for thirty days, but only their King. * One only Daniel excepted againſt it, who preferred his homage to God, above obedience to his Prince. An adulterous generation is many times made the rule of mens profeſſions, as is implyed in thoſe words of our Saviour, Mark 8. 38. Whoſoever ſhall be aſhamed of me and my words in this Adulterous and ſinful Generation: Own him among his Diſciples, and be aſhamed of him among his Enemies: Thus men are ſaid to deny God, Tit. 1. 16. When they attend to Jewiſh fables and the precepts of men rather than the word of God: When the decrees or Canons of fallible men are valued at a higher rate, and preferred before the writings of the Holy Ghoſt by his Apoſtles.

* Daniel 6.

As Man naturally diſowns the rule God ſets him, and owns any other rule than that of Gods preſcribing, ſo

Thirdly, 3. He doth this in order to the ſetting himſelf up as his own rule. As tho' our own Wills, and not Gods, were the true ſquare and meaſure of Goodneſs. We make an Idol of our own Wills: And as much as ſelf is exalted, God is depoſed: The more we eſteem our own Wills, the more we endeavour to annihilate the Will of God: Account nothing of him, the more we account of our ſelves: And endeavour to render our ſelves his ſuperiors by exalting our own Wills. No Prince but would look upon his Authority as invaded, his Royalty derided, if a Subject ſhould reſolve to be a Law to himſelf, in oppoſition to his known Will: True piety is to hate our ſelves, deny our ſelves, and cleave ſolely to the ſervice of God. To make our ſelves our own rule, and the object of our chiefeſt love is Atheiſm. If ſelf denyal be the greateſt part of Godlineſs, the great Letter in the Alphabet of Religion; Self love is the great Letter in the Alphabet of Practical Atheiſm. Self is the great Anti-Chriſt and Anti-God in the World, that ſets up it ſelf above all that is called God: Self love is the Captain of that black band, 2 Tim. 3. 2. It ſits in the Temple of God and would be ador'd, as God: Self love begins; but denying the power of Godlineſs, which is the ſame with denying the ruling power of God, ends the liſt: 'Tis ſo far from binding to the righteous Will of the Creator, that it would have the Eternal Will of God ſtoop to the humour and unrighteous Will of a Creature: And this is the ground of the contention between the fleſh and the Spirit in the heart of a renewed man; Fleſh Wars for the God-head of ſelf, and Spirit fights for the God-head of God: The one would ſettle the throne of the Creator, and the other maintain a Law of Covetouſneſs, Ambition, Envy, Luſt in the ſtead of God.

The Evidence of this will appear in theſe Propoſitions.

1. This is natural to man as he is corrupted. What was the venom of the ſin of Adam, is naturally derived with his nature to all his poſterity. It was not the eating a forbidden Apple, or the pleaſing his Palate that Adam aimed at, or was the chief object of his deſire; but to live independently on his Creator, and be a God to himſelf, Gen. 3. 5. You ſhall be as Gods. That which was the matter of the Devils Temptation, was the incentive of mans rebellion: A likeneſs to God he aſpired to in the Judgment of God himſelf, an infallible interpreter of mans thoughts; Behold, man is become as one of us, to know good and evil, in regard of ſelf ſufficiency and being a rule to himſelf. The Jews underſtand the ambition of man to reach no further, than an equality with the Angelical nature: But Jehovah here underſtands it in another ſenſe: God had ordered man by this prohibition not to eat of the fruit of the Tree of knowledge of good and evil; not to attempt the knowledge of good and evil of himſelf, but to wait upon the dictates of God; not to truſt to his own Counſels, but to depend wholly upon him for direction and guidance. Certainly he that would not hold off his hand from ſo ſmall a thing as an Apple, when he had his choice of the fruit of the Garden, would not have denyed himſelf any thing his Appetite had deſired, when that principle had prevailed upon him: He would not have ſtuck at a greater matter to pleaſure himſelf with the diſpleaſing of God, when for ſo ſmall a thing he would incur the anger of his Creator.

Thus would he deifie his own underſtanding againſt the wiſdom of God, and his own own appetite againſt the will of God: This deſire of equality with God, a learned man thinks the Apoſtle intimates, Phil. 2. 6. Who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: The Sons being in the form of God, and thinking it not robbery to be equal with God, implies that the robbery of ſacriledge committed by our firſt Parents, for which the Son of God humbled himſelf to the death of the Croſs, was an attempt to be equal with God, and depend no more upon Gods directions, but his own conduct, which could be no leſs than an invaſion of the throne of God, and endeavour to put himſelf into a poſture to be his mate: Other ſins, Adultery and Theft, &c. could not be committed by him at that time, but he immediately puts forth his hand to uſurp the power of his Maker: This treaſon is the old Adam in every man. The firſt Adam contradicted the Will of God to ſet up himſelf: The ſecond Adam humbled himſelf, and did nothing but by the Command and Will of his Father. This principle wherein the venom of the Old Adam lies, muſt be Crucified to make way for the Throne of the humble and obedient principle of the New Adam or quickning Spirit. Indeed ſin in its own nature is nothing elſe, but a willing according to ſelf, and contrary to the Will of God: Luſts are therefore called the Wills of the fleſh and of the mind * As the precepts of God are Gods Will: So the violations of theſe precepts is mans will: And thus man uſurps, a God-head to himſelf, by giving that Honour to his own will which belongs to God; appropriating the right of rule to himſelf and denying it to his Creator. That Servant that acts according to his own Will with a neglect of his Maſters refuſeth the duty of a Servant, and invades the right of his Maſter: This Self-love and deſire of Independency on God has been the root of all ſin in the World: The great controverſie between God and man hath been, whether he or they ſhall be God; whether his Reaſon or theirs, his Will or theirs ſhall be the guiding principle: As grace is the union of the Will of God and the Will of the Creature; ſo ſin is the oppoſition of the Will of ſelf to the Will of God. Leaning to our own underſtanding, is oppoſed as a natural evil, to truſting in the Lord, * a ſupernatural grace. Men commonly love what is their own, their own inventions, their own fancies; therefore the ways of a wicked man are called the ways of his own heart; * and the ways of a ſuperſtitious man his own devices, Jer. 18. 11. We will walk after our own devices: We will be a law to our ſelves: And what the Pſalmiſt ſaith of the tongue, our tongues are our own, who ſhall controul us? Is as truly the language of mens hearts, our Wills are our own, who ſhall check us?

Dr. Jackſon.

* Eph. 2. 3.

* Pro. 3. 5.

* Eccl. 11. 9.

2. This is evident in the diſſatisfaction of men with their own Conſciences when they contradict the deſires of ſelf. Conſcience is nothing but an actuated or reflex knowledge of a ſuperior power and an equitable law; a law impreſt, and a power above it impreſſing it. Conſcience is not the law-giver, but the remembrancer to mind us of that law of nature imprinted upon our Souls, and actuate the conſiderations of the duty and penalty, to apply the rule to our acts, and paſs Judgment upon matter of fact: 'Tis to give the charge, urge the rule, enjoyn the practice of thoſe notions of Right, as part of our duty and obedience.

But man is much diſpleaſed with the directions of Conſcience, as he is out of love with the accuſations and condemning ſentence of this officer of God: We cannot naturally endure any quick and lively practical thoughts of God and his Will, and diſtaſt our own Conſciences for putting us in mind of it, They therefore like not to retain God in their knowledge, * that is, God in their own Conſciences; they would blow it out as it is the Candle of the Lord in them to direct them, and their acknowledgments of God, to ſecure themſelves againſt the practice of its principles: They would ſtop all the avenues to any beam of light, and would not ſuffer a ſparkle of Divine knowledge to flutter in their minds, in order to ſet up another directing rule ſuited to the fleſhly appetite: And when they cannot ſtop the light of it from glaring in their faces, they rebel againſt it, and cannot endure to abide in its paths: * He ſpeaks not of thoſe which had the written word or ſpecial Revelations; but only a natural light or traditional, handed from Adam: Hence are all the endeavors to ſtill it when it begins to ſpeak, by ſome carnal pleaſures; as Sauls evil Spirit with a fit of Muſick; or bribe it with ſome fits of a glavering devotion when it holds the Law of God in its commanding Authority before the mind: they would wipe out all the impreſſions of it when it preſſes the advancement of God above ſelf, and entertain tertain it with no better Complement, than Ahab did Elijah, haſt thou found me O my Enemy?

* Rom. 1. 28.

* Job 24. 13.

If we are like to God in any thing of our natural fabrick, 'tis in the ſuperior and more Spiritual part of our Souls: The reſiſtance of that which is moſt like to God, and inſtead of God in us, is a diſowning of the Soveraign repreſented by that Officer: He that would be without Conſcience, would be without God, whoſe Vice-gerent it is, and make the ſenſitive part, which Conſcience oppoſes, his Law-giver. Thus a man out of reſpect to ſinful ſelf, quarrels with his natural ſelf; and cannot comport himſelf in a friendly behaviour to his internal implanted principles: He hates to come under the rebukes of them, as much as Adam hated to come into the preſence of God, after he turned Traytor againſt him: The bad entertainment Gods deputy hath in us, reflects upon that God whoſe cauſe it pleads: 'Tis upon no other account that men loath the upright Language of their own reaſons in thoſe matters, and wiſh the eternal ſilence of their own Conſciences, but as they maintain the rights of God, and would hinder the Idol of ſelf from uſurping his God-head, and prerogative. Tho this power be part of a mans ſelf, rooted in his nature, as eſſential to him and inſeparable from him, as the beſt part of his being; yet he quarrels with it as it is Gods Deputy, and ſtickling for the honour of God in his Soul, and quarrelling with that ſinful ſelf he would cheriſh above God: We are not diſpleaſed with this faculty barely as it exerciſeth a ſelf-reflection; but as it is Gods Vice-gerent and bears the mark of his Authority in it. In ſome caſes this ſelf-reflecting act meets with good Entertainment, when it acts not in contradiction to ſelf, but ſutable to natural affections: As ſuppoſe a man hath in his paſſion ſtruck his Child, and cauſed thereby ſome great miſchief to him, the reflection of Conſcience will not be unwelcome to him; will work ſome tenderneſs in him, becauſe it takes the part of ſelf and of natural affection: But in the more Spiritual concerns of God, it will be rated as a buſy body.

3. Many, if not moſt actions, materially good in the world, are done more becauſe they are agreeable to ſelf, than as they are honourable to God. As the word of God may be heard not as his word, * but as there may be pleaſing Notions in it, or diſcourſes againſt an opinion or party we diſaffect: So the Will of God may be performed, not as his Will, but as it may gratifie ſome ſelfiſh conſideration, when we will pleaſe God ſo far as it may not diſpleaſe our ſelves, and ſerve him as our Maſter, ſo far as his Command may be a Servant to our humor; When we conſider not who it is that Commands, but how ſhort it comes of diſpleaſing that ſin which Rules in our heart, pick and chuſe what is leaſt burdenſome to the fleſh and diſtaſtful to our luſts.

* 1 Theſ. 2. 13.

He that doth the Will of God, not out of Conſcience of that Will, but becauſe it is agreeable to himſelf, caſts down the VVill of God, and ſets his own VVill in the place of it; takes the Crown from the head of God, and places it upon the head of ſelf: If things are done, not becauſe they are Commanded by God, but deſirable to us; 'tis a diſobedient obedience; a conformity to Gods VVill in regard of the matter, a conformity to our own VVill in regard of the motive; either as the things done are agreeable to natural and moral ſelf, or ſinful ſelf.

1. As they are agreeable to natural or moral ſelf. VVhen men will practice ſome points of Religion, and walk in the track of ſome Divine precepts; not becauſe they are Divine, but becauſe they are agreeable to their humor or conſtitution of nature; from the ſway of a natural bravery, the Byas of a ſecular intereſt, not from an ingenuous ſenſe of Gods Authority, or a voluntary ſubmiſſion to his will: As when a man will avoid exceſs in drinking, not becauſe it is diſhonourable to God, but as it is a blemiſh to his own reputation, or an impair of the health of his body: Doth this deſerve the name of an obſervance of the Divine injunction, or rather an obedience to our ſelves? Or when a man will be liberal in the diſtribution of his Charity, not with an eye to Gods precept, but in compliance with his own natural compaſſion, or to pleaſure the generoſity of his nature: The one is obedience to a mans own preſervation, the other an obedience to the intereſt or impulſe of a moral Vertue. 'Tis not reſpect to the rule of God, but the Authority of ſelf; and at the beſt, is but the performance of the material part of the Divine Rule, without any concurrence of a Spiritual motive or a Spiritual manner. That only is a maintaining the rights of God, when we pay an obſervance to his rule, without examining the agreeableneſs of it to our ſecular intereſt, or conſulting with the humour of fleſh and blood; when we will not decline his ſervice, though we find it croſs, and hath no affinity with the pleaſure of our own nature: Such an obedience as Abraham manifeſted in his readineſs to ſacrifice his Son: Such an obedience as our Saviour demands in cutting off the right hand. When we obſerve any thing of divine order upon the account of its ſuitableneſs to our natural Sentiments, we ſhall readily divide from him, when the intereſt of nature turns its point againſt the intereſt of Gods honour; we ſhall fall off from him according to the change we find in our own humors: And can that be valued as a ſetting up the rule of God, which muſt be depos'd upon the mutable intereſt of an inconſtant mind? Eſau had no regard to God in delaying the execution of his reſolution to ſhorten his Brothers days; though he was awed by the reverence of his Father to delay it; he conſidered perhaps, how juſtly he might lie under the imputation of haſtening crazy Iſaacs death, by depriving him of a beloved Son: But had the old mans head been laid, neither the contrary Command of God, nor the nearneſs of a fraternal Relation could have bound his hands from the act, no more than they did his heart from the reſolution, Gen. 27.41. Eſau hated Jacob becauſe of the bleſſing, wherewith his Father bleſſed him; and Eſau ſaid in his heart, the days of mourning for my Father are at hand, then will I ſlay my Brother.

the

So many Children, that expect at the death of their Parents great Inheritances or Portions, may be obſervant of them, not in regard of the rule fixed by God, but to their own hopes, which they would not fruſtrate by a diſobligement: Whence is it that many men abſtain from groſs ſins, but in love to their reputation? Wickedneſs may be acted privately, which a mans own credit puts a bar to the open commiſſion of. The preſerving his own eſteem may divert him from entring into a brothel houſe, to which he hath ſet his mind before, againſt a known precept of his Creator. As Pharaoh parted with the Iſraelites; ſo do ſome men with their blemiſhing ſins; not out of a ſenſe of Gods rule, but the ſmart of preſent Judgments, or fear of a future wrath: Our ſecurity then, and reputation is ſet up in the place of God.

This alſo may be, and is in renewed men, who have the law written in their hearts, that is, an habitual diſpoſition to an agreement with the law of God; when what is done is with a reſpect to this habitual inclination, without eying the divine precept, which is appointed to be their rule; This alſo is to ſet up a Creature, as renewed ſelf is, inſtead of the Creator, and that Law of his in his word, which ought to be the rule of our actions: Thus it is when men chuſe a moral life, not ſo much out of reſpect to the law of nature, as it is the law of God, but as it is a law become one with their Souls and Conſtitutions: There is more of ſelf in this, than conſideration of God; For if it were the latter, the revealed law of God would upon the ſame reaſon be received as well as his natural law: From this principle of ſelf, morality comes by ſome to be advanced above Evangelical dictates.

2. As they are agreeable to ſinful ſelf. Not that the commands of God are ſuited to bolſter up the corruptions of men, no more than the law can be ſaid to excite or revive ſin. * But it is like a ſcandal taken, not given; an occaſion taken by the tumultuouſneſs of our depraved nature. The Phariſees were devout in long Prayers, not from a ſenſe of duty, or a care of Gods honour; but to ſatisfie their ambition, and rake together fuel for their covetouſneſs; * that they might have the greater eſteem and richer offerings, to free by their Prayers the Souls of deceaſed perſons from Purgatory; an opinion that ſome think the Jewiſh Synagogue had then entertain'd, * ſince ſome of their Doctors have defended ſuch a notion. Men may obſerve ſome Precepts of God to have a better conveniency to break others. Jehu was ordered to cut off the houſe of Ahab: The ſervice he undertook was in it ſelf acceptable, but corrupt nature miſacted that which holineſs and righteouſneſs Commanded; God appointed it to magnifie his Juſtice, and check the Idolatry that had been ſupported by that family: Jehu acted it to ſatisfie his revenge and ambition; he did it to fulfil his luſt, not the will of God who enjoyn'd him: Jehu applauds it as zeal, and God abhors it as Murder, and therefore would avenge the blood of Jezreel on the houſe of Jehu, Hoſ. 1.4. Such kind of ſervices are not paid to God for his own ſake, but to our ſelves for our luſts ſake.

* Rom. 7. 8, 9.

* Matth. 23. 14. You devour Widdows Houſes, and for a pretence make long Prayers.

* Gerrard in loc.

4. This is evident in neglecting to take Gods direction upon emergent occaſions This follows the Text, [none did ſeek God]. When we conſult not with him, but truſt more to our own Will and Counſel, we make our ſelves our own Governours and Lords, independent upon him: As though we could be our own Counſellors, and manage our Concerns without his leave and aſſiſtance; as though our works were in our own hands and not in the hands of God, * that we can by our own ſtrength and ſagacity direct them to a ſucceſsful end without him. If we muſt acquaint our ſelves with God before we decree a thing; * then to decree a thing without acquainting God with it, is to prefer our purblind wiſdom before the infinite Wiſdom of God; to reſolve without conſulting God, is to depoſe God, and deifie ſelf, our own wit and ſtrength. We would rather like Lot follow our own humor and ſtay in Sodom, than obſerve the Angels order to go out of it.

* Eccleſ. 9. 1.

* Job. 22. 28.

5. As we account the actions of others to be good or evil, as they ſuit with or ſpurn againſt our fancies and humours. Vertue is a crime, and vice a vertue, as it is contrary or concurrent with our humours: Little Reaſon have many men to blame the actions of others, but becauſe they are not agreeable, to what they affect and deſire: We would have all men take directions from us, and move according to our beck: Hence that common Speech in the World; ſuch an one is an honeſt friend, why? becauſe he is of their humour, and lackies according to their Wills: Thus we make ſelf the meaſure and ſquare of good and evil in the reſt of mankind, and judge of it by our own fancies, and not by the will of God, the proper rule of Judgment.

Well then let us Conſider,

Is not this very common, are we not naturally more willing to diſpleaſe God than diſpleaſe our ſelves, when it comes to a point that we muſt do one or other? Is not our own Counſel of more value with us than Conformity to the will of the Creator? Do not our Judgments often run Counter to the Judgment of God? Have his Laws a greater reſpect from us, than our own humours. Do we ſcruple the ſtaining his honour when it comes in competition with our own? Are not the Lives of moſt men a pleaſing themſelves, without a repentance that ever they diſpleaſed God? Is not this to undeifie God, to deifie our ſelves, and diſown the propriety he hath in us by the right of Creation and Beneficence? VVe order our own ways by our own humours, as though we were the Authors of our own being, and had given our ſelves life and underſtanding. This is to deſtroy the order that God hath placed between our VVills and his own, and a lifting up of the foot above the head; 'tis the deformity of the Creature: The honor of every rational Creature conſiſts in the ſervice of the firſt cauſe of his being; as the welfare of every Creature conſiſts in the orders and proportionable motion of its members, according to the Law of its Creation.

He that moves and acts according to a law of his own, offers a manifeſt wrong to God, the higheſt wiſdom and chiefeſt good; diſturbs the order of the VVorld; nulls the deſign of the righteouſneſs and holineſs of God: The Law of God is the rule of that order he would have obſerved in the VVorld: He that makes another law his rule, thruſts out the order of the Creator, and eſtabliſhes the diſorder of the Creature.

But this will yet be more evident in the fourth thing.

4. Man would make himſelf the rule of God, and give Laws to his Creator. VVe are willing God ſhould be our benefactor, but not our ruler; we are content to admire his excellency and pay him a VVorſhip, provided he will walk by our rule.

* [This commits a riot upon his nature. To think him to be what we our ſelves would have him and wiſh him to be, Pſal. 50. 21. VVe would amplifie his Mercy and contract his Juſtice: VVe would have his power enlarg'd to ſupply our wants, and ſtraightned when it goes about to revenge our crimes: VVe would have him wiſe to defeat our enemies, but not to diſappoint our unworthy projects: We would have him all eye to regard our indigence, and blind, not to diſcern our guilt: We would have him true to his promiſes, regardleſs of his precepts, and falſe to his threatnings. We would new mint the nature of God according to our models, and ſhape a God according to our fancies, as he made us at firſt according to his own Image:] Inſtead of obeying him, we would have him obey us: Inſtead of owning and admiring miring his perfections, we would have him ſtrip himſelf of his infinite excellency, and cloth himſelf with a nature agreeable to our own. This is not only to ſet up ſelf as the Law of God, but to make our own Imaginations the model of the nature of God.]

* Decay of Chriſtian piety p. 166. ſomewhat changed.

Corrupted man takes a pleaſure to accuſe or ſuſpect the actions of God: We would not have him act conveniently to his nature; but act what doth gratifie us, and abſtain from what diſtaſts us. Man is never well, but when he is impeaching one or other perfection of Gods Nature, and undermining his Glory; as if all his Attributes muſt ſtand Indicted at the bar of our purblind Reaſon: This Weed ſhoots up in the exerciſe of Grace: Peter intended the refuſal of our Saviours waſhing his feet, as an act of humility, but Chriſt underſtands it to be a preſcribing a law to himſelf, a correcting his love, John 13. 8, 9.

This is evidenc'd,

1. In the ſtrivings againſt his Law. How many men imply by their Lives, that they would have God depos'd from his Government, and ſome unrighteous being ſtep into his Throne; as if God had or ſhould change his Laws of Holineſs into Laws of Licentiouſneſs; as if he ſhould abrogate his old Eternal precepts and enact contrary ones in their ſtead? What is the Language of ſuch practices, but that they would be Gods Law-givers and not his Subjects? that he ſhould deal with them according to their own wills, and not according to his righteouſneſs? that they could make a more holy, wiſe and righteous Law than the Law of God? that their imaginations, and not Gods righteouſneſs, ſhould be the rule of his doing good to them? Jer. 9. 31. They have forſaken my Law and walked after the imaginations of their own heart.

When an act is known to be a ſin, and the Law that forbids it acknowledg'd to be the Law of God, and after this we perſiſt in that which is contrary to it, we tax his wiſdom as if he did not underſtand, what was convenient for us, we would teach God knowledge *; 'tis an implicite wiſh that God had laid aſide the holineſs of his nature and framed a Law to pleaſure our luſts. When God calls for weeping and mourning and girding with ſackcloath upon approaching Judgments, then the corrupt heart is for joy and gladneſs, eating of Fleſh and drinking of Wine, becauſe to morrow they ſhould die *: As if God had miſtaken himſelf when he ordered them ſo much ſorrow, when their lives were ſo near an end; and had loſt his underſtanding when he order-ed ſuch a precept: Diſobedience is therefore called contention, Rom. 2. 8. Contentious and obey not the truth: Contention againſt God, whoſe truth it is that they diſobey; a diſpute with him, which hath more of wiſdom in it ſelf and conveniency for them, his truth or their imaginations. The more the love, goodneſs and holineſs of God appears in any command, the more are we naturally averſe from it, and caſt an imputation on him, as if he were fooliſh, unjuſt, cruel, and that we could have adviſed and directed him better. The goodneſs of God is eminent to us in appointing a day for his own worſhip, wherein we might converſe with him and he with us, and our ſouls be refreſht with Spiritual Communications from him; and we rather uſe it for the eaſe of our bodies, than the advancement of our Souls; as if God were miſtaken and injured his Creature, when he urg'd the Spiritual part of duty. Every diſobedience to the Law is an implicite giving Law to him, and a charge againſt him that he might have provided better for his Creature.

* Job. 21. 22.

* Iſa. 22. 12; 13.

2. In diſapproving the methods of Gods Government of the world. If the Counſels of Heaven roul not about according to their Schemes, inſtead of adoring the unſearchable depths of his judgments, they call him to the bar, and accuſe him, becauſe they are not fitted to their narrow Veſſels; as if a Nut-ſhell could contain an Ocean. As corrupt reaſon eſteems the higheſt truths, fooliſhneſs; ſo it counts the moſt righteous ways, unequal: Thus we commence a ſuit againſt God, as though he had not acted righteouſly and wiſely, but muſt give an account of his proceedings at our tribunal. This is to make our ſelves Gods ſuperiors, and preſume to inſtruct him better in the government of the world; As though God hinder'd himſelf and the world, in not making us of his Privy Council, and not ordering his affairs according to the contrivances of our dim underſtandings.

Is not this manifeſt in our immoderate complaints of Gods dealings with his Church, as though there were a coldneſs in Gods affections to his Church, and a glowing heat towards it only in us? Hence are thoſe importunate deſires for things which are not eſtabliſhed by any promiſe, as though we would over-rule and over-perſwade God to comply with our humour. We have an ambition to be Gods Tutors and direct him in his Counſels: Who hath been his Counſellor, ſaith the Apoſtle? * Who ought not to be his Counſellor, ſaith corrupt nature? Men will find fault with God in what he ſuffers to be done according to their own minds, when they feel the bitter fruit of it. When Cain had kill'd his Brother, and his Conſcience rackt him, how ſawcily and diſcontentedly doth he anſwer God, Gen. 4. 9. Am I my Brothers keeper? Since thou doſt own thy ſelf the Rector of the world, thou ſhouldſt have preſerved his perſon from my fury; ſince thou doſt accept his Sacrifice before my Offering, preſervation was due as well as acceptance. If this temper be found on earth, no wonder it is lodged in hell. That deplorable perſon under the ſenſible ſtroke of Gods Soveraign juſtice, would oppoſe his Nay to Gods will, Luke 16. 30. (And he ſaid, Nay, Father Abraham, but if one went to them from the dead, they will repent:) He would preſume to preſcribe more effectual means than Moſes and the Prophets, to inform men of the danger they incurr'd by their ſenſuality: David was diſpleas'd, it's ſaid, 2 Sam. 6. 8, when the Lord had made a breach upon Uzzah; not with Uzzah, who was the object of his pity, but with God who was the inflicter of that puniſhment.

* Rom. 11. 34.

When any of our friends have been ſtruck with a Rod againſt our Sentiments and wiſhes, have not our hearts been apt to ſwell in complaints againſt God, as though he diſregarded the goodneſs of ſuch a perſon, did not ſee with our eyes, and meaſure him by our eſteem of him? As if he ſhould have ask'd our Counſel, before he had reſolved, and managed himſelf according to our Will, rather than his own. If he be patient to the wicked, we are apt to tax his holineſs, and accuſe him as an enemy to his own Law. If he inflict ſeverity upon the righteous, we are ready to ſuſpect his goodneſs, and charge him to be an enemy to his affectionate Creature. If he ſpare the Nimrods of the World, we are ready to ask where is the God of Judgment? * If he afflict the Pillars of the Earth, we are ready to queſtion where is the God of Mercy? 'Tis impoſſible, ſince the depraved nature of man, and the various intereſts and paſſions in the world, that infinite power and wiſdom can act righteouſly for the good of the Univerſe, but he will ſhake ſome corrupt intereſt or other upon the earth; ſo various are the inclinations of men, and ſuch a Weather-cock Judgment hath every Man in himſelf, that the divine method he applauds this day, upon a change of his intereſt he will cavil at the next: 'Tis impoſſible for the juſt orders of God to pleaſe the ſame perſon many weeks, ſcarce many minutes together: God muſt ceaſe to be God or to be holy, if he ſhould manage the concerns of the world according to the fancies of men.

* Mal. 2. 17.

How unreaſonable is it thus to impoſe Laws upon God? Muſt God revoke his own orders? Govern according to the dictates of his Creature? Muſt God, who hath only power and wiſdom to ſway the Scepter, become the obedient Subject of every mans humour, and manage every thing to ſerve the deſign of a ſimple Creature? This is not to be God, but to ſet the Creature in his Throne: Though this be not formally done, yet that it is interpretatively and practically done, is every hours experience.

3. In impatience in our particular concerns. 'Tis ordinary with man to charge God in his complaints in the time of affliction. Therefore 'tis the commendation the Holy Ghoſt gives to Job, Job 1. 22. That in all this, that is, in thoſe many waves that roll'd over him, he did not charge God fooliſhly, he never ſpake nor thought any thing unworthy of the Majeſty and righteouſneſs of God: Yet afterwards we find him warping; he nicknames the affliction to be Gods oppreſſion of him, and no act of his goodneſs, Job 10. 3. Is it good for thee, that thou ſhouldſt oppreſs? He ſeems to charge God with injuſtice, for puniſhing him when he was not wicked, for which he appeals to God; thou knoweſt that I am not wicked, ver. 7. and that God acted not like a Creator, ver. 8.

If our projects are diſappointed, what fretfulneſs againſt Gods management are our hearts rackt with? How do uncomely paſſions bubble up in us, interpretatively at leaſt wiſhing that the arms of his power had been bound, and the eye of his omniſcience been hoodwinkt, that we might have been left to our own liberty and deſigns? And this oftentimes when we have more reaſon to bleſs him, than repine at him: The Israelites murmured more against God in the Wilderness, with Manna in their mouths, than they did at Pharoah in the Brickilns, with their Garlike and Onyons between their Teeth. Tho we repine at Instruments in our afflictions, yet God counts it a reflection upon himself: The Israelites speaking against Moses, was in Gods interpretation a Rebellion against himself. * And Rebellion is always a desire of imposing Laws and Conditions upon those against whom the Rebellion is raised, The sottish dealings of the Vine-dressers in Franconia with the Statue of St. Urban, the Protector of the Vines, upon his own day, is an Emblem of our dealing with God: If it be a clear day and portend a prosperous Vintage, they honour the Statue and drink healths to it; if it be a rainy day, and presage a scantiness, they daub it with durt in indignation. We cast out our mire and durt against God when he acts cross to our wishes, and flatter him when the wind of his Providence joyns it self to the tide of our interest.

Iſra-

* Numb. 16. 41. compar'd with 17, 10.

Men set a high price upon themselves, and are angry God values them not at the same rate; as if their Judgment concerning themselves, were more piercing than his. This is to disannul Gods Judgment, and condemn him, and count our selves righteous; as 'tis Job 40. 8. This is the Epidemical disease of human nature; they think they deserve Caresses instead of Rods, and upon crosses are more ready to tear out the heart of God, than reflect humbly upon their own hearts. When we accuse God, we applaud our selves, and make our selves his superiors, intimating that we have acted more righteously to him than he to us, which is the highest manner of imposing Laws upon him; as that Emperor accused the Justice of God for snatching him out of the World too soon. * What an high piece of Practical Atheism is this, to desire that that infinite wisdom should be guided by our folly, and asperse the righteousness of God rather than blemish our own? Instead of silently submitting to his Will and adoring his Wisdom, we declaim against him, as an unwise and unjust governour: We would invert his order, make him the Steward and our selves the Proprietors of what we are and have: We deny our selves to be sinners and our mercies to be forfeited.

* Cælum suspiciens vitam, &c. Vita Titi, cap. 10.

4. 'Tis evidenced, in envying the gifts and prosperities of others. Envy hath a deep tincture of practical Atheism, and is a cause of Atheism. * We are unwilling to leave God to be the Proprietor and do what he will with his own, and as a Creator to do what he pleases with his Creatures: We assume a liberty to direct God what Portions, when and how he should bestow upon his Creatures: We would not let him chuse his own favourites, and pitch upon his own instruments for his Glory: As if God should have askt Counsel of us how he should dispose of his benefits. We are unwilling to leave to his wisdom the management of his own Judgments to the wicked, and the dispensation of his own love to our selves. This temper is natural: 'Tis as ancient as the first age of the world: Adam envyed God a felicity by himself, and would not spare a Tree that he had reserved as a mark of his Soveraignty: The Passion that God had given Cain to employ against his sin, he turns against his Creator: He was wroth with God * and with Abel; but envy was at the root, because his Brothers Sacrifice was accepted and his refused. How could he envy his accepted person, without reflecting upon the accepter of his offering? Good men have not been free from it. Job questions the goodness of God, that he should shine upon the Counsel of the wicked, Job 10. 3. Jonah had too much of self in fearing to be counted a false Prophet, when he came with absolute denunciations of wrath. * And when he could not bring a volley of destroying Judgments upon the Ninivites, he would shoot his fury against his Master, envying those poor people the benefit, and God the honour of his mercy: And this after he had been sent into the Whales belly to learn humiliation; which tho he exercised there, yet those two great branches of self-pride and envy were not lopt off from him in the belly of Hell. And God was fain to take pains with him, and by a gourd, scarce makes him ashamed of his peevishness. Envy is not like to cease, till all Atheism be Cashiered, and that is in Heaven.

* Because wicked men flourish in the world. Sollicitor ni esse putat Deos.

* Gen. 4. 5.

* Jonah 4. 2.

This sin is an imitation of the Devil, whose first sin upon Earth was Envy, as his first sin in Heaven was Pride. 'Tis a wishing that to our selves which the Devil asserted as his right, to give the Kingdoms of the World to whom he pleased: * 'Tis an anger with God, because he hath not given us a Patent for Government. It utters the the ſame Language in diſparagement of God, as Abſolom did in reflection on his Father, If I were King in Iſrael, Juſtice ſhould be better managed: If I were Lord of the world, there ſhould be more Wiſdom to diſcern the merits of men, and more righteouſneſs in diſtributing to them their ſeveral portions. Thus we impoſe Laws upon God, and would have the righteouſneſs of his Will ſubmit to the corruptions of ours, and have him lower himſelf to gratifie our minds, rather than fulfil his own: We charge the Author of thoſe gifts with injuſtice, that he hath not dealt equally; or with ignorance, that he hath miſtook his mark. In the ſame breath that we cenſure him by our peeviſhneſs, we would Guide him by our Wills.

* Luke 4. 6.

This is an unreaſonable part of Atheiſm. If all were in the ſame ſtate and condition, the order of the world would be impaired: Is God bound to have a care of
* Job 18. 4. thee, and neglect all the world beſides? Shall the Earth be forſaken for thee? * Joſeph had reaſon to be diſpleaſed with his Brothers, if they had muttered, becauſe he gave Benjamin a double portion, and the reſt a ſingle. It was unfit that they, who had deſerved no gift at all, ſhould preſcribe him rules how to diſpenſe his own doles; much more unworthy it is to deal ſo with God; yet this is too rife.

5. It is evidenced, in corrupt matter or ends of Prayer and Praiſe. When we are importunate for thoſe things, that we know not whether the righteouſneſs, holineſs, and wiſdom of God can grant, becauſe he hath not diſcovered his will in any promiſe to beſtow them; we would then impoſe ſuch conditions on God, which he never obliged himſelf to grant; when we pray for things not ſo much to glorifie God, which ought to be the end of Prayer, as to gratifie our ſelves. We acknowledge indeed by the act of petitioning, that there is a God; but we would have him un-God himſelf to be at our beck, and debaſe himſelf to ſerve our turns. When we deſire thoſe things, which are repugnant to thoſe attributes, whereby he doth manage the Government of the world? VVhen by ſome ſuperficial ſervices we think we have gained indulgence to ſins: VVhich ſeems to be thought of the Strumpet in her paying her Vows, to wallow more freely in the mire of her ſenſual pleaſures; * I have peace offerings with me, this day I have paid my vows, I have made my peace with God, and have entertainment for thee: Or when men deſire God to bleſs them in the Commiſſion of ſome ſin. As when Balak and Balaam offered Sacrifices, that they might proſper in the Curſing of the Iſraelites, Numb. 25. 1. &c.
* Pro. 7. 14.

So for a Man to pray to God to ſave him while he neglects the means of Salvation appointed by God: Or to renew him when he ſlights the VVord, the only Inſtrument to that purpoſe: This is to impoſe Laws upon God, contrary to the declared VVill and Wiſdom of God, and to deſire him to ſlight his own inſtitutions, VVhen we come into the preſence of God with luſts reeking in our hearts, and leap from ſin to duty, we would impoſe the Law of our corruption on the holineſs of God. VVhile we pray the Will of God may be done, ſelf-love wiſhes its own will may be performed, as tho God ſhould ſerve our humors, when we will not obey his precepts. And when we make vows under any affliction, what is it often but a ſecret contrivance to bend and flatter him to our conditions? VVe will ſerve him if he will reſtore us; we think thereby to compound the buſineſs with him and bring him down to our terms.

6. 'Tis evidenced; In poſitive and bold interpretations of the Judgments of God in the World. To interpret the Judgments of God to the diſadvantage of the ſufferer, unleſs it be an unuſual Judgment, and have a remarkable hand of God in it, and the ſin be rendred plainly legible in the affliction, is a preſumption of this nature. VVhen men will Judge the Galileans, whoſe blood Pilate mingled with the Sacrifices, greater ſinners than others, and themſelves righteous, becauſe no drops of it were daſht upon them. Or when Shimei, being of the Houſe of Saul, ſhall Judge according to his own intereſt and deſires Davids flight upon Abſolons rebellion to be a puniſhment for invading the rights of Sauls Family, and depriving him of the ſucceſſion in the Kingdom, * as if he had been of Gods Privy Council when he decreed ſuch acts of Juſtice in the world.
* 2 Sam. 16. 5.

Thus we would faſten our own VVills as a Law or Motive upon God, and interpret his acts according to the Motions of ſelf. Is it not too ordinary when God ſends an affliction upon thoſe that bear ill will to us, to Judge it to be a righting of our cauſe, to be a fruit of Gods concern for us in revenging our wrongs, as if we had heard the ſecrets of God, or as Eliphaz ſaith, had turned over the records of Heaven, Job 15. 8. This is a judgment according to ſelf-love, not a divine rule; and impoſeth Laws upon Heaven, implying a ſecret wiſh, that God would take care only of them, make our concerns his own; not in ways of kindneſs and juſtice, but according to our fancies: And this is common in the prophane World in thoſe curſes they ſo readily ſpit out upon any affront; as if God were bound to draw his Arrows and ſhoot them into the heart of all their offenders at their beck and pleaſure.

our

7. It is evidenc'd, In mixing rules for the Worſhip of God, with thoſe which have been ordered by him. Since men are moſt prone to live by ſenſe, 'tis no wonder that a ſenſible worſhip, which affects their outward ſenſe, with ſome kind of amazement, is dear to them, and ſpiritual Worſhip, moſt loathſome.

Pompous rites have been the great Engine wherewith the Devil hath deceived the Souls of men, and wrought them to a nauſeating the ſimplicity of divine Worſhip, as unworthy the Majeſty and excellency of God. * Thus the Jews would not underſtand the glory of the ſecond Temple in the preſence of the Meſſiah, becauſe it had not the pompous grandeur of that of Solomons erecting. * 2 Cor. 11. 3.

Hence in all Ages men have been forward to diſfigure Gods models, and dreſs up a brat of their own; as though God had been defective in providing for his own honour in his inſtitutions without the aſſiſtance of his Creature. This hath always been in the World: The old World had their imaginations, and the new World hath continued them. The Iſraelites in the midſt of miracles, and under the memory of a famous deliverance would erect a Calf. The Phariſees, that ſate in Moſes Chair, would coyn new Traditions and enjoyn them to be as currant as the law of God. * Papiſts will be blending the Chriſtian appointments with Pagan Ceremonies, to pleaſe the carnal fancies of the common people. Altars have been multiplied, under the knowledge of the Law of God. * Intereſt is made the ballance of the conveniency of Gods injunctions. Jeroboam fitted a worſhip to politick ends, and poſted up Calves to prevent his ſubjects revolting from his Scepter, which might be occaſioned by their reſort to Hieruſalem, and converſe with the body of the people from whom they were ſeparated. * Men will be putting in their own dictates with Gods laws, and are unwilling he ſhould be the ſole Governour of the World without their Counſel: They will not ſuffer him to be Lord of that which is purely and ſolely his concern. How often hath the practice of the Primitive Church, the cuſtom wherein we are bred, the Sentiments of our Anceſtors been owned as a more authentick rule in matters of Worſhip, than the mind of God delivered in his word? 'Tis natural by Creation to Worſhip God; and it is as natural by corruption for man to Worſhip him in a humane way, and not in a divine. Is not this to impoſe Laws upon God? To eſteem our ſelves wiſer than he? To think him negligent of his own ſervice, and that our feeble brains can find out ways to accommodate his honour, better than himſelf hath done? Thus do men for the moſt part equal their own imaginations to Gods oracles: As Solomon built a high place to Moloch and Chemoch, upon the Mount of Olives, to face on the Eaſt part Hieruſalem and the Temple: * This is not only to impoſe Laws on God, but alſo to make ſelf the Standard of them. * Mat. 13. 6. * Hoſ. 8. 12. * 1 Kings 12. 27. * 1 Kings 11. 7.

8. 'Tis evidenc'd, in fitting interpretations of Scripture to their own minds and humors. Like the Lacedemonians, that dreſt the Images of their Gods according to the faſhion of their own Country: We would wring Scripture to ſerve our own deſigns; and Judge the Law of God by the law of ſin; and make the Serpentine ſeed in us to be the interpreter of Divine Oracles. This is like Belſhazar; to drink healths out of the ſacred Veſſels. As God is the Author of his Law and Word, ſo he is the beſt interpreter of it; the Scripture having an impreſs of divine Wiſdom, Holineſs and goodneſs, muſt be regarded according to that impreſs, with a ſubmiſſion and meekneſs of Spirit and Reverence of God in it. But when in our enquiries into the word, we enquire not of God, but conſult fleſh and blood, the temper of the times wherein we live, or the ſatisfaction of a party we ſide withal, and impoſe gloſſes upon it according to our own fancies; it is to put Laws upon God and make ſelf the rule of him, He that interprets the law to bolſter up ſome eager appetite againſt the Will of the law-giver, aſcribes to himſelf as great an authority as he that enacted it.

9. In

9. In falling off from God after ſome fair compliances, when his Will grateth upon us and croſſeth ours. They will walk with him as far as he pleaſeth them, and leave him upon the firſt diſtaſt, as tho God muſt obſerve their humors more than they his Will. Amos muſt be ſuſpended from Prophecying, becauſe the Land could not bear his words, and his diſcourſes condemned their unworthy practices againſt God. * The Young man came not to receive directions from our Saviour, but expected a Confirmation of his own rules, rather than an impoſition of new. * He rather cares for Commendations than Inſtructions, and upon the diſappointment turns his back; He was ſad, that Chriſt would not ſuffer him to be rich and a Chriſtian together, and leaves him becauſe his Command was not ſuitable to the Law of his Covetouſneſs. Some truths that are at a further diſtance from us, we can hear gladly. But when the Conſcience begins to ſmart under others, if God will not obſerve our Wills, we will with Herod be a Law to our ſelves. *

* Amos 7. 10. &c.

* Mark 10. 17, 22.

* Mark 6. 20, 27.

More inſtances might be obſerved.

Ingratitude is a ſetting up ſelf, and an impoſing Laws on God. 'Tis as much as to ſay God did no more than he was obliged to do; as if the Mercies we have, were an Act of Duty in God, and not of bounty. Inſatiable deſires after wealth. Hence are thoſe ſpeeches, Jam. 4. 13. We will go into ſuch a City and buy and ſell, &c. to get gain. As tho they had the Command of God, and God muſt Lacquey after their Wills. When our hearts are not contented with any ſupply of our wants, but are craving an overplus for our luſt: When we are unſatisfied in the midſt of plenty, and ſtill like the Grave, cry give, give.

Incorrigibleneſs under affliction, &c.

Secondly, 2. The ſecond main thing. As Man would be a Law to himſelf; So he would be his own End and Happineſs in oppoſition to God.

Here four things ſhall be diſcourſed on.

1. Man would make himſelf his own End and Happineſs.
2. He would make any thing his End and Happineſs rather than God.
3. He would make himſelf the End of all Creatures.
4. He would make himſelf the End of God.

Firſt, 1. Man would make himſelf his own End and Happineſs. As God ought to be eſteem'd the firſt cauſe, in point of our dependance on him, ſo he ought to be our laſt end, in point of our enjoyment of him. When we therefore truſt in our ſelves, we refuſe him as the firſt cauſe; and when we act for our ſelves and expect a bleſſedneſs from our ſelves, we refuſe him as the Chiefeſt good, and laſt End, which is an undeniable piece of Atheiſm. For man is a Creature of a higher rank than others in the world; and was not made as Animals, Plants, and other works of the Divine power, materially to glorifie God; but a rational Creature, intentionally to Honour God by obedience to his Rule, dependance on his goodneſs and zeal for his glory. 'Tis therefore as much a ſlighting of God, for man, a Creature, to ſet himſelf up as his own End, as to regard himſelf as his own Law.

For the diſcovery of this, obſerve that there is a three-fold ſelf-love.

1. Natural, which is common to us by the Law of nature with other Creatures, Inanimate, as well as Animate; and ſo cloſely twiſted with the nature of every Creature, that it cannot be diſſolved, but with the diſſolution of nature it ſelf. It conſiſted not with the wiſdom and goodneſs of God to Create an unnatural nature, or to Command any thing unnatural: Nor doth he; for when he Commands us to Sacrifice our Selves, and deareſt lives for himſelf, 'tis not without a promiſe of a more noble ſtate and being, in exchange for what we loſe. This ſelf-love is not only commendable, but neceſſary, as a Rule to meaſure that duty we owe to our Neighbour, whom we cannot love as our ſelves, if we do not firſt love our ſelves: God having planted this ſelf-love in our nature, makes this natural principle the meaſure of our affection to all Mankind of the ſame blood with our ſelves.

2. Carnal ſelf-love, when a man loves himſelf above God, in oppoſition to God, with a contempt of God; when our thoughts, affections, deſigns, Center only in our own fleſhly intereſt; and rifle God of his honour, to make a preſent of it to our ſelves: Thus the natural ſelf-love, in it ſelf good, becomes Criminal by the exceſs, when it would be ſuperior and not ſubordinate to God.

3. A

3. A Gracious self-love : When we love our selves for higher ends than the nature of a Creature, as a Creature, dictates, Viz.. in subserviency to the Glory of God. This is a reduction of the revolted Creature, to his true and happy order. A Christian is therefore said to be Created in Christ to good works. * As all Creatures were Created, not only for themselves, but for the honour of God; so the grace of the new Creation carries a Man to answer this end, and to order all his operations to the Honour of God, and his well pleasing. * Eph. 1. 10.

The first is from nature, the second from sin, the third from Grace. The first is implanted by Creation, the second the fruit of Corruption, and the third is by the powerful operation of Grace.

This Carnal self-love is set up in the stead of God as our last end; like the Sea, which all the little and great streams of our actions run to, and rest in.

And this is,

1. Natural. It sticks as close to us as our Souls; it is as natural as sin; the foundation of all the evil in the world: As self-abhorrency is the first stone that is laid in Conversion: So an inordinate self-love was the first inlet to all iniquity: As grace is a rising from self to Center in God; so is sin a shrinking from God., into the mire of a Carnal selfishness: Since every Creature is neerest to it self and next to God, it cannot fall from God, but must immediatly sink into self. * And therefore all sins are well said to be branches, or modifications of this fundamental passion. What is wrath, but a defence and strengthning self, against the attempts of some real or imaginary evil? Whence springs envy, but from a self-love, grieved at its own wants in the midst of anothers enjoyment, able to supply it? What is impatience, but a regret, that self is not provided for at the rate of our wish, and that it hath met with a shock against supposed merit? What is pride, but a sense of self-worth, a desire to have self of a higher Elevation than others? What is drunkenness, but a seeking a satisfaction for sensual self in the spoils of reason? No sin is committed as sin, but as it pretends a self-satisfaction. Sin indeed may well be term'd a mans self, because it is, since the loss of original righteousness, the form that overspreads every part of our Souls. The understanding assents to nothing false, but under the Notion of true, and the Will embraceth nothing evil but under the Notion of good; but the rule whereby we measure the truth and goodness of proposed objects, is not the unerring word, but the inclinations of self, the gratifying of which is the aim of our whole lives. * More, Dial. 2. § 17. pa. 274.

Sin and self are all one. What is called a living to sin in one place, * is called a living to self in another: * That they that live should not live unto themselves. And upon this account it is that both the Hebrew word, חטא and the Greek word, ἁμαρτάνω, used in Scripture to express sin, properly signifie to miss the mark, and swerve from that white to which all our actions should be directed, viz. the glory of God. When we fell to loving our selves, we fell from loving God: And therefore when the Psalmist saith, Psal. 14. 2. There were none that sought God, viz. as the last end; he presently adds, they are all gone aside, viz. from their true mark, and therefore become filthy. * Rom. 6. * 1 Cor. 5. 15.

2. Since 'tis natural, 'Tis also universal. * The not seeking God is as universal as our ignorance of him. No Man in a state of nature, but hath it predominant; no renewed Man on this side Heaven, but hath it partially: The one hath it flourishing, the other hath it strugling. If to aim at the glory of God as the chief end, and not to live to our selves, be the greatest mark of the restauration of the Divine Image, * and a conformity to Christ, who glorified not himself, * but the Father: * then every man wallowing in the mire of Corrupt nature, pays a homage to self, as a renewed Man is byast by the honour of God. * Psal. 14. 1. * 1 Cor. 5. 15. * Heb. 1. 5. * Joh. 17. 4.

The Holy-Ghost excepts none from this Crime, Phil. 2. 21. All seek their own. 'Tis rare for them to look above or beyond themselves: Whatsoever may be the immediate subject of their thoughts and enquiries, yet the utmost end and stage, is their profit, honour or pleasure: Whatever it be, that immediatly possesses the Mind and Will, self sits like a Queen, and sways the Scepter, and orders things at that rate, that God is Excluded, and can find no room in all his thoughts, Psa. 10. 4. The wicked through the pride of his Countenance will not seek after God, God is not in all his thoughts. The whole little World of Man is ſo overflowed with a Deluge of ſelf, that the Dove, the Glory of the Creator, can find no place where to ſet its Foot; and if ever it gain the favour of Admittance, 'tis to diſguiſe and be a Vaſſal to ſome carnal project; as the Glory of God was a Maſk for the murdering his Servants.

'Tis from the Power of this principle, that the difficulty of Converſion ariſeth. As there is no greater pleaſure to a believing Soul, than the giving it ſelf up to God; and no ſtronger deſire in him, than to have a fixed and unchangeable Will to ſerve the deſigns of his Honour: So there is no greater torment to a wicked Man, than to part with his carnal Ends, and lay down the Dagon of ſelf at the feet of the Ark. Self-Love, and Self-Opinion in the Phariſees, way-layd all the entertainment of Truth, John 5. 44. They ſought Honour one of another, and not the Honour which comes from God. 'Tis of ſo large an Extent, and ſo inſinuating Nature, that it winds it ſelf into the exerciſe of moral Virtues, mixeth with our Charity, Matt. 6. 2. and finds nouriſhment in the Aſhes of Martyrdom, 1 Cor. 13. 3.

This making our ſelves our End, will appear in a few things.

1. In frequent ſelf applauſes, and inward overweening Reflections. Nothing more ordinary in the Natures of Men, than a dotage on their own Perfections, Acquiſitions, or actions in the World: Moſt think of themſelves above what they ought to think, Rom. 12. 3, 4. Few think of themſelves ſo meanly as they ought to think. This ſticks as cloſe to us as our Skin. And as Humility is the Beauty of Grace, this is the filthieſt Soyl of Nature: Our thoughts run more delightfully upon the track of our own Perfections, than the excellency of God. And when we find any thing of a ſeeming worth, that may make us glitter in the eyes of the World; how cheerfully do we graſp and embrace our ſelves? When the groſſer prophaneſſes of Men have been diſcarded, and the Flouds of them damm'd up; the Head of Corruption, whence they ſprang, will ſwell the higher within, in ſelf-applauding ſpeculations of their own Reformation, without acknowledgements of their own weakneſſes, and deſires of Divine Aſſiſtance to make a further Progreſs. I thank God I am not like this Publican. * A ſelf-reflection, with a contempt rather than compaſſion to his Neighbor, is frequent in every Phariſee. The vapors of ſelf-affections, in our clouded underſtandings, like thoſe in the Air in miſty mornings, alter the appearance of things, and make them look bigger than they are. This is thought by ſome to be the Sin of the fallen Angels, who reflecting upon their own natural Excellency ſuperior to other Creatures, would find a Bleſſedneſs in their own Nature, as God did in his; and make themſelves the laſt end of their actions. 'Tis from this Principle we are naturally ſo ready to compare our ſelves, rather with thoſe that are below us, than with thoſe that are above us; and often think thoſe that are above us, inferior to us, and ſecretly glory that we are become none of the meaneſt and loweſt in natural or moral Excellencies.

* Luk. 18. 11.

How far were the gracious Pen-men of the Scripture from this, who when poſſeſſed and directed by the Spirit of God, and filled with a Senſe of him; inſtead of applauding themſelves, publiſh upon Record their own faults to all the Eyes of the World? And if Peter, as ſome think, dictated the Goſpel which Mark wrote as his Amanuenſis; 'tis obſervable, that his Crime in denying his Maſter, is aggravated in that Goſpel in ſome Circumſtances, and leſs ſpoken of his Repentance, than in the other Evangeliſts: When he thought thereon, he wept. * But in the other, He went out and wept bitterly. *

* Mark 14. 72.
* Matt. 26. 37.
* Luke 22. 62.

This is one part of Atheiſm and Self-Idolatry, to magnifie our ſelves with the Forgetfulneſs, and to the injury of our Creator.

2. In aſcribing the glory of what we do or have, to our ſelves, to our own Wiſdom, Power, Vertue, &c. How ſtaunting is Nebuchadnezzar, at the Proſpect of Babylon, which he had exalted to be the Head of ſo great an Empire, Dan. 4. 30. Is not this great Babylon that I have built? For, &c. He ſtruts upon the Battlements of his Palace, as if there were no God but himſelf in the World, while his eye could not but ſee the Heavens above him to be none of his own framing; attributing his Acquiſitions to his own Arm, and referring them to his own Honour, for his own delight; not for the Honour of God, as a Creature ought; nor for the advantage of his Subjects, as the Duty of a Prince: He regards Babylon as his

Heaven

Heaven, and himself as his Idol, as if he were all, and God nothing. An Example of this we have in the present Age. But it is often observed, that God vindicates his own Honour, brings the most heroical men to contempt and unfortunate ends, as a punishment of their Pride, as he did here, Dan. 4. 31. While the word was in the Kings Mouth, there fell a Voice from Heaven, &c. * This was Herods Crime, to suffer others to do it: He had discovered his Eloquence actively, and made himself his own end passively, in approving the flatteries of the people; and offered not with one hand to God the glory, he received from his people with the other. * Samosatenus is reported to put down the Hymns which were sung for the glory of God and Christ, and caused Songs to be sung in the Temple for his own Honour.

* Sanderſons Sermons.

* Acts 12. 22, 23.

When any thing succeeds well, we are ready to attribute it to our own Prudence, and Industry: If we meet with a Cross, we fret against the Stars and Fortune, and second Causes, and sometimes against God; as they curse God as well as their King, Esa. 8. 21. not acknowledging any defect in themselves. The Psalmist by his Repetition of Not unto us, not unto us, but to thy Name give Glory, Psal. 115. 1. implies the naturality of this temper, and the difficulty to cleanse our hearts from those Self-reflections. If it be Angelical to refuse an undue Glory stollen from Gods Throne, Revela. 22. 8, 9. 'tis Diabolical to accept and cherish it. To seek our own Glory is not Glory, Pro. 25. 27. 'Tis vile, and the dishonour of a Creature, who by the Law of his Creation is referred to another end. So much as we Sacrifice to our own credit, to the dexterity of our hands, or the sagacity of our wit, we detract from God.

3. In desires to have self-pleasing Doctrines. When we cannot endure to hear any thing that crosses the Flesh; though the wise man tells us, 'tis better to hear the Rebuke of the Wise, than the Song of Fools, Eccles. 7. 5. If Hanani the Seer reprove King Asa for not relying on the Lord; his passion shall be armed for self against the Prophet, and arrest him a Prisoner, 2 Chron. 16. 10. If Micaiah declare to Ahab the Evil that shall befall him, Amon the Governour shall receive Orders to clap him up in a Dungeon. Fire doth not sooner seize upon combustible matter, than Fury will be kindled, if self be but pincht. This interest of lustful self barr'd the heart of Herodias against the entertainment of the Truth, and caused her savagely to dip her hands in the blood of the Baptist, to make him a Sacrifice to that inward Idol. *

* Mark 6. 18, 19, 28.

4. In being highly concerned for Injuries done to our selves, and little or not at all concerned for Injuries done to God. How will the blood rise in us, when our Honour and Reputation is invaded, and scarce reflect upon the Dishonour God suffers in our sight and hearing, Violent Passions will transform us into Bonaarges in the one Case, and our unconcernedness render us Gallios in the other. We shall extenuate that which concerns God, and aggravate that which concerns our selves. Nothing but the Death of Jonathan, a first born and a generous Son, will satisfie his Father Saul, when the Authority of his Edict was broken by his tasting of Hony; though he had recompensed his Crime committed in Ignorance, by the purchase of a Gallant Victory. But when the Authority of God was violated in saving the Amalekites Cattle, against the Command of a greater Soveraign than himself; he can daub the business, and excuse it with a Design of Sacrificing. He was not so earnest in hindring the people from the breach of Gods Command, as he was in vindicating the Honour of his own: * He could hardly admit of an excuse to salve his own Honour; but in the Concerns of Gods Honour, pretend Piety, to cloak his Avarice.

* 1Sam. 15. 21.

And it is often seen, when the violation of Gods Authority, and the stain of our own Reputation are coupled together; we are more troubled for what disgraces us, than for what dishonours God: When Saul had thus transgrest, he is desirous that Samuel would turn again to preserve his own honour before the Elders, rather than grieved that he had broken the Command of God, v. 30.

5. In trusting in our selves. When we consult with our own Wit and Wisdom, more than inquire of God, and ask leave of him: As the Assyrian, Isa. 10. 13. By the Strength of my hands I have done it, and by Wisdom, for I am prudent. When we attempt things in the strength of our own heads and parts, and trust in our own Industry, without application to God, for direction, Blessing and success, we affect the priviledge of the Deity, and make Gods of our selves. The same language in reality with Ajax in Sophocles: Others think to overcome with the assistance of the Gods, but I hope to gain Honour without them. Dependence and Truſt is an act due from the Creature only to God. Hence God aggravates the crime of the Jews in truſting in Egypt, Iſa. 31. 3. the Egyptians are men and not Gods. Confidence in our ſelves is a defection from God, Jer. 17. 5. And when we depart from and caſt off God to depend upon our ſelves, which is but an arm of fleſh, we chuſe the arm of fleſh for our God; We rob God of that confidence, we ought to place in him, and that adoration which is due to him, and build it upon another foundation: Not that we are to neglect the reaſon and parts God hath given us, or ſpend more time in Prayer than in conſulting about our own affairs; but to mix our own intentions in buſineſs, with Ejaculations to Heaven, and take God along with us in every motion: But certainly it is an Idolizing of ſelf, when we are more diligent in our attendance on our own wit, then fervent in our recourſes to God.

6. The power of ſinful ſelf, above the efficacy of the notion of God, is evident in our workings for carnal ſelf againſt the light of our own Conſciences. When men of ſublime reaſon, and clear natural Wiſdom, are voluntary ſlaves to their own luſts, row againſt the ſtream of their own Conſciences, ſerve carnal ſelf with a diſgraceful and diſturbing drudgery, making it their God, Sacrificing natural ſelf, all Sentiments of virtue, and the quiet of their lives, to the pleaſure, honour, and ſatisfaction of carnal ſelf: This is a proſtituting God in his Deputy Conſcience, to carnal affections, when their eyes are ſhut againſt the inlightnings of it, and their ears deaf to its voice, but open to the leaſt breath and whiſper of ſelf: A debt that the Creature owes Supreamly to God.

Much more might be ſaid, but let us ſee what Atheiſm lurks in this, and how it intrencheth upon God.

1. 'Tis a uſurping God's prerogative. 'Tis Gods prerogative to be his own end, and act for his own glory; becauſe there is nothing Superior to him in Excellency and Goodneſs to act for: He had not his Being from any thing without himſelf, whereby he ſhould be obliged to act for any thing but himſelf. To make our ſelves then our laſt End, is to corrival God in his being, the Supreme Good, and Bleſſedneſs to himſelf: As if we were our own Principle, the Author of our own Being, and were not obliged to a higher Power than our ſelves, for what we are and have. To direct the Lines of all our Motions to our ſelves, is to imply that they firſt iſſued only from our ſelves. When we are Rivals to God in his chief end, we own or deſire to be Rivals to him in the principle of his being: This is to ſet our ſelves in the place of God. All things have ſomething without them, and above them as their end: All inferior Creatures act for ſome Superior order in the rank of Creation; the leſſer animals are deſign'd for the greater, and all for man: Man therefore for ſomething nobler than himſelf. To make our ſelves therefore our own end, is to deny any Superior, to whom we are to direct our actions. God alone being the Supreme being, can be his own ultimate end: For if there were any thing higher and better than God, the purity and righteouſneſs of his own nature would cauſe him to act for and toward that as his chiefeſt mark: This is the higheſt Sacriledge, to alienate the proper good and rights of God, and employ them for our own uſe; to ſteal from him his own honour, and put it into our own Cabinets; like thoſe birds that raviſht the Sacrifice from the Altar and carried it to their own neſts *: When we love only our ſelves, and act for no other end but our ſelves, we inveſt our ſelves with the Dominion which is the right of God, and take the Crown from his head: For as the Crown belongs to the King; ſo to love his own Will, to Will by his own Will and for himſelf, is the property of God; becauſe he hath no other Will, no other End above him to be the rule and ſcope of his actions.

* Sabunde tit. 140.

When therefore we are by ſelf-love transformed wholly into our ſelves, we make our ſelves our own foundation, without God and againſt God; when we mind our own glory and praiſe, we would have a Royal State equal with God, who Created all things for himſelf. * What can man do more for God than he naturally doth for himſelf, ſince he doth all thoſe things for himſelf which he ſhould do for God? We own our ſelves to be our own Creators and Benefactors, and fling off all Sentiments of gratitude to him.

* Pro. 16. 4.

2. It is a vilifying of God. When we make our ſelves our End, 'tis plain language that God is not our happineſs: We poſt-pone God to our ſelves, as if he were not an object so excellent and fit for our love as our selves are: (for it is irrational to make that our end, which is not God, and not the chiefest good.) 'Tis to deny him to be better than we, to make him not to be so good as our selves, and so fit to be our chiefest good as our selves are; that he hath not deserved any such acknowledgment at our hands by all that he hath done for us: We assert our selves his superiors by such kind of acting, tho we are infinitely more inferior to God than any Creature can be to us. Man cannot dishonour God more than by referring that to his own glory, which God made for his own praise, upon account whereof he only hath a right to glory and praise and none else. He thus changeth the glory of the incorruptible God into a Corruptible Image; * a perishing fame and reputation, which extends but little beyond the limits of his own habitation; or if it doth, survives but a few years, and perishes at last with the age wherein he lived. * Rom. 1. 23.

not

3. 'Tis as much as in us lies a destroying of God. By this temper we destroy that God that made us, because we destroy his intention and his honour. God cannot outlive his Will and his glory: Because he cannot have any other Rule but his own Will, or any other end but his own honour. The setting up self as our end, puts a nullity upon the true Deity; by paying to our selves that respect and honour which is due to God, we make the true God as no God. Whosoever makes himself a King of his Princes Rights and Territories, manifests an intent to throw him out of his Government: To chuse our selves as our end is to undeifie God, since to be the last end of a rational Creature is a right inseparable from the nature of the Deity; and therefore not to set God, but self always before us is to acknowledge no being but our selves to be God.

Secondly, 2. The second thing, Man would make any thing his End and happiness rather than God. An end is so necessary in all our actions, that he deserves not the name of a rational Creature, that proposeth not one to himself. This is the distinction between rational Creatures and others; they act with a formal intention, whereas other Creatures are directed to their end by a natural instinct, and moved by nature to what the others should be moved by reason: When a Man therefore Acts for that end, which was not intended him by the Law of his Creation, nor is suited to the noble faculties of his Soul; He acts contrary to God, overturns his order, and merits no better a title than that of an Atheist.

A man may be said two ways to make a thing his last end and chief good.

1. Formally. When he actually Judges this or that thing to be his chiefest good and orders all things to it. So man doth not formally Judge sin to be good, or any object which is the incentive of sin to be his last end: This cannot be while he hath the exercise of his rational faculties.

2. Vertually and implicitely. When he loves any thing against the Command of God, and prefers in the stream of his actions the enjoyment of that, before the fruition of God; and lays out more strength and expends more time in the gaining that, than answering the true end of his Creation: When he acts so as if something below God could make him happy without God, or that God could not make him happy without the addition of something else. Thus the Glutton makes a God of his dainties; the ambitious Man of his Honour; the incontinent Man of his lust; and the Covetous Man of his wealth; and Consequently esteems them as his chiefest good, and the most noble end, to which he directs his thoughts: Thus he vilifies and lessens the true God, which can make him happy, in a multitude of false Gods, that can only render him miserable. He that loves pleasure more than God, says in his heart there is no God but his pleasure. He that loves his belly more than God, says in his heart there is no God but his belly: Their happiness is not accounted to lie in that God that made the World, but in the pleasure or profit they make their God.

In this, tho a Created object be the immediate and subordinate term to which we turn, yet principally and ultimately, the affection to it terminates in self: nothing is naturally entertained by us, but as it affects our sense or mingles with some promise of advantage to us.

This is seen,

1. In the fewer thoughts we have of God than of any thing else. Did we apprehend God to be our chiefest good and highest end, should we grudge him the pains of a few days thoughts upon him? Men in their Travels are frequently thinking thinking upon their intended ſtage: But our thoughts run upon new acquiſitions to increaſe our wealth, rear up our Families, Revenge our injuries and ſupport our reputation: Trifles poſſeſs us; but God is not in all our thoughts, * ſeldom the ſole object of them. We have durable thoughts of tranſitory things, and flitting thoughts of a durable and Eternal good. The Covenant of grace engageth the whole heart to God, and bars any thing elſe from ingroſſing it: But what ſtrangers are God and the Souls of moſt men? Though we have the knowledge of him by Creation, yet he is for the moſt part an unknown God in the Relations wherein he ſtands to us, becauſe a God undelighted in: Hence it is, as one obſerves, * that becauſe we obſerve not the ways of Gods Wiſdom, conceive not of him in his vaſt perfections, nor are ſtricken with an admiration of his goodneſs, that we have fewer good ſacred Poems, than of any other kind. The wits of men hang the wing when they come to exerciſe their reaſons and fancies about God. Parts and ſtrength are given us, as well as Corn and Wine to the Iſraelites for the ſervice of God; but thoſe are Conſecrated to ſome Curſed Baal. * Like Venus in the Poet, we forſake Heaven to follow ſome Adonis.

* Pſa. 10. 4.

* Jackſon vol. book 1. cap. 14. pa. 48.

* Hoſ. 2. 8.

2. In the greedy purſuit of the World. * When we purſue worldly wealth or worldly reputation with more vehemency than the riches of grace, or the favour of God. When we have a fooliſh imagination, that our happineſs conſiſts in them, we prefer Earth before Heaven, broken Ciſterns which can hold no water, before an ever Springing Fountain of glory and bliſs. And, as though there were a defect in God, cannot be content with him as our portion, without an addition of ſomething inferior to him: When we make it our hopes and ſay to the wedge, thou art my Confidence; and rejoyce more becauſe it is great, and becauſe our hand hath gotten much, than in the priviledge of Communion with God and the promiſe of an everlaſting fruition of him. * This is ſo groſs, that Job joyns it with the Idolatry of the Sun and Moon, which he purgeth himſelf of, ver. 26. And the Apoſtle when he mentions Covetouſneſs or Covetous men, paſſes it not over without the title of Idolatry to the vice, and Idolater to the perſon: * In that it is a preferring Clay and Dirt as an end more deſirable than the original of all goodneſs, in regard of affection and dependence.

* Quod quiſq; præ cæteris petit, ſummum judicat bonum. Boet. lib. 3. pa. 24.

* Job 31. 24. 25.

* Col. 3. 5. Eph. 5. 5.

3. In a ſtrong addictedneſs to ſenſual pleaſures, Phil. 3. 19. Who make their belly their God; ſubjecting the truths of God to the maintenance of their Luxury. In debaſing the higher faculties to project for the ſatisfaction of the ſenſitive appetite as their chief happineſs, whereby many render themſelves no better than a rout of ſublimated brutes among men, and groſs Atheiſts to God. When mens thoughts run alſo upon inventing new methods to ſatisfie their beſtial appetite, forſaking the pleaſures which are to be had in God, which are the delights of Angels for the ſatisfaction of brutes: This is an open and unqueſtionable refuſal of God for our end, when our reſt is in them, as if they were the chief good, and not God.

4. In paying a ſervice upon any ſucceſs in the World, to Inſtruments more than to God the Soveraign Author. When they Sacrifice to their Net, and burn incenſe to their Drag. * Not that the Aſſyrian did offer a Sacrifice to his arms, but aſcrib'd to them what was due only to God, and appropriated the Victory to his forces and arms. The Prophet alludes to thoſe that worſhipped their Warlike Inſtruments, whereby they had attained great Victories; and thoſe Artificers who worſhipped the Tools by which they had purchaſed great wealth, in the ſtead of God; preferring them as the cauſes of their happineſs before God who governs the World.

* Hab. 1. 16.

And are not our affections, upon the receiving of good things, more cloſely fixed to the Inſtruments of conveyance, than to the chief benefactor, from whoſe Coffers they are taken? Do we not more delight in them and hug them, with a greater indearedneſs; as if all our happineſs depended on them, and God were no more than a bare ſpectator? Juſt as if when a Man were warmed by a beam, he ſhould adore that and not admire the Sun, that darts it out upon him.

5. In paying a reſpect to man more than God. When in a publick attendance on his ſervice, we will not laugh, or be gariſh, becauſe Men ſee us: But our hearts ſhall be in a ridiculous poſture, playing with feathers and trifling fancies, tho God ſee us;

as

as tho our happineſs conſiſted in the pleaſing of Men, and our miſery in a reſpect to God: There is no fool that ſaith in his heart there is no God; but he ſets up ſomething in his heart as a God.

This is,

1. A debaſing of God. 1. In ſetting up a Creature. It ſpeaks God leſs amiable than the Creature, ſhort of thoſe perfections, which ſome ſilly ſordid thing which hath engroſſed their affections, is poſſeſſed with: As if the cauſe of all being could be tranſcended by his Creature, and a vile luſt could equal, yea, ſurmount the Lovelineſs of God: 'Tis to ſay to God as the rich to the poor, James 2. 3. Stand thou there, or ſit here under my foot-ſtool: 'Tis to ſink him below the mire of the world, to order him to come down from his glorious throne, and take his place below a contemptible Creature, which in regard of its infinite diſtance is not to be compared with him. It ſtrips God of the love that is due to him by the right of his nature and the greatneſs of his Dignity; and of the truſt that is due to him, as the firſt cauſe and the chiefeſt good, as tho he were too feeble and mean to be our bleſſedneſs. This is intolerable, to make that which is Gods foot-ſtool, the Earth to climb up into his throne; to ſet that in our heart which God hath made even below our ſelves and put under our feet; to make that which we trample upon, to diſpoſe of the right God hath to our hearts; * 'Tis worſe than if a Queen ſhould fall in love with the little Image of the Prince in the Palace, and ſlight the beauty of his perſon; and as if people ſhould adore the foot-ſteps of a King in the dirt, and turn their backs upon his preſence.

* Noremberg de adorat. p. 30.

2. It doth more debaſe him to ſet up a ſin, a luſt, a carnal affection, as our chief end. To ſteal away the honour due to God, and appropriate it to that which is no work of his hands, to that which is loathſome in his ſight, hath diſturbed his reſt, and wrung out his juſt breath to kindle a Hell for its Eternal lodging, a God diſhonouring and a Soul Murdering luſt, is worſe than to prefer Barabbas before Chriſt. The baſer the thing, the worſe is the injury to him with whom we would aſſociate it. If it were ſome generous principle, a thing uſeful to the world, that we place in an equality with, or a ſuperiority above him; tho it were a vile uſage, yet it were not altogether ſo Criminal: But to gratifie ſome unworthy appetite, with the diſpleaſure of the Creator, ſomething below the rational nature of Man, much more infinitely below the excellent Majeſty of God, is a more unworthy uſage of him. To advance one of the moſt vertuous Nobles in a Kingdom as a mark of our ſervice and ſubjection, is not ſo diſhonourable to a deſpiſed Prince, as to take a Scabby Begger, , or a rotten Carcaſs to place in his throne. Creeping things, abominable beaſts, the Egyptian Idols, Cats and Crocodiles, were greater abominations, and a greater deſpite done to God, then the Image of Jealouſy at the gate of the Altar. *

* Ezek. 8. 5, 6, 10.

And let not any excuſe themſelves, that 'tis but one luſt or one Creature which is preferred as the end: Is not he an Idolater that worſhips the Sun or Moon, one Idol, as well as he that worſhips the whole hoſt of Heaven?

The inordinancy of the heart to one luſt may imply a ſtronger contempt of him, than if a Legion of luſts did poſſeſs the heart. It argues a greater diſeſteem, when he ſhall be ſlighted for a ſingle vanity. The depth of Eſaws prophaneneſs in contemning his birth-right, and God in it, is aggravated by his ſelling it for one morſel of meat, * and that none of the daintieſt, none of the coſtlieſt, a meſs of pottage; implying, had he parted with it at a greater rate, it had been more tolerable, and his prophaneſs more excuſable. And it is reckoned as a high aggravation of the Corruption of the Iſraelite Judges, Amos 2. 6. That they ſold the poor for a pair of ſhoos; That is, that they would betray the cauſe of the poor for a bribe of no greater value, than might purchaſe them a pair of ſhoos. To place any one thing as our chief end, tho never ſo light, doth not excuſe: He that will not ſtick to break with God for a trifle, a ſmall pleaſure, will leap the hedge upon a greater temptation.

* Heb. 12. 16.

Nay, and if wealth, riches, friends, and the beſt thing in the world, our own lives be preferred before God, as our chief happineſs and end but one moment, 'tis an infinite wrong; becauſe the infinite goodneſs and excellency of God is denyed: As tho the Creature or luſt we love, or our own life which we prefer in that ſhort moment before him, had a goodneſs in it ſelf, ſuperior to, and more deſirable than

the

the bleſſedneſs in God: And though it ſhould be but one Minute, and a Man in all the periods of his days both before and after that Failure, ſhould actually and intentionally prefer God before all other things; yet he doth him an infinite wrong, becauſe God in every moment is infinitely good, and abſolutely deſirable, and can never ceaſe to be good, and cannot have the leaſt ſhadow or change in him and his Perfections.

2. 'Tis a denying of God.

Job 31. 26, 27, 28. If I beheld the Sun when it ſhined, and the Moon walking in its Brightneſs, and my Heart hath been ſecretly enticed, or my Mouth hath kiſt my Hand; this alſo were Iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judge; for I ſhould have denyed the Lord above. This Denial of God is not only the act of an open Idolater, but the conſequent of a ſecret confidence, and immoderate joy in worldly Goods: This Denial of God is to be referred to ver. 24. 25. When a Man ſaith to Gold, thou art my confidence, and rejoyces becauſe his wealth is great; he denies that God which is Superior to all thoſe, and the proper Object of Truſt: Both Idolatries are coupled here together; that which hath Wealth, and that which hath thoſe glorious Creatures in Heaven for its Object: And though ſome may think it a light Sin, yet the Crime being of deeper guilt, a denial of God, deſerves a ſeverer puniſhment, and falls under the Sentence of the juſt Judge of all the Earth; under that Notion; which Job intimates in thoſe words; this alſo were an Iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judge.

The kiſſing the hand, to the Sun, Moon or any Idol, was an external Sign of Religious Worſhip among thoſe and other Nations: This is far [illegible]an an inward hearty confidence, and an affectionate Truſt: If the motion of the hand be, much more is the affection of the heart to an excrementitious Creature, or a brutiſh Pleaſure is a Denial of God, and a kind of an Abjuring of him, ſince the Supream Affection of the Soul is undoubtedly and ſolely the Right of the Soveraign Creator, and not to be given in common to others, as the outward geſture may in a way of civil reſpect. Nothing that is an Honour peculiar to God, can be given to a Creature, without a plain excluſion of God to be God; it being a diſowning the rectitude and excellency of his Nature. If God ſhould Command a Creature ſuch a Love, and ſuch a confidence in any thing inferior to him; he would deny himſelf his own glory; He would deny himſelf to be the moſt excellent Being. Can the Romaniſts be free from this, when they call the Croſs Spem unicam, and ſay to the Virgin, In te Domina ſperavi, as Bonaventure, &c.

Good reaſon therefore have Worldlings and Senſualiſts, perſons of immoderate fondneſs to any thing in the world, to reflect upon themſelves; ſince though they own the Being of a God, they are guilty of ſo great diſreſpect to him, that cannot be excuſed from the title of an unworthy Atheiſm: And thoſe that are renewed by the Spirit of God, may here ſee ground of a daily Humiliation for the frequent and too common Excurſions of their Souls in Creature confidences and Affections, whereby they fall under the charge of an act of practical Atheiſm, though they may be free from an habit of it.

3. The third thing is, Man would make himſelf the end of all Creatures. Man would ſit in the Seat of God, and ſet his heart as the heart of God, as the Lord ſaith of Tyrus, Ezek. 28. 2. What is the conſequence of this; but to be eſteemed the chief Good, and end of other Creatures? A thing, that the heart of God cannot but be ſet upon, it being an inſeparable Right of the Deity; who muſt deny himſelf, if he deny this affection of the heart.

Since it is the nature of Man deriv'd from this Root, to deſire to be equal with God; it follows that he deſires no Creature ſhould be equal with him, but ſubſervient to his ends and his glory. He that would make himſelf God, would have the Honour proper to God: He that thinks himſelf worthy of his own ſupream affection, thinks himſelf worthy to be the object of the ſupream affection of others: Whoſoever counts himſelf the Chiefeſt good and laſt End, would have the ſame place in the thoughts of others. Nothing is more natural to Man, than a deſire to have his own Judgment, the Rule and Meaſure of the Judgments and Opinions of the reſt of Mankind. He that ſets himſelf in the Place of the Prince, doth by that act challenge all the Prerogatives and Dues belonging to the Prince; and apprehending himſelf fit to be a King, apprehends himſelf alſo worthy of the Homage and Fealty of the Subjects. He that loves himself chiefly, and all other things and persons for himself, would make himself the end of all Creatures. It hath not been once or twice only in the World, that some vain Princes have assumed to themselves the title of Gods, and caused Divine Adorations to be given to them, and Altars to smoke with Sacrifices for their Honour: What hath been practised by one, is by Nature seminally in all: We would have all pay an Obedience to us, and give to us the Esteem that is due to God.

of

This is evident,

1. In Pride. When we entertain an high Opinion of our selves, and act for our own Reputes, we dispossess God from our own hearts; and while we would have our Fame to be in every mans mouth, and be admired in the hearts of men, we would chase God out of the hearts of others, and deny his Glory a Residence any where else; that our Glory should reside more in their minds than the Glory of God; that their thoughts should be filled with our Atchievements, more than the Works and Excellency of God, with our Image and not with the Divine. Pride would paramount God in the affections of others, and justle God out of their Souls; and by the same reason that man doth thus in the place where he lives, he would do so in the whole world, and press the whole Creation from the Service of their true Lord, to his own Service. Every proud man would be counted by others as he counts himself; the highest, chiefest piece of Goodness; and be adored by others, as much as he adores and admires himself. No proud man in his self-love, and self-admiration, thinks himself in an Error; and if he be worthy of his own admiration, he thinks himself worthy of the highest esteem of others; that they should value him above themselves, and value themselves only for him. What did Nebuchadnezzar intend, by setting up a Golden Image, and commanding all his Subjects to worship it, upon the highest Penalty he could inflict; but that all should aim only at the pleasing his Humor?

2. In using the Creatures contrary to the End God has appointed. God Created the World and all things in it, as steps whereby men might ascend to a Prospect of him, and the acknowledgment of his Glory; and we would use them to dishonour God, and gratifie our selves: He appointed them to supply our necessities, and support our rational delights; and we use them to cherish our sinful lusts. We wring groans from the Creature in diverting them from their true scope, to one of our own fixing, when we use them not in his service, but purely for our own, and turn those things he created for himself to be instruments of Rebellion against him to serve our turns; and hereby endeavour to defeat the ends of God in them, to establish our own ends by them: This is a high dishonour to God, a Sacrilegious undermining of his Glory; * to reduce what God hath made to serve our own glory, and our own pleasure: It perverts the whole Order of the World, and directs it to another end than what God hath constituted; to another intention contrary to the intention of God; and thus Man makes himself a God by his own Authority. As all things were made by God, so they are for God: But while we aspire to the end of the Creation, we deny and envy God the honour of being Creator. We cannot make our selves the chief end of the Creatures against Gods Order, but we imply thereby, that we were their first Principle: For if we lived under a sense of the Creator of them while we enjoy them for our use, we should return the glory to the right Owner.

* Sabunde Tit. 200. p. 352.

This is Diabolical; though the Devil for his first affecting an Authority in Heaven, has been hurled down from the State of an Angel of Light, into that of Darkness, Vileness and Misery, to be the most accursed Creature living; yet he still aspires to mate God, contrary to the knowledge of the impossibility of success in it: Neither the terrors he feels, nor the future torments he doth expect, do a jot abate his Ambition to be Competitor with his Creator. How often hath he since his first sin, arrogated to himself the Honour of a God from the blind world, and attempted to make the Son of God by a particular Worship, count him as the chiefest Good and Benefactor of the World? * Since all Men by Nature are the Devils Children, the Serpents Seed, they have something of this Venom in their Natures, as well as others of his qualities. We see that there may be, and is a prodigious Atheism lurking under the Belief of a God. The Devil knows there is a God, but acts like an Atheist, and so do his Children.

* Matt. 4. 9.

4. Man would make himſelf the End of God. This neceſſarily follows upon the former: Whoſoever makes himſelf his own Law and his own End in the place of God, would make God the Subject in making himſelf the Soveraign: He that ſteps into the Throne of a Prince, ſets the Prince at his Foot-ſtool; and while he aſſumes the Princes Prerogative, demands a Subjection from him. The order of the Creation, has been inverted by the entrance of ſin. * God implanted an affection in Man with a double aſpect, the one to pitch upon God, the other to reſpect our ſelves; but with this proviſo, that our affection to God ſhould be infinite, in regard of the Object and Center in him, as the chiefeſt Happineſs and higheſt End: Our affections to our ſelves ſhould be finite, and refer ultimately to God as the Original of our Being: But Sin hath turned Mans affections wholly to himſelf: Whereas he ſhould love God firſt, and himſelf in order to God; he now loves himſelf firſt, and God in order to himſelf: Love to God is loſt, and love to ſelf hath uſurpt the Throne. As God by Creation put all things under the feet of Man, * reſerving the Heart for himſelf; Man by Corruption hath diſpoſſeſſed God of his Heart, and put him under his own feet. We often intend our ſelves, when we pretend the Honour of God, and make God and Religion a Stale to ſome deſigns we have in hand; our Creator a Tool for our own ends.

* Paſcal Pens. §. 30. p. 294.

* Pſal. 8. 6.

This is evident,

1. In our loving God, becauſe of ſome ſelf-pleaſing benefits diſtributed by him. There is in Men, a kind of natural love to God; but it is but a ſecondary one, becauſe God gives them the good things of this world, ſpreads their Table, fills their Cup, ſtuffs their Coffers, and doth them ſome good turns by unexpected Providences: This is not an affection to God for the unbounded Excellency of his own Nature, but for his beneficence, as he opens his hand for them; an affection to themſelves, and thoſe Creatures, their Gold, their Honour, which their hearts are moſt fixed upon; without a ſtrong Spiritual Inclination that God ſhould be glorified by them in the uſe of thoſe Mercies. 'Tis rather a diſowning of God, than any love to him; becauſe it poſtpones God to thoſe things they love him for. This would appear to be no love, if God ſhould ceaſe to be their Benefactor, and deal with them as a Judge; if he ſhould change his outward ſmiles into afflicting frowns; and not only ſhut his hand, but ſtrip them of what he ſent them. The Motive of their love being expired, the affection raiſed by it, muſt ceaſe for want of fewel to feed it: So that God is beholden to ſordid Creatures, of no value, (but as they are his Creatures) for moſt of the Love the Sons of Men pretend to him. The Devil ſpake truth of moſt men, though not of Job, when he ſaid, Job 1. 10. They love not God for nought; but while he makes a hedge about them and their Families, whileſt he bleſſeth the works of their hands, and increaſeth their honour in the Land. 'Tis like Peter's ſharp reproof of his Maſter, when he ſpake of the ill uſage, even to death, he was to meet with at Hieruſalem; This ſhall not be unto thee: It was as much out of love to himſelf, as zeal for his Maſters Intereſt, knowing his Maſter could not be in ſuch a ſtorm without ſome drops lighting upon himſelf. All the Apoſtacies of men in the world are Witneſſes to this: They fawn whileſt they may have a proſperous profeſſion, but will not bear one chip of the Croſs for the Intereſt of God: They would partake of his bleſſings, but not endure the prick of a Launce for him: As thoſe that admired the Miracles of our Saviour, and ſhrunk at his Sufferings. A time of tryal diſcovers theſe Mercenary Souls to be more Lovers of themſelves than their Maker. This is a pretended love of Friendſhip to God, but a real love to a Luſt, only to gain by God: A good mans temper is contrary: Quench Hell, burn Heaven, ſaid a holy Man, I will love and fear my God.

2. 'Tis evident; in abſtinence from ſome ſins; not becauſe they offend God, but becauſe they are againſt the Intereſt of ſome other beloved Corruption, or a Bar to ſomething men hunt after in the World. When temperance is cheriſhed, not to honour God, but preſerve a crazy Carcaſs: Prodigality forſaken, out of a humor of Avarice: Uncleanneſs forſaken, not out of a hatred of Luſt, but love to their mony: Declining a Denial of the Intereſt and Truth of God, not out of affection to them, but an ambitious Zeal for their own Reputation. There is a kind of Converſion from ſin, when God is not made the Term of it, Jer. 4. 1. If thou wilt return oh Iſrael, return unto me ſaith the Lord. * When we forbear Sin as Dogs do the Meat

* Trap on Gen. pa. 148.

they

they love; they forbear not out of a hatred of the Carrion, but fear of the Cudgel: These are as wicked in their abstaining from sin, as others are in their furious committing it. Nothing of the Honour of God and the End of his appointments is indeed in all this, but the conveniences self gathers from them. Again, many of the motives the generality of the world uses to their Friends and Relations to draw them from Vices, are drawn from self, and used to prop up natural or sinful self in them: Come, reform your self, take other courses, you will smut your Reputation and be despicable; you will destroy your Estate and commence a Beggar; your Family will be undone, and you may rott in a Prison: Not laying close to them the Duty they owe to God, the Dishonour which accrues to him by their unworthy courses, and the ingratitude to the God of their mercies: Not that the other motives are to be laid aside and slighted: Mint and Cummin may be tithed, but the weightier concerns are not to be omitted: But this shews that self is the Byas, not only of men in their own course, but in their Dealings with others: What should be subordinate to the Honour of God, and the Duty we owe to him, is made superior.

3. 'Tis evident, In performing Duties meerly for a selfish interest: Making our selves the end of Religious Actions, paying a Homage to that, while we pretend to render it to God, Zach. 7. 5. Did you at all fast unto me, even unto me? Things ordained by God may fall in with carnal ends affected by our selves; and then Religion is not kept up by any interest of God in the Conscience, but the interest of self in the Heart: We then sanctifie not the Name of God in the Duty, but gratifie our selves: God may be the Object, self is the end; and a Heavenly Object is made subservient to a Carnal design. Hypocrisie passes a Complement on God, and is called Flattery, Psal. 78. 36. They did flatter him with their lips, &c. They gave him a parcel of good words for their own preservation. Flattery in the old Notion among the Heathens, is a Vice more peculiar to serve our own turn, and purvey for the Belly: They knew they could not subsist without God, and therefore gave him a parcel of good words, that he might spare them, and make Provision for them. Israel is an empty Vine, * a Vine say some, with large Branches and few Clusters, but brings forth fruit to himself; while they professed love to God with their lips: It was that God should promote their covetous designs, and preserve their Wealth and Grandeur: * In which respect, an Hypocrite may be well termed a Religious Atheist, an Atheist maskt with Religion. The chief Arguments which prevail with many men to perform some Duties and appear Religious, are the same that Hamor and Shechem used to the people of their City to submit to Circumcision, viz. the ingrossing of more Wealth, Gen. 34. 21, 22. If every Male among us be Circumcised, as they are Circumcised, shall not their Cattel and their Substance, and every Beast of theirs be ours?

* Hos. 10. 1.

* Ezek. 33. 31.

This is seen,

1. In unweildiness to Religious Duties, where self is not concern'd. With what lively thoughts will many approach to God, when a Revenue may be brought in to support their own ends? But when the concerns of God only are in it, the Duty is not the delight, but the Clogg; such feeble Devotions that warm not the Soul, unless there be something of self to give strength and heat to them. Jonah was sick of his work, and run from God, because he thought he should get no honour by his Message; Gods Mercy will discredit his Prophecy. * Thoughts of disadvantage, cut the very sinews of service. You may as well perswade a Merchant to venture all his Estate upon the inconstant Waves without hopes of gain, as prevail with a natural man to be serious in Duty, without expectation of some warm Advantage. What profit should we have if we pray to him? is the natural Question, Job 21. 15. What profit shall I have if I be cleansed from my Sin? Job 35. 3. I shall have more good by my sin than by my service. 'Tis for God that I dance before the Ark, saith David, therefore I will be more vile, 2 Sam. 6. 2. 'Tis for self that I pray saith a natural Man, therefore I will be more warm and quick. Ordinances of God are observed only as a point of interest, and Prayer is often most fervent, when it is least Godly, and most selfish: Carnal Ends and Affections, will pour out lively Expressions. If there be no delight in the means that lead to God, there is no delight in God himself: Because Love is appetitus unionis, a desire of Union; and where the Object is deſireable, the means that brings us to it would be delightful too.

* Jonah 4. 2.

2. In calling upon God only in a time of neceſſity. How officious will men be in affliction, to that God whom they neglect in their Proſperity? When he ſlew them, then they ſought him, and they returned and inquired after God, and they remembred that God was their Rock, Pſal. 78. 34. They remembred him under the Scourge, and forgate him under his Smiles: They viſit the Throne of Grace, knock loud at Heavens Gates, and give God no reſt for their early and importunate Devotions when under diſtreſs: But when their deſires are anſwered, and the Rod removed; they ſtand aloof from him, and reſt upon their own bottom, as Jer. 2. 31. We are Lords, we will come no more unto thee. When we have need of him, he ſhall find us Clients at his Gate; and when we have ſerved our turn, he hears no more of us: Like Noahs Dove ſent out of the Ark, that returned to him when ſhe found no reſt on the Earth, but came not back when ſhe found a footing elſe where. How often do men apply themſelves to God, when they have ſome buſineſs for him to do for them? And then too, they are loath to put it ſolely into his hand, to manage it for his own honour; but they preſume to be his Directors, that he may manage it for their glory. Self ſpurrs men on to the Throne of grace; they deſire to be furniſht with ſome Mercy they want, or to have the Clouds of ſome Judgments which they fear, blown over: This is not affection to God, but to our ſelves: As the Romans worſhipped a Quartane Ague as a Goddeſs, and Timorem & Pallorem, Fear and Paleneſs, as Gods; not out of any affection they had to the Diſeaſe or the Paſſion, but for fear to receive any hurt by them.

Again, when we have gained the Mercy we need, how little do we warm our Souls with the conſideration of that God that gave it, or lay out the Mercy in his ſervice? We are importunate to have him our friend in our neceſſities, and are ungratefully careleſs of him, and his injuries, he ſuffers by us or others: When he hath diſcharged us from the Rock where we ſtuck, we leave him, as having no more need of him, and able to do well enough without him: As if we were petty Gods our ſelves, and only wanted a lift from him at firſt: This is not to glorifie God as God, but as our Servant; not an honouring of God, but a ſelf ſeeking: He would hardly begg at Gods door, if he could pleaſure himſelf without him.

3. In begging his Aſſiſtance to our own Projects. When we lay the Plot of our own Affairs, and then come to God, not for Counſel but Bleſſing; Self only ſhall give us Counſel how to act; but becauſe we believe there is a God that governs the world, we will deſire him to contribute ſucceſs. God is not conſulted with, till the Counſel of ſelf be fixed; then God muſt be the Executor of our Will: Self muſt be the Principal, and God the Inſtrument to hatch what we have contrived. 'Tis worſe when we beg of God to favour ſome ſinful aim, the Pſalmiſt implies this, Pſal. 66. 18. If I regard Iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me. Iniquity regarded as the aim in Prayer, renders the Prayer ſucceſleſs, and the Suppliant an Atheiſt, in debaſing God to back his Luſt by his holy Providence.

The Diſciples had determined Revenge; and becauſe they could not act it without their Maſter, they would have him be their ſecond in their vindictive paſſion, Luke 9. 55. Call for fire from Heaven.

We ſcarce ſeek God, till we have modell'd the whole Contrivance in our own Brains, and reſolved upon the Methods of performance; as though there were not a fullneſs of Wiſdom in God to guide us in our reſolves, as well as Power to breath Succeſs upon them.

4. In impatience upon the refuſal of our deſires. How often do mens Spirits riſe againſt God, when he ſteps not in with the Aſſiſtance they want? If the glory of God ſwayed more with them than their private intereſt, they would let God be Judge of his own glory, and rather magnifie his Wiſdom, than complain of his want of Goodneſs: Selfiſh hearts will charge God with neglect of them, if he be not as quick in their ſupplies as they are in their deſires; like thoſe in Iſa. 58. 3. Wherefore have we faſted ſay they, and thou ſeeſt not; wherefore have we afflicted our Souls and thou takeſt no knowledge? When we aim at Gods glory in our importunities, we ſhall fall down in humble Submiſſions when he denies us: whereas ſelf riſeth up in bold Expoſtulations, as if God were our Servant, and had neglected the ſervice

he

he owed us, not to come at our call. We over-value the satisfactions of self above the honour of God. Besides, if what we desire be a sin, our impatience at a refusal is more intolerable: 'Tis an anger, that God will not lay aside his holiness to serve our corruption.

5. In the actual aims men have in their Duties. In Prayer for temporal things, when we desire Health for our own ease, wealth for our own sensuality, strength for our revenge, Children for the increase of our Family, gifts for our applause, as Simon Magus did the holy-ghost, or; when some of those ends are aimed at: This is to desire God not to serve himself of us, but to be a Servant to our worldly interest, our vain glory, the greatning of our names, &c. In spiritual mercies begged for; When pardon of sin is desired only for our own security from eternal Vengeance; Sanctification desired only to make us fit for everlasting blessedness; Peace of Conscience only that we may lead our lives more comfortably in the world; when we have not actual intentions for the glory of God, or when our thoughts of Gods honour are overtopt by the aims of self advantage: Not but that as God hath prest us to those things by motives drawn from the Blessedness derived to our selves by them, so we may desire them with a respect to our selves; but this respect must be contained within the due banks, in subordination to the glory of God, not above it, nor in an equal ballance with it. * That which is nourishing or medicinal in the first or second degree, is in the fourth or fifth degree meer destructive poyson. Gurnall. Part 3. pag. 337.

Let us consider it seriously; though a duty be heavenly, doth not some base end smut us in it?

[1.] How is it with our Confessions of Sin? Are they not more to procure our Pardon, than to shame our selves before God, or to be freed from the chains that hinder us from bringing him the glory for which we were Created; or more to partake of his benefits, than to honour him in acknowledging the rights of his Justice? Do we not bewail sin as it hath ruined us, not as it opposed the Holiness of God? Do we not shuffle with God, and confess our sin, while we reserve another; as if we would allure God by declaring our dislike of one, to give us liberty to commit Wantonness with another; not to abhor our selves, but to daub with God?

2. Is it any better in our private and Family Worship? Are not such Assemblies frequented by some, where some upon whom they have a dependance may eye them, and have a better opinion of them, and affection to them? If God were the sole end of our hearts; would they not be as glowing under the sole eye of God, as our tongues or carriages are seemingly serious under the eye of man? Are not Family duties performed by some that their voices may be heard, and their reputation supported among Godly Neighbours?

[3.] Is not the Charity of many men tainted with this end self? * as the Pharisees were, while they set the miserable object before them, but not the Lord; bestowing Alms, not so much upon the necessities of the people, as the friendship we owe them for some particular respects: Or casting our bread upon those waters which stream down in the sight of the world, that our Doles may be visible to them and commended by them: Or when we think to oblige God to pardon our transgressions; as if we merited it and Heaven too at his hands, by bestowing a few pence upon indigent persons. And * Matt. 6. 1.

[4.] Is it not the same with the Reproofs of Men? Is not heat and anger carried out with full Sail when our worldly interest is prejudic'd, and becalm'd in the concerns of God? Do not many Masters reprove their Servants with more vehemency for the neglect of their Trade and Business, than the neglect of Divine Duties; and that upon Religious Arguments, pretending the honour of God that they may mind their own interest? But when they are negligent in what they owe to God, no noise is made, they pass without rebuke. Is not this to make God and Religion a Stale to their own ends? 'Tis a part of Atheism, not to regard the injuries done to God, as Tiberius; * Let Gods wrongs be looked, to or cared for by himself.

[5.] Is it not thus in our seeming Zeal for Religion? As Demetrius, and the Craftsmen at Ephesus cried up aloud the greatness of Diana of the Ephesians; not out of any true zeal they had for her, but their gain, which was increased by the con- * Dei injuria Deo cura.

flu-

fluence of her Worſhippers, and the Sale of her own Shrines, Acts 19. 24, 28.

4. In making uſe of the Name of God to countenance our Sin. When we ſet up an opinion that is a Friend to our luſts, and then dig deep into the Scripture to find Crutches to ſupport it, and authorize our practices: When men will thank God for what they have got by unlawful means, Fathering the fruit of their cheating craft, and the ſimplicity of their Chapmen upon God: Crediting their Couſenage by his Name, as men do braſs mony, with a thin plate of ſilver, and the ſtamp and image of the Prince. The Jews urge the Law of God for the crucifying his Son, John 19. 7. We have a Law, and by that Law he is to die: And would make him a Party in their private Revenge. * Thus often when we have faultered in ſome actions, we wipe our mouths, as if we ſought God more than our own intereſt, proſtituting the ſacred Name and Honour of God, either to hatch or defend ſome unworthy luſt againſt his Word.

* Sanderſon's S. Part. 2. p. 158.

Is not all this a high degree of Atheiſm?

1. 'Tis a vilifying God, an abuſe of the higheſt good: Other ſins ſubject the Creature and outward things to them; but acting in Religious ſervices for ſelf, ſubjects not only the higheſt concernments of Mens Souls, but the Creator himſelf to the Creature: Nay, to make God contribute to that which is the pleaſure of the Devil: A greater ſlight, than to caſt the gifts of a Prince to a Herd of naſty Swine. It were more excuſable to ſerve our ſelves of God upon the higher accounts, ſuch that materially conduce to his glory; but it is an intolerable wrong, to make him and his Ordinances Caterers for our own bellies, as they did: * They ſacrificed the נרמת of which the Offerer might eat; not out of any reference to God, but love to their Gluttony; not pleaſe him, but feaſt themſelves. The Belly was truly made the God, when God was ſerved only in order to the Belly: As though the bleſſed God had his Being, and his Ordinances were enjoyned to pleaſure their fooliſh and wanton Appetites: As though the Work of God were only to patronize unrighteous ends, and be as bad as themſelves, and become a Pander to their corrupt affections.

* Hoſ. 8. 13. Vid. Cocc. in locum.

2. Becauſe it is a vilifying of God, It is an undeifying or dethroning God. 'Tis an acting, as if we were the Lords, and God our Vaſſal: A ſetting up thoſe ſecular ends in the place of God, who ought to be our ultimate end in every action; to whom a glory is as due, as his mercy to us is utterly unmerited by us. He that thinks to cheat and put the Fool upon God by his pretences, doth not heartily believe there is ſuch a Being. He could not have the Notion of a God, without that of Omniſcience and Juſtice; an eye to ſee the cheat, and an Arm to puniſh it: The Notion of the one would direct him in the manner of his Services, and the Senſe of the other would ſcare him from the cheriſhing his unworthy ends. He that ſerves God with a ſole reſpect to himſelf, is prepared for any Idolatry; his Religion ſhall warp with the times and his intereſt; he ſhall deny the true God for an Idol, when his worldly intereſt ſhall adviſe him to it; and pay the ſame Reverence to the baſeſt Image, which he pretends now to pay to God: As the Iſraelites were as real for Idolatry under their baſeſt Princes, as they were Pretenders to the true Religion under thoſe that were Pious.

Before I come to the uſe of this, give me leave to evince this practical Atheiſm by two other Conſiderations.

1. Unworthy Imaginations of God.

The fool hath ſaid in his heart there is no God: That is, he is not ſuch a God as you report him to be: This is meant by their being corrupt, in the 2. v. corrupt being taken for playing the Idolaters, Exod. 32. 7. We cannot comprehend God; if we could, we ſhould ceaſe to be finite; and becauſe we cannot comprehend him, we erect ſtrange Images of him in our fancies and affections. And ſince guilt came upon us, becauſe we cannot root out the Notions of God, we would debaſe the Majeſty and Nature of God, that we may have ſome eaſe in our Conſciences, and lie down with ſome comfort in the ſparks of our own kindling.

* Pſal. 10. 4. This is univerſal in men by nature. God is not in all his thoughts: * Not in any of his thoughts according to the excellency of his Nature, and greatneſs of his Majeſty. As the Heathen did not glorify God as God, ſo neither do they conceive of God as God: They are all infected with ſome one or other ill opinion of him, thinking him not ſo holy, powerful, juſt, good as he is, and as the natural force of a human underſtanding might arrive to. We joyn a new Notion of God in our vain fancies, and repreſent him not as he is, but as we would have him to be, fit for our own uſe, and ſuted to our own pleaſure: We ſet that active power of imagination on work, and there comes out a God, (a Calf) whom we own for a Notion of God.

of

Adam caſt him into ſo narrow a mould, as to think that himſelf, who had newly ſprouted up by his Almighty power, was fit to be his Corrival in knowledge, and had vain hopes to graſp as much as infiniteneſs: If he in his firſt declining begun to have ſuch a conceit, 'tis no doubt but we have as bad under a maſs of Corruption. When holy Agur ſpeaks of God, he crys out that he had not the underſtanding of a Man, nor the knowledge of the holy: * He did not think rationally of God as Man might by his ſtrength at his firſt Creation. There are as many Carved Images of God as there are minds of Men, and as monſtrous ſhapes as thoſe Corruptions, into which they would transform him. * Pro. 30. 2, 3

Hence ſprang,

1. Idolatry. Vain Imaginations firſt ſet afloat and kept up this in the world. * Vain Imaginations of the God whoſe glory they changed into the Image of corruptible Man: They had ſet up vain Images of him in their fancy, before they ſet up Idolatrous repreſentations of him in their Temples; The likening him to thoſe Idols of Wood and Stone, and various metals, were the fruit of an Idea Erected in their own minds: This is a mighty debaſing the Divine nature, and rendring him no better, than that baſe and ſtupid matter they make the viſible object of their adoration; equalling him with thoſe baſe Creatures they think worthy to be the repreſentations of him. Yet how far did this Crime ſpread it ſelf in all Corners of the world, not only among the more barbarous and Ignorant, but the more poliſht and Civilized Nations? Judea only, where God had placed the Ark of his preſence, being free from it, in ſome intervals of time only after ſome ſweeping Judgment. And tho they vomited up their Idols under ſome ſharp ſcourge, they licked them up again after the Heavens were cleared over their Heads: The whole Book of Judges makes mention of it: And tho an Evangelical light hath chaſed that Idolatry away from a great part of the World; yet the Principle remaining, Coyns more Spiritual Idols in the heart, which are brought before God in acts of Worſhip. * Rom. 1. 21, 23.

2. Hence all ſuperſtition received its riſe and growth. When we Mint a God according to our own Complexion, like to us in mutable and various paſſions, ſoon angry and ſoon appeaſed, 'tis no wonder that we invent ways of pleaſing him after we have offended him; and think to expiate the ſin of our Souls, by ſome Melancholy devotions and ſelf Chaſtiſements. Superſtition is nothing elſe but an unſcriptural and unrevealed dread of God. * When they imagined him a rigorous, and ſevere Maſter, they caſt about for ways to mitigate him whom they thought ſo hard to be pleaſed: A very mean thought of him, as if a ſlight and pompous Devotion could as eaſily bribe and flatter him out of his rigors, as a few good words or baubling rattles could pleaſe and quiet little Children; And whatſoever pleaſed us, could pleaſe a God infinitely above us. Such narrow conceipts had the Philiſtins, when they thought to ſtill the anger of the God of Iſrael, whom they thought they poſſeſs'd in the Ark, with the preſent of a few Golden mice. * All the Superſtition this day living in the world is built upon this foundation: So natural it is to Man to pull God down to his own Imaginations, rather than raiſe his Imaginations up to God. Hence doth ariſe alſo the diffidence of his mercy, tho they repent; meaſuring God by the contracted Models of their own Spirits; as tho his nature were as difficult to Pardon their offences againſt him, as they are to remit wrongs done to themſelves. * δεισιδαιμονία. * 1 Sam. 6. 3, 4.

3. Hence Springs all Preſumption, the Common diſeaſe of the world. All the wickedneſs in the World, which is nothing elſe but preſuming upon God, riſes from the ill interpretations of the goodneſs of God, breaking out upon them in the works of Creation and Providence: The Corruption of Mans nature engendred by thoſe Notions of goodneſs a monſtrous birth of vain imaginations. Not of themſelves primarily, but of God; whence aroſe all that folly and darkneſs in their minds and converſations, Rom. 1. 20. 21. They glorified him not as God, but according to themſelves, imagined him good that themſelves might be bad; fancyed him ſo indulgent, as to neglect his own honour for their ſenſuality. How doth the unclean perſon repreſent him to his own thoughts, but as a Goat; the Murderer as a Tyger; the ſenſual perſon as a Swine; while they fancy a God indulgent to their Crimes without their repentance? As the Image on the Seal is ſtampt upon the wax, ſo the thoughts of the heart are Printed upon the actions. Gods Patience is apprehended to be an approbation of their Vices, and from the Conſideration of his forbearance, they faſhion a God that they believe will ſmile upon their Crimes: They imagine a God that plays with them; and tho he threatens, doth it only to ſcare, but means not as he ſpeaks: A God they fancy like themſelves, that would do as they would do, not be angry for what they count a light offence, Pſal. 50. 21. Thou thoughteſt I was ſuch a one as thy ſelf: That God and they were exactly alike as two Tallies. * [Our willful miſapprehenſions of God are the cauſe of our misbehaviour in all his worſhip: Our ſlovenly and lazy ſervices tell him to his face what ſlight thoughts and apprehenſions we have of him.]

to

* Gurnal part 2. p. 245. 246.

Compare theſe two together.

Superſtition ariſeth from terrifying miſapprehenſions of God: Preſumption from ſelf pleaſing thoughts: One repreſents him only rigorous, and the other careleſs: One makes us over officious in ſerving him by our own rules; and the other over bold in offending him, according to our humors. The want of a true Notion of Gods Juſtice makes ſome Men ſlight him: And the want of a true apprehenſion of his goodneſs makes others too ſervile in their approaches to him: One makes us careleſs of duties, and the other makes us look on them rather as Phyſick than food; an unſupportable pennance, than a deſirable priviledge. In this Caſe, Hell is the principle of Duty performed to Heaven. The ſuperſtitious Man believes God hath ſcarce mercy to Pardon; the preſumptuous Man believes he hath no ſuch perfection as Juſtice to puniſh. The one makes him inſignificant to what he deſires, kindneſs and goodneſs; the other renders him inſignificant to what he fears, his vindictive Juſtice: What between the Idolater, the ſuperſtitious, the preſumptuous perſon, God ſhould look like no God in the world.

Theſe unworthy imaginations of God are likewiſe,

A vilifying of him: Debaſing the Creator, to be a Creature of their own fancies; putting their own ſtamp upon him; and faſhioning him not according to that beautiful Image he impreſt upon them by Creation; but the defaced Image they inherit by their fall, and which is worſe, the Image of the Devil which ſpread it ſelf over them at their revolt and apoſtacy. Were it poſſible to ſee a Picture of God, according to the fancies of Men, it would be the moſt Monſtrous being, ſuch a God that never was, nor ever can be.

We honour God when we have worthy opinions of him ſutable to his nature; when we conceive of him as a being of unbounded lovelineſs and perfection: We detract from him when we aſcribe to him ſuch qualities as would be a horrible diſgrace to a wiſe and good Man: As injuſtice and Impurity. Thus Men debaſe God when they invert his order, and would Create him according to their Image, as he firſt Created them according to his own: And think him not worthy to be a God, unleſs he fully anſwer the mould they would caſt him into, and be what is unworthy of his nature: Men do not conceive of God as he would have them; but he muſt be what they would have him, one of their own ſhaping.

1. This is worſe than Idolatry. The groſſeſt Idolater commits not a Crime ſo hainous, by changing his glory into the Image of Creeping things and ſenſeleſs Creatures, as the imagining God to be as one of our ſinful ſelves, and likening him to thoſe filthy Images, we erect in our fancies: One makes him an earthly God, like an earthly Creature; the other fancies him an unjuſt and impure God, like a wicked Creature: One ſets up an Image of him in the Earth, which is his footſtool; the other ſets up an Image of him in the heart, which ought to be his throne.

2. 'Tis worſe than abſolute Atheiſm, or a denial of God. Dignius credimus non eſſe, quodcunque non ita fuerit, ut eſſe deberet, was the opinion of Tertullian. * 'Tis more Commendable to think him not to be, than to think him ſuch a one as is inconſiſtent with his nature. Better to deny his Exiſtence, than deny his perfection. No wiſe Man but would rather have his memory rot, than be accounted infamous; and would be more more obliged to him that ſhould deny that ever he had a Being in the world, than to ſay he did indeed live, but he was a Sot, a debaucht Perſon, and a man not to be truſted. When we apprehend God deceitful in his promiſes, unrighteous in his threatnings, unwilling to pardon upon repentance, or reſolved to pardon notwithſtanding impenitency: Theſe are things either unworthy of the Nature of God, or contrary to that Revelation he hath given of himſelf. Better for a man never to have been born, than be for ever miſerable; ſo better to be thought no God, than repreſented impotent or negligent, unjuſt or deceitful; which are more contrary to the Nature of God, than Hell can be to the greateſt Criminal. In this ſenſe perhaps the Apoſtle affirms the Gentiles, Eph. 2. 12. to be ſuch as are without God in the World; as being more Atheiſts in adoring God under ſuch Notions, as they commonly did, than if they had acknowledged no God at all.

* Tertul. cont. Maxim. lib. 1. cap. 2.

2. This is evident by our natural deſire to be diſtant from him, and unwillingneſs to have any acquaintance with him. Sin ſet us firſt at a diſtance from God; and every new act of groſs Sin eſtrangeth us more from him, and indiſpoſeth us more for him: It makes us both afraid and aſhamed to be near him. Senſual men were of this frame that Job diſcourſeth of, Job 21. 7, 8, 9, and 14, and 15. verſes: Where grace reigns, the neerer to God, the more vigorous the motion; The neerer any thing approaches to us, that is the Object of our deſires, the more eagerly do we preſs forward to it: But our blood riſeth at the approaches of any thing to which we have an averſion: We have naturally a loathing of Gods coming to us, or our return to him: We ſeek not after him as our happineſs; and when he offers himſelf, we like it not, but put a diſgrace upon him in chuſing other things before him. God and we are naturally at as great a diſtance, as Light and Darkneſs, Life and death, Heaven and Hell. The ſtronger impreſſion of God any thing hath, the more we fly from it. The glory of God in reflection upon Moſes his face ſcar'd the Iſraelites; they who had deſired God to ſpeak to them by Moſes, when they ſaw a ſignal impreſſion of God upon his Countenance, were afraid to come neer him, as they were before unwilling to come neer to God *: Not that the bleſſed God is in his own Nature a frightful object; but our own guilt renders him ſo to us, and our ſelves indiſpoſed to converſe with him. As the light of the Sun is as irkſome to a diſtemper'd eye, as it is in its own Nature deſirable to a ſound one. The Saints themſelves have had ſo much frailty, that they have cried out, that they were undone, if they had any more than ordinary diſcoveries of God made unto them; as if they wiſhed him more remote from them. Vileneſs cannot endure the ſplendor of Majeſty, nor guilt the glory of a Judge.

* Exod. 34. 30.

We have naturally, (1.) No deſire of rememberance of him, (2.) or converſe with him, (3.) or thorough return to him, (4.) or cloſe imitation of him: As if there were not any ſuch Being as God in the world; or as if we wiſhed there were none at all; ſo feeble and ſpiritleſs are our thoughts of the Being of a God.

(1.) No deſire for the remembrance of him. How delightful are other things in our minds? How burdenſome the Memorials of God, from whom we have our Being? With what pleaſure do we contemplate the Nature of Creatures; even of Flyes and Toads; while our minds tire in the ſearch of him, who hath beſtowed upon us our knowing and meditating Faculties? Though God ſhews himſelf to us in every Creature; in the meaneſt Weed, as well as the higheſt Heavens; and is more apparent in them to our reaſons than themſelves can be to our ſenſe; yet though we ſee them, we will not behold God in them: We will view them to pleaſe our ſenſe, to improve our reaſon in their natural perfections; but paſs by the conſideration of Gods perfections ſo viſibly beaming from them. Thus we play the Beaſts and Atheiſts in the very exerciſe of reaſon, and neglect our Creator to gratifie our ſenſe; as though the pleaſure of that were more deſirable than the knowledge of God: The deſire of our Souls is not towards his Name and the Remembrance of him,* when we ſet not our ſelves in a poſture to feaſt our Souls with deep and ſerious meditations of him; have a thought of him, only by the by and away, as if we were afraid of too intimate acquaintance with him.

* Iſa. 26. 8.

Are not the thoughts of God rather our Invaders, than our Gueſts; ſeldome invited to reſide and take up their home in our hearts? Have we not when they have broke in upon us, bid them depart from us, * and warned them to come no more upon our ground; ſent them packing as ſoon as we could, and were glad when they were gone? And when they have departed, have we not often been afraid they ſhould return again upon us; and therefore lookt about for other inmates, things not good; or if good, infinitely below God, to poſſeſs the room of our hearts before any thoughts of him ſhould appear again? Have we not often been glad of excuſes to ſhake off preſent thoughts of him; and when we have wanted real ones, found out pretences to keep God and our hearts at a diſtance? Is not this a part of Atheiſm to be ſo unwilling to imploy our faculties about the giver of them, to refuſe to exerciſe them in a way of grateful remembrance of him; as though they were none of his gift, but our own acquiſition; as though the God that truly gave them, had no right to them; and he that thinks on us every day in a way of Providence, were not worthy to be thought on by us in a way of ſpecial Remembrance?

* Job 22. 17.

Do not the beſt, that love the remembrance of him, and abhor this natural averſneſs, find, that when they would think of God, many things tempt them and turn them to think elſewhere? Do they not find their apprehenſions too feeble, their motions too dull, and the impreſſions too ſlight? This natural Atheiſm is ſpread over humane nature.

(2.) No deſire of converſe with him. The word remember in the command for keeping holy the Sabbath day, including all the duties of the Day, and the choiceſt of our lives; implies our natural unwillingneſs to them, and forgetfulneſs of them: God's preſſing this Command with more reaſons than the reſt, manifeſts that man hath no heart for Spiritual Duties. No Spiritual duty, which ſets us immediately Face to Face with God; but in the attempts of it, we find naturally a reſiſtance, from ſome powerful Principle; ſo that every one may ſubſcribe to the ſpeech of the Apoſtle, that when we would do good, evil is preſent with us. No reaſon of this can be rendred, but the natural temper of our Souls, and an affecting a diſtance from God under any conſideration: For though our guilt firſt made the breach, yet this averſion to a converſe with him ſteps up without any actual reflections upon our guilt, which may render God terrible to us as an offended Judge: Are we not often alſo in our attendance upon him, more pleaſed with the modes of Worſhip which gratifie our fancy, than to have our Souls inwardly delighted with the Object of Worſhip, Himſelf?

This is a part of our natural Atheiſm. To caſt ſuch duties off by total neglect,
* Job. 15. 4. or in part, by affecting a coldneſs in them; is to caſt off the Fear of the Lord. * Not to call upon God, and not to know him, are one and the ſame thing. Jer. 10. 25. Either we think there is no ſuch Being in the world, or that he is ſo ſlight a one, that he deſerves not the reſpect he calls for; or ſo impotent and poor, that he cannot ſupply what our neceſſities require.

(3.) No deſire of a thorough return to him. The firſt man fled from him after his defection, though he had no refuge to fly to, but the grace of his Creator. Cain went from his preſence, would be a Fugitive from God, rather than a Supplicant to him; when by Faith in, and application of the promiſed Redeemer, he might have eſcaped the wrath to come for his Brothers blood, and mitigated the ſorrows he was juſtly ſentenced to bear in the World. Nothing will ſeparate prodigal Man from commoning with Swine, and make him return to his Father, but an empty Trough: Have we but huſks to feed on, we ſhall never think of a Fathers preſence. It were well if our ſores and indigence would drive us to him; but when our ſtrength is de-
* Hoſ. 7. 10. voured, we will not return to the Lord our God, nor ſeek him for all this. * Not his drawn Sword as a God of Judgment, nor his mighty Power as a Lord, nor his open Arms as the Lord their God, could move them to turn their eyes and their hearts towards him. The more he invites us to partake of his grace, the further we run from him to provoke his wrath: The louder God called them by his Prophets, the
* Hoſ. 11. 2. cloſſer they ſtuck to their Baal. * We turn our backs when he ſtretches out his hand, ſtop our ears when he lifts up his voice: We fly from him when he courts us, and ſhelter our ſelves in any buſh from his merciful hand, that would lay hold upon us; nor will we ſet our faces towards him, till our way be hedged up with thorns, and not a
* Iſ. 2. 6, 7. gap left to creep out any by-way. * Whoſoever is brought to a return, puts the Holy-Ghoſt to the pain of ſtriving; he is not eaſily brought to a ſpiritual ſubjection

to

to God, nor perſwaded to a Surrender at a Summons, but ſweetly over power'd by ſtorm, and victoriouſly drawn into the Arms of God: God ſtands ready, but the heart ſtands off; Grace is full of intreaties, and the Soul full of excuſes: Divine love offers, and Carnal ſelf-love rejects: Nothing ſo pleaſes us, as when we are furtheſt from him; as if any thing were more amiable, any thing more deſirable than himſelf.

(4.) No deſire of, any cloſe imitation of him. When our Saviour was to come as a Refiners fire to purifie the Sons of Levi, the cry is, who ſhall abide the day of his coming? Mal. 3. 2, 3. Since we are alienated from the Life of God, we deſire no more naturally to live the life of God, than a Toad or any other Animal deſires to live the Life of a man: No heart that knows God, but hath a holy ambition to imitate him: No Soul that refuſeth him for a Copy, but is ignorant of his Excellency: Of this temper is all Mankind naturally. Man in Corruption is as loth to be like God in Holineſs; as Adam after his Creation was deſirous to be like God in Knowledge; his Poſterity are like their Father, who ſoon turned his back upon his original Copy.

What can be worſe than this? Can the denial of his Being be a greater injury than this contempt of him; as if he had not goodneſs to deſerve our remembrance, nor amiableneſs fit for our converſe; as if he were not a Lord fit for our ſubjection, nor had a Holineſs that deſerved our imitation?

For the uſe of this. It ſerves,

1. For Information.

1. It gives us occaſion to admire the wonderful patience and mercy of God. How many Millions of practical Atheiſts breath every day in his Air, and live upon his Bounty, who deſerve to be Inhabitants in Hell, rather than Poſſeſſors of the Earth? An infinite Holineſs is offended, an infinite Juſtice is provoked; yet an infinite Patience forbears the Puniſhment, and an infinite Goodneſs relieves our wants: The more we had merited his Juſtice and forfeited his Favour, the more is his affection inhanc'd, which makes his hand ſo liberal to us.

At the firſt invaſion of his rights, he mitigates the terror of the threatning, which was ſet to defend his Law, with the grace of a Promiſe to relieve and recover his rebellious Creature: * Who would have looked for any thing but tearing Thunders, ſweeping Judgments, to raiſe up the foundations of the Apoſtate world? But oh, how great are his Bowels to his aſpiring Competitors? Have we not experimented his Contrivances for our good, though we have refuſed him for our happineſs? Has he not opened his Arms, when we ſpurned with our Feet; held out his alluring mercy, when we have brandiſht againſt him a rebellious ſword? Has he not intreated us while we have invaded him, as if he were unwilling to loſe us, who are ambitious to deſtroy our ſelves? Has he yet denyed us the care of his Providence, while we have denyed him the rights of his Honour, and would appropriate them to our ſelves? Has the Sun forborn ſhining upon us, though we have ſhot our Arrows againſt him? Have not our Beings been ſupported by his Goodneſs, while we have endeavoured to climb up to his Throne; and his mercies continued to charm us, while we have uſed them as weapons to injure him? Our own neceſſities might excite us to own him as our happineſs, but he adds his invitations to the voice of our wants. Has he not promiſed a Kingdom to thoſe that would ſtrip him of his Crown, and proclaimed Pardon upon Repentance to thoſe that would take away his Glory? And hath ſo twiſted together his own end, which is his Honour, and mans true end, which is his Salvation, that a man cannot truly mind himſelf and his own Salvation, but he muſt mind Gods glory; and cannot be intent upon Gods honour, but by the ſame act he promotes himſelf and his own happineſs; So loth is God to give any juſt occaſion of diſſatisfaction to his Creature, as well as diſhonour himſelf. All thoſe wonders of his mercy are inhanc'd by the hainouſneſs of our Atheiſm; a multitude of gracious thoughts from him above the multitude of contempts from us. * What Rebels in actual Arms againſt their Prince aiming at his Life, ever found that favour from him, to have all their neceſſaries richly afforded them, without which they would ſtarve, and without which they would be unable to manage their attempts, as we have received from God? Had not God had riches of goodneſs, forbearance and long ſuffering, and infinite riches too;

* Gen. 3. 15.

* Pſal. 106. 7.

the deſpight the world hath done him in refuſing him as their Rule, Happineſs, and End, would have emptied him long ago. *

* Rom. 2. 4.

2. It brings in a Juſtification of the exerciſe of his Juſtice. If it gives us occaſion loudly to praiſe his Patience; it alſo ſtops our mouths from accuſing any acts of his Vengeance. What can be too ſharp a recompence for the deſpiſing and diſgracing ſo great a Being? The higheſt contempt merits the greateſt anger; and when we will not own him for our happineſs, 'tis equal we ſhould feel the miſery of ſeparation from him. If he that is guilty of Treaſon deſerves to loſe his Life; what puniſhment can be thought great enough for him that is ſo diſingenious as to prefer himſelf before a God ſo infinitely good, and ſo fooliſh as to invade the rights of one infinitely powerful? 'Tis no injuſtice for a Creature, to be for ever left to himſelf, to ſee what advantage he can make of that ſelf he was ſo buſily imployed to ſet up in the place of his Creator. The Soul of Man deſerves an infinite puniſhment for deſpiſing an infinite good: And it is not unequitable, that that ſelf, which Man makes his Rule and Happineſs above God, ſhould become his Torment and Miſery by the Righteouſneſs of that God whom he deſpiſed.

3. Hence ariſeth a neceſſity of a new ſtate and frame of Soul, to alter an Atheiſtical Nature. We forget God: Think of him with reluctancy: Have no reſpect to God in our courſe and acts: This cannot be our original ſtate. God being infinitely good, never let man come out of his hands with this actual unwillingneſs to acknowledge and ſerve him: He never intended to dethrone himſelf for the work of his hands, or that the Creature ſhould have any other end than that of his Creator: As the Apoſtle ſaith in the Caſe of the Galatians Error, Gal. 5. 8. This perſwaſion came not of him that called you; ſo this frame comes not from him that created you: How much therefore do we need a reſtoring Principle in us? Inſtead of ordering our ſelves according to the Will of God, we are deſirous to fulfil the Wills of the Fleſh *: There is a neceſſity of ſome other principle in us to make us fulfil the Will of God, ſince we were created for God, not for the Fleſh.

* Epheſ. 2. 3.

We can no more be voluntarily ſerviceable to God, while our Serpentine nature, and Devilliſh habits remain in us; than we can ſuppoſe the Devil can be willing to glorifie God, while the nature he contracted by his fall abides powerfully in him. Our Nature and Will muſt be changed, that our actions may regard God as our End, that we may delightfully meditate on him, and draw the motives of our obedience from him. Since this Atheiſm is ſeated in Nature, the change muſt be in our Nature: Since our firſt aſpirings to the rights of God, were the fruits of the Serpents breath, which tainted our Nature; there muſt be a removal of this taint, whereby our Natures may be on the ſide of God againſt Satan, as they were before on the ſide of Satan againſt God. There muſt be a ſupernatural Principle before we can live a ſupernatural Life, i. e. live to God, ſince we are naturally alienated from the Life of God: The averſion of our Natures from God, is as ſtrong as our inclinations to evil; we are diſguſted with one, and preſſed with the other; we have no will, no heart, to come to God in any ſervice. This nature muſt be a broken in pieces and new moulded, before we can make God our Rule and our End: While mens deeds are evil, they cannot comply with God *; much leſs while their natures are evil: Till this be done, all the ſervice a man performs riſeth from ſome evil imagination of the heart, which is evil, only evil, and that continually *, from wrong Notions of God, wrong Notions of Duty, or corrupt Motives. All the pretences of Devotion to God, are but the Adoration of ſome golden Image. Prayers to God for the ends of ſelf, are like thoſe of the Devil to our Saviour, when he askt leave to go into the Herd of Swine: The Object was right, Chriſt; the end was the deſtruction of the Swine, and the ſatisfaction of their malice to the Owners: There is a neceſſity then that depraved ends ſhould be removed, that that which was Gods end in our framing, may be our end in our acting, viz. his glory, which cannot be without a change of Nature. We can never honour him ſupreamly whom we do not ſupreamly love: Till this be, we cannot glorifie God as God, though we do things by his Command and Order; no more, then when God imployed the Devil in afflicting Job *: His performance cannot be ſaid to be good, becauſe his end was not the ſame with Gods; he acted out of Malice, what God commanded out of Soveraignty, and for gracious deſigns: Had God imployed an Holy Angel in his

* Joh. 3. 19, 20.

* Gen. 6. 5.

* Job. 1.

de-

design upon Job, the action had been good in the Affliction; because his Nature was holy, and therefore his ends holy; but bad in the Devil, because his ends were base and unworthy.

4. We may gather from hence, the difficulty of Conversion, and Mortification to follow thereupon. What is the reason men receive no more impression from the Voice of God and the Light of his truth, than a dead man in the Grave doth from the roaring Thunder, or a blind Mole from the Light of the Sun? 'Tis because our Atheism is as great as the deadness of the one, or the blindness of the other. The Principle in the heart is strong to shut the door both of the thoughts and affections against God. If a Friend oblige us, we shall act for him as for our selves: We are won by intreaties, soft words overcome us, but our hearts are as deaf as the hardest Rock at the call of God: Neither the joys of Heaven proposed by him can allure us, nor the flasht terrows of Hell affright us to him; as if we conceived God unable to bestow the one, or execute the other: The true reason is, God and self contest for the Deity: The Law of Sin is, God must be at the foot-stool; the Law of God is, Sin must be utterly deposed: Now it is difficult to leave a Law beloved, for a Law long ago discarded. The mind of man will hunt after any thing; the will of man embrace any thing; upon the proposal of mean Objects the Spirit of man spreads its wings, flyes to catch them, becomes one with them: But attempt to bring it under the power of God, the wings flag, the Creature looks liveless, as though there were no spring of Motion in it: 'Tis as much crucified to God, as the holy Apostle was to the world: The sin of the heart discovers its strength, the more God discovers the holiness of his Will. * The love of Sin hath been predominant in our Nature, has quasht a love to God, if not extinguisht it.

* Rom. 7. 9, 10, 11, 12.

Hence also is the difficulty of Mortification. This is a work tending to the honour of God, The abasing of that inordinately aspiring humour in our selves. If the Nature of Man be inclin'd to Sin, as it is, it must needs be bent against any thing that opposes it. 'Tis impossible to strike any true blow at any lust, till the true Sense of God be re-entertained in the Soyl where it ought to grow. Who can be naturally willing to crucifie what is incorporated with him, his flesh? What is dearest to him, himself? Is it an easie thing for man, the Competitor with God, to turn his Arms against himself; that self should overthrow its own Empire; lay aside all its pretensions to, and designs for a God-head; to hew off its own members, and subdue its own affections? 'Tis the Nature of man to cover his sin, to hide it in his bosom *; not to destroy it; and as unwillingly part with his carnal affections, as the Legion of Devils were with the Man that had been long possessed: And when he is forced and fired from one, he will endeavour to espouse some other Lust, as those Devils desired to possess Swine, when they were chased from their possession of that man.

* Job 13. 33. If I cover my Transgression, as Adam.

5. Here we see the reason of unbelief. That which hath most of God in it, meets with most aversion from us: That which hath least of God, finds better and stronger inclinations in us. VVhat is the reason, that the heart of Man is more unwilling to embrace the Gospel, than acknowledge the equity of the Law? Because there is more of Gods Nature and perfection evident in the Gospel than in the Law: Besides there is more reliance on God, and distance from self commanded in the Gospel. The Law puts a man upon his own strength, the Gospel takes him off from his own bottom: The Law acknowledges him to have a power in himself, and to act for his own reward; the Gospel strips him of all his proud and towring thoughts *, brings him to his due place, the foot of God; orders him to deny himself as his own Rule, Righteousness and End; *and henceforth not to live to himself. This is the true reason why men are more against the Gospel than against the Law; because it doth more deifie God, and debase Man. Hence it is easier to reduce men to some moral Vertue, than to faith; to make men blush at their outward Vices, but not at the inward impurity of their Natures. Hence it is observed; that those that asserted, that all happiness did arise from something in a mans self, as the Stoicks and Epicureans did; and that a wise man was equal with God; were greater Enemies to the truths of the Gospel than others, Acts 17. 18. because it lays the Axe to the root of their principal Opinion. Takes the one. from their self-sufficiency, and the other from their self-gratification: It opposeth the brutish principle of the one, which placed happiness in the pleasures of the body, and the more noble principle of the other, which placed happiness

* 2 Cor. 10. 5.

* 2 Cor. 5. 15.

in the vertue of the mind: The one was for a ſenſual, the other for a moral ſelf; both diſowned by the doctrine of the Goſpel.

6. It informs us conſequently, who can be the Author of Grace and Converſion, and every other good Work. No practical Atheiſt ever yet turned to God, but was turned by God; and not to acknowledge it to God, is a part of this Atheiſm, ſince it is a robbing God of the honour of one of his moſt glorious Works. If this practical Atheiſm be natural to man ever ſince the firſt taint of Nature in Paradice, what can be expected from it but a reſiſting of the work of God, and ſetting up all the forces of Nature againſt the operations of Grace, till a day of power dawn and clear up upon the Soul *: Not all the Angels in Heaven, or men upon earth, can be imagined to be able to perſwade a Man to fall out with himſelf. Nothing can turn the Tide of Nature, but a power above Nature. God took away the ſanctifying Spirit from man, as a penalty for the firſt ſin: who can regain it but by his Will and Pleaſure? Who can reſtore it but he that remov'd it? Since every man hath the ſame fundamental Atheiſm in him by Nature, and would be a rule to himſelf, and his own End; he is ſo far from dethroning himſelf, that all the ſtrength of his corrupted Nature is alarm'd up to ſtand to their Arms, upon any attempt God makes to regain the Fort. The Will is ſo ſtrong againſt God, that 'tis like many wills twiſted together, Eph. 2. 3. Wills of the Fleſh, we tranſlate it the deſires of the Fleſh: Like many Threds twiſted in a Cable, never to be ſnapt aſunder by a human Arm; a Power and Will above ours, can only untwiſt ſo many wills in a knot. Man cannot riſe to an acknowledgement of God without God: Hell may as well become Heaven, the Devil be changed into an Angel of light. The Devil cannot but deſire happineſs; he knows the miſery into which he is fallen; he cannot be deſirous of that puniſhment he knows is reſerved for him. Why doth he not ſanctifie God and glorifie his Creator, wherein there is abundantly more pleaſure than in his malicious courſe? Why doth he not petition to recover his ancient ſtanding? He will not; there are Chains of Darkneſs upon his faculties; he will not be otherwiſe than he is: His deſire to be God of the World ſways him againſt his own intereſt; and out of love to his malice, he will not ſin at a leſs rate to make a diminution of his puniſhment. Man, if God utterly refuſeth to work upon him, is no better; and to maintain his Atheiſm, would venture a Hell. How is it poſſible for a man to turn himſelf to that God, againſt whom he hath a quarrel in his Nature; the mooſt rooted and ſettled habit in him being to ſet himſelf in the place of God; An Atheiſt by Nature, can no more alter his own temper, and engrave in himſelf the Divine Nature, than a Rock can carve it ſelf into the Statue of a man, or a Serpent, that is an Enemy to man, could or would raiſe it ſelf to the Nobility of the humane Nature. That Soul that by Nature would ſtrip God of his Rights, cannot without a Divine Power be made conformable to him, and acknowledge ſincerely and cordially the Rights and Glory of God.

* Pſal. 110. 3.

7. We may here ſee the reaſon why there can be no juſtification by the beſt and ſtrongeſt works of Nature. Can that which hath Atheiſm at the root, juſtifie either the action or perſon? What ſtrength can thoſe works have, which have neither Gods Law for their rule, nor his Glory for their End; that are not wrought by any ſpiritual ſtrength from him, nor tend with any ſpiritual affection to him? Can theſe be a foundation for the moſt holy God to pronounce a Creature righteous? They will juſtifie his Juſtice in condemning, but cannot ſway his Juſtice to an Abſolution. Every natural man in his works, picks and chuſes; he owns the Will of God no further than he can wring it to ſute the Law of his Members; and minds not the honour of God, but as it juſtles not with his own glory and ſecular ends. Can he be righteous that prefers his own Will and his own honour, before the will and Honour of the Creator? However mens actions may be beneficial to others, what reaſon hath God to eſteem them, wherein there is no reſpect to him but themſelves; whereby they dethrone him in their thoughts, while they ſeem to own him in their religious works? Every day reproves us with ſomething different from the Rule: Thouſands of wandrings offer themſelves to our eyes. Can Juſtification be expected from that which in it ſelf is matter of deſpair?

8. See here the cauſe of all the Apoſtacy in the World. Practical Atheiſm was never conquered in ſuch: They are ſtill alienated from the Life of God. And will not live to God, as he lives to himself and his own honour.* They loath his Rule, and distaste his glory; are loth to step out of themselves to promote the ends of another; find not the satisfaction in him as they do in themselves: They will be Judges of what is good for them and righteous in it self, rather than admit of God to judge for them. When men draw back from Truth to Error; 'tis to such opinions which may serve more to foment and cherish their Ambition, Covetousness, or some beloved Lust that disputes with God for precedency, and is designed to be served before him. John 12. 42, 43. They love the praise of men more than the praise of God. A preferring man before God was the reason they would not confess Christ, and God in him.

to

* Eph. 4. 17 18.

9. This shews us the excellency of the Gospel and Christian Religion. It sets Man in his due place, and gives to God what the Excellency of his Nature requires It lays man in the dust from whence he was taken, and sets God upon that Throne where he ought to sit. Man by Nature would annihilate God and deifie himself; the Gospel glorifies God and annihilates Man. In our first revolt we would be like him in knowledge; in the means he hath provided for our recovery, he designs to make us like him in grace: The Gospel shews our selves to be an Object of Humiliation, and God to be a glorious Object for our Imitation. The Light of Nature tells us there is a God; the Gospel gives us a more magnificent report of him: The Light of Nature condemns gross Atheism, and that of the Gospel condemns and conquers spiritual Atheism in the hearts of men.

Use 2. Of Exhortation.

1. Let us labour to be sensible of this Atheism in our Nature, and be humbled for it. How should we lie in the dust, and go bowing under the humbling thoughts of it all our days? Shall we not be sensible of that whereby we spill the blood of our Souls, and give a stab to the heart of our own Salvation? Shall we be worse than any Creature, not to bewail that which tends to our destruction? He that doth not lament it, cannot challenge the Character of a Christian, hath nothing of the divine Life and Love planted in his Soul. Not a Man, but shall one day be sensible, when the Eternal God shall call him out to Examination, and charge his Conscience to discover every Crime, which will then own the Authority whereby it acted; when the heart shall be torn open, and the secrets of it brought to publick view; and the World and Man himself shall see what a viperous Brood of corrupt Principles and Ends nested in his heart. Let us therefore be truly sensible of it, till the consideration draw tears from our Eyes, and sorrow from our Souls: Let us urge the thoughts of it upon our hearts, till the Core of that Pride be eaten out, and our Stubbornness changed into Humility: Till our heads become Waters, and our eyes Fountains of tears, and be a spring of Prayer to God to change the heart, and mortifie the Atheism in it; and consider what a sad thing it is to be a practical Atheist: And who is not so by Nature?

1. Let us be sensible of it in our selves. Have any of our hearts been a Soyl wherein the fear and Reverence of God hath naturally grown? Have we a desire to know him, or a will to embrace him? Do we delight in his will, and love the remembrance of his Name? Are our respects to him as God, equal to the speculative knowledge we have of his Nature? Is the heart, wherein he hath stampt his Image, reserved for his Residence? Is not the world more affected than the Creator of the World; as though that could contribute to us a greater happiness than the Author of it? Have not Creatures as much of our love, fear, trust; nay, more than God that framed both them and us? Have we not too often relyed upon our own strength, and made a Calf of our own wisdom, and said of God as the Israelites of Moses, As for this Moses we wot not what is become of him, Exod. 32. 1. And given oftener the glory of our good success to our Drag and our Net, to our Craft and our Industry, than to the wisdom and blessing of God? Are we then free from this sort of Atheism*? 'Tis as impossible to have two Gods at one time in one heart, as to have two Kings at one time in full power in one Kingdom. Have there not been frequent neglects of God? Have we not been deaf whilst he hath knocked at our doors; slept when he hath sounded in our ears, as if there had been no such Being as a God in the World; How many struglings have been against our approaches to him? Hath not folly often been committed with vain imaginations, starting up in the time of Religious Service, which which we would ſcarce vouchſafe a look to at another time, and in another buſineſs, but would have thruſt them away with indignation? Had they ſtept in to interrupt our worldly affairs, they would have been troubleſome Intruders, but while we are with God they are acceptable Gueſts. How unwilling have our hearts been to fortifie themſelves with ſtrong and influencing conſiderations of God, before we addreſt to him? Is it not too often that our lifeleſsneſs in Prayer proceeds from this Atheiſm; a neglect of ſeeing what arguments and Pleas may be drawn from the divine perfections, to ſecond our ſuit in hand, and quicken our hearts in the ſervice? Whence are thoſe indiſpoſitions to any ſpiritual duty, but becauſe we have not due thoughts of the Majeſty, Holineſs, Goodneſs and Excellency of God? Is there any duty which leads to a more perticular inquiry after him, or a more clear viſion of him; but our hearts have been ready to riſe up and call it curſed rather than bleſſed? Are not our minds bemiſted with an ignorance of him, our wills drawn by averſion from him, our affections riſing in diſtaſt of him? More willing to know any thing than his Nature, and more induſtrous to do any thing than his Will? Do we not all fall under ſome one or other of theſe conſiderations? Is it not fit then that we ſhould have a ſenſe of them? 'Tis to be bewail'd by us, that ſo little of God is in our hearts, when ſo many evidences of the love of God are in the Creatures; that God ſhould be ſo little our end, who hath been ſo much our Benefactor; that he ſhould be ſo little in our thoughts, who ſparkles in every thing which preſents it ſelf to our eyes.

* Lawson body of Divinity pa. 153, 154.

2. Let us be ſenſible of it in others. We ought to have a juſt execration of the too open iniquity in the midſt of us; and imitate holy David, whoſe tears plentifully guſht out, becauſe men kept not Gods Law. * And is it not a time to exerciſe this pious lamentation? Hath the wicked Atheiſm of any Age been greater, or can you find worſe in Hell, than we may hear of, and behold on Earth? How is the excellent Majeſty of God, adored by the Angels in Heaven; deſpiſed and reproached by men on Earth; as if his name were publiſht to be matter of their ſport? What a gaſping thing is a natural ſenſe of God among men in the World? Is not the Law of God, accompanied with ſuch dreadful threatnings and curſes, made light of; as if men would place their honour in being above or beyond any ſenſe of that glorious Majeſty? How many wallow in Pleaſures, as if they had been made men, only to turn brutes, and their Souls given them only for Salt to keep their bodies from putrifying? 'Tis as well a part of Atheiſm not to be ſenſible of the abuſes of Gods name and Laws by others, as to violate them our ſelves: What is the language of a ſtupid ſenſeleſsneſs of them, but that there is no God in the World, whoſe glory is worth a vindication and deſerves our regards?

*Pſal.119.136.

That we may be ſenſible of the unworthineſs of neglecting God as our Rule and end; conſider,

1. The Unreaſonableneſs of it as it concerns God.

1. Firſt, 'Tis a high contempt of God. 'Tis an inverting the order of things; a making God the higheſt, to become the loweſt, and ſelf the loweſt, to become the higheſt: To be guided by every baſe Companion, ſome idle vanity, ſome carnal intereſt, is to acknowledge an excellency abounding in them which is wanting in God: An equity in their orders and none in Gods precepts: A goodneſs in their promiſes and a falſity in Gods: As if infinite excellency were a meer vanity, and to act for God, were the debaſement of our reaſon; to act for ſelf or ſome pitiful Creature or ſordid luſt, were the glory and advancement of it. To prefer any one ſin before the honour of God, is as if that ſin had been our Creator and benefactor, as if it were the original cauſe of our being and ſupport. Do not men pay as great a homage to that as they do to God? Do not their minds eagerly purſue it? Are not the revolvings of it in their fancies as delightful to them, as the remembrance of God to a holy Soul? Do any obey the Commands of God with more readineſs, than they do the orders of their baſe affections? Did Peter leap more readily into the Sea to meet his Maſter, than many into the jaws of Hell to meet their Dalilah's? How cheerfully did the Iſraelites part with their ornaments for the ſake of an Idol, who would not have ſpared a moiety for the honour of their Deliverer? * If to make God our end is the principal duty in nature, then to make our ſelves or any thing elſe our end, is the greateſt vice in the rank of evils.

* Exod 32. 3. All the people brake off the golden ear-rings

Secondly

Secondly, 'Tis a contempt of God as the moſt aimable object. God is infinitely excellent and deſirable, Zach. 9. 17. How great is his goodneſs, and how great is his beauty? There is nothing in him but what may raviſh our affections; none that knows him but finds attractives to keep them with him: He hath nothing in him which can be a proper object of contempt, no defects or ſhadow of evil; there is infinite excellency to charm us, and infinite goodneſs to allure us; the Author of our beings, the Benefactor of our lives: Why then ſhould Man, which is his Image, be ſo baſe as to ſlight the beautiful original which ſtampt it on him? He is the moſt lovely object, therefore to be ſtudied, therefore to be honoured, therefore to be followed: In regard of his perfection he hath the higheſt right to our thoughts. All other beings were eminently contained in his eſſence, and were produced by his infinite power: The Creature hath nothing but what it hath from God: And is it not unworthy to prefer the Copy before the original, to fall in love with a Picture inſtead of the beauty it repreſents? The Creature, which we advance to be our rule and end, can no more report to us the true amiableneſs of God, than a few Colours mixed and ſuted together upon a piece of cloth, can the moral and intellectual lovelineſs of the Soul of Man. To contemn God one moment is more baſe, than if all Creatures were contemned by us for ever; becauſe the excellency of Creatures is to God, like that of a drop to the Sea, or a ſpark to the glory of unconceivable millions of Suns. As much as the excellency of God is above our conceptions, ſo much doth the debaſing of him admit of unexpreſſible aggravations.

2. Conſider the ingratitude in it. That we ſhould reſiſt that God with our hearts, who made us the work of his hands, and count him as nothing, from whom we derive all the good that we are or have: There is no contempt of Man but ſteps in here to aggravate our ſlighting of God; Becauſe there is no relation one man can ſtand in to another, wherein God doth not more highly appear to man. If we abhor the unworthy carriage of a Child to a tender Father, a Servant to an indulgent Maſter, a Man to his obliging Friend; why do men dayly act that towards God, which they cannot ſpeak of without abhorrency, if acted by another againſt man? Is God a being leſs to be regarded than man, and more worthy of contempt than a Creature? [* It would be ſtrange if a benefactor ſhould live in the ſame Town, in the ſame houſe with us, and we never exchange a word with him; yet this is our caſe, who have the works of God in our eyes, the goodneſs of God in our being, the mercy of God in our daily food] yet think ſo little of him, converſe ſo little with him, ſerve every thing before him, and prefer every thing above him? Whence have we our mercies but from his hand. Who, beſides him, maintains our breath this moment? Would he call for our Spirits this moment, they muſt depart from us to attend his Command. There is not a moment wherein our unworthy carriage is not aggravated, becauſe there is not a moment wherein he is not our guardian, and gives us not taſts of a freſh bounty. And it is no light aggravation of our Crime, that we injure him, without whoſe bounty in giving us our being, we had not been capable of caſting contempt upon him: That he that hath the greateſt ſtamp of his Image, Man, ſhould deſerve the Character of the worſt of his Rebels: That he, who hath only reaſon by the gift of God to Judge of the equity of the Laws of God, ſhould ſwell againſt them as grievous, and the Government of the Lawgiver as burdenſome. Can it leſſen the crime to uſe the principle, wherein we excel the beaſts, to the diſadvantage of God, who endowed us with that principle above the beaſts?

* Reynolds.

1. 'Tis a debaſing of God beyond what the Devil doth at preſent. He is more excuſable in his preſent ſtate of acting, than man is in his preſent refuſing God for his Rule and end. He ſtrives againſt a God that exerciſeth upon him a vindictive Juſtice: We debaſe a God that loads us with his dayly mercies. The deſpairing Devils are excluded from any mercy or divine patience: But we are not only under the long ſuffering of his patience, but the large expreſſions of his bounty. He would not be governed by him when he was only his bountiful Creator. We refuſe to be guided by him after he hath given us the bleſſing of Creation from his own hand, and the more obliging bleſſings of Redemption by the hand and blood of his Son.

It cannot be imagined that the Devils and the damned ſhould ever make God their end, ſince he hath aſſured them he will not be their happineſs; and ſhut up all his perfections from their experimental notice, but thoſe of his power to preſerve them and his Juſtice, to puniſh them: They have no grant from God of ever having a heart to comply with his Will, or ever having the honour to be actively employed for his glory. They have ſome plea for their preſent contempt of God; not in regard of his nature, for he is infinitely amiable, excellent, and lovely; but in regard of his adminiſtration towards them: But what plea can Man have for his Practical Atheiſm, who lives by his power, is ſuſtained by his bounty, and ſolicited by his Spirit? What an ungrateful thing is it to put off the Nature of Man for that of Devils; and diſhonour God under mercy, as the Devils do under his wrathful anger?

2. 'Tis an ungrateful contempt of God, who cannot be injurious to us. He cannot do us wrong, becauſe he cannot be unjuſt, Gen. 18. 25. Shall not the Judge of all the Earth do right? His nature doth as much abhor unrighteouſneſs, as love a Communicative goodneſs: He never Commanded any thing, but what was highly conducible to the happineſs of man. Infinite goodneſs can no more injure man, than it can diſhonour it ſelf: It lays out it ſelf in additions of kindneſs, and whiles we debaſe him, he continues to benefit us: And is it not an unparalleld ingratitude to turn our backs upon an object ſo lovely, an object ſo loving in the midſt of varieties of allurements from him? God did Create intellectual Creatures, Angels and Men, that he might Communicate more of himſelf, and his own goodneſs, and holineſs to man, than Creatures of a lower rank were capable of. What do we do by rejecting him as our Rule and End, but croſs, as much as in us lies, Gods end in our Creation, and ſhut our Souls againſt the Communications of thoſe perfections he was ſo willing to beſtow? We uſe him as if he intended us the greateſt wrong, when 'tis impoſſible for him to do any to any of his Creatures.

3. Conſider the miſery which will attend ſuch a temper if it continue predominant. Thoſe that thruſt God away as their happineſs and end, can expect no other, but to be thruſt away by him as to any relief and Compaſſion. A diſtance from God here can look for nothing, but a remoteneſs from God hereafter. When the Devil, a Creature of vaſt Endowments, would advance himſelf above God, and inſtruct man to commit the ſame ſin, he is Curſed above all Creatures. * VVhen we will not acknowledge him a God of all glory, we ſhall be ſeparated from him as a God of all comfort: All they that are afar off ſhall periſh, Pſa. 73. 27. This is the ſpring of all woe. VVhat the Prodigal ſuffered, was becauſe he would leave his Father and live of himſelf. VVhoſoever is ambitious to be his own Heaven; will at laſt find his Soul to become his own Hell. As it loved all things for it ſelf, ſo it ſhall be grieved with all things for it ſelf. As it would be its own God againſt the right of God, it ſhall thenbe its own tormentor by the Juſtice of God.

*Gen. 3. 14.

2. Duty, Watch againſt this Atheiſm and be dayly employed in the Mortification of it. In every action we ſhould make the iniquiry, what is the Rule I obſerve? Is it Gods Will or my own? VVhether do my intentions tend, to ſet up God or ſelf? As much as we deſtroy this, we abate the power of ſin: Theſe two things are the head of the Serpent in us, which we muſt be bruiſing by the power of the Croſs. Sin is nothing elſe but a turning from God and centring in ſelf, and moſt in the inferior part of ſelf: If we bend our force againſt thoſe two, ſelf-Will and ſelf-Ends, we ſhall intercept Atheiſm at the Spring head, take away that which doth conſtitute and animate all ſin: The ſparks muſt vaniſh, if the fire be quencht which affords them fuel. They are but two ſhort things to ask in every undertaking: Is God my Rule in regard of his VVill? Is God my End in regard of his glory? All ſin lies in the neglect of theſe, all grace lies in the practice of them.

Without ſome degree of the mortification of theſe, we cannot make profitable and comfortable approaches to God. When we come with Idols in our hearts, we ſhall be anſwered according to the multitude and the baſeneſs of them too.* What expectation of a good look from him can we have, when we come before him with undeifying thoughts of him; a Petition in our mouths and a Sword in our hearts to ſtab his honour?

*Ezek. 14. 4.

To this purpoſe,

1. Be often in the views of the excellencies of God. VVhen we have no intercourſe with God by delightful Meditations, we begin to be eſtranged from him, and prepare our ſelves to live without God in the VVorld. Strangeneſs is the Mother and Nurſe

Nurse of disaffection: We slight men sometimes because we know them not. The very beasts delight in the Company of men, when being tamed and familiar, they become acquainted with their disposition. A dayly converse with God would discover so much of loveliness in his nature, so much of sweetness in his ways, that our injurious thoughts of God would wear off, and we should count it our honour to contemn our selves and magnifie him. By this means a slavish fear, which is both a dishonour to God and a torment to the Soul, * and the root of Atheism, will be cast out, and an ingenious fear of him wrought in the heart. Exercised thoughts on him would issue out in affections to him, which would engage our hearts to make him both our Rule and our end. This course would stifle any temptations to gross Atheism, wherewith good Souls are sometimes haunted, by confirming us more in the belief of a God; and discourage any attempts, to a deliberate practical Atheism: We are not like to espouse any principle which is confuted by the delightful converse we dayly have with him. The more we thus enter into the presence Chamber of God, the more we cling about him with our affections; the more vigorous and lively will the true Notion of God grow up in us, and be able to prevent any thing which may dishonour him and debase our Souls.

* 1 Joh. 4. 18.

Let us therefore consider him as the only happiness: Set up the true God in our understandings; possess our hearts with a deep sense of his desirable excellency above all other things. This is the main thing we are to do in order to our great business: All the directions in the world with the neglect of this, will be insignificant Ciphers. The neglect of this is Common, and is the basis of all the mischiefs which happen to the Souls of men.

2. To this purpose, Prize and study the Scripture. We can have no delight in Meditation on him, unless we know him; and we cannot know him but by the means of his own Revelation: When the Revelation is despised, the Revealer will be of little esteem. Men do not throw off God from being their rule, till they throw off Scripture from being their guide; and God must needs be cast off from being an end, when the Scripture is rejected from being a Rule: Those that do not care to know his Will, that love to be ignorant of his nature, can never be affected to his honour. Let therefore the subtilities of reason vail to the Doctrine of faith, and the humor of the Will to the Command of the word.

3. Take heed of sensual pleasures, And be very watchful and cautious in the use of those comforts God allows us. Job was afraid when his Sons feasted, that they should Curse God in their hearts. * It was not without cause that the Apostle Peter joyned sobriety with watchfulness and Prayer, 1 Pet. 4. 7. The end of all things is at hand, be ye therefore sober, and watch unto Prayer. A moderate use of worldly comforts. Prayer is the great acknowledgment of God, and too much sensuality is a hindrance of this, and a step to Atheism. Belshazzars lifting himself up against the Lord, and not glorifying of God, is charged upon his sensuality, Dan. 5. 23. Nothing is more apt to quench the Notions of God, and root out the Conscience of him, than an addictedness to sensual pleasures. Therefore take heed of that snare.

* Job. 1. 4.

4. Take heed of sins against knowledge. The more sins against knowledge are committed, the more careless we are, and the more careless we shall be of God and his honour. We shall more fear his judicial power, and the more we fear that, the more we shall disaffect that God in whose hand vengeance is, and to whom it doth belong. Atheism in conversation proceeds to Atheism in affection, and that will endeavour to sink into Atheism in opinion and Judgment.

The Sum of the Whole.

And now consider in the whole what has been spoken.

1. Man would set himself up as his own Rule. He disowns the Rule of God, is unwilling to have any acquaintance with the Rule God sets him, negligent in using the means for the knowledge of his will; and endeavours to shake it off when any notices of it breaks in upon him. When he cannot expel it, he hath no pleasure in the Consideration of it, and the heart swells against it. When the Notions of the Will of God are entertained, it is on some other Consideration, or with wavering and unsettled affections. Many times men design to improve some lust by his truth.

This unwillingneſs reſpects Truth as tis moſt Spiritual and holy; as it moſt relates and leads to God; as it is moſt contrary to ſelf. He is guilty of Contempt of the Will of God, which is ſeen in every preſumptuous breach of his Law. In the natural averſions to the declaration of his Will and mind which way ſoever he turns. In ſlighting that part of his Will which is moſt for his honour. In the awkwardneſs of the heart, when it is to pay God a ſervice. A conſtraint in the firſt engagement; ſlightneſs in the ſervice in regard of the matter; in regard of the frame, without a natural vigour. Many diſtractions, much wearieneſs; in deſerting the Rule of God, when our expectations are not anſwered upon our ſervice; in breaking promiſes with God.

Man naturally owns any other Rule, rather than that of Gods preſcribing. The Rule of Satan, the Will of man: In complying more with the dictates of Men than the will of God: In obſerving that which is materially ſo, not becauſe it is his Will, but the injunctions of Men. In obeying the Will of Man, when it is contirary to the Will of God. This man doth in order to the ſetting up himſelf. This is natural to man as he is corrupted. Men are diſſatisfied with their own Conſciences when they contradict the deſires of ſelf. Moſt actions in the world are done, more becauſe they are agreeable to ſelf, than as they are honourable to God: As they are agreeable to natural and moral ſelf, or ſinful ſelf. 'Tis evident in neglects of taking Gods directions upon emergent occaſions. In counting the actions of others to be good or bad, as they ſute with, or ſpurn againſt our fancies and humors. Man would make himſelf the Rule of God, and give laws to his Creator: In ſtriving againſt his Law: Diſapproving of his Methods of Government in the World; in impatience in our perticular concerns; envying the gifts and proſperity of others: Corrupt matter or ends of Prayer or praiſe: Bold interpretations of the Judgements of God in the World. Mixing rules in the Worſhip of God with thoſe which have been ordained by him. Suting interpretations of Scripture with our own minds and humors, Falling off from God after ſome fair compliances, when his Will grates upon us and croſſeth ours.

2. Man would be his own end. This is natural and univerſal. This is ſeen in frequent ſelf applauſes, and inward overweening reflections. In aſcribing the glory of what we do or have to our ſelves. In deſire of ſelf pleaſing Doctrines. In being highly concerned in injuries done to our ſelves, and little or not at all concerned for injuries done to God. In truſting in our ſelves. In working for Carnal ſelf againſt the light of our own Conſciences, this is a uſurping Gods prerogative, vilifying God, deſtroying God. Man would make any thing his end or happineſs rather than God. This appears in the fewer thoughts we have of him than of any thing elſe. In the greedy purſuit of the World. In the ſtrong addictedneſs to ſenſual pleaſures. In paying a ſervice upon any ſucceſs in the World to inſtruments more than to God. This is a debaſing God in ſetting up a Creature; but more in ſetting up a baſe luſt: Tis a denying of God. Man would make himſelf the end of all Creatures. In pride; uſing the Creatures contrary to the End God hath appointed. This is to diſhonour God: And it is Diabolical. Man would make himſelf the end of God. In loving God, becauſe of ſome ſelf pleaſing benefits diſtributed by him. In abſtinence from ſome ſins, becauſe they are againſt the intereſt of ſome other beloved corruption. In performing duties meerly for a ſelfiſh intereſt which is evident in unwealdineſs in Religious duties where ſelf is not concern'd. In calling upon God only in a time of neceſſity. In begging his aſſiſtance to our own projects, after we have by our own Craft laid the Plot. In impatience upon a refuſal of our deſires. In ſelfiſh aims we have in our duties. This is a vilifying God, a dethroning him. In unworthy imaginations of God, univerſal in man by nature. Hence ſprings Idolatry, Superſtition, Preſumption, the common diſeaſe of the World. This is a vilifying God; worſe than Idolatry, worſe than abſolute Atheiſm. Natural deſires to be diſtant from him. No deſires for the remembrance of him. No deſires of converſe with him. No deſires of a through return to him. No deſire of any cloſe imitation of him.

A DISCOURSE UPON GODS BEING A SPIRIT.

JOHN 4. 24.

God is a Spirit, and they that Worſhip him, muſt Worſhip him in Spirit, and in truth.

THE words are part of the Dialogue between our Saviour, and the Samaritan Woman. Chriſt intending to return from Judea to Galilee, paſſed through the Country of Samaria, a place inhabited not by Jews, but a mixt Company of ſeveral Nations, and ſome remainders of the poſterity of Iſrael, who eſcaped the Captivity and were returned from Aſſyria; and being weary with his Journey, arrived about the ſixth hour or noon (according to the Jews reckoning the time of the day) at a Well that Jacob had digged, which was of great account among the Inhabitants for the Antiquity of it, as well as the uſefulneſs of it, in ſupplying their neceſſities: He being thirſty, and having none to furniſh him wherewith to draw water, at laſt comes a Woman from the City, whom he deſires to give him ſome water to drink. The Woman perceiving him by his Language or Habit to be a Jew, wonders at the queſtion ſince the hatred the Jews bore the Samaritans was ſo great, that they would not vouchſafe to have any Commerce with them, not only in Religious, but Civil affairs, and Common Offices belonging to Mankind. Hence our Saviour takes occaſion to publiſh to her the Doctrine of the Goſpel; and excuſeth her rude Anſwer by her ignorance of him: and tells her, that if ſhe had askt him a greater matter, even that which concern'd her Eternal Salvation, he would readily have granted it, notwithſtanding the rooted hatred between the Jews and Samaritans; and beſtowed a water of a greater vertue, the water of life: * The Woman is no leſs aſtoniſhed at his reply, than ſhe was at his firſt demand. It was ſtrange to hear a Man ſpeak of giving living water, to one of whom he beg'd the water of that Spring, and had no Veſſel to draw any to quench his own thirſt. She therefore demands whence he could have this water that he ſpeaks of, * ſince ſhe conceived him not greater than Jacob, who had digged that Well and drunk of it. Our Saviour deſirous

* Amirant. Paraph. ſur Jean.

* ver. 10. Or living water.

* ver. 11.

rous to make a progreſs in that work he had begun, extolls the Water he ſpake of above this of the Well, from its particular vertue, fully to refreſh thoſe that drank of it, and be as a Cooling and Comforting Fountain within them, of more efficacy than that without. * The Woman conceiving a good opinion of our Saviour, deſires to partake of this Water, to ſave her pains in coming dayly to the Well, not apprehending the Spirituality of Chriſts diſcourſe to her: * Chriſt finding her to take ſome pleaſure in his diſcourſe, partly to bring her to a ſenſe of her ſin, before he did Communicate the excellency of his grace, bids her return back to the City and bring her Husband with her to him: * She freely acknowledges that ſhe had no Husband, whether having ſome check of Conſcience at preſent for the unclean life ſhe led, or loath to loſe ſo much time in the gaining this water ſo much deſired by her: Our Saviour takes an occaſion from this to lay open her ſin before her, and to make * her ſenſible of her own wicked life, and the prophetick excellency of himſelf; and tells her, ſhe had had five Husbands to whom ſhe had been falſe, and by whom ſhe was divorced, and the perſon ſhe now dwelt with was not her lawful Husband, and in living with him ſhe violated the Rights of Marriage, and increaſed guilt upon her Conſcience, * The Woman being affected with this diſcourſe, and knowing him to be a ſtranger, that could not be certified of thoſe things but in an extraordinary way, begins to have a high eſteem of him as a Prophet. * And upon this opinion ſhe eſteems him able to decide a queſtion which had been Canvaſt between them and the Jews about the place of Worſhip.* Their Fathers Worſhipping in that Mountain, and the Jews affirming Jeruſalem to be a place of Worſhip: She pleads the Antiquity of the worſhip in this place: Abraham having built an Altar there, Gen. 12. 7. And Jacob upon his return from Syria. And ſurely had the place been capable of an exception, ſuch perſons as they, and ſo well acquainted with the Will of God, would not have pitched upon that place to celebrate their worſhip.

* ver. 13, 14.
* ver. 15.
* ver. 16.
* ver. 17.
* ver. 18.
* ver. 19.
* ver. 20.

Antiquity hath too too often bewitched the minds of Men, and drawn them from the revealed Will of God. Men are more willing to imitate the outward actions of their famous Anceſtors, than conform themſelves to the revealed Will of their Creator. The Samaritans would imitate the Patriarchs in the place of worſhip, but not in the faith of the worſhippers.

Chriſt anſwers her, that this queſtion would quickly be reſolved by a new ſtate of the Church which was neer at hand, and neither Jeruſalem which had not the precedency, nor that Mountain ſhould be of any more value in that concern than any other place in the world: * But yet to make her ſenſible of her ſin, and that of her Country-men, tells her, that their Worſhip in that Mountain was not according to the will of God, he having long after the Altars built in this place fixed Jeruſalem as the place of Sacrifices; beſides, they had not the knowledge of that God which ought to be worſhipped by them, but the Jews had the true object of Worſhip and the true manner of Worſhip, according to the declaration God had made of himſelf to them. * But all that ſervice ſhall vaniſh, the vail of the Temple ſhall be rent in twain, and that Carnal worſhip give place to one more Spiritual; ſhadows ſhall fly before ſubſtance, and truth advance it ſelf above figures, and the worſhip of God ſhall be with the the ſtrength of the Spirit; ſuch a Worſhip, and ſuch Worſhippers doth the Father Seek: * For God is a Spirit, and thoſe that Worſhip him muſt Worſhip him in Spirit and in truth. The deſign of our Saviour is to declare, that God is not taken with external worſhip invented by men, no nor commanded by himſelf; and that upon this reaſon, becauſe he is a Spiritual eſſence, infinitely above groſs and Corporeal matter, and is not taken with that pomp which is a pleaſure to our Earthly imaginations.

* ver. 21.
* ver. 22.
* ver. 23.

* Vulgar lat. Illyrc. Clav. Πνεῦμα ὁ Θεός. Some tranſlate it juſt as the words lie. Spirit is God: * But it is not unuſual both in the old and new Teſtament languages, to put the predicate before the ſubject, as Pſal. 5. 9. Their throat is an open Sepulchre, in the Hebrew a Sepulchre open their Throat. So Pſa. 111. 3. His work is honourable and glorious. Hebr. Honour and Glory his work, And their wants not one example in the ſame Evangeliſt, Joh. 1. 1. And the word was God. Greek And God was the word: In all, the predicate or what is aſcribed, is put before the ſubject to which it is aſcribed,

One tetlsus, and he an head of a party, that hath made a diſturbance in the Church of God, * that this place is not aptly brought to prove God to be a Spirit: And the reason of Christ runs not thus, God is of a Spiritual Essence, and therefore must be worshipped with a Spiritual worship; for the Essence of God is not the Foundation of his worship, but his Will; for then we were not to worship him with a Corporal worship, because he is not a body; but with an invisible and eternal worship, because he is invisible and eternal.

of

* Episcop. Institut. lib. 4. cap. 3.

But the nature of God is the foundation of worship, the Will of God is the Rule of worship; the matter and manner is to be performed according to the Will of God. But is the nature of the object of worship to be excluded? No, as the object is, so ought our Devotion to be, Spiritual as he is Spiritual. God in his Commands for worship respected the discovery of his own nature; in the Law he respected the discovery of his mercy and justice, and therefore Commanded a worship by Sacrifices; a Spiritual worship without those institutions would not have declared those Attributes, which was Gods end to display to the world in Christ: And tho the nature of God is to be respected in worship, yet the obligations of the Creature are to be considered. God is a Spirit therefore must have a Spiritual worship: The Creature hath a body as well as a Soul, and both from God; and therefore ought to worship God with the one as well as the other, since one as well as the other is freely bestowed upon him.

The Spirituality of God was the foundation of the change from the Judaical carnal worship to a more Spiritual and Evangelical.

[God is a Spirit:]

That is, he hath nothing Corporal, no mixture of matter, not a visible substance, a bodily form. * He is a Spirit, not a bare Spiritual substance: But an understanding willing Spirit, holy, wise, good and just. Before Christ spake of the Father, * the first person in the Trinity: Now he speaks of God Essentially: The word Father is personal, the word God essential. So that our Saviour would render a reason, not from any one person in the blessed Trinity, but from the Divine nature, why we should worship in Spirit, and therefore makes use of the word God, the being a Spirit being Common to the other persons with the Father.

* Melancton.

* ver. 23.

This is the reason of the proposition, verse 23. Of a Spiritual Worship. Every nature delights in that which is like it, and distasts that which is most different from it. If God were Corporeal, he might be pleased with the victims of beasts, and the beautiful Magnificence of Temples, and the noyse of Musick: But being a Spirit, he cannot be gratified with carnal things: He demands something better and greater than all those, that Soul which he made, that Soul which he hath endowed, a Spirit of a frame suitable to his nature. He indeed appointed Sacrifices and a Temple, as shadows of those things which were to be most acceptable to him in the Messiah, but they were imposed only till the time of Reformation. * *

* Heb. 9. 10.

[Must Worship him.]

Not they may, or it would be more agreeable to God to have such a manner of worship: But they must. Tis not exclusive of bodily worship; for this were to exclude all publick worship in societies, which cannot be performed without reverential postures of the body. * The Gestures of the body are helps to worship and declarations of Spiritual acts. We can scarcely worship God with our Spirits without some tincture upon the outward-man. But he excludes all acts meerly Corporal, all resting upon an external service and devotion, which was the Crime of the Pharisees, and the general perswasion of the Jews as well as Heathens, who used the outward Ceremonies, not as signs of better things, but as if they did of themselves please God, and render the worshippers accepted with him, without any suitable frame of the inward man: * It is as if he had said, now you must separate your selves from all carnal modes to which the service of God is now tyed, and render a worship chiefly consisting in the affectionate motions of the heart, and accommodated more exactly to the condition of the object, who is a Spirit.

* Terniti.

* Amirald in loc.

[In Spirit and Truth]

* The Evangelical Service now required, has the advantage of the former; that was a shadow and Figure, this the Body and Truth. * Spirit, say some, is here opposed to the legal Ceremonies; Truth, to hypocritical services; or * rather truth is opposed to shadows, and an opinion of worth in the outward action; 'tis principally oppo-

* Amirald. in loc. * Muscul. * Chemnit.

oppoſed to external Rites, becauſe our Saviour ſaith, v. 23. The hour comes, and now is, &c. Had it been oppoſed to Hypocriſie, Chriſt had ſaid no new thing: For God always required Truth in the inward parts, and all true Worſhippers had ſerved him with a ſincere Conſcience and ſingle Heart. The old Patriarchs did worſhip God in Spirit and Truth, as taken for ſincerity: Such a Worſhip was always, and is perpetually due to God; becauſe he always was, and eternally will be a Spirit.

* Muſcal. * And it is ſaid, the Father ſeeks ſuch to Worſhip him; not ſhall ſeek: He always ſought it; it always was performed to him by one or other in the World: And the Prophets had always rebuked them, for reſting upon their outward Solemnities, Iſa. 58. 7. and Micah. 6. 8. But a Worſhip without legal Rites was proper to an Evangelical State and the times of the Goſpel; God having then exhibited Chriſt, and brought into the world the ſubſtance of thoſe ſhadows, and the End of thoſe inſtitutions: There was no more need to continue them, when the true reaſon of them was ceaſed. All Laws do naturally expire, when the true reaſon upon which they were firſt framed, is changed.

Or by Spirit may be meant, ſuch a worſhip as is kindled in the heart by the breath of the holy Ghoſt. Since we are dead in ſin, a ſpiritual light and flame in the heart ſutable to the nature of the object of our Worſhip, cannot be raiſed in us without the operation of a ſupernatural Grace: And though the Fathers could not Worſhip God without the Spirit; yet in the Goſpel-times, there being a fuller effuſion of the Spirit, the Evangelical State is called the adminiſtration of the Spirit, and

2 Cor. 3. 8. the newneſs of the Spirit, in oppoſition to the legal Oeconomy, entitled the oldneſs

* Rom. 7. 6. of the Letter. * The Evangelical State is more ſuted to the Nature of God than any other: Such a Worſhip God muſt have, whereby he is acknowledged to be the true Sanctifier and Quickner of the Soul. The nearer God doth approach to us, and the more full his manifeſtations are; the more ſpiritual is the Worſhip we return to God. The Goſpel pares off the rugged parts of the Law, and Heaven ſhall remove what is material in the Goſpel, and change the Ordinances of VVorſhip into that of a Spiritual Praiſe.

In the words there is,

1. A Propoſition [God is a Spirit.] The Foundation of all Religion.
2. An Inference [They that worſhip him, &c.]

As God, a VVorſhip belongs to him; as a Spirit, a ſpiritual VVorſhip is due to him: In the Inference we have.

1. The manner of Worſhip [in Spirit and in Truth].
2. The neceſſity of ſuch a Worſhip [muſt]

The Propoſition declares the Nature of God; the Inference, the Duty of Man.

The Obſervations lie plain.

Ob. 1. God is a pure Spiritual Being. [He is a Spirit.]

2. The Worſhip due from the Creature to God, muſt be agreeable to the Nature of God, and purely ſpiritual.

3. The Evangelical State is ſuted to the Nature of God.

For the firſt

D. God is a pure ſpiritual Being.

* Epiſcop. inſtitut. l. 4. c. 3. 'Tis the obſervation of one,* that the plain aſſertion of Gods being a Spirit is found but once in the whole Bible, and that is in this place; which may well be wondred at; becauſe God is ſo often deſcribed with hands, feet, eyes and ears, in the form and figure of a Man. The Spiritual Nature of God is deducible from many places; but not any where, as I remember, aſſerted totidem verbis, but in this Text: Some alledge that place, 2 Cor. 3. 17. the Lord is that Spirit, for the proof of it; but that ſeems to have a different ſenſe: In the Text the Nature of God is deſcribed; in that place, the operations of God in the Goſpel. [*'Tis not the Miniſtry of Moſes, or that old Covenant, which communicates to you that Spirit it ſpeaks of; but it is the Lord Jeſus. and the Doctrine of the Goſpel delivered by him whereby this Spirit and Liberty is diſpenſed to you: He oppoſes here the Liberty of the Goſpel to the Servitude of the Law.] 'Tis from Chriſt, that a Divine Vertue diffuſeth it ſelf by the Goſpel; 'tis by him, not by the Law, that we partake of that Spirit.

* Amyrald in loc.

* Suarez de Deo vol. 1 t. 9. Col. 1. * The Spirituality of God, is as evident as his Being. If we grant that God is,

we

we must necessarily grant that he cannot be corporeal; because a Body is of an imperfect Nature. It will appear incredible to any that acknowledge God the first Being and Creator of all things, that he should be a massie heavy Body, and have Eyes and Ears, Feet and hands as we have.

For the explication of it.

1. Spirit is taken various ways in Scripture. It signifies sometimes an aereal substance, as Psal. 11. 6. A horrible Tempest: Hebr. A Spirit of Tempest: Sometimes the breath, which is a thin substance, Gen. 6. 17. All Flesh wherein is the breath of Life: Hebr. Spirit of Life. A thin substance, tho it be material and corporeal, is called Spirit: And in the bodies of living Creatures, that which is the principle of their actions is called Spirits; the animal and vital Spirits: And the finer parts extracted from Plants and Minerals, we call Spirits: Those volatile parts separated from that gross matter wherein they were immerst, because they come nearest to the nature of an incorporeal substance: And from this notion of the word, 'tis translated to signifie those substances that are purely immaterial, as Angels, and the Souls of Men. Angels are called Spirits, Psal. 104. 4. *who makes his Angels Spirits; And not only good Angels are so called, but evil Angels, Mark 1. 27. Souls of Men are called Spirits, Eccl. 12. And the Soul of Christ is called so, John 19. 30. Whence God is called the God of the Spirits of all Flesh, Numb. 22. 16. and Spirit is opposed to Flesh, Isa. 31. 3. The Ægyptians are Flesh and not Spirit. And our Saviour gives us the notion of a Spirit to be something above the nature of a Body, Luke 24. 39. Not having flesh and bones, extended parts, loads of gross matter. 'Tis also taken for those things which are active and efficacious; because activity is of the nature of a Spirit. Caleb had another Spirit, Num. 14. 24. an active affection. The vehement motions of sin are called Spirit, Hos. 4. 12. The Spirit of Whoredoms, in that sense that Pro. 29. 11. A Fool utters all his mind, all his Spirit, he knows not how to restrain the vehement motions of his mind. So that the notion of a Spirit is, that it is a fine immaterial substance, an active being, that acts it self and other things. A meer Body cannot act it self; as the Body of Man cannot move without the Soul, no more than a Ship can move it self without Wind and Waves.

*Heb. 1. 14.

So God is called a Spirit, as being not a Body, not having the greatness, figure, thickness or length of a Body, wholly separate from any thing of flesh and matter. We find a Principle within us nobler than that of our Bodies; and therefore we conceive the Nature of God, according to that which is more worthy in us, and not according to that which is the vilest part of our Natures. God is a most Spiritual Spirit, more Spiritual than all Angels, all Souls: * As he exceeds all in the nature of Being, so he exceeds all in the nature of Spirit: He hath nothing gross, heavy, material in his Essence.

* Gerhard. μονοτερῶς

2. When we say God is a Spirit, 'tis to be understood by way of Negation. There are two ways of knowing or describing God: By way of affirmation, affirming that of him in a way of eminency, which is excellent in the Creature; as when we say God is wise, good: The other, by way of negation, when we remove from God in our conceptions, what is tainted with imperfection in the Creature. * The first ascribes to him whatsoever is excellent; the other separates from him whatsoever is imperfect. The first is like a Limning, which adds one Colour to another to make a comely Picture; the other is like a Carving, which pares and cuts away whatsoever is superfluous, to make a compleat Statue. This way of negation is more easie; we better understand what God is not, than what he is; and most of our knowledge of God, is by this way: As when we say God is infinite, immense, immutable, they are negatives: He hath no limits, is confined to no place, admits of no change. * When we remove from him what is inconsistent with his Being, we do more strongly assert his Being, and know more of him when we elevate him above all, and above our own capacity. And when we say God is a Spirit, 'tis a negation; he is not a Body; he consists not of various parts, extended one without and beyond another: He is not a Spirit so as our Souls are, to be the form of any Body: A Spirit, not as Angels and Souls are, but infinitely higher; we call him so, because in regard of our weakness, we have not any other term of excellency to express or conceive of him by: We transfer it to God in honour, because Spirit is the highest excellency in our nature: Yet we must apprehend God above any Spirit, since his Nature is so great, that he cannot be declared by human ſpeech, perceived by human ſenſe, or conceived by human underſtanding.

* Gamacheus Tom. 1. q. 3. Cap. 1. p. 42.

* Coccei. sum. Theol. cap. 8.

The ſecond thing, That God is a Spirit.

* Theſ. Sedan. part. 2. p. 1000. * Voſſius Idolol. lib. 2. cap. 1. Forbes Inſtrument l. 1. c. 36.

* Some among the Heathens imagined God to have a body; ſome thought him to have a body of Air, ſome a heavenly Body, ſome a human Body: * And many of them aſcribed bodies to their Gods; but bodies without blood, without corruption; bodies made up of the fineſt and thinneſt Atomes; ſuch bodies, which if compared with ours, were as no bodies. The Sadduces alſo, who denied all Spirits, and yet acknowledged a God muſt conclude him to be a Body and no Spirit. Some among Chriſtians have been of that opinion. Tertullian is charged by ſome, and excuſed by others: And ſome Monks of Egypt were ſo fierce for this Error, that they attempted to kill one Theophilus a Biſhop, for not being of that Judgment.

* Οὐκ ἄσεον * Plutarch. incorporalis ratio divinus ſpiritus Seneca.

But the wiſer Heathens were of another mind, and eſteemed it an unholy thing to have ſuch imaginations of God. And ſome Chriſtians have thought God only to be free from any thing of body, becauſe he is omnipreſent, immutable, he is only incorporeal and ſpiritual; all things elſe, even the Angels are clothed with bodies, though of a neater matter, and a more active frame than ours; a pure ſpiritual Nature they allowed to no Being but God. Scripture and Reaſon meet together to aſſert the Spirituality of God. Had God had the Lineaments of a Body, the Gentiles had not fallen under that accuſation of *changing his Glory into that of a Corruptible Man.

* Rom. 1. 23.

This is ſignified by the name God gives himſelf, Exod. 3. 14. I am that I am, a ſimple, pure, uncompounded Being, without any Created mixture; as infinitely above the being of Creatures, as above the conceptions of Creatures, Job 37. 23. Touching the Almighty, we cannot find him out. He is ſo much a Spirit, that he is the Father of Spirits, Heb. 12. 9. The Almighty Father is not of a Nature inferior to his Children: The Soul is a Spirit, it could not elſe exert actions without the aſſiſtance of the Body, as the act of Underſtanding it ſelf, and its own nature, the act of willing, and willing things againſt the incitements and intereſt of the Body: It could not elſe conceive of God, Angels and immaterial ſubſtances: It could not elſe be ſo active, as with one glance to fetch a compaſs from Earth to Heaven, and by a ſudden motion, to elevate the underſtanding from an earthly thought, to the thinking of things as high as the higheſt Heavens. If we have this opinion of our Souls which in the nobleneſs of their acts ſurmount the Body, without which the Body is but a dull unactive piece of clay; we muſt needs have a higher conception of God, than to clog him with any matter, though of a finer temper than ours: We muſt conceive of him by the perfections of our Souls, without the vileneſs of our Bodies. If God made Man according to his Image, we muſt raiſe our thoughts of God according to the nobleſt part of that Image, and imagine the Exemplar or Copy, not to come ſhort, but to exceed the thing copyed by it. God were not the moſt excellent ſubſtance, if he were not a Spirit: Spiritual ſubſtances are more excellent than bodily; the Soul of Man more excellent than other Animals; Angels more excellent than Men: They contain in their own nature, whatſoever dignity there is in the inferior Creatures. God muſt have therefore an excellency above all thoſe, and therefore is intirely remote from the conditions of a Body.

* Calov. Socin. Proflig. p. 129, 130.

* 'Tis a groſs conceit therefore to think that God is ſuch a Spirit as the Air is; for that is to be a body as the Air is, though it be a thin one; and if God were no more a Spirit than that, or than Angels, he would not be the moſt ſimple Being: * Yet ſome think that the ſpiritual Deity was repreſented by the Air in the Ark of the Teſtament. It was unlawful to repreſent him by any Image, that God had prohibited: Every thing about the Ark had a perticular ſignification: The Gold and other Ornaments about it ſignified ſomething of Chriſt, but were unfit to repreſent the Nature of God: A thing purely invitible and falling under nothing of ſenſe, could not repreſent him to the mind of Man: The Air in the Ark was the fitteſt, it repreſented the inviſibility of God, Air being imperceptible to our eyes. Air diffuſeth it ſelf through all parts of the World, it glides through ſecret paſſages into all Creatures, it fills the ſpace between Heaven and Earth; there is no place wherein God is not preſent.

* Amyrald Sup. Heb. 9. p. 146, &c.

To evidence this,

1. If

1. If God were not a Spirit, he could not be Creator. All multitude begins in, and is reduced to unity. As above multitude there is an abſolute unity; So above mixt Creatures, there is an abſolute ſimplicity: You cannot conceive number without conceiving the beginning of it in that which was not number, viz. a unite: You cannot conceive any mixture, but you muſt conceive ſome ſimple thing to be the Original and Baſis of it. The works of art, done by rational Creatures, have their Foundation in ſomething Spiritual. Every Artificer, Watch-maker, Carpenter hath a model in his own mind of the work he deſigns to frame: The material and outward Fabrick is ſquared according to an inward and Spiritual Idea. A Spiritual Idea ſpeaks a Spiritual faculty as the ſubject of it. God could not have an Idea of that vaſt number of Creatures he brought into being; if he had not a Spiritual Nature. * The wiſdom whereby the world was Created could never be the fruit of a Corporeal nature; ſuch natures are not capable of underſtanding and comprehending the things which are within the compaſs of their nature, much leſs of producing them: And therefore beaſts which have only Corporeal faculties, move to objects by the force of their ſenſe, and have no knowledg of things as they are comprehended by the underſtanding of Man. All acts of wiſdom ſpeak an intelligent and Spiritual agent: The effects of Wiſdom, goodneſs, power, are ſo great and admirable, that they beſpeak him a more perfect and eminent being, than can poſſibly be beheld under a bodily ſhape. Can a Corporeal ſubſtance put Wiſdom in the inward parts and give underſtanding to the heart * ?

* Amyral. moral Tom. 1. pa. 282.

* Job 38. 16.

2. If God were not a pure Spirit, he could not be one. If God had a body conſiſting of diſtinct members, as ours; or all of one nature, as the water and air are, yet he were then capable of diviſion, and therefore could not be entirely one. Either thoſe parts would be finite or infinite; if finite, they are not parts of God; for to be God and finite is a contradiction: If infinite, then there are as many infinites, as diſtinct members, and therefore as many Deities: Suppoſe this body had all parts of the ſame nature as air and water hath, every little part of air is as much air as the greateſt, and every little part of water is as much water as the Ocean; ſo every little part of God would be as much God as the whole; as many particular Deities to make up God, as little Atomes to compoſe a body: What can be more abſurd? If God had a body like a human body, and were compounded of body and Soul, of ſubſtance and quality, he could not be the moſt perfect unity; he would be made up of diſtinct parts, and thoſe of a diſtinct nature, as the members of a human body are: Where there is the greateſt unity, there muſt be the greateſt ſimplicity; but God is one: As he is free from any change, ſo he is void of any multitude, Deut. 6. 4. The Lord our God is one Lord:

3. If God had a body as we have, he would not be inviſible. Every material thing is not viſible: The Air is a body yet inviſible, but it is ſenſible; the cooling quality of it is felt by us at every breath, and we know it by our touch, which is the moſt materia ſenſe. Every body, that hath Members like to bodies, is viſible: But God is inviſible. * The Apoſtle reckons it amongſt his other perfections, 1 Tim. 1. 17. Now unto the King, Eternal, Immortal, Inviſible: He is inviſible to our ſenſe, which beholds nothing but material and coloured things; and incomprehenſible to our underſtanding that conceives nothing but what is finite. God is therefore a Spirit uncapable of being ſeen, and infinitely uncapable of being underſtood. If he be inviſible, he is alſo Spirttual. If he had a body, and hid it from our eyes, he might be ſaid not to be ſeen, but could not be ſaid to be inviſible. When we ſay a thing is viſible, we underſtand that it hath ſuch qualities which are the object of ſenſe, tho we may never ſee that, which in its own nature is to be ſeen. God hath no ſuch qualities as fall under the perception of our ſenſe. His works are viſible to us, but not his God-head. * The nature of a human body is to be ſeen and handled, Chriſt gives us ſuch a deſcription of it, Luke 24. 39. Handle me and ſee, for a Spirit hath not fleſh and bones as you ſee me have: But man hath been ſo far from ſeeing God, that it is impoſſible he can ſee him, 1 Tim. 6. 16. There is ſuch a diſproportion between an infinite object and a finite ſenſe and underſtanding, that it is utterly impoſſible either to behold or comprehend him. But if God had a body more luminous and glorious than that of the Sun, he would be as well viſible to us as the Sun, tho the immenſity of that light would dazle our eyes, and forbid any cloſe inſpection into him by the vertue of our ſenſe: We have ſeen the ſhape and figure of the Sun, but no man hath ever ſeen the ſhape of God. * If God had a body he were viſible, tho he might not perfectly and fully be ſeen by us.* As we ſee the Heavens, tho we ſee not the extenſion, latitude and greatneſs of them. Tho God hath manifeſted himſelf in a bodily ſhape, Gen. 18. 1. And elſewhere Jehovah appeared to Abraham: Yet the ſubſtance of God was not ſeen, no more than the ſubſtance of Angels was ſeen in their Apparitions to men. A body was formed to be made viſible by them, and ſuch actions done in that body, that ſpake the perſon that did them to be of a higher eminency than a bare Corporeal Creature: Sometimes a repreſentation is made to the inward ſenſe and imagination, as to Michaiah, * and to Iſa. 6. chap. 1. But they ſaw not the eſſence of God, but ſome Images and figures of him proportioned to their ſenſe or imagination. The eſſence of God no man ever ſaw, nor can ſee. Joh. 1. 18.

* Daille. in Tim.

* Rom. 1. 20.

* Joh. 5. 37.
* Goulart. de Dieu. pa. 94.

* 1 King. 22. 19.

* Nor doth it follow, that God hath a body, becauſe Jacob is ſaid to ſee God Face to Face, Gen. 32. 30. And Moſes had the like priviledge, Deut. 34. 10. This only ſignifies a fuller and clearer manifeſtation of God, by ſome repreſentations offered to the bodily ſenſe, or rather to the inward Spirit: For God tells Moſes he could not ſee his Face, Exod. 33. 20. And that none ever ſaw the ſimilitude of God, Deut. 4. 15. Were God a Corporeal ſubſtance he might in ſome meaſure be ſeen by Corporeal eyes.

* Goulart. de Dieu. pa. 95. 96.

4. If God were not a Spirit, he could not be Infinite. All bodies are of a finite nature: Every body is material, and every material thing is terminated. The Sun, a vaſt body hath abounded greatneſs: The Heavens of a mighty bulk, yet have their limits. If God had a body he muſt conſiſt of parts, thoſe parts would be bounded and limited, and whatſoever is limited is of a finite vertue, and therefore below an infinite nature. Reaſon therefore tells us, that the moſt excellent nature, as God is, cannot be of a Corporeal condition; becauſe of the limitation and other actions which belong to every body. God is infinite, for the Heaven of Heavens cannot contain him, 2 Chron. 2. 6. The largeſt Heavens, and thoſe imaginary ſpaces beyond the world, are no bounds to him. He hath an eſſence beyond the bounds of the World, and cannot be included in the vaſtneſs of the Heavens. If God be infinite, then he can have no parts in him; if he had, they muſt be finite, or infinite: Finite parts can never make up an infinite being. A veſſel of Gold of a pound weight cannot be made of the quantity of an ounce. Infinite parts they cannot be, becauſe then every part would be equal to the whole, as infinite as the whole, which is contradictory. We ſee in all things every part is leſs than the whole bulk that is compoſed of it: As every member of a man is leſs than the whole body of Man: If all the parts were finite, then God in his Eſſence were finite; and a finite God is not more excellent than a Creature: So that if God were not a Spirit, he could not be infinite.

5. If God were not a Spirit, he could not be an independent being. Whatſoever is compounded of many parts, depends either eſſentially or integrally upon thoſe parts; as the eſſence of a man depends upon the conjunction and union of his two main parts, his Soul, and Body; when they are ſeparated the eſſence of a man ceaſeth; and the perfection of a man depends upon every Member of the body; So that if one be wanting the perfection of the whole is wanting: As if a man hath loſt a limb, you call him not a perfect man; becauſe that part is gone upon which his perfection, as an intire man, did depend: If God therefore had a body, the perfection of the Deity would depend upon every part of that body; and the more parts he were compounded of, the more his dependency would be multiplyed according to the number of thoſe parts of the body: For that which is compounded of many parts is more dependent than that which is compounded of fewer.

And becauſe God would be a dependent being if he had a body, he could not be the firſt being; for the compounding parts are in order of nature before that which is compounded by them; as the Soul and Body are before the man which reſults from the union of them. If God had parts and bodily Members as we have, or any compoſition, the Eſſence of God would reſult from thoſe parts, and thoſe parts be ſuppoſed to be before God. For that which is a part, is before that whoſe part it is. As in Artificial things you may conceive it: All the parts of a VVatch or Clock, are in time before that VVatch which is made by ſetting thoſe parts together. In natural tural things, you must suppose the Members of a Body framed, before you can call it a Man: So that the parts of this body are before that which is constituted by them. We can conceive no other of God, if he were not a pure, intire, unmixed Spirit: If he had distinct parts, he would depend upon them; those parts would be before him; his Essence would be the effect of those distinct parts, and so he would not be absolutely and intirely the first Being: But he is so, Isa. 44. 6. I am the first and I am the last. He is the first; nothing is before him: Whereas if he had bodily parts, and those finite, it would follow, God is made up of those parts which are not God; and that which is not God, is in order of Nature before that which is God. So that we see if God were not a Spirit, he could not be independent.

6. If God where not a Spirit, he were not immutable and unchangeable. His immutability depends upon his simplicity. He is unchangeable in his Essence, because he is a pure and unmixed spiritual Being. Whatsoever is compounded of parts, may be divided into those parts, and resolved into those distinct parts which make up and constitute the Nature. Whatsoever is compounded, is changeable in its own nature, though it should never be changed. Adam, who was constituted of Body and Soul, had he stood in Innocence, had not died; there had been no separation made between his Soul and Body whereof he was constituted, and his Body had not resolved into those principles of Dust from whence it was extracted. Yet in his own nature he was dissoluble into those distinct parts whereof he was compounded: And so the glorified Saints in Heaven, after the Resurrection, and the happy meeting of their Souls and Bodies in a new Marriage knot, shall never be dissolved; yet in their own nature they are mutable and dissoluble, and cannot be otherwise, because they are made up of such distinct parts that may be separated in their own nature, unless sustained by the grace of God: They are immutable by Will, the Will of God, not by Nature. God is immutable by Nature as well as Will: As he hath a necessary Existence, so he hath a necessary Unchangeableness, Mal. 3. 6. I the Lord change not. He is as unchangeable in his Essence, as in his Veracity and Faithfulness: They are perfections belonging to his Nature. But if he were not a pure Spirit, he could not be immutable by Nature.

7. If God were not a pure Spirit, He could not be Omnipresent. He is in Heaven above, and the Earth below: * He fills Heaven and Earth. * The Divine Essence is at once in Heaven and Earth; but it is impossible a Body can be in two places at one and the same time. Since God is every where, he must be Spiritual. Had he a Body, he could not penetrate all things; he would be circumscribed in place. He could not be every where but in parts, not in the whole; one member in one place, and another in another; for to be confined to a particular place, is the property of a Body: But since he is diffused through the whole World; higher than Heaven, deeper than Hell; longer than the Earth, broader than the Sea; * he hath not any corporeal matter. If he had a Body wherewith to fill Heaven and Earth, there could be no Body besides his own: 'Tis the Nature of Bodies to bound one another, and hinder the extending of one another. Two Bodies cannot be in the same place in the same point of Earth, one excludes the other: And it will follow hence, that we are nothing, no substances, meer illusions; there could be no place for any Body else.* If his Body were as big as the World; as it must be, if with that he filled Heaven and Earth, there would not be room for him to move a hand or a foot, or extend a finger; for there would be no place remaining for the motion.

* Deut. 4. 39. * Jer. 23. 24.

* Job 11. 8.

* Gamacheus Theol. Tom. 1. Quæſt. 3. C. 1.

8. If God were not a Spirit, he could not be the most perfect Being. The more perfect any thing is in the rank of Creatures, the more Spiritual and simple it is, as Gold is the more pure and perfect that hath least mixture of other Metals If God were not a Spirit, there would be Creatures of a more excellent Nature than God; as Angels and Souls, which the Scripture calls Spirits, in opposition to Bodies. There is more of perfection in the first notion of a Spirit, than in the notion of a Body. God cannot be less perfect than his Creatures, and contribute an excellency of being to them which he wants himself. If Angels and Souls possess such an excellency, and God want that excellency; he would be less than his Creatures, and excellency of the Effect, would exceed the excellency of the Cause. But every Creature, even the highest Creature, is infinitely short of the perfection of God; for whatsoever excellency they have, is finite and limited; 'tis but a spark from the Sun, a drop drop from the Ocean; but God is unboundedly perfect in the higheſt manner, without any limitation; and therefore above Spirits, Angels, the higheſt Creatures that were made by him: An infinite ſublimity, a pure act, to which nothing can be added, from which nothing can be taken. *In him there is light and no darkneſs, ſpirituality without any matter, perfection without any ſhadow or taint of imperfection: Light pierceth into all things, preſerves its own purity, and admits of no mixture of any thing elſe with it.

* 1 John 1. 5.

Queſtion. It may be ſaid, If God be a Spirit, and it is impoſſible he can be otherwiſe than a Spirit; how comes God ſo often to have ſuch Members as we have in our Bodies, aſcribed to him; not only a Soul, but particular bodily parts; as heart, arms, hands, eyes, ears, face and back-parts? And how is it that he is never called a Spirit in plain words, but in this Text by our Saviour?

Anſw. 'Tis true, many parts of the Body, and natural affections of the human nature, are reported of God in Scripture. Head, * Eyes and Eye-lids, * Apple of the Eye, Mouth, &c. our Affections alſo, Grief, Joy, Anger, &c. But it is to be conſidered,

* Dan. 7. 9.
* Pſal. 11. 4.

1. That this is in condeſcenſion to our weakneſs. God being deſirous to make himſelf known to Man, whom he created for his Glory, humbles as it were his own Nature to ſuch repreſentations, as may ſute and aſſiſt the capacity of the Creature: Since by the condition of our nature nothing erects a notion of it ſelf in our underſtanding, but as it is conducted in by our ſenſe. God hath ſerved himſelf of thoſe things which are moſt expoſed to our ſenſe, moſt obvious to our underſtandings, to give us ſome acquaintance with his own Nature, and thoſe things which otherwiſe we were not capable of having any notion of. As our Souls are linkt with our Bodies, ſo our knowledge is linkt with our ſenſe; that we can ſcarce imagine any thing at firſt but under a corporal form and figure, till we come by great attention to the Object, to make by the help of reaſon, a ſeparation of the ſpiritual ſubſtance from the corporeal fancy, and conſider it in its own nature. We are not able to conceive a Spirit, without ſome kind of reſemblance to ſomething below it; nor underſtand the actions of a Spirit, without conſidering the operations of a human Body in its ſeveral Members. As the Glories of another Life are ſignified to us by the pleaſures of this; ſo the Nature of God, by a gracious condeſcenſion to our capacities, is ſignified to us by a likeneſs to our own. The more familiar the things are to us which God uſes to this purpoſe, the more proper they are to teach us what he intends by them.

* Loquitur lex ſecund. ling. filiorum hominum, was the H. ſaying.

Anſw. 2. All ſuch repreſentation are to ſignifie the acts of God, as they bear ſome likeneſs to thoſe, which we perform by thoſe members he aſcribes to himſelf. So that thoſe members aſcribed to him, rather note his viſible operations to us, than his inviſible Nature; and ſignifie that God doth ſome works like to thoſe which men do, by the aſſiſtance of thoſe organs of their Bodies. * So the wiſdom of God is called his Eye, becauſe he knows that with his mind, which we ſee with our eyes. The efficiency of God is called his Hand and Arm; becauſe as we act with our hands, ſo doth God with his Power. The divine Efficacies are ſignified: By his eyes and ears, we underſtand his Omniſcience; by his face, the manifeſtation of his Favour; by his mouth the revelation of his Will; by his noſtrils, the acceptation of our Prayers; by his bowels, the tenderneſs of his Compaſſion; by his heart, the ſincerity of his Affections; by his hand, the ſtrength of his Power; by his feet, the unbiquity of his Preſence. And in this, he intends inſtruction and comfort: By his eyes he ſignifies his watchfulneſs over us: By his ears, his readineſs to hear the crys of the oppreſſed: * By his Arm, his Power; an Arm to deſtroy his Enemies, and an Arm to relieve his People. * All thoſe attributed to God to ſignifie divine actions, which he doth without bodily organs, as we do with them.

* Amyral. de Trin. p. 218, 219.

* Pſal. 34. 15.

* Iſa. 51. 9.

3. Conſider alſo, that only thoſe members which are the inſtruments of the nobleſt actions, and under that conſideration, are uſed by him to repreſent a notion of him to our minds. Whatſoever is perfect and excellent, is aſcribed to him, but nothing that ſavours of imperfection. * The heart is aſcribed to him, it being the principle of vital actions, to ſignifie the Life that he hath in himſelf: Watchful and diſcerning eyes, not ſleepy and lazy ones: A mouth to reveal his Will, not to take in food. To eat and ſleep

* Epiſcop. inſtitu. l. 4. § 3. c. 3.

are

are never aſcribed to him; nor thoſe parts that belong to the preparing or tranſmitting nouriſhment to the ſeveral parts of the body, as ſtomach, liver, reins, nor bowels, under that conſideration, but as they are ſignificant of compaſſion; but only thoſe parts are aſcribed to him whereby we acquire knowledge, as eyes and ears, the Organs of learning and wiſdom: Or to Communicate it to others, as the mouth, lips, tongue, as they are Inſtruments of ſpeaking, not of taſting: Or thoſe parts which ſignifie ſtrength and power, or whereby we perform the actions of Charity for the relief of others: Taſt, and touch, ſenſes that extend no further than to Corporeal things, and are the groſſeſt of all the ſenſes, are never aſcribed to him,

* It were worth conſideration, whither this deſcribing God by the Members of an human Body were ſo much figuratively to be underſtood, as with reſpect to the incarnation of our Saviour, who was to aſſume the human nature and all the Members of a human body.

* Tis Zanchie's. obſervation Tom. 2. de natura Dei lib. 1. cap. 4. Theſ. 9.

Aſaph ſpeaking in the perſon of God, Pſal. 78.1. I will open my mouth in Parables: In regard of God it is to be underſtood figuratively, but in regard of Chriſt literally, to whom it is applied, Matt. 13. 34, 35. And that Apparition, Iſa. 6. Which was the appearance of Jehovah, is applied to Chriſt, John 12. 40, 41.

* After the report of the Creation, and the forming of man, we read of Gods ſpeaking to him, but not of Gods appearing to him in any viſible ſhape: A voice might be formed in the air to give man notice of his duty; ſome way of information he muſt have, what poſitive Laws he was to obſerve, beſides that Law which was engraven in his nature, which we call the Law of nature: And without a voice the knowledge of the Divine Will could not be ſo conveniently communicated to man: Tho God was heard in a voice, he was not ſeen in a ſhape: But after the fall we ſeveral times read of his appearing in ſuch a form. Tho we read of his ſpeaking before mans committing of ſin, yet not of his walking, which is more Corporeal, till afterwards: * [Tho God would not have man believe him to be Corporeal, yet he judged it expedient to give ſome prenotices of that Divine incarnation which he had promiſed.]

* Amyrald. Moral. Tom. 1. pa. 293, 294.

* Gen. 3. 8.

* Amyrald.

5. Therefore we muſt not conceive of the viſible Deity according to the letter of ſuch expreſſions, but the true intent of them. Tho the Scripture ſpeaks of his eyes and arms, yet it denies them to be arms of fleſh. * We muſt not conceive of God according to the Letter, but the deſign of the Metaphor. When we hear things deſcribed by Metaphorical expreſſions for the clearing them up to our fancy, we conceive not of them under that garb, but remove the vail by an act of our reaſon: When Chriſt is called a Sun, a Vine, Bread, is any ſo ſtupid as to conceive him to be a Vine with material branches and Cluſters; or be of the ſame nature with a Loaf? But the things deſigned by ſuch Metaphors are obvious to the conception of a mean underſtanding. If we would conceive God to have a body like a man, becauſe he deſcribes himſelf ſo, we may conceit him to be like a Bird, becauſe he is mentioned with wings; * or like a Lyon or Leopard, becauſe he likens himſelf to them in the Acts of his ſtrength and fury. * He is called a rock, a horn, fire, to note his ſtrength and wrath: If any be ſo ſtupid as to think God to be really ſuch, they would make him not only a man, but worſe than a Monſter.

* Job. 10. 4. 2 Chron. 32. 8.

* Pſal. 36. 7. * Hoſ. 13. 7, 8.

* Onkelos, the Chalde Paraphraſt upon parts of the Scripture, was ſo tender of expreſſing the Notion of any Corporiety in God, that when he meets with any expreſſions of that nature, he tranſlates them according to the true intent of them; as when God is ſaid to deſcend, Gen. 11. 5. Which implies a local motion, a motion from one place to another, he tranſlates it, and God revealed himſelf. We ſhould conceive of God according to the deſign of the expreſſions: When we read of his eyes, we ſhould conceive his Omniſcience; of his hand his power; of his ſitting, his immutability; of his Throne, his Majeſty; and conceive of him as ſurmounting, not only the groſſneſs of bodies, but the Spiritual excellency of the moſt dignified Creatures; ſomething ſo perfect, great, ſpiritual, as nothing can be conceived higher and purer.

* Maimon. More Nevoc. par. 1. cap. 27.

* Chriſt, ſaith one, is truly Deus figuratus; and for his ſake, was it more eaſily permitted to the Jews to think of God in the ſhape of a man.

* Mores conjectura cabaliſtica, pa. 121.

Uſe. If God be a pure Spiritual being, then

1. Man is not the Image of God, according to his external bodily form and figure.

The

The image of God in man consisted not in what is seen, but in what is not seen; not in the conformation of the members, but rather in the Spiritual faculties of the Soul; or most of all in the holy endowments of those faculties, Eph. 4. 24. That ye put on the new man which after God is Created in righteousness and true holiness. * The image which is restored by redeeming grace, was the image of God by Original nature. The image of God cannot be in that part which is common to us with beasts, but rather in that wherein we excell all living Creatures, in reason, understanding, and an immortal Spirit. God expresly saith, that none saw a similitude of him, Deut. 4. 15, 16. which had not been true, if man in regard of his body had been the image and similitude of God; for then a figure of God had been seen every day, as often as we saw a man or beheld our selves. Nor would the Apostles argument stand good, Acts 17. 29. That the Godhead is not like to stone graven by art, if we were not the off-spring of God, and bore the stamp of his nature in our Spirits rather than our bodies. * It was a fancy of Eugubinus, that when God set upon the actual Creation of man, he took a bodily form for an Exemplar of that which he would express in his work, and therefore that the words of Moses * are to be understood of the body of man; because there was in Man such a shape which God had then assumed. To let alone Gods forming himself a body for that work as a groundless fancy; Man can in no wise be said to be the image of God, in regard of the substance of his body; but beasts may as well be said to be made in the Image of God, whose bodies have the same Members as the body of Man for the most part, and excell Men in the acuteness of the senses and swiftness of their motion, agility of body, greatness of strength, and in some kind of ingenuities also, wherein Man hath been a Scholar to the brutes, and beholden to their skill. The Soul comes neerest the nature of God, as being a Spiritual substance; yet considered singly in regard of its Spiritual substance, cannot well be said to be the image of God: A beast, because of its Corporiety, may as well be called the image of a Man; for there is a greater similitude between man and a brute in the rank of bodies, than there can be between God and the highest Angels, in the rank of Spirits. If it doth not consist in the substance of the Soul, much less can it in any similitude of the body. This Image consisted partly in the state of man, as he had dominion over the Creatures; partly in the nature of man as he was an intelligent being, and thereby was capable of having a grant of that Dominion; but principally in the conformity of the Soul with God in the frame of his Spirit, and the holiness of his actions. Not at all in the figure and form of his body Physically, tho morally there might be, as there was a rectitude in the body, as an instrument to conform to the holy motions of the Soul, as the holiness of the Soul sparkled in the actions and members of the body. If man were like God because he hath a body, whatsoever hath a body, hath some resemblance to God, and may be said to be in part his image: But the truth is, the essence of all Creatures cannot be an image of the immense essence of God.

2. If God be a pure Spirit; 'Tis unreasonable to frame any Image or picture of God. * Some Heathens have been wiser in this than some Christians: Pythagoras forbad his Scholars to engrave any shape of him upon a Ring, because he was not to be comprehended by sense, but conceived only in our minds; our hands are as unable to fashion him as our eyes to see him. * The ancient Romans worshipped their Gods 170. years before any material representations of them; * and the Ancient Idolatrous Germans thought it a wicked thing to represent God in a human shape. Yet some, and those no Romanists, labour to defend the making Images of God in the resemblance of man; because he is so represented in Scripture, he may be, * saith one conceived so in our minds and figured so to our sense. If this were a good reason, why may he not be pictured as a Lyon, Horn, Eagle, Rock, since he is under such Metaphors shadowed to us? The same ground there is for the one as for the other: What tho man be a nobler Creature, God hath no more the body of a man, than that of an Eagle; and some perfections in other Creatures represent some excellencies in his nature and actions, which cannot be figur'd by a human shape, as strength by the Loyn, swiftness and readiness by the wings of the Bird. But God hath absolutely prohibited the making any Image whatsoever of him, and that with terrible threatnings, Exod. 20. 5. I the Lord am a jealous God visiting the iniquites of the Fathers upon their Children, and Deut. 5. 8, 9. After God had given the Israelites the

* Col. 3. 10.

* Petav. Theol. Dog. Tom. 1. lib. 2. cap. 1. pa. 104.
* Gen. 1. 26.

* Jamblyc. protrept. cap. 21. Symb. 24.

* Austin de Civitat. Dei lib. 4. cap. 31. out of Varro.
* Tacitus.
* Gerhard loc. Comun. vol. 4. Exegesis de naturâ Dei cap. 8. § 1.

the Commandment wherein he forbad them to have any other Gods before him, he forbids all figuring of him by the hand of man; not only Images, but any likneſs of him either by things in Heaven, in the earth, or in the water. How often doth he diſcover his indignation by the Prophets, againſt them that offer to mould him in a Creature form? This Law was not to ſerve a particular diſpenſation or to endure a particular time, but it was a declaration of his Will, invariable in all places and all times; being founded upon the immutable nature of his being, and therefore agreeable to the Law of nature; otherwiſe not chargeable upon the Heathens. And therefore when God had declared his nature and his works in a ſtately and Majeſtick eloquence, he demands of them, To whom they would liken him, or what likeneſs they would compare unto him? Iſa. 40. 18. Where they could find any thing that would be a lively image and reſemblance of his infinite excellency? Founding it upon the infiniteneſs of his nature, which neceſſarily implies the Spirituality of it. God is infinitely above any Statue; and thoſe that think to draw God by a ſtroak of a penſil, or form him by the engravings of Art, are more ſtupid than the Statues themſelves.

To ſhew the unreaſonableneſs of it; Conſider,

1. 'Tis impoſſible to faſhion any image of God. If our more capacious Souls cannot graſp his nature, our weaker ſenſe cannot frame his image: Tis more poſſible of the two, to comprehend him in our minds, than to frame him in an Image to our ſenſe. He inhabits inacceſſible light: As it is impoſſible for the eye of man to ſee him, 'tis impoſſible for the art of man to paint him upon walls, and carve him out of Wood. None knows him but himſelf, none can deſcribe him but himſelf. * Can we draw a figure of our own Souls, and expreſs that part of our ſelves, wherein we are moſt like to God? Can we extend this to any bodily figure and divide it into parts? How can we deal ſo with the Original Copy, whence the firſt draught of our ſouls was taken, and which is infinitely more ſpiritual than Men or Angels? No corporeal thing can repreſent a ſpiritual ſubſtance; there is no proportion in nature between them, God is a ſimple, infinite, immenſe, eternal, inviſible, incorruptable being: A Statue is a compounded, finite, limited, temporal, viſible and corruptible body. God is a living Spirit; but a ſtatue, nor ſees, nor hears, nor perceives any thing. But ſuppoſe God had a body, 'tis impoſſible to mould an Image of it in the true glory of that body: Can the ſtatue of an excellent Monarch repreſent the Majeſty and air of his countenance, tho made by the skilfulleſt workman in the World? If God had a body in ſome meaſure ſuted to his excellency, were it poſſible for man to make an exact Image of him, who cannot picture the light, heat, motion, magnitude and dazling property of the ſun? The excellency of any Corporeal nature of the leaſt Creature, the temper, inſtinct, artifice, are beyond the power of a Carving tool; much more is God.

* Cocceius ſum. Theol. cap. 9. pa. 47. § 35.

2. To make any Corporeal repreſentation of God is unworthy of God. 'Tis a diſgrace to his nature. Whoſoever thinks a Carnal corruptible Image to be fit for a repreſentation of God, renders God no better than a Carnal and Corporeal being. Tis a kind of debaſing an Angel, who is a ſpiritual nature, to repreſent him in a bodily ſhape, who is as far removed from any fleſhlineſs as Heaven from Earth? much more to degrade the glory of the Divine nature to the lineaments of a man. The whole ſtock of Images is but a lie of God; Jer. 10. 8, 14. A Doctrine of vanities and falſhood: It repreſents him in a falſe * garb to the world, and ſinks his glory into that of a Corruptible Creature. * It impairs the reverence of God in the minds of men, and by degrees may debaſe mens apprehenſions of God, and be a means to make them believe he is ſuch a one as themſelves; and that not being free from the figure, he is not alſo free from the imperfections of their bodies. Corporeal Images of God were the fruits of baſe imaginations of him; and as they ſprung from them, ſo they contribute to a greater corruption of the notions of the Divine nature: The Heathens begun their firſt repreſentations of him by the Image of a corruptible Man, then of birds, till they deſcended, not only to four footed beaſts, but creeping things, even ſerpents, as the Apoſtle ſeems to intimate in his enumeration, Rom. 1 23. it had been more honourable to have continued in human repreſentation of him, than have ſunk ſo low as beaſts and ſerpents, the baſer Images; tho the firſt had been infinitely unworthy of him, he being more above a man, though the nobleſt Creature, than Man is above a Worm, a Toad, or the moſt deſpicable creeping thing upon the earth. To think we can make an Image of God of a piece of Marble, or an Ingot of Gold is a greater debaſing of him, than it would be of a great Prince, if you ſhould repreſent him in the ſtatue of a Frog. When the Iſraelites repreſented God by a Calf, 'tis ſaid, they ſinned a great ſin, Exod. 32. 31. And the ſin of Jeroboam, who intended only a repreſentation of God by the Calves at Dan and Bethel, is called more emphatically, * the wickedneſs of your wickedneſs, the very skum and dregs of wickneſs. As men debaſed God by this, ſo God debaſed men for this; he degraded the Iſraelites into Captivity under the worſt of their Enemies, and puniſhed the Heathens with ſpiritual Judgements, as uncleanneſs through the luſts of their own hearts, Rom. 1 24. Which is repeated again in other expreſſions, v. 26, 27. As a meet recompence for their diſgracing the ſpiritual nature of God. Had God been like to man, they had not offended in it: But I mention this, to ſhew a probable reaſon of thoſe baſe luſts which are in the midſt of us, that have ſcarce been exceeded by any Nation. viz. the unworthy and unſpiritual conceits of God, which are as much a debaſing of him as material Images were when they were more rife in the world; and may be as well the cauſe of thoſe ſpiritual Judgements upon men, as the worſhipping molten and carved Images were the cauſe of the ſame upon the Heathen.

* Rom. 1. 25.

* Rom. 1. 23.

* Hoſea 10. 15. דעתרעתכם

3. Yet this is natural to Man. Wherein we may ſee the contrariety of Man to God. Though God be a Spirit, yet there is nothing Man is more prone to, than to repreſent him under a corporeal form. The moſt famous Guides of the Heathen world have faſhioned him, not only according to the more honourable Images of men, but beaſtialized him in the form of a Brute. The Egyptians, whoſe Country was the School of Learning to Greece, were notoriouſly guilty of this brutiſhneſs in worſhing an Ox for an Image of their God; and the Philiſtines their Dagon in a figure compoſed of the Image of a Woman and a Fiſh: * Such repreſentations were ancient in the oriental parts. The Gods of Laban that he accuſeth Jacob of ſtealing from him, are ſuppoſed to be little figures of men. * Such was the Iſraelites Golden-Calf; their worſhip was not terminated on the Image, but they worſhipped the true God under that repreſentation: They could not be ſo brutiſh as to call a Calf their deliverer, and give to him a great Tittle, (theſe be thy Gods O Iſrael, which brought thee up out of the Land of Egypt, Exod. 32. 4.) Or that which they knew belonged to the true God, the God of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob.* They knew the Calf to be formed of their Ear-rings; but they had conſecrated it to God as a repreſentation of him: Though they choſe the form of the Egyptian Idol; yet they knew that Apis, Oſiris and Iſis the Gods the Egyptians adored in that figure, had not wrought their redemption from Bondage, but would have uſed their force, had they been poſſeſſed of any, to have kept them under the Yoke, rather than have freed them from it: The Feaſt alſo which they celebrated before that Image, is called by Aaron the Feaſt of the Lord, Exod. 32. 5. A Feaſt to Jehovah, the incommunicable name of the Creator of the world: 'Tis therefore evident, that both the Prieſt and the people pretended to ſerve the true God, not any falſe divinity of Egypt: That God who had reſcued them from Egypt with a mighty hand, divided the Red-ſea before them, deſtroyed their Enemies, conducted them, fed them by miracle, ſpoken to them from Mount Sinai, and amazed them by his Thundrings and Lightnings when he inſtructed them by his Law; a God they could not ſo ſoon forget. And with this repreſenting God by that Image, they are charged by the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 106. 19, 20. They made a Calf in Horeb, and changed their glory into their ſimilitude of an Ox that eateth graſs: They changed their glory, that is, God the glory of Iſrael; ſo that they took this figure for the Image of the true God of Iſrael, their own God; not the God of any other Nation in the World. Jeroboam intended no other by his Calves, but Symbols of the preſence of the true God, inſtead of the Ark and the propitiatory which remained among the Jews. We ſee the inclination of our Natures in the practice of the Iſraelites; a People choſen out the whole World to bear up Gods name, and preſerve his glory: And in that the Images of God were ſo ſoon ſet up in the Chriſtian Church; and to this day, the picture of God in the ſhape of an old man, is viſible in the Temples of the Romaniſts.

* Daille ſuper Cor. 1.10. Ser. 3.

* Gen. 31. 30, 34.

* Gen. 3. 16, 17.

'Tis prone to the Nature of Man.

4. To

4. To repreſent God by a corporeal Image, and to Worſhip him in and by that Image, is Idolatry. Though the Iſraelites did not acknowledge the Calf to be God, nor intended a Worſhip to any of the Egyptian Deities by it; but worſhipped that God in it, who had ſo lately and miraculouſly delivered them from a cruel Servitude; and could not in natural reaſon judge him to be clothed with a bodily ſhape, much leſs to be like an Ox that eateth graſs; yet the Apoſtle brings no leſs a charge againſt them, than that of Idolatry, 1 Cor. 10. 7. He calls them Idolaters, who before that Calf kept a Feaſt to Jehovah, citing Exod. 32. 5. Suppoſe we could make ſuch an Image of God as might perfectly repreſent him; yet ſince God hath prohibited it, ſhall we be wiſer than God? He hath ſufficiently manifeſted himſelf in his Works without Images: He is ſeen in the Creatures; more particularly in the Heavens, which declare his Glory. His Works are more excellent repreſentations of him, as being the works of his own hands, than any thing that is the product of the Art of Man. His Glory ſparkles in the Heavens, Sun, Moon and Stars, as being magnificent pieces of his Wiſdom and Power; yet the kiſſing the hand to the ſun or the Heavens, as repreſentative of the excellency and Majeſty of God, is Idolatry in Scripture account, and a denial of God; * a proſtituting the glory of God to a Creature: * Either the worſhip is terminated on the Image it ſelf, and then it is confeſſed by all to be Idolatry, becauſe it is a giving that worſhip to a Creature which is the ſole right of God; or not terminated in the Image, but in the Object repreſented by it; 'tis then a fooliſh thing; we may as well terminate our worſhip on the true Object without, as with an Image. An erected ſtatue is no ſign or ſymbol of Gods ſpecial preſence, as the Ark, Tabernacle, Temple were. It is no part of divine inſtitution; has no authority of a Command to ſupport it; no Cordial of a promiſe to encourage it; and the Image being infinitely diſtant from, and below the Majeſty and ſpirituality of God, cannot conſtitute one object of Worſhip with him. To put a Religious Character upon any Image formed by the Corrupt imagination of Man, as a repreſentation of the inviſible and ſpiritual Deity; is to think the Godhead to be like ſilver and gold, or ſtone graven by art and mans device. *

* Job 31. 26, 27, 28. Chin. Predict. part. 2. p. 252. * Lawſon. Body Divin. P. 161.

* Act. 17. 29

3. This Doctrine will direct us in our conceptions of God, as a pure perfect ſpirit, than which nothing can be imagined more perfect, more pure, more ſpiritual.

1. We cannot have an adequate or ſutable conception of God: He dwells in inacceſſible light; inacceſſible to the acuteneſs of our fancy, as well as the weakneſs of our ſenſe. If we could have thoughts of him, as high and excellent as his Nature; our conceptions muſt be as infinite as his Nature. All our imaginations of him cannot repreſent him, becauſe every created ſpecies is finite; it cannot therefore repreſent to us a full and ſubſtantial notion of an infinite Being. We cannot ſpeak or think worthily enough of him, who is greater than our words, vaſter than our underſtandings. Whatſoever we ſpeak or think of God, is handed firſt to us by the notice we have of ſome perfection in the Creature, and explains to us ſome particular excellency of God rather than the fulneſs of his Eſſence. No Creature, nor all Creatures together, can furniſh us with ſuch a magnificent notion of God, as can give us a clear view of him. Yet God in his word is pleaſed to ſtep below his own excellency, and point us to thoſe excellences in his works, whereby we may aſcend to the knowledge of thoſe excellences which are in his Nature. But the Creatures, whence we draw our leſſons being finite, and our underſtandings being finite, 'tis utterly impoſſible to have a notion of God commenſurate to the immenſity and ſpirituality of his being. [* God is not like to viſible Creatures, nor is there any proportion between him and the moſt ſpiritual.] We cannot have a full notion of a ſpiritual Nature; much leſs can we have of God, who is a ſpirit above ſpirits. No ſpirit can clearly repreſent him: The Angels that are great Spirits, are bounded in their extent, finite in their being, and of a mutable Nature.

* Amyrald Moral. Tom. 1. p. 289.

Yet though we cannot have a ſutable conception of God, we muſt not content our ſelves without any conception of him. 'Tis our ſin not to endeavour after a true notion of him: 'Tis our ſin to reſt in a mean and low notion of him, when our reaſon tells us we are capable of having higher: But if we aſcend as high as we can, though we ſhall then come ſhort of a ſutable notion of him; this is not our ſin, but our weakneſs. God is infinitely ſuperior to the choiceſt conceptions; not only of a ſinner, but of a Creature. If all conceptions of God below the true nature of God were ſin, there is not a holy Angel in Heaven free from ſin; becauſe tho they are the moſt capacious Creatures, yet they cannot have ſuch a notion of an infinite being as is fully ſutable to his nature, unleſs they were infinite as he himſelf is.

2. But however, we muſt by no means conceive of God under a human or Corporeal ſhape. Since we cannot have conceptions honourable enough for his nature, we muſt take heed we entertain not any which may debaſe his nature: Tho we cannot comprehend him as he is, we muſt be careful not to fancy him to be what he is not. 'Tis a vain thing to conceive him with human lineaments: We muſt think higher of him, than to aſcribe to him ſo mean a ſhape: We deny his Spirituality when we fancy him under ſuch a form: He is ſpiritual, and between that which is Spiritual and that which is Corporeal, there is no reſemblance. * Indeed Daniel ſaw God in a human form, Daniel. 7. 9. The Ancient of Days did ſit, whoſe garment was white as ſnow, and the hairs of his head like pure Wool; he is deſcribed as coming to Judgement; 'tis not meant of Chriſt probably, becauſe Chriſt ver. 13. is called the Son of man coming near to the Ancient of days. This is not the proper ſhape of God, for no man hath ſeen his ſhape. It was a viſion wherein ſuch repreſentations were made, as were accommodated to the inward ſenſe of Daniel; Daniel ſaw him in a rapture or extaſie, wherein outward ſenſes are of no uſe: God is deſcribed, not as he is in himſelf, of a human form, but in regard of his fitneſs to Judge: White notes the purity and ſimplicity of the Divine nature: Ancient of days in regard of his eternity; white hair in regard of his prudence and wiſdom, which is more eminent in age than youth, and more fit to diſcern cauſes and to diſtinguiſh between right and wrong. Viſions are riddles and muſt not be underſtood in a literal ſenſe. We are to watch againſt ſuch determinate conceptions of God. Vain imaginations do eaſily infeſt us; Tinder will not ſooner take fire than our natures kindle into wrong Notions of the Divine Majeſty. We are very apt to faſhion a God like our ſelves: We muſt therefore look upon ſuch repreſentions of God, as accommodated to our weakneſs: And no more think them to be literal deſcriptions of God, as he is in himſelf, than we will think the image of the Sun in the water to be the true ſun in the Heavens. We may indeed conceive of Chriſt as man, who hath in Heaven the veſtment of our nature, and his Deus figuratus, tho we cannot conceive the God-head under a human ſhape.

* Epiſc. inſtitut. li. 4. § 2. c. 17.

1. To have ſuch a fancy is to diſparage and wrong God. A Corporeal fancy of God is as ridiculous in it ſelf, and as injurious to God as a wooden ſtatue. The capricio's of our imagination are often more monſtrous than the images which are the works of art: 'Tis as irreligious to meaſure Gods eſſence by our line, his perfections by our imperfections, as to meaſure his thoughts and actings by the weakneſs and unworthineſs of our own. This is to limit an infinite eſſence, and pull him down to our ſcanty meaſures, and render that which is unconceivably above us, equal with us. 'Tis impoſſible we can conceive God after the manner of a body, but we muſt bring him down to the proportion of a body, which is to diminiſh his glory, and ſtoop him below the dignity of his nature. God is a pure ſpirit, he hath nothing of the nature and tincture of a body; whoſoever therefore conceives of him as having a bodily form, tho he fancy the moſt beautiful and comely body, inſtead of owning his dignity, detracts from the ſupereminent excellency of his nature and bleſſedneſs. When men fancy God like themſelves in their Corporeal nature, they will ſoon make a progreſs, and aſcribe to him their corrupt nature; and while they cloath him with their bodies, inveſt him alſo in the infirmites of them. God is a jealous God, very ſenſible of any diſgrace, and will be as much incenſed againſt an inward Idolatry as an outward: That * Command which forbad Corporeal images, would not indulge carnal imaginations, ſince the nature of God is as much wronged by unworthy images erected in the fancy as by ſtatues carved out of ſtone or metals: One as well as the other is a deſerting of our true ſpouſe and committing Adultery, one with a material image, and the other with a carnal Notion of God. Since God humbles himſelf to our apprehenſions, we ſhould not debaſe him in thinking him to be that in his nature, which he makes only a reſemblnnce of himſelf to us.

* Exod. 20. 4.

2. To have ſuch fancies of God, will obſtruct and pollute our Worſhip of him. How is it poſſible to give him a right worſhip, of whom we have ſo debaſing a Notion? We ſhall never think a corporeal Deity, worthy of a dedication of our Spirits. The hating Inſtruction, and caſting Gods word behind the back, is charged upon the imagination they had, that God was ſuch a one as themſelves, Pſal. 50. 17, 21. Many of the wiſer Heathens did not judge their Statues to be their Gods, or their Gods to be like their Statues; but ſuted them to their politick deſigns; and judged them a good invention to keep people within the bounds of Obedience and Devotion, by ſuch viſible figures of them, which might imprint a reverence and fear of thoſe Gods upon them: But theſe were falſe meaſures: A deſpiſed and undervalued God, is not an Object of Petition or Affection: Who would addreſs ſeriouſly to a God he has low apprehenſions of? The more raiſed thoughts we have of him, the viler ſenſe we ſhall have of our ſelves: They would make us humble and ſelf abhorrent in our ſupplications to him, Job 42. 6. Wherefore I abhor my ſelf, &c.

ſhall

3. [Though we muſt not conceive of God, as of a human or Corporeal ſhape; yet we cannot think of God, without ſome reflection upon our own being. We cannot conceive him to be an intelligent being, but we muſt make ſome compariſon between him and our own underſtanding nature, to come to a knowledge of him. Since we are incloſed in bodies, we apprehend nothing but what comes in by ſenſe, and what we in ſome ſort meaſure by ſenſible Objects. And in the conſideration of thoſe things, which we deſire to abſtract from ſenſe, we are fain to make uſe of the aſſiſtances of ſenſe and viſible things: And therefore when we frame the higheſt notion, there will be ſome ſimilitude of ſome corporeal thing in our fancy; and though we would ſpiritualize our thoughts, and aim at a more abſtracted and raiſed underſtanding, yet there will be ſome dregs of matter ſticking to our conceptions; yet we ſtill judge by argument and reaſoning, what the things is we think of under thoſe material Images. * A corporeal Image will follow us, as the ſhadow doth the body: While we are in the body, and ſurrounded with fleſhly matter, we cannot think of things without ſome help from corporeal repreſentations: Something of ſenſe will interpoſe it ſelf in our pureſt conceptions of ſpiritual things; for the faculties which ſerve for contemplation, are either corporeal, as the ſenſe and fancy, or ſo allyed to them, that nothing paſſes into them but by the Organs of the body; ſo that there is a natural inclination to figure nothing but under a corporeal notion, till by an attentive application of the mind and reaſon to the object thought upon, we ſeparate that which is bodily from that which is ſpiritual, and by degrees aſcend to that true notion of that we think upon, and would have a due conception of in our mind. Therefore God tempers the declaration of himſelf to our weakneſs, and the condition of our Natures: He condeſcends to our littleneſs and narrowneſs, when he declares himſelf by the ſimilitude of bodily members. As the light of the Sun is tempered, and diffuſeth it ſelf to our ſenſe through the air and vapours, that our weak eyes may not be too much dazled with it: Without it we could not know or judge of the Sun, becauſe we could have no uſe of our ſenſe, which we muſt have before we can judge of it in our underſtanding: So we are not able to conceive of ſpiritual Beings in the purity of their own nature, without ſuch a temperament, and ſuch ſhadows to uſher them into our minds. And therefore we find the Spirit of God accommodates himſelf to our contracted and teddered capacities, and uſes ſuch expreſſions of God, as are ſuted to us in this ſtate of fleſh wherein we are: And therefore becauſe we cannot apprehend God in the ſimplicity of his own Being, and his undivided Eſſence, he draws the repreſentations of himſelf from ſeveral Creatures and ſeveral actions of thoſe Creatures: As ſometimes he is ſaid to be angry, to walk, to ſit, to fly; not that we ſhould reſt in ſuch conceptions of him, but take our riſe from this foundation, and ſuch perfections in the Creatures, to mount up to a knowledge of Gods nature by thoſe ſeveral ſteps, and conceive of him by thoſe divided Excellencies, becauſe we cannot conceive of him in the purity of his own Eſſence. * We cannot poſſibly think or ſpeak of God, unleſs we transfer the names of created perfections to him; yet we are to conceive of them in a higher manner when we apply them to the Divine Nature, than when we conſider them in the ſeveral Creatures formally, exceeding thoſe perfections and excellencies which are in the Creature, and in a more excellent manner: * [as one ſaith, though we cannot comprehend God without the help of ſuch reſemblances, yet we may without making an Image of him; ſo that inability of ours excuſeth thoſe

* Nazianzen.

* Amirald Moral Tom. 1. p. 180, &c.

* Leſſius.

* Towerſon on the Commandments, p. 112.

thoſe apprehenſions of him from any way offending againſt his Divine Nature.] Theſe are not notions ſo much ſuted to the nature of God as the weakneſs of man: They are helps to our meditations, but ought not to be formal conceptions of him. We may aſſiſt our ſelves in our apprehenſions of him, by conſidering the ſubtilty and ſpirituality of Air; and conſidering the members of a body, without thinking him to be Air, or to have any corporeal member. Our reaſon tells us, that whatſoever is a body, is limited and bounded; and the notion of infiniteneſs and bodilineſs, cannot agree and conſiſt together: And therefore what is offered by our fancy ſhould be purified by our reaſon.

4. Therefore we are to elevate and refine all our notions of God, and ſpiritualize our conceptions of him. Every man is to have a conception of God; therefore he ought to have one of the higheſt elevation. Since we cannot have a full notion of him we ſhould endeavour to make it as high and as pure as we can. Tho we cannot conceive of God, but ſome corporeal repreſentations or Images in our minds will be converſant with us, as motes in the Air when we look upon the Heavens; yet our conception may and muſt riſe higher: As when we ſee the draught of the Heavens and Earth in a Globe, or a Kingdom in a Map, it helps our conceptions, but doth not terminate them: We conceive them to be of a vaſt extent, far beyond that ſhort deſcription of them: So we ſhould endeavour to refine every repreſentation of God, to riſe higher and higher, and have our apprehenſions ſtill more purified; ſeparating the perfect from the imperfect, caſting away the one, and greatning the other; conceive him to be a Spirit diffuſed through all, containing all, perceiving all. All the perfections of God are infinitely elevated above the excellencies of the Creatures; above whatſoever can be conceived by the cleareſt and moſt piercing underſtanding. The Nature of God as a Spirit, is infinitely ſuperior to whatſoever we can conceive perfect in the notion of a created Spirit. Whatſoever God is, he is infinitely ſo: He is infinite Wiſdom, infinite Goodneſs, infinite Knowledge, infinite Power, infinite Spirit, infinitely diſtant from the weakneſs of Creatures, infinitely mounted above the excellences of Creatures: As eaſie to be known that he is, as impoſſible to be comprehended what he is.

Conceive of him as excellent, without any imperfection: A Spirit without parts; great without quantity; perfect without quality; every where without place; Powerful without members; underſtanding without ignorance; wiſe without reaſoning; light without darkneſs; infinitely more excelling the beauty of all Creatures, than the light in the Sun pure and unviolated exceeds the ſplendor of the Sun diſperſed and divided through a Cloudy and miſty Air: And when you have riſen to the higheſt, conceive him yet infinitely above all you can conceive of Spirit, and acknowledge the infirmity of your own minds. And whatſoever conception comes into your minds, ſay this is not God, God is more than this: If I could conceive him, he were not God; for God is incomprehenſibly above whatſoever I can ſay, whatſoever I can think and conceive of him.

4. Inference. If God be a ſpirit no corporeal thing can defile him. Some bring an argument againſt the Omnipreſence of God, that it is a diſparagement to the Divine Eſſence to be every where, in naſty Cottages, as well as beautiful Palaces and garniſht Temples. What place can defile a ſpirit? Is Light, which approaches to the nature of ſpirit polluted by ſhining upon a dung-hill, or a Sun-beam tainted by darting upon a Quag-mire? Doth an Angel contract any ſoyl, by ſtepping into a naſty Priſon to deliver Peter? What can ſteam from the moſt noyſom body, to pollute the ſpiritual nature of God? As he is *of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, ſo he is of a more ſpiritual ſubſtance, than to contract any phyſical pollution from the places where he doth diffuſe himſelf. Did our Saviour, who had a true body, derive any taint from the Lepers he touched, the diſeaſes he cured, or the Devils he expell'd? God is a pure Spirit; plungeth himſelf into no filth; is daſht with no ſpot by being preſent with all bodies. Bodies only receive defilement from bodies.

* Heb. 1. 13.

5. Inference. If God be a Spirit, he is active and communicative. He is not clogg'd with heavy and ſluggiſh matter, which is cauſe of dulneſs and inactivity. The more ſubtil, thin, and approaching neerer the Nature of a Spirit any thing is, the more diffuſive it is. Air is a gliding ſubſtance; ſpreads it ſelf through all Religions; peirceth into all bodies; it fills the ſpace between Heaven and Earth; there is nothing but partakes of the vertue of it. Light, which is an emblem of Spirit, inſinuates it ſelf into all places, refreſheth all things. As Spirits are fuller, ſo they are more overflowing, more piercing, more operative than bodies. The Ægyptians Horſes were weak things, becauſe they were Fleſh and not Spirit *: The Soul being a Spirit conveys more to the Body, than the Body can to it. What cannot ſo great a Spirit do for us? What cannot ſo great a Spirit work in us? God being a Spirit above all Spirits, can pierce into the Center of all Spirits; make his way into the moſt ſecret receſſes; ſtamp what he pleaſes: 'Tis no more to him to turn our Spirits, than to make a Wilderneſs become Waters, and ſpeak a Chaos into a beautiful frame of Heaven and Earth: He can act our ſouls with infinite more eaſe, than our Souls can act our bodies; he can fix in us what motions, frames, inclinations he pleaſes; he can come and ſettle in our hearts with all his Treaſures. 'Tis an encouragement to confide in him, when we petition him for Spiritual Bleſſings: As he is a Spirit, he is poſſeſſed with Spiritual Bleſſings. * A Spirit delights to beſtow things ſutable to its Nature, as Bodies do to Communicate what is agreeable to theirs: As he is a Father of Spirits, we may go to him for the Welfare of our Spirits; he being a Spirit, is as able to repair our Spirits, as he was to create them.

in

* Iſa. 31. 3.

* Eph. 1. 3.

As he is a Spirit, he is indefatigable in acting: The members of the body tire and flag; but whoever heard of a Soul wearied with being active? Who ever heard of a weary Angel? In the pureſt ſimplicity, there is the greateſt power, the moſt efficacious Goodneſs, the moſt reaching Juſtice to affect the Spirit, that can inſinuate it ſelf every where to puniſh wickedneſs without wearineſs, as well as to comfort goodneſs. God is active, becauſe he is Spirit; and if we be like to God, the more Spiritual we are, the more active we ſhall be.

6. Inference. God being a Spirit, is immortal. His being immortal, and being inviſible are joyned together. * Spirits are in their nature incorruptible; they can only periſh by that hand that framed them. Every compounded thing is ſubject to mutation; but God being a pure and ſimple Spirit, is without corruption, without any ſhadow of change. * Where there is compoſition, there is ſome kind of repugnancy of one part againſt the other; and where there is repugnancy, there is a capability of diſſolution. God in regard of his infinite Spirituality, hath nothing in his own nature contrary to it; can have nothing in himſelf which is not himſelf. The world periſhes; friends change and are diſſolved; bodies moulder, becauſe they are mutable. God is a Spirit in the higheſt excellency and glory of Spirits; nothing is beyond him; nothing above him; no contrariety within him: This is our comfort, if we devote our ſelves to him; this God is our God; this Spirit is our Spirit; this is our all, our immutable, our incorruptible ſupport; a Spirit that cannot die and leave us.

* 1 Tim. 1. 17.

* James 1. 17.

7. Inference. If God be a Spirit, we ſee how we can only converſe with him by our Spirits. Bodies and Spirits are not ſutable to one another: We can only ſee, know, embrace a Spirit with our Spirits. He judges not of us by our coporeal actions, nor our external devotions, by our masks and diſguiſes: He fixes his eye upon the frame of the heart, bends his ear to the groans of our Spirits: He is not pleaſed with outward pomp: He is not a Body; therefore the beauty of Temples, delicacy of Sacrifices, fumes of Incenſe are not grateful to him; by thoſe or any external action, we have no communion with him: A Spirit when broken, is his delightful Sacrifice *; We muſt therefore have our Spirits fitted for him, be renewed in the ſpirit of our minds *, that we may be in a poſture to live with him, and have an intercourſe with him. We can never be united to God, but in our Spirits: Bodies unite with Bodies, Spirits with Spirits. The more ſpiritual any thing is, the more cloſely doth it unite. Air hath the cloſeſt union, nothing meets together ſooner than that when the parts are divided by the interpoſition of a body.

* Pſal. 51. 17.

* Eph. 4. 23

8. Inference. If God be a Spirit, he can only be the true ſatisfaction of our Spirits. Spirit can only be fill'd with a Spirit. Content flows from likeneſs and ſutableneſs: As we have a reſemblance to God in regard of the ſpiritual nature of our Soul, ſo we can have no ſatisfaction but in him. Spirit can no more be really ſatisfied with that which is corporeal, than a beaſt can delight in the company of an Angel. Corporeal things can no more fill a hungry Spirit, than pure Spirit can feed an hungry Body, Body. God the higheſt Spirit, can only reach out a full content to our ſpirits. Man is Lord of the Creation; nothing below him can be fit for his converſe; nothing above him offers it ſelf to his converſe but God. We have no correſpondence with Angels: The influence they have upon us, the protection they afford us, is ſecret and undiſcern'd; but God the higheſt Spirit offers himſelf to us in his Son, in his Ordinances, is viſible in every Creature, preſents himſelf to us in every providence; to him we muſt ſeek; in him we muſt reſt. God had no reſt from the Creation, till he had made Man; and Man can have no reſt in the Creation, till he reſts in God. God only is our dwelling place *; our Souls ſhould only long for him *; our Souls ſhould only wait upon him. The Spirit of Man never riſeth to its original glory, till it be carried up on the wings of Faith and Love to its original Copy. The face of the Soul looks moſt beautiful, when it is turned to the face of God the Father of Spirits; when the derived Spirit is fixed upon the original Spirit, drawing from it Life and Glory. Spirit is only the receptacle of Spirit. God as Spirit is our Principle; we muſt therefore live upon him. God as Spirit, hath ſome reſemblance to us as his Image; we muſt therefore only ſatisfie our ſelves in him.

* Pſal. 90. 1.
* Pſal. 63. 1.

9. Inference. If God be a Spirit, we ſhould take moſt care of that wherein we are like to God. Spirit is nobler than Body; we muſt therefore value our Spirits above our Bodies: The Soul as Spirit, partakes more of the Divine Nature, and deſerves more of our choyceſt cares. If we have any love to this Spirit, we ſhould have a real affection to our own Spirits, as bearing a ſtamp of the ſpiritual Divinity, the chiefeſt of all the works of God; as it is ſaid of Behemoth, Job. 40. 19. That which is moſt the Image of this immenſe Spirit, ſhould be our Darling: So David calls his Soul, Pſal. 35. 17. Shall we take care of that wherein we partake not of God, and not delight in the Jewel which hath his own ſignature upon it? God was not only the Framer of ſpirits. and the end of ſpirits; but the Copy and exemplar of Spirits. God partakes of no corporiety, he is pure Spirit. But how do we act, as if we were only matter and body! We have but little kindneſs for this great Spirit as well as our own, if we take no care of his immediate off-ſpring, ſince he is not only Spirit, but the Father of Spirits.*

* Heb. 12. 9.

10. Inference. If God be a Spirit, let us take heed of thoſe ſins which are ſpiritual. Paul diſtinguiſht between the filth of the Fleſh, and that of the Spirit *: By the one we defile the Body; by the other we defile the Spirit, which in regard of its Nature is of kin to the Creator. To wrong one who is neer of kin to a Prince, is worſe than to injure an inferiour Subject. When we make our Spirits, which are moſt like to God in their Nature, and framed according to his Image, a ſtage to act vain imaginations, wicked deſires, and unclean affections, we wrong God in the excellency of his Work, and reflect upon the nobleneſs of the Pattern; we wrong him in that part where he hath ſtampt the moſt ſignal Character of his own ſpiritual nature; we defile that whereby we have only converſe with him as a Spirit, which he hath ordered more immediately to repreſent him in this Nature, than all corporeal things in the world can, and make that Spirit with whom we deſire to be joyned, unfit for ſuch a knot. Gods Spirituality is the root of his other perfections. We have already heard, he could not be Infinite, Omnipreſent, Immutable without it. Spiritual ſins are the greateſt root of bitterneſs within us: As grace in our Spirits renders us more like to a ſpiritual God; ſo ſpiritual ſins bring us into a conformity to a degraded Devil.* Carnal ſins change us from men to brutes, and ſpiritual ſins deveſt us of the Image of God for the Image of Satan. We ſhould by no means make our Spirits a Dung-hill, which bear upon them the Character of the ſpiritual Nature of God, and were made for his reſidence: Let us therefore behave our ſelves towards God in all thoſe ways which the ſpiritual nature of God requires us.

* 2 Cor. 7. 1.

* Eph. 2. 2, 3.

A DISCOURSE OF Spiritual Worſhip.

HAVING thus diſpatcht the firſt propoſition, God is a Spirit; It will not be amiſs to handle the inference our Saviour makes from that propoſition: Which is the ſecond Obſervation propounded.

Doct. That the Worſhip due from us to God ought to be Spiritual and Spiritually performed.

Spirit and Truth are underſtood variouſly. Either we are to Worſhip God,

1. Not by legal ceremonies. The Evangelical adminiſtration, being called Spirit in oppoſition to the legal ordinances as carnal; and Truth in oppoſition to them as typical. As the whole Judaical ſervice is called fleſh; ſo the whole Evangelical ſervice is called Spirit. Or Spirit may be oppoſed to the worſhip at Jeruſalem, as it was carnal; Truth, to the worſhip on the Mount Gerizim, becauſe it was falſe. They had not the true object of worſhip, nor the true Medium of worſhip as thoſe at Jeruſalem had. Their worſhip ſhould ceaſe, becauſe it was falſe; and the Jewiſh worſhip ſhould ceaſe, becauſe it was carnal.

There is no need of a Candle, when the Sun ſpreads its beams in the Air; no need of thoſe Ceremonies, when the Sun of righteouſneſs appeared: They only ſerved for Candle to inſtruct and direct men till the time of his coming. The ſhadows are chaſed away by the diſplaying the ſubſtance, ſo that they can be of no more uſe in the worſhip of God, ſince the end for which they were inſtituted, is expired; and that is diſcovered to us in the Goſpel which the Jews ſought for in vain, among the baggage and ſtuff of their Ceremonies.

2. With a Spiritual and ſincere frame. In Spirit, i. e. with Spirit; with the inward operations of all the faculties of our Souls, and the cream and flower of them: And the reaſon is, becauſe there ought to be a worſhip ſutable to the nature of God. And as the worſhip was to be Spiritual, ſo the exerciſe of that worſhip ought to be in a Spiritual manner. * It ſhall be a worſhip in Truth, becauſe the true God ſhall be adored without thoſe vain imaginations, and phantaſtick reſemblances of him, which were common among the blind Gentiles, and contrary to the glorious nature of God, and unworthy ingredients in Religious ſervices. It ſhall be a worſhip in Spirit, without thoſe carnal rites the degenerate Jews reſted on: Such a poſture of Soul which is the life and ornament of every ſervice God looks for at your hands: There muſt be ſome proportion between the object adored, and the manner in which we adore it. It muſt not be a meer Corporeal worſhip, becauſe God is not a body; but it muſt riſe from the Center of our Soul, becauſe God is a Spirit. If he were a body, a bodily worſhip might ſute him, Images might be fit to repreſent him; but being a Spirit, our bodily ſervices enter us not into communion with him. Being a Spirit we muſt baniſh from our minds all carnal imaginations of him, and ſeparate from our Wills all cold and diſſembled affections to him. We muſt not only have a loud voice, but an elevated Soul; not only a bended knee, but a broken heart; not only a ſupplicating tone, but a groaning Spirit; not only a ready ear for the word, but a receiving heart; and this ſhall be of greater value with him, than the moſt coſtly outward ſervices offered at Gerizim or Jeruſalem.

* Lingend. Tom. 2. p. 777.
* Taylors Exemplar Preface § 30.

Our Saviour certainly meant not by worſhipping in Spirit, only the matter of the Evangelical ſervice, as oppoſed to the legal adminiſtration, without the manner wherein it was to be peformed. Tis true, God always ſought a worſhip in Spirit; he expected the heart of the worſhipper ſhould joyn with his inſtituted rights of adoration in every exerciſe of them: But he expects ſuch a carriage more under the Goſpel adminiſtration, becauſe of the clearer diſcoveries of his nature made in it, and the greater aſſiſtances conveyed by it.

I ſhall therefore,

1. Lay down ſome general propoſitions.
2. Shew what this ſpiritual Worſhip is.
3. Why we muſt offer to God a ſpiritual ſervice.
4. The Uſe.

1. Some general propoſitions.

Propoſition, 1. Firſt, *The right exerciſe of worſhip is founded upon and riſeth from the Spirituality of God. The firſt ground of the worſhip we render to God, is the infinite excellency of his nature, which is not only one attribute, but reſults from all: For God, as God, is the object of Worſhip; and the Notion of God conſiſts not in thinking him wiſe, good, juſt, but all thoſe infinitely beyond any conception. And hence it follows that God is an object infinitely to be loved and honoured. His goodneſs is ſometimes ſpoken of in Scripture as a motive of our homage. Pſal. 130. 4. There is forgiveneſs with thee that thou mayeſt be feared. Fear in the Scripture dialect ſignifies the whole worſhip of God. Acts 10. 35. But in every Nation he that fears him is accepted of him.* If God ſhould act towards men according to the rigors of his juſtice due to them for the leaſt of their Crimes, there could be no exerciſe of any affection but that of deſpair, which could not ingender a worſhip of God which ought to be joyned with love, not with hatred. The beneficence and patience of God and his readineſs to pardon men is the reaſon of the honour they return to him. And this is ſo evident a motive, that generally the Idolatrous world rankt thoſe Creatures in the number of their Gods, which they perceived uſeful and beneficial to man-kind; as the Sun and Moon, the Ægyptians the Ox, &c. And the more beneficial any thing appeared to mankind, the higher ſtation men gave it in the rank of their Deities, and beſtowed a more peculiar and ſolemn worſhip upon it. Men worſhipped God to procure or continue his favour, which would not have been acted by them, had they not conceived it a pleaſing thing to him to be merciful and gracious.

* Ames medul. lib. 2. cap. 4. § 20.

* So 2 Kings 17. 32, 33.

Sometimes his Juſtice is propoſed to us as a motive of worſhip, Heb. 12. 28, 29. Serve God with reverence and Godly fear, for our God is a conſuming fire; which includes his holineſs, whereby he doth hate ſin, as well as his wrath, whereby he doth puniſh it. Who but a mad and totally brutiſh perſon, or one that was reſolved to make war againſt heaven, could behold the effects of Gods anger in the world, conſider him in his Juſtice as a conſuming fire, and deſpiſe him, and rather be drawn out by that conſideration to blaſphemy and deſpair, than to ſeek all ways to appeaſe him? Now tho the infinite power of God, his unſpeakable wiſdom, his incomprehenſible goodneſs, the holineſs of his nature, the vigilance of his providence, the bounty of his hand ſignifie to man, that he ſhould love and honour him, and are the motives of worſhip; yet the Spirituality of his nature is the rule of worſhip, and directs us to render our duty to him with all the powers of our Soul. As his goodneſs beams out upon us, worſhip is due in Juſtice to him; and as he is the moſt excellent nature, veneration is due to him in the higheſt manner with the choiceſt affections.

So that indeed the ſpirituality of God comes cheifly into conſideration in matter of Worſhip: All his perfections are grounded upon this: He could not be infinite, immutable, omniſcient if he were a Corporeal being: * We cannot give him a worſhip unleſs we judge him worthy, excellent and deſerving a worſhip at our hands: And we cannot judge him worthy of a worſhip, unleſs we have ſome apprehenſions and admirations of his infinite vertues: And we cannot apprehend and admire thoſe perfections, but as we ſee them as cauſes ſhining in their effects. When we ſee therefore the frame of the world to be the work of his power; the order of the world to be the fruit of his wiſdom, and the uſefulneſs of the world to be the product of his goodneſs: We find the motives and reaſons of worſhip; and weighing that this power, wiſdom, goodneſs, infinitely tranſcend any corporeal nature; we find a rule of worſhip, that it ought to be offered by us in a manner ſutable to ſuch a nature, as is infinitely above any bodily Being. His being a Spirit declares what he is, his other perfections declare what kind of Spirit he is. All Gods perfections ſuppoſe him a ſpirit; all center in this: His wiſdom doth not ſuppoſe him merciful, or his mercy ſuppoſe him omniſcient: There may be diſtinct notions of thoſe, but all ſuppoſe him to be of a ſpiritual nature. How cold and frozen will our devotions be, if we conſider not his omniſcience, whereby he diſcerns our hearts? How carnal will our ſervices be, if we conſider him not as a pure ſpirit? In our offers to, and tranſactions with men, we deal not with them as meer Animals, but as rational Creatures; and we debaſe their natures if we treat them otherwiſe: And if we have not raiſed apprehenſions of Gods ſpiritual nature in our treating with him, but allow him only ſuch frames as we think fit enough for men; we debaſe his ſpirituality to the littleneſs of our own Being: We muſt therefore poſſeſs our Souls with this, we ſhall elſe render him no better than a fleſhly ſervice. We do not much concern our ſelves in thoſe things, of which we are either utterly ignorant, or have but ſlight apprehenſions of.

* Amirald diſſert. 6. diſp. 1. pa. 12.

the

* Amirant de Relig.

That is the firſt Propoſition; the right exerciſe of worſhip is grounded upon the ſpirituality of God.

Propoſ. 2. This ſpiritual worſhip of God is manifeſt by the light of nature, to be due to him. In reference to this, conſider,

1. The outward means or matter of that worſhip which would be acceptable to God, was not known by the light of Nature. The Law for a worſhip, and for a ſpiritual worſhip, by the faculties of our Souls was natural, and part of the Law of Creation; though the determination of the particular acts, whereby God would have this homage teſtified, was of poſſitive inſtitution, and depended not upon the Law of Creation. Though Adam in Innocence knew God was to be worſhipped; yet by nature he did not know by what outward acts he was to pay this reſpect, or at what time he was more ſolemnly to be exerciſed in it than at another: This depended upon the directions God as the ſoveraign Governour and Law-giver ſhould preſcribe. You therefore find the poſitive inſtitutions of the Tree of the knowledge of Good and Evil, and the determination of the time of worſhip, Gen. 2. 3, 17. Had there been any ſuch notion in Adam naturally, as ſtrong as that other, that a worſhip was due to God there would have been found ſome reliques of theſe modes univerſally conſented to by mankind, as well as of the other: But though all Nations have by an univerſal conſent concurred in the acknowledgment of the being of God, and his right to adoration, and the obligation of the Creature to it; and that there ought to be ſome publick rule and polity in matters of Religion; (for no Nation hath been in the world without a worſhip, and without external acts and certain ceremonies to ſignifie that worſhip) yet their modes and rites have been as various as their climates, unleſs in that common notion of ſacrifices, not deſcending to them by nature, but tradition from Adam; and the various ways of worſhip have been more provoking than pleaſing: Every Nation ſuted the kind of worſhip to their particular ends and polities they deſigned to rule by. How God was to be worſhipped, is more difficult to be diſcerned by Nature with its eyes out, than with its eyes clear. * The pillars upon which the worſhip of God ſtands, cannot be diſcerned without revelation, no more than blind Sampſon could tell where the pillars of the Philiſtians Theatre ſtood, without one to conduct him. What Adam could not ſee with his ſound eyes, we cannot with our dim eyes; He muſt be told from Heaven, what worſhip was fit for the God of Heaven. Tis not by nature that we can have ſuch a full proſpect of God as may content and quiet us; This is the noble effect of divine revelation; he only knows himſelf, and can only make himſelf known to us. It could not be ſuppoſed, that an infinite God ſhould have no perfections but what were viſible in the works of his hands; and that theſe perfections ſhould not be infinitely greater, than as they were ſenſible in their preſent effects: This had been to apprehend God a limited being, meaner than he is. Now tis impoſſible to honour God as we ought, unleſs we know him as he is; and we could not know him as he is, without divine Revelation from himſelf; for none but God can acquaint us with his own nature: And therefore the Nations void of this conduct, heap up modes of worſhip from their own imaginations, unworthy of the Majeſty of God, and below the nature of man: A rational man would ſcarce have owned ſuch for ſigns of honour, as the Scripture mentions in the ſervices of Baal and Dagon. Much leſs an infinitely wiſe and glorious God: And when God had ſignified his mind to his own people, how unwilling were they to reſt ſatisfied with Gods determination, but would be warping to their own inventions, and make Gods, and ways of worſhip to themſelves? * As in the matter of the Golden Calf, as was lately ſpoken of.

* King on Jonah. P. 63.

* Amos 5. 26.

2. Tho the outward manner of Worſhip acceptable to God, could not be known without revelation, and thoſe revelations might be various; yet the inward manner of worſhip with our Spirits was manifeſt by nature. And not only manifeſt by nature to Adam in Innocence, but after his Fall, and the Scales he had brought upon his underſtanding by that Fall. When God gave him his poſitive inſtitutions before the Fall, or whatſoever additions God ſhould have made, had he perſiſted in that ſtate; or when he appointed him after his Fall to teſtifie his acknowledgement of him by Sacrifices, there needed no Command to him to make thoſe acknowledgments by thoſe outward wayes preſcribed to him, with the intention and prime affection of his ſpirit: This nature would inſtruct him in without revelation: For he could not poſſibly have any ſemblance of reaſon to think, that the offering of beaſts, or the preſenting the firſt fruits of the increaſe of the ground, as an acknowledgment of Gods Soveraignty over him, and his bounty to him, was ſufficient without devoting to him that part wherein the Image of his Creator did Conſiſt: He could not but diſcern by a reflection upon his own being, that he was made for God as well as by God: [For it is a natural principle, of which the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Rom. 11. 36. For of him and through him and to him are all things, &c.] That the whole, whereof he did conſiſt was due to God; and that his body, the dreggy and duſty part of his nature, was not fit to be brought alone before God, without that nobler principle, which he had by Creation linkt with it. Nothing in the whole law of nature, as it is informed of Religion, was clearer next to the being of God, than this manner of worſhipping God with the mind and ſpirit. And as the Gentiles never ſunk ſo low into the mud of Idolatry, as to think the Images they worſhipped were really their Gods, but the repreſentations, or habitations of their Gods; ſo they never deſerted this principle in the Notion of it, that God was to be honoured with the beſt they were, and the beſt they had: As they never denied the being of a God in the Notion, tho they did in the practice; ſo they never rejected this principle in Notion, tho they did, and now moſt men do, in the inward obſervation of it: It was a maxime among them that God was mens, animus, mind and ſpirit, and therefore was to be honoured with the mind and ſpirit: That religion did not conſiſt in the Ceremonies of the body, but the work of the ſoul; whence, the ſpeech of one of them; * Sacrifice tot he Gods not ſo much clothed with purple garments as a pure heart: And of another*, God regards not the multitude of the Sacrifices, but the diſpoſition of the Sacrificer. Tis not fit we ſhould deny God the Cream and Flower, and give him the flotten part and the ſtalks. And with what Reverence and intention of mind they thought their Worſhip was to be performed, is evident by the Prieſts crying out often, hoc age, Mind this, let your Spirits be intent upon it.

* Menander. Grot. de veritat relig. lib 4. § 12.

* Jamblick

This could not but reſult

(1.) From the knowledge of our ſelves. Tis a natural principle, God hath made us and not we our ſelves, Pſal. 100. 1, 2. Man knows himſelf to be a rational Creature: As a Creature he was to ſerve his Creator, and as a rational Creature with the beſt part of that rational nature he derived from him. By the ſame act of reaſon that he knows himſelf to be a Creature, he knows himſelf to have a Creator: That this Creator is more excellent than himſelf, and that an honour is due from him to the Creator for framing of him; and therefore this honour was to be offered to him by the moſt excellent part which was framed by him. Man cannot conſider himſelf as a thinking underſtanding being; but he muſt know that he muſt give God the honour of his thoughts, and worſhip him with thoſe faculties whereby he Thinks, Wills, and Acts. * He muſt know his faculties were given him to act, and to act for the glory of that God who gave him his Soul and the faculties of it; and he could could not in reaſon think they muſt be only active in his own ſervice, and the ſervice of the Creature, and idle and unprofitable in the ſervice of his Creator. With the ſame Powers of our Soul whereby we contemplate God, we muſt alſo worſhip God: We cannot think of him but with our Minds, nor love him but with our Will; and we cannot worſhip him without the acts of thinking and loving, and therefore cannot worſhip him without the exerciſe of our inward faculties: How is it poſſible then for any man that knows his own nature, to think that extended hands, bended knees and lifted up eyes were ſufficient acts of worſhip, without a quickned and active Spirit?

* Amyrald. Mor. Tom. 1. pa. 309. 310.

(2.) From the knowledge of God. As there was a knowledge of God by nature, ſo the ſame nature did dictate to Man that God was to be glorified as God: The Apoſtle implies the inference in the charge he brings againſt them for neglecting it. We ſhould ſpeak of God as he is, ſaid one *; and the ſame reaſon would inform them that they were to act towards God as he is. The excellency of the Object required a worſhip according to the dignity of his Nature; which could not be anſwered but by the moſt ſerious inward affection, as well as outward decency; and a want of this, cannot but be judged to be unbecoming the Majeſty of the Creator of the world, and the excellency of Religion. No Nation, no perſon did ever aſſert, that the vileſt part of man was enough for the moſt excellent Being, as God is: That a bodily ſervice could be a ſufficient acknowledgment of the greatneſs of God, or a ſufficient return for the bounty of God. * Man could not but know that he was to act in Religion, conformably to the Object of Religion, and to the excellency of his own Soul: The notion of a God was ſufficient to fill the mind of man with admiration and reverence, and the firſt concluſion from it would be to honour God, and that he have all the affection placed on him, that ſo infinite and ſpiritual a Being did deſerve: The progreſs then would be, that this excellent Being was to be honoured with the motions of the Underſtanding and Will; with the pureſt and moſt ſpiritual powers in the nature of man; becauſe he was a ſpiritual Being, and had nothing of matter mingled with him. Such a brutiſh imagination, to ſuppoſe that blood and fumes, beaſts and incenſe could pleaſe a Deity without a ſpiritual frame, cannot be ſuppoſed to befall any but thoſe that had loſt their reaſon in the rubbiſh of ſenſe. Meer rational nature could never conclude, that ſo excellent a Spirit would be put off with a meer animal ſervice; and attendance of matter and body without Spirit, when they themſelves of an inferior nature, would be loath to ſit down contented with an outſide ſervice from thoſe that belong to them: So that this inſtruction of our Saviour, that God is to be worſhipped in Spirit and Truth, is conformable to the ſentiments of nature, and drawn from the moſt undeniable principles of it. The excellency of Gods nature, and the excellent conſtitution of human faculties, concur naturally to ſupport this perſwaſion: This was as natural to be known by men, as the neceſſity of Juſtice and Temperance for the ſupport of human ſocieties and bodies. 'Tis to be feared that if there be not among us ſuch brutiſh apprehenſions, there are ſuch brutiſh dealings with God in our ſervices againſt the light of nature; when we place all our worſhip of God in outward attendances and drooping countenances, with unbelieving frames and formal devotions; when Prayer is muttered over in private ſlightly, as a Parrot learns leſſons by rote, not underſtanding what it ſpeaks, or to what end it ſpeaks it; not glorifying God in thought and Spirit, with underſtanding and will.

* Rom. 1. 21. * Bias.

* Amyrald Ib.

3. Spiritual Worſhip therefore was always required by God, and always offered to him by one or other. Man had a perpetual obligation upon him to ſuch a worſhip from the nature of God, and what is founded upon the nature of God is unvariable. This and that particular mode of worſhip may wax old as a Garment, and as a Veſture may be folded up and changed, as the expreſſion is of the Heavens *: But God endures for ever; his ſpirituality fails not, therefore a worſhip of him in Spirit muſt run through all ways and rites of Worſhip. God muſt ceaſe to be Spirit, before any ſervice but that which is ſpiritual, can be accepted by him. The light of Nature is the light of God; the light of nature being unchangeable, what was dictated by that, was always and will always be required by God. The worſhip of God being perpetually due from the Creature, the worſhipping him as God is as perpetually his right. Though the outward expreſſions of this Honour were different, one way

* Heb. 1. 11, 12

in

in Paradice (for a worſhip was then due, ſince a ſolemn time for that worſhip was appointed) another under the Law, another under the Goſpel; the Angels alſo worſhip God in Heaven, and fall down before his Throne; yet tho they differ in rites, they agree in this neceſſary ingredient: All rites though of a different ſhape, muſt be offered to him not as Carcaſſes, but animated with the affections of the Soul. Abels Sacrifice had not been ſo excellent in Gods Eſteem, without thoſe gracious habits and affections working in his Soul *. Faith works by Love; his heart was on fire as well as his Sacrifice. Cain reſted upon his Preſent, perhaps thought he had obliged God; he depended upon the outward Ceremony, but ſought not for the inward purity: It was an offering brought to the Lord *; he had the right object but not the right manner, Gen. 4. 7. If thou doſt well, ſhalt thou not be accepted? And in the Command afterwards to Abraham, Walk before me, and be thou perfect, was the direction in all our religious acts and walkings with God. A ſincere act of the Mind and Will, looking above and beyond all Symbolls; extending the Soul to a pitch far above the Body, and ſeeing the day of Chriſt through the vail of the Ceremonies, was required by God: And tho Moſes by Gods order had inſtituted a multitude of carnal Ordinances, Sacrifices, Waſhings, Oblations of ſenſible things, and recommended to the people the diligent obſervation of thoſe Statutes by the allurements of promiſes, and denouncing of threatnings; as if there were nothing elſe to be regarded, and the true workings of Grace were to be buried under a heap of Ceremonies; yet ſometimes he doth point them to the inward worſhip, and by the Command of God, requires of them the Circumciſion of the Heart, Deut. 10. 16. the turning to God with all their heart, and all their Soul, Deut. 30. 10. whereby they might recollect, that it was the engagement of the Heart, and the worſhip of the Spirit that was moſt agreeable to God; and that he took not any pleaſure in their obſervance of Ceremonies, without true piety within, and the true purity of their thoughts.

* Heb. 11. 4.

* Gen. 4. 5.

4. 'Tis therefore as much every mans duty to worſhip God in Spirit, as it is their duty to worſhip him. Worſhip is ſo due to him as God, as that he that denies it, diſowns his Deity: And ſpiritual worſhip is ſo due, that he that waves it denies his ſpirituality. 'Tis a debt of Juſtice we owe to God to worſhip him, and it is as much a debt of Juſtice to worſhip him according to his Nature. Worſhip is nothing elſe but a rendring to God the honour that is due to him; and therefore the right poſture of our Spirits in it, is as much or more due, than the material worſhip in the modes of his own preſcribing; that is grounded both upon his Nature, and upon his Command; this only upon his Command; that is perpetually due, whereas the Channel wherein outward worſhip runs may be dryed up, and the River diverted another way: Such a worſhip wherein the mind thinks of God, feels a ſenſe of God, has the Spirit conſecrated to God, the Heart glowing with affections to God: 'Tis elſe a mocking God with a feather. A rational Nature muſt worſhip God with that wherein the Glory of God doth moſt ſparkle in him. God is moſt viſible in the frame of the Soul, 'tis there his Image glitters: He hath given us a Jewel as well as a Caſe, and the Jewel as well as the Caſe we muſt return to him: The Spirit is Gods gift, and muſt return to him *: It muſt return to him in every ſervice morally, as well as it muſt return to him at laſt phyſically. 'Tis not fit we ſhould ſerve our Maker only with that which is the Brute in us, and withold from him that which doth conſtitute us reaſonable Creatures; we muſt give him our bodies, but a living Sacrifice *. If the Spirit be abſent from God when the Body is before him, we preſent a dead Sacrifice; 'Tis morally dead in the duty, though it be naturally alive in the poſture and action. 'Tis not an indifferent thing whether we ſhall worſhip God or no, nor is it an indifferent thing whether we ſhall worſhip him with our Spirits or no: As the excellency of mans knowledge conſiſts in knowing things as they are in Truth; ſo the excellency of the Will in willing things as they are in goodneſs. As it is the excellency of Man to know God as God; ſo it is no leſs his excellency, as well as his duty, to honour God as God. As the obligation we have to the Power of God for our Being, binds us to a worſhip of him; ſo the obligation we have to his bounty for faſhioning us according to his own Image, binds us to an exerciſe of that part wherein his Image doth conſiſt. God hath made all things for himſelf, Prov. 16. 4. that is, for the evidence of his own goodneſs and wiſdom: We are therefore to render him

* Eccl. 12. 7.

* Rom. 12. 1.

a glory according to the excellency of his nature, diſcovered in the frame of our own. 'Tis as much our ſin not to glorifie God as God, as not to attempt the glorifying of him at all: Tis our ſin not to worſhip God as God, as well as to omit the teſtifying any reſpect at all to him. As the Divine Nature is the object of worſhip, ſo the Divine Perfections are to be honoured in worſhip: We do not honour God if we honour him not as he is; we honour him not as a Spirit, if we think him not worthy of the ardors and raviſhing admirations of our Spirits. If we think the Devotions of the body are ſufficient for him, we contract him into the condition of our own being; and not only deny him to be a ſpiritual nature, but daſh out all thoſe perfections which he could not be poſſeſſed of, were he not a ſpirit.

5. The Ceremonial law was aboliſht to promote the Spirituality of Divine Worſhip. That ſervice was groſs, carnal, calculated for an infant and ſenſitive Church: It conſiſted in rudiments, the Circumciſion of the fleſh, the blood and ſmoke of Sacrifices, the ſteams of incenſe, obſervation of days, diſtinction of meats, Corporal purefications; every leaf of the law is clogged with ſome rite to be perticularly obſerved by them: The Spirituality of worſhip lay veild under a thick cloud, that the people could not behold the glory of the Goſpel, which lay covered under thoſe ſhadows, 2 Cor. 3. 13. They could not ſtedfaſtly look to the end of that which is aboliſhed: They underſtood not the Glory and Spiritual intent of the law, and therefore came ſhort of that Spiritual frame in the worſhip of God, which was their duty. And therefore in oppoſition to this adminiſtration, the worſhip of God under the Goſpel is called by our Saviour in the Text, a worſhip in Spirit; more ſpiritual for the matter, more ſpiritual for the motives, and more ſpiritual for the manner and frames of worſhip.

(1.) This legal ſervice is called fleſh in Scripture, in oppoſition to the Goſpel, which is called Spirit. The ordinances of the Law, tho of Divine inſtitution, are dignified by the Apoſtle with no better a title than Carnal Ordinances, * and a Carnal Command *: But the Goſpel is called the Miniſtration of the Spirit, as being attended with a ſpecial and ſpiritual efficacy on the minds of men. *: And when the degenerate Galatians, after having taſted of the pure ſtreams of the Goſpel, turned about to drink of the thicker ſtreams of the Law, the Apoſtle tells them, that they begun in the Spirit and would not be made perfect in the fleſh. * They would leave the righteouſneſs of faith for a juſtification by works. The moral law which is in its own nature Spiritual *, in regard of the abuſe of it, in expectation of juſtification by the outward works of it, is called fleſh: Much more may the Ceremonial adminiſtration, which was never intended to run parallel with the moral, nor had any foundation in nature as the other had.

* Heb. 9. 10.
* Heb, 7. 16.
* 2 Cor. 3. 8.
* Gal 3. 3.
* Rom. 7. 14.

That whole Oeconomy conſiſted in ſenſible and material things which only touched the fleſh; 'Tis called the Letter and the oldneſs of the Letter; * as Letters which are but empty ſounds of themſelves, but put together and formed into words, ſignifie ſomething to the mind of the hearer or reader: An old letter, a thing of no efficacy upon the Spirit, but as a law written upon paper. The Goſpel hath an efficacious Spirit attending it, ſtrongly working upon the mind and will; and moulding the Soul into a ſpiritual frame for God, according to the Doctrin of the Goſpel; the one is old and decays, the other is new and increaſeth dayly.

* Rom. 7. 6.

And as the Law it ſelf is called fleſh, ſo the obſervers of it and reſters in it are called Iſrael after the fleſh, * And the Evangelical worſhipper is called a Jew after the Spirit. Rom. 2. 29. They were Iſrael after the fleſh as born of Jacob, not Iſrael after the Spirit as born of God; and therefore the Apoſtle calls them Iſrael and not Iſrael. * Iſrael after a carnal birth, not Iſrael after a Spiritual: Iſrael in the Circumciſion of the fleſh, not Iſrael by a regeneration of the heart.

* 1 Cor. 10. 18.
* Rom. 9. 6.

(2.) The legal Ceremonies were not a fit means to bring the heart into a Spiritual frame. They had a ſpiritual intent; the Rock and Manna prefigured the Salvation and ſpiritual nouriſhment by the Redeemer. The ſacrifices were to point them to the Juſtice of God in the puniſhment of ſin, and the mercy of God in ſubſtituting them in their ſteads, as types of the Redeemer and the ranſome by his blood. The Circumciſion of the fleſh was to inſtruct them in the Circumciſion of the heart: They were fleſh in regard of their matter, weakneſs and cloudineſs: Spiritual in regard of their intent and ſignification: They did inſtruct, but not efficaciouſly ciouſly work ſtrong Spiritual affections in the Soul of the Worſhipper. They were * Gal. 4. 9. weak and beggerly elements; * had neither wealth to inrich nor ſtrength to nouriſh the Soul: They could not perfect the Comers to them, or put them into a frame * Heb. 10. 1. Heb. 9. 9. * Heb. 9. 15. agreeable to the nature of God, * nor purge the Conſcience from thoſe dead and dull diſpoſitions which were by nature in them: * Being carnal they could not have an efficacy to purifie the Conſcience of the offerer, and work ſpiritual effects: Had * Burges vind. pa. 256. they continued without the exhibition of Chriſt, they could never have wrought any change in us or purchaſed any favour for us. * At the beſt they were but ſhadows, and came unexpreſſibly ſhort of the efficacy of that perſon and ſtate whoſe ſhadows they were. The ſhadow of a man is too weak to perform what the man himſelf can do, becauſe it wants the Life, Spirit, and activity of the ſubſtance: The whole pomp and ſcene was ſuted more to the ſenſitive than the intellectual nature; and like pictures pleaſed the fancy of Children, rather than improved their reaſon. The Jewiſh * Gal 5. 2. ſtate, was a ſtate of Child-hood, * and that adminiſtration a Pedagogy. * The Law was * Gal. 4. 24. a Schoolmaſter fitted for their weak and Childiſh capacity, and could no more Spiritualize the heart, than the teachings in a Primer-School can enable the mind, and make it fit for affairs of State: And becauſe they could not better the Spirit, they were inſtituted only for a time, as elements delivered to an Infant age, which naturally lives a Life of ſenſe, rather than a life of reaſon. It was alſo a ſervile ſtate, which doth rather debaſe than elevate the mind; rather Carnalize than Spiritualize the heart: Beſides, 'tis a ſenſe of mercy that both melts and elevates the heart into a * Pſa. 130. 4. Spiritual frame: * There is forgiveneſs with thee that thou mayeſt be feared: And they had in that ſtate but ſome glimmerings of mercy in the dayly bloody intimations of Juſtice: There was no Sacrifice for ſome ſins, but a cuting off without the leaſt hints of pardon; and in the yearly remembrance of ſin, there was as much to ſhiver them with fear, as to poſſeſs them with hopes: And ſuch a ſtate which always held them under the Conſcience of ſin, could not produce a free Spirit, which was neceſſary for a worſhip of God according to his nature.

* 1 Cor. 10. 3, 4.

(3.) In their uſe they rather hindred than furthered a Spiritual worſhip. In their own nature they did not tend to the obſtructing a Spiritual worſhip; for then they had been contrary to the nature of Religion, and the end of God who appointed them: Nor did God cover the Evangelical Doctrin under the clouds of the legal adminiſtration, to hinder the people of Iſrael from perceiving it; but becauſe they were not yet capable to bear the ſplendor of it, had it been clearly ſet before them. The ſhining of the face of Moſes was too dazling for their weak eyes, and therefore there was a neceſſity of a veil, not for the things themſelves, but * 2 Cor. 3. 13, 14. the weakneſs of their eyes. * The carnal affections of that people ſunk down into the things themſelves; ſtuck in the outward pomp, and pierced not through the veil to the ſpiritual intent of them. And by the uſe of them without rational conceptions they beſotted their minds and became ſenſeleſs of thoſe Spiritual motions required of them. Hence came all their expectations of a carnal Meſſiah; the veil of Ceremonies was ſo thick, and the film upon their eyes ſo condenſed, that they could not look through the veil to the Spirit of Chriſt. They beheld not the Heavenly Canaan for the beauty of the earthly, nor minded the regeneration of the ſpirit, while they reſted upon the purifications of the fleſh: The prevalency of ſenſe and ſenſitive affections diverted their minds from enquiring into the intent of them. Senſe and matter are often clogs to the mind, and ſenſible objects are the ſame often to ſpiritual motions. Our ſouls are never more raiſed, than when they are abſtracted from the intanglements of them. A pompous worſhip made up of many ſenſible objects, weakens the ſpirituality of Religion: Thoſe that are moſt zealous for outward, are uſually moſt cold and indifferent in inward obſervances: And thoſe that overdo in carnal modes, uſually underdo in ſpiritual affections.

This was the Jewiſh ſtate. * The nature of the ceremonies being pompous and * Illyric. de velam. Moſis pa. 221. &c. earthly by their ſhow and beauty, meeting with their weakneſs and Childiſh affections, filled their eyes with an outward luſtre; allured their minds, and detained them from ſeeking things higher and more ſpiritual: The kernel of thoſe rites lay concealed in a thick ſhell, the ſpiritual glory was little ſeen, and the ſpiritual ſweetneſs little taſted: Unleſs the Scripture be diligently ſearched, it ſeems to transfer the worſhip of God from true faith and the ſpiritual motions of the heart, and ſtake it down down to outward obſervances, and the opus operatum. Beſides, the voice of the Law did only declare Sacrifices, and invited the Worſhipper to them, with a promiſe of the atonement of ſin, turning away the wrath of God. It never plainly acquainted them, that thoſe things were Types and ſhadows of ſomething future, that they were only outward purifications of the Fleſh: It never plainly told them at the time of appointing them, that thoſe ſacrifices could not aboliſh ſin, and reconcile them to God. Indeed we ſee more of them ſince their death and diſſection, in that one Epiſtle to the Hebrews, than can be diſcern'd in the five Books of Moſes, Beſides, Man naturally affects a carnal Life, and therefore affects a carnal Worſhip; He deſigns the gratifying his ſenſe, and would have a Religion of the ſame nature. Moſt men have no mind to buſie their reaſon above the things of ſenſe, and are naturally unwilling to raiſe them up to thoſe things which are allyed to the ſpiritual nature of God; and therefore the more ſpiritual any Ordinance is, the more averſe is the heart of man to it. There is a ſimplicity of the Goſpel from which our minds are eaſily corrupted by things that pleaſure the ſenſe, as Eve was by the curioſity of her eye, and the liquoriſhneſs of her Palate*. From this principle hath ſprung all the Idolatry in the world. The Jews knew they had a God who had delivered them, but they would have a ſenſible God to go before them*: And the Papacy at this day, is a Witneſs of the truth of this natural Corruption.

* 2 Cor. 11. 3.

* Exod. 32. 1.

4. Upon theſe accounts therefore God never teſtified himſelf well pleaſed with that kind of Worſhip. He was not diſpleaſed with them as they were his own inſtitution, and ordained for the repreſenting (though in an obſcure manner) the glorious things of the Goſpel; nor was he offended with thoſe peoples obſervance of them: For ſince he had commanded them, it was their duty to perform them, and their ſin to neglect them: But he was diſpleaſed with them as they were practiſed by them, with Souls as morally carnal in the practices, as the Ceremonies were materially carnal in their ſubſtance. It was not their diſobedience to obſerve them; but it was a diſobedience, and a contempt of the end of the inſtitution to reſt upon them; to be warm in them, and cold in morals: They fed upon the Bone, and neglected the Marrow; pleaſed themſelves with the Shell, and ſought not for the Kernel: They joyned not with them the internal Worſhip of God, Fear of him, with Faith in the promiſed ſeed, which lay vail'd under thoſe Coverings, Hoſ. 6. 6. I deſired Mercy, and not Sacrifice; and the Knowledge of God, more than burnt Offerings; And therefore he ſeems ſometimes weary of his own inſtitutions, and calls them not his own, but their Sacrifices, their Feaſts, Iſa. 1. 11, 14. They were his by appointment, theirs, by abuſe: The Inſtitution was from his goodneſs and condeſcenſion, therefore his; the corruption of them was from the vice of their Nature; therefore theirs. He often blamed them for their carnality in them; ſhew'd his diſlike of placing all their Religion in them; gives the ſacrificers upon that account, no better a title, than that of the Princes of Sodom and *Gomorrah: And compares the ſacrifices themſelves to the cutting off a Dogs Neck, Swines Blood, and the *Murder of a Man. And indeed God never valued them, or expreſt any delight in them: He deſpiſed the Feaſts of the Wicked, Amos 5. 21. and had no eſteem for the material Offerings of the Godly, Pſal. 50. 13. Will I eat the fleſh of Bulls, or drink the blood of Goats? Which he ſpeaks to his Saints and People, before he comes to reprove the wicked; which he begins v. 16. But to the Wicked, God ſaid, &c. So ſlightly he eſteemed them, that he ſeems to diſown them to be any part of his Command, when he brought his People out of the Land of Egypt, Jer. 7. 21. I ſpake not to your Fathers, nor commanded them concerning burnt Offerings and Sacrifices. He did not value nor regard them, in compariſon of that inward frame which he had required by the moral Law; that being given before the Law of Ceremonies, obliged them in the firſt place, to an obſervance of thoſe Precepts. They ſeemed to be below the Nature of God, and could not of themſelves pleaſe him. None could in reaſon perſwade themſelves, that the death of a Beaſt, was a proportionable Offering for the ſin of a Man, or ever was intended for the expiation of Tranſgreſſion. In the ſame rank are all our bodily ſervices under the Goſpel: A loud voice without Spirit; bended bulruſhes without inward affections, are no more delightful to God, than the Sacrifices of Animals: 'Tis but a change of one Brute for another of a higher ſpecies; a meer Brute, for that part of man which hath an agreement with Brutes: Such a ſervice is a meer animal ſervice, and not ſpiritual.

* Iſa. 1. 10.

* Iſa. 66. 3.

5. And therefore God never intended that ſort of worſhip to be durable, and had often mentioned the change of it for one more ſpiritual. It was not good or evil in it ſelf; whatſoever goodneſs it had, was ſolely deriv'd to it by inſtitution, and therefore it was mutable: It had no conformity with the ſpiritual nature of God, who was to be worſhipped; nor with the rational nature of man, who was to worſhip: And therefore he often ſpeaks of taking away the New-Moons, and Feaſts, and Sacrifices, and all the ceremonial Worſhip, as things he took no pleaſure in; to have a Worſhip more ſuted to his excellent Nature: But he never ſpeaks of removing the Goſpel Adminiſtration, and the worſhip preſcribed there, as being more agreeable to the nature and perfections of God, and diſplaying them more Illuſtriouſly to the World.

The Apoſtle tells us, it was to be diſannul'd becauſe of its weakneſs *: A determinate time was fixed for its duration, till the accompliſhment of the truth figured under that Pedagogy *. Some of the modes of that worſhip being only typical, muſt naturally expire and be inſignificant in their uſe, upon the finiſhing of that by the Redeemer, which they did prefigure: And other parts of it, though God ſuffered them ſo long becauſe of the weakneſs of the Worſhipper; yet becauſe it became not God to be always worſhipped in that manner, he would reject them, and introduce another more ſpiritual and elevated. Incenſe and a pure Offering ſhould be offered every where unto his Name.*

* Heb. 7. 18.
* Gal. 4. 2.
* Mal. 1. 11.
* Paſcal. Pen. 142.

* He often told them he would make a New Covenant by the Meſſiah, and the Old ſhould be rejected; that the former things ſhould not be remembred, and the things of old no more conſidered, when he ſhould do a new thing in the Earth *: Even the Ark of the Covenant, the ſymbol of his preſence, and the glory of the Lord in that Nation ſhould not any more be remembered and viſited *; That the Temple and ſacrifices ſhould be rejected, and others eſtabliſhed; That the Order of the Aaronical Prieſt-hood ſhould be aboliſht, and that of Melchiſedeck ſet up in the ſtead of it in the Perſon of the Meſſiah to endure for ever *: That Jeruſalem ſhould be changed; a new Heaven and Earth created; a Worſhip more conformable to Heaven, more advantagious to Earth. God had proceeded in the removal of ſome part of it, before the time of taking down the whole furniture of this Houſe: The Pot of Manna was loſt; Urim and Thummim ceaſed; the glory of the Temple was diminiſh'd; and the ignorant people wept at the ſight of the one, without raiſing their Faith and hope in the conſideration of the other, which was promiſed to be filled with a ſpiritual glory. And as ſoon as ever the Goſpel was ſpread in the World, God thundred out his Judgments upon that place in which he had fixed all thoſe legal Obſervances, ſo that the Jews in the Letter and Fleſh, could never practice the main part of their worſhip, ſince they were expelled from that place where it was only to be celebrated. 'Tis one thouſand ſix hundred years ſince they have been deprived of their Altar, which was the foundation of all the Levitical-worſhip, and have wandred in the world without a Sacrifice, a Prince or Prieſt, an Ephod or *Teraphim.

* Iſa. 43. 18, 19.
* Jer. 3. 16.
* Pſal. 110.
* Hoſ. 3. 4.

And God fully put an end to it in the Command he gave to the Apoſtles, and in them to us, in the preſence of Moſes and Elias, to hear his Son only, Matth. 17. 5. Behold a voice out of the Cloud, which ſaid, this is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleaſed, hear him. And at the death of our Saviour, teſtified it to that whole Nation and the world, by the rending in twain the vail of the Temple.

The whole frame of that ſervice, which was carnal, and by reaſon of the corruption of Man, weakned, is nulled; and a ſpiritual worſhip is made known to the world, that we might now ſerve God in a more ſpiritual manner, and with more ſpiritual frames.

6. Propoſition, The Service and worſhip the Goſpel ſettles, is ſpiritual, and the performance of it more ſpiritual. Spirituality is the Genius of the Goſpel, as Carnality was of the Law; the Goſpel is therefore called Spirit: We are abſtracted from the imployments of ſenſe, and brought neerer to a Heavenly State. The Jews had Angels Bread poured upon them; we have Angels ſervice preſcribed to us; the Praiſes of God; Communion with God in Spirit, through his Son Jeſus Chriſt, and ſtronger foundations for ſpiritual affections. 'Tis called a reaſon- able ſervice, * tis ſuted to a rational nature, tho it finds no friendſhip from the corruption of reaſon. It preſcribes a ſervice fit for the reaſonable faculties of the Soul, and advanceth them while it employs them. The word reaſonable may be tranſlated, word ſervice, * as well as reaſonable ſervice; an Evangelical ſervice in oppoſition to a Law ſervice. All Evangelical ſervice is reaſonable, and all truly reaſonable ſervice is Evangelical.

able

* Rom. 12. 1.

* V. Hammond in loc.

The matter of the worſhip is Spiritual; it conſiſts in love of God, faith in God, recourſe to his goodneſs, Meditation on him, and Communion with him. It lays aſide the Ceremonal, Spiritualizeth the Moral: The Commands that concerned our duty to God, as well as thoſe that concerned our duty to our Neighbour, were reduced by Chriſt to the ſpiritual intention.

The Motives are Spiritual; 'tis a ſtate of more grace as well as of more truth, * ſupported by Spiritual promiſes, beaming out in Spiritual priviledges; Heaven comes down in it to Earth, to Spiritualize Earth for Heaven.

* John 1. 17.

The manner of worſhip is more Spiritual; higher flights of the Soul, ſtronger ardours of affections, ſincerer aims at his glory; miſts are removed from our minds, Cloggs from the Soul, more of love than fear; faith in Chriſt kindles the affections and works by them.

The aſſiſtances to Spiritual worſhip are greater. The Spirit doth not drop, but is plentifully poured out. It doth not light ſometimes upon, but dwells in the heart. Chriſt ſuted the Goſpel to a Spiritual heart, and the Spirit changeth a carnal heart to make it fit for a Spiritual Goſpel. He blows upon the Garden and cauſes the ſpices to flow forth. And often makes the Soul in worſhip like the Chariots of Aminadab in a quick and nimble motion: Our Bleſſed Lord and Saviour by his death diſcovered to us the nature of God; and after his aſcenſion ſent his Spirit to fit us for the worſhip of God and converſe with him.

One Spiritual Evangelical believing breath is more delightful to God, than millions of Altars made up of the richeſt pearls, and ſmoaking with the coſtlieſt oblations, becauſe it is Spiritual: And a mite of Spirit is of more worth than the greateſt weight of fleſh. One Holy Angel is more excellent than a whole world of meer bodies.

7. Propoſition. Yet the Worſhip of God with our bodies is not to be rejected upon the account that God requires a Spiritual worſhip. Tho we muſt perform the weightier duties of the Law, yet we are not to omit and leave undone the lighter precepts. Since both the Magnalia and minutula legis, the greater, and the leſſer duties of the Law, have the ſtamp of Divine authority upon them.

As God under the Ceremonial Law did not command the worſhip of the body, and the obſervation of outward rites without the engagement of the Spirit; ſo neither doth he command that of the Spirit, without the peculiar attendance of the body.

The Schwelkfendians denied bodily worſhip. And the indecent poſtures of many in publick attendance, intimate no great care either of compoſing their Bodies or Spirits. A morally diſcompoſed body intimates a tainted heart.

Our Bodies as well as our Spirits are to be preſented to God. * Our bodies in lieu of the Sacrifices of Beaſts, as in the Judaical inſtitutions; Body for the whole man; a living Sacrifice, not to be ſlain, as the Beaſts were, but living a new life, in a holy poſture, with Crucified affections: This is the inference the Apoſtle makes of the priviledges of Juſtification, Adoption, Coheirſhip with Chriſt, which he had before diſcourſed of; Priviledges conferred upon the perſon and not upon a part of man.

* Rom. 12. 1.

1. Bodily worſhip is due to God. He hath a right to an Adoration by our bodies as they are his by Creation; his right is not diminiſht but increaſed by the bleſſing of Redemption, 1 Cor. 6. 20. For you are bought with a price, therefore glorifie God in your Bodies and your Spirits, which are Gods. The Body as well as the Spirit is redeemed, ſince our Saviour ſuffered Crucifixion in his body, as well as Agonies in his Soul: Body is not taken here for the whole man, as it may be in Rom. 12. But for the material part of our nature, it beng diſtinguiſht from the Spirit: If we are to render to God an obedience with our bodies, we are to render him ſuch Acts of worſhip with our bodies, as they are capable of. As God is the Father of Spirits, ſo he is the God of all fleſh: Therefore the fleſh he hath framed of the Earth, as well as the noble portion he hath breathed into us, cannot be denyed him without a palpable injuſtice: The ſervice of the body we muſt not deny to God, unleſs we will deny him to be the author of it, and the exerciſe of his providential care about it. The mercies of God are renewed every day upon our bodies as well as our Souls, and therefore they ought to expreſs a fealty to God for his bounty every day; [* both are from God, both ſhould be for God. Man conſiſts of Body and Soul, the ſervice of Man is the ſervice of both. The body is to be Sanctified as well as the Soul, and therefore to be offered to God as well as the Soul. Both are to be glorified, both are to glorifie: As our Saviours Divinity was manifeſted in his body, ſo ſhould our ſpirituality in ours. To give God the ſervice of the body and not of the Soul, is hypocriſie; to give God the ſervice of the Spirit and not of the body is ſacriledge; to give him neither, Atheiſm.] If the only part of man that is viſible were exempted from the ſervice of God, there could be no viſible Teſtimonies of piety given upon any occaſion: Since not a moiety of man, but the whole is Gods Creature, he ought to pay a homage with the whole, and not only with a moiety of himſelf.

* Sherman's Greek in the Temple, pa. 61, 62.

2. Worſhip in ſocieties is due to God, but this cannot be without ſome bodily expreſſions. The law of nature doth as much direct men to combine together in publick ſocieties for the acknowledgment of God, as in Civil Communities for ſelf preſervation and order. And the notice of a ſociety for Religion is more Ancient than the mention of Civil aſſociations for Politick Government, Gen. 4. 26. Then began men to call upon the name of the Lord, viz. In the time of Seth. No queſtion but Adam had worſhipped God before as well as Abel, and a Family-Religion had been preſerved; but as mankind increaſed in diſtinct Families, they knit together in Companies to ſolemnize the worſhip of God. * Hence, as ſome think, thoſe that incorporated together for ſuch ends, were called the Sons of God: Sons by profeſſion, tho not Sons by Adoption: As thoſe of Corinth were Saints by profeſſion, tho in ſuch a corrupted Church they could not be all ſo by regeneration; yet Saints, as being of a Chriſtian ſociety, and calling upon the name of Chriſt, that is, worſhipping God in Chriſt, tho they might not be all Saints in Spirit and Practice. So Cain and Abel met together to worſhip, Gen. 4. 3. At the end of the days, at a ſet time. God ſetled a publick worſhip among the Jews, inſtituted Synagogues for their Convening together, whence call'd the Synagogues of God. * The Sabbath was inſtituted to acknowledge God a Common Benefactor. Publick worſhip keeps up the Memorials of God in a world prone to Atheiſm, and a ſenſe of God in a heart prone to forgetfulneſs. The Angels ſung in Company, not ſingly at the Birth of Chriſt, * and praiſed God not only with a ſimple elevation of their Spiritual nature, but audibly by forming a voice in the air? Affections are more lively, Spirits more raiſed in publick than private; God will credit his own ordinance. Fire increaſeth by laying together many Coals on one place; ſo is devotion inflamed by the union of many hearts, and by a joynt preſence: Nor can the approach of the laſt day of Judgment, or particular Judgments upon a Nation give a Writ of eaſe from ſuch aſſemblies. Heb. 10. 25. Not forſaking the aſſembling our ſelves together, but ſo much the more as you ſee the day approaching: Whether it be underſtood of the day of Judgment, or the day of the Jewiſh deſtruction and the Chriſtian perſecution, the Apoſtles uſes it as an argument to quicken them to the obſervance, not to encourage them to a neglect. Since therefore natural light informs us, and Divine inſtitution commands us publickly to acknowledge our ſelves the ſervants of God, it implies the ſervice of the body: Such acknowledgments cannot be without viſible Teſtimonies, and outward exerciſes of devotion, as well as inward affections. This promotes Gods honour, checks others prophaneſs, allures men to the ſame expreſſions of duty. And tho there may be hypocriſie, and an outward garb without an inward frame; yet better a moiety of worſhip, than none at all; better acknowledge Gods right in one than diſown it in both.

* Stillingfleet's Irenicum cap. 1. § 1. pa. 23.

* Pſa. 47. 8.

* Luke 2. 13.

3. Jeſus Chriſt the moſt Spiritual worſhipper, worſhipt God with his body. He Prayed orally, and kneeled, Father if it be thy Will, &c. * He bleſſed with his mouth, Father I thank thee. * He lifted up his eyes as well as elevated his Spirit, when he praiſed his Father for mercy received, or begged for the bleſſings his Diſciples wanted. * The ſtrength of the Spirit muſt have vent at the outward members.

* Luke 22. 41, 42.

* Mat. 11. 26.

* John 11. 41.

John 12. 1.

The

The holy men of God have employed the body in ſignificant expreſſions of Worſhip: Abraham in falling on his face, Paul in kneeling, employing their Tongues, lifting up their hands. Tho Jacob was bed-rid, yet he would not Worſhip God without ſome devout expreſſion of Reverence; tis in one place *leaning upon his ſtaff ; in another bowing himſelf upon his beds head * : The reaſon of the diverſity is in the Hebrew word, which without vowels may be read Mittah a bed, or Matteh a ſtaff; howſoever, both ſignifie a Teſtimony of adoration by a reverent geſture of the body. Indeed in Angels and ſeparated Souls a Worſhip is performed purely by the Spirit; but whiles the Soul is in conjunction with the body, it can hardly perform a ſerious act of worſhip without ſome tincture upon the outward man, and reverential compoſure of the body: Fire cannot be in the cloaths, but it will be felt by the members; nor flames be pent up in the Soul without burſting out in the body: The heart can no more reſtrain it ſelf from breaking out, than Joſeph could incloſe his affections, without expreſſing them in tears to his brethren*. We Believe, and therefore ſpeak *.

* Heb. 11. 21.
* Gen. 47. 31.
* Gen. 45. 1, 2.
* 2 Cor. 4. 13.

To conclude; God hath appointed ſome parts of Worſhip which cannot be performed without the body, as Sacraments; we have need of them becauſe we are not wholly ſpiritual and incorporeal Creatures.

The Religion, which conſiſts in externals only, is not for an intellectual nature: A worſhip purely intellectual is too ſublime for a nature allyed to ſenſe and depending much upon it: The Chriſtian mode of Worſhip is proportioned to both; It makes the ſenſe to aſſiſt the mind, and elevates the ſpirit above the ſenſe: Bodily worſhip helps the ſpiritual: The members of the body reflect back upon the heart, the voice bars diſtractions, the tongue ſets the heart on fire in good as well as in evil. Tis as much againſt the light of nature to ſerve God without external ſignifications, as to ſerve him only with them without the intention of the mind. As the inviſible God declares himſelf to men by viſible works and ſigns, ſo ſhould we declare our inviſible frames by viſible expreſſions: God hath given us a ſoul and body in conjunction, and we are to ſerve him in the ſame manner he hath framed us.

2. The ſecond thing I am to ſhew, is, what Spiritual worſhip is. In general, the whole Spirit is to be employed: The name of God is not ſanctified but by the engagement of our Souls.

Worſhip is an Act of the underſtanding, applying it ſelf to the knowledge of the excellency of God, and actual thoughts of his Majeſty, recognizing him as the ſupreme Lord and Governour of the world, which is natural knowledge; beholding the glory of his Attributes in the Redeemer, which is Evangelical knowledge: This is the ſole act of the Spirit of Man. The ſame reaſon is for all our worſhip as for our thankſgiving: This muſt be done with underſtanding, Pſal. 47. 7. Sing ye praiſe with underſtanding, with a knowledge and ſenſe of his greatneſs, goodneſs and Wiſdom. Tis alſo an act of the Will, whereby the Soul adores and reverenceth his Majeſty, is raviſht with his amiableneſs, embraceth his goodneſs, enters it ſelf into an intimate Communion with this moſt lovely object, and pitcheth all his affections upon him.

We muſt worſhip God underſtandingly; tis not elſe a reaſonable ſervice: The nature of God and the Law of God abhor a blind offering; we muſt Worſhip him heartily, elſe we offer him a dead Sacrifice: A reaſonable ſervice is that wherein the mind doth truly act ſomething with God. All ſpiritual acts muſt be acts of reaſon, otherwiſe they are not human acts, becauſe they want that principle which is conſtitutive of man, and doth difference him from other Creatures: Acts done only by ſenſe are the acts of a brute; acts done by reaſon are the acts of a man; That which is only an act of ſenſe, cannot be an act of Religion: The ſenſe without the conduct of reaſon is not the ſubject of Religious acts, for then beaſts were capable of Religion as well as men: There cannot be Religion where there is not reaſon; and there cannot be the exerciſe of Religion, where there is not an exerciſe of the rational faculties. Nothing can be a Chriſtian act, that is not a human act: Beſides, all worſhip muſt be for ſome end; the worſhip of God muſt be for God; tis by the exerciſe of our rational faculties, that we only can intend an end: An Ignorant and Carnal worſhip is a brutiſh worſhip,

Particularly,

1. Spiritual Worſhip is a Worſhip from a ſpiritual Nature. Not only Phyſically ſpiritual, ſo our Souls are in their frame; but morally ſpiritual, by a renewing principle. The heart muſt be firſt caſt into the Mould of the Goſpel, before it can perform a Worſhip required by the Goſpel. Adam living in Paradice, might perform a ſpiritual Worſhip; but Adam fallen from his rectitude, could not: We being Heirs of his Nature, are Heirs of his Impotence: Reſtoration to a ſpiritual Life, muſt precede any act of ſpiritual Worſhip. As no work can be good, ſo no worſhip can be ſpiritual, till we are created in Chriſt*. Chriſt is our Life*. As no natural action can be performed without life in the root or heart, ſo no ſpiritual act without Chriſt in the Soul: Our being in Chriſt, is as neceſſary to every ſpiritual act, as the union of our Soul with our Body is neceſſary to natural action. Nothing can exceed the limits of its nature; for then it ſhould exceed it ſelf in acting, and do that which it hath no principle to do. A Beaſt cannot act like a Man, without partaking of the nature of a Man; nor a Man act like an Angel, without partaking of the Angelical nature: How can we perform ſpiritual acts, without a ſpiritual principle. Whatſoever worſhip proceeds from the corrupted nature, cannot deſerve the title of ſpiritual worſhip, becauſe it ſprings not from a ſpiritual habit. If thoſe that are evil cannot ſpeak good things, thoſe that are carnal cannot offer a ſpiritual ſervice. Poyſon is the fruit of a Vipers nature, Mat. 12. 34. Oh, Generation of Vipers, how can you being evil ſpeak good things? For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaks. As the root is, ſo is the fruit. If the Soul be habitually carnal, the worſhip cannot be actually ſpiritual: There may be an intention of ſpirit, but there is no ſpiritual principle as a root of that intention. A heart may be ſenſibly united with a duty, when it is not ſpiritually united with Chriſt in it. Carnal motives, and carnal ends may fix the mind in an act of worſhip, as the ſenſe of ſome preſſing affliction may enlarge a mans mind in Prayer. Whatſoever is agreeable to the nature of God, muſt have a ſtamp of Chriſt upon it; a ſtamp of his grace in performance, as well as of his Meditation in the acceptance. The Apoſtle lived not, but *Chriſt lived in him ; the Soul worſhips not, but Chriſt in him: Not that Chriſt performs the act of Worſhip; but enables us ſpiritually to worſhip, after he enables us ſpiritually to live. As God counts not any Soul living but in Chriſt, ſo he counts not any a ſpiritual Worſhipper but in Chriſt. The goodneſs and fatneſs of the fruit comes from the fatneſs of the Olive wherein we are engrafted: We muſt find healing in Chriſts wings, before God can find ſpirituality in our ſervices. All worſhip iſſuing from a dead nature, is but a dead ſervice: A living action cannot be performed, without being knit to a living root.

* Eph. 2. 10.
* Col. 3. 4.
* Gal. 2. 20.

2. Spiritual Worſhip is done by the influence, and with the aſſiſtance of the Spirit of God. A Heart may be ſpiritual, when a particular act of Worſhip may not be ſpiritual. The Spirit may dwell in the heart, when he may ſuſpend his influence on the act. Our worſhip is then ſpiritual, when the fire that kindles our affections comes from Heaven, as that fire upon the Altar wherewith the Sacrifices were conſumed. God taſtes a ſweetneſs in no ſervice, but as it is dreſt up by the hand of the Mediator, and hath the Air of his own Spirit in it: They are but natural acts, without a ſupernatural aſſiſtance: Without an actual influence, we cannot act from ſpiritual motives, nor for ſpiritual ends, nor in a ſpiritual manner. We cannot mortifie a Luſt without the *Spirit, nor quicken a ſervice without the Spirit. Whatſoever corruption is killed, is ſlain by his Power; whatſoever duty is ſpiritualized, is refined by his Breath. He quickens our dead bodies in our Reſurrection *; He renews our dead Souls in our Regeneration; He quickens our carnal ſervices in our adorations: The choiceſt acts of worſhip are but infirmities, without his auxiliary *help. We are Loggs, unable to move our ſelves, till he raiſe our faculties to a pitch agreeable to God; puts his hand to the duty, and lifts that up and us with it. Never any great act was performed by the Apoſtles to God, or for God, but they are ſaid to be filled with the Holy-Ghoſt. Chriſt could not have been conceived immaculate as that holy thing, without the Spirits overſhadowing the Virgin; nor any ſpiritual act conceived in our heart, without the Spirits moving upon us, to bring forth a living Religion from us. The acts of worſhip are ſaid to be in the Spirit, *ſupplication in the Spirit ; not only with the ſtrength and affection of our own Spirits, but with the mighty operation of the Holy-Ghoſt, if Jude may be the Interpreter*. The Holy-Ghoſt exci-

* Rom. 8. 13.
* Rom. 8. 11.
* Rom. 8. 26.
* Eph. 6. 18.
* Jude 20.

exciting us; impelling us, and firing our Souls by his divine flame; raiſing up the affections, and making the Soul cry, with a holy importunity, Abba, Father. To render our worſhip ſpiritual, we ſhould, before every ingagement in it, implore the actual preſence of the Spirit, without which we are not able to ſend forth one ſpiritual breath or groan; but be Wind-bound like a ſhip without a Gale, and our worſhip be no better than carnal. How doth the Spouſe ſolicite the Spirit with an awake oh North-wind, and come thou South-wind, &c. * Cant. 4. 16.

3. Spiritual Worſhip is done with Sincerity: When the heart ſtands right to God, and the Soul performs what it pretends to perform: When we ſerve God with our Spirits, as the Apoſtle, Rom. 1. 9. God is my Witneſs, whom I ſerve with my Spirit in the Goſpel of his Son: This is not meant of the Holy-Ghoſt; for the Apoſtle would never have called the Spirit of God, his own Spirit; but with my Spirit, that is a ſincere frame of heart. A Carnal-worſhip, whether under the Law or Goſpel, is when we are buſied about external rites, without an inward compliance of Soul. God demands the heart;* My Son give me thy heart; not give me thy tongue, or thy lips, or thy hands; theſe may be given without the heart, but the heart can never be beſtowed without theſe as its attendants. A heap of ſervices can be no more welcome to God, without our Spirits, than all Jacobs Sons could be to Joſeph, without the Benjamin he deſired to ſee. God is not taken with the Cabinet, but the Jewel: He firſt reſpected Abels Faith and ſincerity, and then his Sacrifice; he diſreſpected Cains Infidelity and Hypocriſie, and then his Offering. [For this cauſe he rejected the Offerings of the Jews, the Prayers of the Phariſees, and the Alms of Ananias and Saphira, becauſe their hearts and their duties were at a diſtance from one another. In all ſpiritual ſacrifices, our Spirits are Gods portion. Under the Law, the Reins were to be conſumed by the Fire on the Altar, becauſe the ſecret intentions of the heart were ſignified by them, Pſal. 7. 9. The Lord trieth the Heart and the Reins. It was an ill Omen among the Heathen, if a Victim wanted a heart. The Widows Mites with her heart in them, were more eſteemed than the richer Offerings without it.] Not the quantity of ſervice, but the will in it, is of account with this infinite Spirit. All that was to be brought for the framing of the Tabernacle, was to be offered *willingly with the heart. The more of Will, the more of Spirituality and Acceptableneſs to God, Pſal. 119. 108. Accept the Free-will-offering of my lips. Sincerity is the ſalt which ſeaſons every ſacrifice. The heart is moſt like to the object of worſhip: The heart in the body is the ſpring of all vital actions; and a ſpiritual Soul is the ſpring of all ſpiritual actions. How can we imagine God can delight in the meer ſervice of the Body, any more than we can delight in converſe with a Carcaſs?

* Pro. 23. 26.

* Moulin. Sermons Decad. 4. Ser. 4. p. 80.

* Exod. 25. 2.

Without the heart 'tis no worſhip: 'Tis a ſtage-play; an acting a part without being that perſon really which is acted by us: A Hypocrite in the notion of the word, is a ſtage-player. We may as well ſay a man may believe with his body, as worſhip God only with his body. Faith, is a great ingredient in Worſhip; and it is with the heart Man *believes unto Righteouſneſs. We may be truly ſaid to worſhip God, though we want perfection; but we cannot be ſaid to worſhip him, if we want ſincerity: A Statue upon a Tomb, with eyes and hands lifted up, offers as good and true a ſervice; it wants only a voice, the geſtures and poſtures are the ſame; nay, the ſervice is better; 'tis not a mockery; it repreſents all that it can be framed to: But to worſhip without our Spirits, is a preſenting God with a Picture, an Eccho, Voice and nothing elſe; a Complement; a meer Lye; a *compaſſing him about with Lyes. Without the heart, the tongue is a Lyar, and the greateſt Zeal, diſſembling with him. To preſent the Spirit, is to preſent with that which can never naturally die; to preſent him only the Body, is to preſent him that which is every day crumbling to duſt, and will at laſt lie rotting in the Grave: To offer him a few Rags eaſily torn; a ſkin for a ſacrifice, a thing unworthy the Majeſty of God; a fixed eye and elevated hands, with a ſleepy Heart and earthly Soul are pitiful things for an ever bleſſed and glorious Spirit: Nay, it is ſo far from being ſpiritual, that it is Blaſphemy; To pretend to be a Jew outwardly, without being ſo inwardly, is in the Judgment of Chriſt to Blaſpheme*. And is not the ſame title to be given with as much reaſon to thoſe that pretend a worſhip and perform none? Such a one is not a ſpiritual Worſhipper, but a blaſpheming Devil in Samuel's Mantle.

* Rom. 10. 10.

* Hoſ. 11. 12.

* Revel. 2. 9.

4. Spiri-

4. Spiritual Worſhip is performed with an unitedneſs of heart. The heart is not only now and then with God, but united to fear or worſhip his name. * A ſpiritual duty muſt have the engagement of the Spirit, and the thoughts tyed up to the ſpiritual Object: The union of all the parts of the heart together with the body, is the life of the body; and the moral union of our hearts, is the life of any duty. A heart quickly flitting from God, makes not God his treaſure; he ſlights the worſhip, and therein affronts the Object of Worſhp. All our thoughts ought to be raviſhed with God; bound up in him as in a bundle of life: But when we ſtart from him to gaze after every feather, and run after every bubble; we diſown a full and affecting excellency, and a ſatisfying ſweetneſs in him. When our thoughts run from God, 'tis a Teſtimony we have no ſpiritual affection to God: Affection would ſtake down the thoughts to the Object affected: 'Tis but a Mouth-love, as the Prophet phraſeth it *: But their hearts go after their Covetouſneſs: Covetous Objects pipe, and the heart danceth after them; and thoughts of God are ſhifted off, to receive a multitude of other imaginations: The heart and the ſervice ſtayed a while together, and then took leave of one another. The Pſalmiſt * ſtill found his heart with God when he awak'd; ſtill with God in ſpiritual affections, and fixed Meditations. A carnal heart is ſeldom with God, either in or out of worſhip: If God ſhould knock at the heart in any duty, it would be found not at home, but ſtraying abroad. Our worſhip is ſpiritual, when the door of the heart is ſhut againſt all Intruders, as our Saviour commands in Cloſet-duties *: It was not his meaning, to command the ſhutting the Cloſet-door, and leave the Heart-door open for every thought that would be apt to haunt us. Worldly affections are to be laid aſide, if we would have our worſhip ſpiritual. This was meant by the Jewiſh cuſtom of wiping or waſhing off the duſt of their feet, before their entrance into the Temple; and of not bringing mony in their girdles. To be ſpiritual in worſhip, is to have our Souls gathered and bound up wholly in themſelves, and offered to God. Our Loyns muſt be girt, as the faſhion was in the Eaſtern Countries, where they wore long Garments, that they might not waver with the Wind, and be blown between their leggs, to obſtruct them in their travel: Our faculties muſt not hang looſe about us. He is a carnal Worſhipper, that gives God but a piece of his heart, as well as he that denies him the whole of it; that hath ſome thoughts pitch'd upon God in worſhip, and as many willingly upon the World. David ſought God, not with a moiety of his heart, but with his whole heart; with his intire frame*: He brought not half his heart, and left the other in the poſſeſſion of another Maſter. It was a good leſſon Pythagoras gave his Scholars*, Not to make the obſervance of God a work by the by. If theſe Gueſts be invited, or entertained kindly, or if they come unexpected, the ſpirituality of that worſhip is loſt; the Soul kicks down what is wrought before: But if they be Brow-beaten by us, and our grief, rather than our pleaſure; they divert our ſpiritual intention from the work in hand, but hinder not Gods acceptance of it as ſpiritual; becauſe they are not the acts of our Will, but offences to our Wills.

* Pſal. 86. 11.

* Ezek. 33.31.

* Pſal. 39. 12.

* Mat. 6. 6.

* Pſal. 119.10.

* Οὐ γὰρ παρέργον δεῖ ποιεῖσθαι τὸν Θεὸν Jamblich l. 1. c. 51. p. 87.

5. Spiritual Worſhip is performed with a ſpiritual activity and ſenſibleneſs of God. With an active Underſtanding to meditate on his excellency; and an active Will to embrace him when he drops upon the Soul. If we underſtand the amiableneſs of God, our affections will be raviſht; if we underſtand the immenſity of his goodneſs, our Spirits will be enlarged. We are to act with the higheſt intention, ſutable to the greatneſs of that God with whom we have to do, Pſal. 150. 2. Praiſe him according to his excellent greatneſs: Not that we can worſhip him equally, but in ſome proportion, the frame of the heart is to be ſuted to the excellency of the Object: Our ſpiritual ſtrength is to be put out to the utmoſt, as Creatures that act naturally do: The Sun ſhines, and the Fire burns to the utmoſt of their natural power. This is ſo neceſſary, that David a ſpiritual Worſhipper prays for it before he ſets upon acts of adoration, Pſal. 86. 18. quicken us, that we may call upon thy Name: As he was loth to have a drowzy faculty, he was loth to have a drowzy inſtrument, and would willingly have them as lively as himſelf, Pſal. 57. 8. Awake up my glory; awake Pſaltery and Harp; I my ſelf will awake early: How would this Divine Soul ſcrew himſelf up to God, and be turned into nothing but a holy flame? Our Souls muſt be boyling hot when we ſerve the Lord *. The heart doth no leſs

* Rom. 12. 11. Ζέοντες

burn

burn when it ſpirituality comes to God, than when God doth ſpiritually approach to it. * A Nabals heart, one as cold as a ſtone, cannot offer up a ſpiritual ſervice. * Luke 24.32.

Whatſoever is enjoyned us as our duty, ought to be performed with the greateſt intenſneſs of our Spirit. As it is our duty to pray, ſo it is our duty to pray with the moſt fervent importunity. Tis our duty to love God, but with the pureſt and moſt ſublime affections: Every Command of God requires the whole ſtrength of the Creature to be imployed in it. That love to God, wherein all our duty to God is ſummed up, is to be with all our ſtrength, with all our might, &c. * Tho in the Covenant of grace he hath mitigated the ſeverity of the Law, and requires not from us ſuch an elevation of our affections as was poſſible in the ſtate of innocence, yet God requires of us the utmoſt moral induſtry to raiſe our affections to a pitch, at leaſt equal to what they are in other things: What ſtrength of affection we naturally have, ought to be as much and more excited in acts of Worſhip than upon other occaſions, and our ordinary works. As there was an inactivity of Soul in worſhip and a quickneſs to ſin, when ſin had the dominion; ſo when the Soul is Spiritualized, the temper is changed; there is an inactivity to ſin and an ardor in duty: The more the Soul is dead to ſin the more it is alive to God, * and the more lively too in all that concerns God and his honour. For grace being a new ſtrength added to our natural, determines the affections to new objects, and excites them to a greater vigor. And as the hatred of ſin is more ſharp, the love to every thing that deſtroys the dominion of it, is more ſtrong. And acts of Worſhip may be reckoned as the chiefeſt batteries againſt the power of this inbred enemy, When the ſpirit is in the Soul, like the Rivers of waters flowing out of the belly, the Soul hath the activity of a River, and makes haſte to be ſwallowed up in God, as the ſtreams of the River in the Sea. Chriſt makes his people Kings and Prieſts to God; * Firſt Kings, then Prieſts: Gives firſt a royal temper of heart, that they may offer ſpiritual ſacrifices as Prieſts: Kings and Prieſts to God acting with a magnificent Spirit in all their Motions to him: We cannot be ſpiritual Prieſts, till we be Spiritual Kings. The Spirit appeared in the likeneſs of fire, and where he reſides, Communicates, like fire, purity and activity.

* Lady Falklands life, p. 130.

* Rom. 6. 11.

* Revel. 1. 6.

Dulneſs is againſt the light of Nature. I do not remember that the Heathen ever offered a Snail to any of their falſe Deities, nor an Aſs, but to Priapus their unclean Idol; but the Perſians Sacrificed to the Sun a Horſe, a ſwift and generous Creature. God provided againſt thoſe in the Law, Commanding an Aſſes Firſtling, the off-ſpring of a ſluggiſh Creature, to be Redeemed, or his neck broke; but by no means to be offered to him *. God is a ſpirit infinitely active, and therefore frozen and benummed frames are unſutable to him: He rides upon a Cherub and flies, he comes upon the Wings of the Wind, he rides upon a ſwift Cloud; * and therefore demands of us not a dull reaſon, but an active Spirit: God is a living God, therefore muſt have a lively ſervice. Chriſt is life, and ſlothful adorations are not fit to be offered up in the name of life. The worſhip of God is called wreſtling in Scripture, and Paul was a ſtriver in the ſervice of his Maſter, * in an agony. * Angels worſhip God ſpiritually with their Wings on; and when God Commands them to worſhip Chriſt, the next Scripture quoted is, that he makes them flames of fire *.

* Exod. 13. 13.

* Iſa. 19. 1.

* Col. 1. 29.

* ἀγωνιζόμενος

* Heb. 1. 7.

If it be thus, how may we charge our ſelves? What Paul ſaid of the ſenſual Widow,* that ſhe is dead while ſhe lives, we may ſay often of our ſelves, we are dead while we worſhip. Our hearts are in duty as the Jews were in deliverances, as thoſe in a dream *; by which unexpectedneſs, God ſhewed the greatneſs of his care and mercy; and we attend him as men in a dream whereby we diſcover our negligence and folly. This activity doth not conſiſt in outward acts. The body may be hot and the heart may be faint; but in an inward ſtirring, meltings, flights. In the higheſt raptures the body is moſt inſenſible. Strong Spiritual affections are abſtracted from outward ſenſe.

* 1 Tim. 5. 6.

* Pſa. 126. 1.

6. Spiritual worſhip is performed with acting Spiritual habits. When all the living ſprings of Grace are opened, as the Fountains of the deep were in the deluge, the Soul and all that is within it, all the ſpiritual impreſſes of God upon it, erect themſelves to bleſs his holy name *.

* Pſa. 103. 1.

This is neceſſary to make a Worſhip Spiritual. As natural agents are determined to act ſutable to their proper nature; So rational agents, are to act conformable to a rational being: When there is a conformity between the act and the nature whence it flows, tis a good act in its kind; if it be rational, tis a good rational act, becauſe ſutable to its principle: As a Man endowed with reaſon muſt act ſutable to that endowment, and exerciſe his reaſon in his acting; So a Chriſtian endued with Grace muſt act ſutable to that nature, and exerciſe his Grace in his acting. Acts done by a natural inclination are no more human acts, than the natural acts of a beaſt may be ſaid to be human; Tho they are the acts of a Man, as he is the efficient cauſe of them, yet they are not human acts, becauſe they ariſe not from that principle of reaſon which denominates him a man. So acts of Worſhip performed by a bare exerciſe of reaſon, are not Chriſtian and ſpiritual acts, becauſe they come not from the principle which conſtitutes him a Chriſtian; Reaſon is not the principle, for then all rational Creatures would be Chriſtians: They ought therefore to be acts of a higher principle; Exerciſes of that Grace whereby Chriſtians are what they are: Not but that rational acts in worſhip are due to God; for Worſhip is due from us as men; and we are ſetled in that rank of being by our reaſon. Grace doth not exclude reaſon, but ennobles it, and calls it up to another form: But we muſt not reſt in a bare rational Worſhip, but exert that principle whereby we are Chriſtians. To Worſhip God with our reaſon, is to worſhip him as Men: To worſhip God with our grace, is to worſhip him as Chriſtians, and ſo ſpiritually: But to worſhip him only with our bodies, is no better than Brutes.

Our deſires of the word ere to iſſue from the regenerate principle, 1 Pet. 2. 2. As new born babes deſire the ſincere milk of the word: It ſeems to be not a compariſon but a reſtriction. All worſhip muſt have the ſame ſpring, and be the exerciſe of that principle; otherwiſe we can have no Communion with God. Friends that have the ſame habitual diſpoſitions, have a fundamental fitneſs for an agreeable converſe with one another; but if the temper wherein their likeneſs conſiſts, be languiſhing, and the ſtring out of tune, there is not an actual fitneſs; and the preſent indiſpoſition breaks the converſe, and renders the Company troubleſome. Tho we may have the habitual graces which compoſe in us a reſemblance to God, yet for want of acting thoſe ſutable diſpoſitions, we render our ſelves unfit for his converſe, and make the worſhip, which is fundamentally ſpiritual; to become actually carnal. As the Will cannot naturaly act to any object, but by the exerciſe of its affections, ſo the heart cannot ſpiritually act towards God, but by the exerciſe of Graces. This is Gods Muſick: Eph. 5. 19. Singing and making melody to God in your hearts. Singing and all other acts of Worſhip are outward, but the ſpiritual melody is by grace in the heart, Col. 3. 16. This renders it a ſpiritual Worſhip; for it is an effect of the fulneſs of the ſpirit in the ſoul, as v. 19. But be filled with the Spirit: The overflowing of the ſpirit in the heart, ſetting the ſoul of a believer thus on work to make a ſpiritual melody to God, ſhews that ſomething higher than bare reaſon is put in tune in the heart. Then is the fruit of the Garden pleaſant to Chriſt, when the holy ſpirit, the North and South wind blow upon the ſpices, and ſtrike out the fragrancy of them. * Since God is the Author of graces and beſtows them to have a glory from them, they are beſt employed about him and his ſervice. Tis fit he ſhould have the Cream of his own gifts. Without the exerciſe of grace we perform but a work of nature, and offer him a few dry bones without marrow.

* Cant. 4. 16.

The whole ſet of graces muſt be one way or other exerciſed. If any treble be wanting in a Lute, there will be a great defect in the Muſick. If any one ſpiritual ſtring be dull, the ſpiritual harmony of Worſhip will be ſpoiled.

And therefore,

1. Firſt, Faith muſt be acted in worſhip. A confidence in God. A naturnl worſhip cannot be performed without a natural confidence in the goodneſs of God. Whoſoever comes to him, muſt regard him as a Rewarder and a faithful Creator. * A Spiritual worſhip cannot be performed without an Evangelical confidence in him as a gracious Redeemer. To think him a Tyrant meditating revenge, damps the Soul; to regard him as a gracious King full of tender bowels, Spirits the affections to him. The mercy of God is the proper object of truſt, Pſal. 33. 18. The eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy. The Worſhip of God in the old Teſtament is moſt deſcribed by fear: In the new Teſtamen by faith. Fear, or the worſhip of God and hope in his mercy are linkt together;

* Heb. 11. 6.

ther; when they go hand in hand, the accepting eye of God is upon us: When we do not truſt, we do not Worſhip. Thoſe of Judah had the Temple worſhip among them, eſpecially in Joſiah's time, Zeph. 3. 2. the time of that Prophecy; yet it was accounted no worſhip, becauſe no truſt in the Worſhippers. Intereſt in God, cannot be improved without an exerciſe of Faith. The Goſpel worſhip is propheſied of, to be a confidence in God, as in a Husband more than in a Lord, Hoſ. 2. 16. Thou ſhalt call me Iſhi, and ſhalt call me no more Baali: Thou ſhalt call me, that is, thou ſhalt Worſhip me. Worſhip being often comprehended under Invocation. More confidence is to be exerciſed in a Husband or Father, than in a Lord or Maſter. * Zeph. 3. 2.

If a Man have not Faith, he is without Chriſt; and though a Man be in Chriſt by the habit of Faith, he performs a duty out of Chriſt without an act of Faith: Without the habit of Faith, our perſons are out of Chriſt; and without the exerciſe of Faith, the duties are out of Chriſt. As the want of Faith in a perſon is the death of the Soul; ſo the want of Faith in a ſervice, is the death of the Offering. Though a Man were at the coſt of an Ox; yet to kill it without bringing it to the door of the Tabernacle, was not a Sacrifice, but a Murder. The Tabernacle was a Type of Chriſt; and a look to him is neceſſary in every ſpiritual Sacrifice. As there muſt be faith to make any act, an act of obedience; ſo there muſt be Faith to make any act of Worſhip, ſpiritual. That ſervice is not ſpiritual, that is not vital; and it cannot be vital, without the exerciſe of a vital Principle: All ſpiritual life is hid in Chriſt, and drawn from him by *Faith. Faith, as it hath relation to Chriſt, makes every act of worſhip, a living act, and conſequently a ſpiritual act. Habitual unbelief cuts us off from the Body of Chriſt, Rom. 11. 20. Becauſe of unbelief they were broken off; and a want of actuated belief breaks us off from a preſent communion with Chriſt in Spirit. As unbelief in us hinders Chriſt from doing any mighty work, ſo unbelief in us hinders us from doing any mighty ſpiritual duty. * Levit. 17. 3, 4. * Gal. 2. 20.

So that the exerciſe of Faith, and a confidence in God, is neceſſary to every duty.

2. Love muſt be acted to render a worſhip ſpiritual. Though God commanded love in the Old-Teſtament; yet the manner of giving the Law, beſpoke more of Fear than Love. The diſpenſation of the Law was with Fire, Thunder, &c. proper to raiſe horror, and benum the Spirit; which effect it had upon the Iſraelites, when they deſired that God would ſpeak no more to them. Grace is the Genius of the Goſpel, proper to excite the affection of Love. The Law was given by the diſpoſition of Angels, with ſigns to amaze; the Goſpel was uſher'd in with the ſongs of Angels, compoſed of peace and good will, calculated to raviſh the Soul. Inſtead of the terrible voice of the Law, Do this and live: The comfortable voice of the Goſpel is Grace, Grace: Upon this account, the principle of the Old-Teſtament was Fear; and the Worſhip often expreſt by the Fear of God. The principle of the New-Teſtament is Love. The Mount Sinai *gendreth to Bondage; Mount Sion, from whence the Goſpel or Evangelical Law goes forth, gendreth to Liberty; and therefore the Spirit of Bondage unto Fear, as the Property of the Law is oppoſed to the ſtate of Adoption, the principle of Love, as the property of the Goſpel*: And therefore the worſhip of God under the Goſpel, or New-Teſtament, is oftener expreſt by Love than fear; as proceeding from higher principles, and acting nobler paſſions. In this ſtate, we are to ſerve him without fear *; without a Bondage-fear; not without a fear of unworthy treating him; with a fear of his goodneſs as it is propheſied of*: Goodneſs is not the object of terror, but reverence. God in the Law, had more the Garb of a Judge; in the Goſpel, of a Father: The name of a Father is ſweeter, and beſpeaks more of affection. As their ſervices were with a feeling of the thunders of the Law in their Conſciences; ſo is our worſhip to be with a ſenſe of Goſpel-Grace in our Spirits: Spiritual worſhip is that therefore, which is exerciſed with a Spiritual and heavenly affection, proper to the Goſpel. The heart ſhould be enlarged, according to the liberty the Goſpel gives of drawing neer to God as a Father: As he gives us the nobler relation of Children, we are to act the nobler qualities of Children. Love ſhould act according to its nature, which is deſire of Union; deſire of a moral union by Affections, as well as a myſtical union by Faith; as flame aſpires to reach flame, and become one with it. In every act of worſhip, * Gal. 4. 44. * Rom. 8. 15. * Luke 1. 74. * Hoſ. 9. 5.

we ſhould endeavour to be united to God, and become one Spirit with him: This Grace doth ſpiritualize Worſhip: In that one word Love, God hath wrapt up all the devotion he requires of us: 'Tis the total ſum of the firſt Table, Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God. 'Tis to be acted in every thing we do: But in Worſhip, our hearts ſhould more ſolemnly riſe up and acknowledge him amiable and lovely, ſince the Law is ſtript of its curſing power, and made ſweet in the blood of the Redeemer. Love is a thing acceptable of it ſelf; but nothing acceptable without it. The gifts of one Man to another are ſpiritualized by it. We would not value a Preſent, without the affection of the Donor: Every Man would lay claim to the love of others, though he would not to their Poſſeſſions. Love is Gods right in every ſervice, and the nobleſt thing we can beſtow upon him in our adorations of him. Gods gifts to us are not ſo eſtimable, without his love; nor our ſervices valuable by him, without the exerciſe of a choice affection. Hezekiah regarded not his deliverance, without the love of the Deliverer; *In love to my Soul thou haſt delivered me: So doth God ſay, in love to my honour thou haſt Worſhipped me.

* Iſa. 38. 17.

So that Love muſt be acted, to render our worſhip ſpiritual.

3. A ſpiritual ſenſibleneſs of our own weakneſs, is neceſſary to make our worſhip ſpiritual. Affections to God cannot be without relentings in our ſelves. When the eye is ſpiritually fixed upon a ſpiritual God, the heart will mourn, that the worſhip is no more ſpiritually ſutable. The more we act love upon God, as amiable and gracious, the more we ſhould exerciſe grief in our ſelves, as we are vile and offending. Spiritual worſhip is a melting worſhip, as well as an elevating worſhip; It exalts God, and debaſeth the Creature. The Publican was more ſpiritual in his humble addreſs to God, when the Phariſee was wholly carnal with his ſwelling language. A ſpiritual love in worſhip will make us grieve, that we have given him ſo little, and could give him no more. 'Tis a part of ſpiritual duty to bewail our carnality mixed with it; as we receive mercies ſpiritually, when we receive them with a ſenſe of Gods goodneſs and our own vileneſs; in the ſame manner we render a ſpiritual worſhip.

4. Spiritual deſires for God render the ſervice ſpiritual. When the Soul *follows hard after him ; purſues after God as a God of Infinite communicative goodneſs, with ſighs and groans unutterable. A ſpiritual Soul ſeems to be transformed into hunger, and thirſt, and becomes nothing but deſire. A carnal Worſhipper is taken with the beauty and magnificence of the Temple; a ſpiritual Worſhipper deſires to ſee the glory of God in the Sanctuary *; He pants after God: As he came to worſhip, to find God, ſo he boyls up in deſires for God, and is loth to go from it without God, the living God, Pſal. 42. 2. He would ſee the Urim and the Thummim; the unuſual ſparkling of the ſtones upon the High-prieſts Breaſt-plate. That deſerves not the title of ſpiritual worſhip, when the Soul makes no longing inquiries; ſaw you him whom my Soul loves? A ſpiritual worſhip is, when our deſires are chiefly for God in the worſhip: As David deſires to dwell in the Houſe of the Lord; but his deſire is not terminated there, but to behold the beauty of the Lord*, and taſte the raviſhing ſweetneſs of his preſence. No doubt but Elijah's deſires for the enjoyment of God, while he was mounting to Heaven, were as fiery as the Chariot wherein he was carried. Unutterable groans acted in worſhip are the fruit of the Spirit, and certainly render it a ſpiritual ſervice*. Strong appetites are agreeable to God, and prepare us to eat the fruit of worſhip. A ſpiritual Paul preſſeth forward to know Chriſt, and the power of his Reſurrection; and a ſpiritual Worſhipper actually aſpires in every duty to know God, and the power of his Grace. To deſire worſhip as an end, is carnal; to deſire it as a means, and act deſires in it for communion with God in it, is ſpiritual, and the fruit of a ſpiritual life.

* Pſa. 63. 8.

* Pſal. 63. 2.

* Pſal. 27. 4.

* Rom. 8. 26.

5. Thankfulneſs, and admiration are to be exerciſed in ſpiritual ſervices. This is a worſhip of Spirits. Praiſe is the adoration of the *bleſſed Angels, and of glorified Spirits, Rev. 4. 11. Thou art worthy O Lord, to receive Glory, and Honour, and Power: And Rev. 5. 13, 14. they worſhip him, aſcribing Bleſſing, Honour, Glory and Power to him that ſits upon the Throne, and to the Lamb for ever and ever. Other acts of worſhip are confined to this Life, and leave us as ſoon as we have ſet our foot in Heaven; There no notes but this of Praiſe are warbled out: The Power, Wiſdom, Love and Grace in the diſpenſation of the Goſpel, ſeat themſelves in the thoughts and tongues of bleſ-bleſſed Souls. Can a worſhip on Earth be ſpiritual, that hath no mixture of an eternal heavenly duty with it? The worſhip of God in Innocence had been chiefly an admiration of him in the works of Creation; and ſhould not our Evangelical worſhip be an admiration of him in the work of Redemption, which is a reſtoration to a better ſtate? After the petitioning for pardoning Grace*, there is a rendring the Calves or Heifers of our lips, alluding to the Heifers uſed in Euchariſtical Sacrifices. The praiſe of God is the choiceſt Sacrifice and worſhip, under a diſpenſation of redeeming Grace; This is the prime and eternal part of worſhip under the Goſpel. The Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 149. and 150. ſpeaking of the Goſpel-times, ſpurs on to this kind of worſhip; Sing to the Lord a new Song; Let the Children of Zion be joyful in their King; Let the Saints be joyful in glory, and ſing aloud upon their beds; Let the high praiſes of God be in their mouths: He begins and ends both Pſalms with praiſe ye the Lord. That cannot be a ſpiritual and evangelical worſhip, that hath nothing of the praiſe of God in the heart. The conſideration of Gods adorable perfections diſcovered in the Goſpel, will make us come to him with more ſerioufneſs; beg bleſſings of him with more confidence; fly to him with a winged Faith and Love, and more ſpiritually glorifie him in our attendances upon him. * Hoſ. 14. 2.

* Iſa. 6. 3.

7. Spiritual Worſhip is performed with delight. The Evangelical worſhip is prophetically ſignified by keeping the Feaſt of Tabernacles; they ſhall go up from year to year, to worſhip the King the Lord of Hoſts, and to keep the Feaſt of Tabernacles: Why that Feaſt, when there were other Feaſts obſerved by the Jews? That was a Feaſt celebrated with the greateſt joy; typical of the gladneſs which was to be under the exhibition of the Meſſiah, and a thankful commemoration of the Redemption wrought by him. It was to be celebrated five days after the ſolemn day of Atonement, Levit. 23. 34. compared with v. 27. wherein there was one of the ſolemneſt types of the Sacrifice of the death of Chriſt. In this Feaſt they commemorated their exchange of Egypt for Canaan; the Manna wherewith they were fed; the Water out of the Rock wherewith they were refreſht: In remembrance of this, they poured water on the ground, pronouncing thoſe words in Iſaiah, they ſhall draw waters out of the Wells of Salvation, which our Saviour refers to himſelf, John 7. 37. inviting them to him, to drink, upon the laſt day, the great day of the Feaſt of Tabernacles, wherein this ſolemn Ceremony was obſerved. Since we are freed by the death of the Redeemer from the Curſes of the Law, God requires of us a Joy in ſpiritual priviledges. A ſad frame in worſhip, gives the lye to all Goſpel-liberty; to the Purchaſe of the Redeemers Death; The Triumphs of his Reſurrection: 'Tis a carriage, as if we were under the influences of the legal Fire and Lightning, and an entring a Proteſt againſt the Freedom of the Goſpel. The Evangelical worſhip is a Spiritual worſhip; and Praiſe, Joy and Delight are propheſied of, as great ingredients in attendance on Goſpel Ordinances, Iſa. 12. 3, 4, 5. What was occaſion of terror in the Worſhip of God under the Law, is the occaſion of delight in the worſhip of God under the Goſpel. The Juſtice and Holineſs of God ſo terrible in the Law, becomes comfortable under the Goſpel, ſince they have feaſted themſelves on the active and paſſive obedience of the Redeemer. The approach is to God as gracious, not to God as unpacified; as a Son to a Father, not as a Criminal to a Judge. Under the Law God was repreſented as a Judge, remembring their Sin in their Sacrifices, and repreſenting the puniſhment they had merited; in the Goſpel as a Father, accepting the Atonement, and publiſhing the Reconciliation wrought by the Redeemer. Delight in God, is a Goſpel frame; therefore the more joyful, the more ſpiritual: The Sabbath is to be a delight; not only in regard of the Day, but in regard of the Duties of it*; in regard of the marvellous work he wrought on it; raiſing up our bleſſed Redeemer on that day, whereby a foundation was laid for the rendring our perſons and ſervices acceptable to God, Pſal. 118. 24. This is the day which the Lord hath made, we will be glad and rejoyce in it. A lumpiſh frame becomes not a day and a duty, that hath ſo noble and ſpiritual a mark upon it. * Zach. 14. 16. * Iſa. 58. 13.

The Angels in the firſt act of worſhip after the Creation, were highly joyful, Job. 38. 7. They ſhouted for joy, &c.

The Saints have perticularly acted this in their Worſhip. David would not content tent himſelf with an approach to the Altar, without going to God as his exceeding joy, Pſal. 43. 4. My triumphant joy: When he danced before the Ark, he ſeems to be transformed into delight and pleaſure, 2 Sam. 6. 14, 16. He had as much delight in Worſhip, as others had in their Harveſt and Vintage. And thoſe that took joyfully the ſpoiling of their Goods, would as joyfully attend upon the Communications of God. Where there is a fulneſs of the Spirit, there is a making melody to God in the heart *; and where there is an acting of love, (as there is in all ſpiritual ſervices) the proper fruit of it is joy in a neer approach to the Object of the Souls affection. Love is appetitus unionis: The more love, the more delight in the approachings of God to the Soul, or the out-goings of the Soul to God. As the Object of Worſhip is amiable in a ſpiritual eye, ſo the means tending to a communion with this Object are delightful in the exerciſe: Where there is no delight in a duty, there is no delight in the Object of the duty; The more of grace, the more of pleaſure in the actings of it: As the more of nature there is in any natural Agent, the more of pleaſure in the act; So the more Heavenly the Worſhip, the more ſpiritual. Delight is the frame and temper of Glory. A heart filled up to the brim with joy, is a heart filled up to the brim with the Spirit: Joy is the fruit of the Holy-Ghoſt. *

* Eph. 5. 18, 19.

* Gal. 5. 22.

1. Not the joy of Gods diſpenſation flowing from God, but a gracious active joy ſtreaming to God. There is a joy, when the Comforts of God are dropt into the Soul, as Oyle upon the Wheel; which indeed makes the faculties move with more ſpeed and activity in his ſervice, like the Chariots of Aminadab: And a Soul may ſerve God in the ſtrength of this taſte, and its delight terminated in the ſenſible comfort. This is not the joy I mean, but ſuch a joy that hath God for its Object, delighting in him as the term, in worſhip as the way to him: The firſt is Gods diſpenſation, the other is our duty; The firſt is an act of Gods favour to us, the ſecond a ſprout of habitual grace in us. The Comforts we have from God, may elevate our duties; but the grace we have within, doth ſpiritualize our duties.

2. Nor is every delight an argument of a ſpiritual ſervice. All the requiſites to worſhip muſt be taken in. A man may invent a worſhip, and delight in it; as Micah in the adoration of his Idol, when he was glad he had got both an Ephod and a Levit *. As a man may have a contentment in ſin, ſo he may have a contentment in Worſhip; not becauſe it is a worſhip of God, but the worſhip of his own invention, agreeable to his own humor and deſign, as Iſa. 58. 2. 'tis ſaid, they delighted in approaching to God, but it was for carnal ends. Novelty ingenders Complacency; but it muſt be a worſhip wherein God will delight; and that muſt be a worſhip according to his own Rule and infinite Wiſdom, and not our ſhallow fancies.

* Judges 17.

God requires a cheerfulneſs in his ſervice, eſpecially under the Goſpel, where he ſits upon a Throne of Grace; diſcovers himſelf in his amiableneſs, and acts the Covenant of Grace, and the ſweet relation of a Father. The Prieſts of old were not to ſully themſelves with any ſorrow, when they were in the exerciſe of their functions. God put a bar to the natural affections of Aaron and his Sons, when Nadab and Abihu had been cut off by a ſevere hand of God *. Every true Chriſtian in a higher order of Prieſt-hood, is a perſon dedicated to joy and peace, offering himſelf a lively Sacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiving: And there is no Chriſtian duty, but is to be ſet off and ſeaſoned with cheerfulneſs: He that loves a cheerful Giver in acts of Charity, requires no leſs a cheerful Spirit in acts of Worſhip: As this is an ingredient in worſhip, ſo it is the means to make your Spirits intent in worſhip. When the heart triumphs in the conſideration of Divine excellency and goodneſs, it will be angry at any thing that offers to jog and diſturb it.

* Lev. 10. 6.

8. Spiritual worſhip is to be performed, though with a delight in God; yet with a deep reverence of God. The Goſpel in advancing the ſpirituality of worſhip, takes off the terror, but not the reverence of God; which is nothing elſe in its own nature, but a due and high eſteem of the excellency of a thing according to the nature of it: And therefore the Goſpel preſenting us with more illuſtrious notices of the glorious nature of God, is ſo far from indulging any diſeſteem of him, that it requires of us a greater reverence ſutable to the height of its diſcovery, above what could be ſpell'd in the Book of Creation: The Goſpel worſhip is therefore expreſt by trembling, Hoſ. 11. 10. They ſhall walk after the Lord; he ſhall roar like a Lion; when he ſhall roar roar, then the Children ſhall tremble from the Weſt. When the Lion of the Tribe of Judah ſhall lift up his powerful voice in the Goſpel, the Weſtern Gentiles ſhall run trembling to walk after the Lord. God hath alway attended his greateſt manifeſtations with remarkable Characters of Majeſty, to create a reverence in his Creature: He cauſed the wind to March before him; to cut the Mountain, when he manifeſted himſelf to Elijah, 1 Kings 19. 11. A Wind and a Cloud of Fire, before that magnificent viſion to Ezekiel, Ezek. 1. 4, 5. Thunders and Lightnings before the giving the Law, Exod. 19. 18. And a mighty wind before the giving the Spirit, Acts 2. God requires of us an aw of him in the very act of performance. The Angels are pure, and cannot fear him as Sinners, but in reverence they cover their Faces when they ſtand before him *: His power ſhould make us reverence him, as we are Creatures; His Juſtice as we are Sinners; His goodneſs as we are reſtored Creatures. *[God is cloathed with unſpeakable Majeſty; the glory of his face ſhines brighter than the Lights of Heaven in their beauty. Before him the Angels tremble, and the Heavens melt; we ought not therefore to come before him with the Sacrifice of Fools, nor tender a duty to him, without falling low upon our faces, and bowing the knees of our hearts in token of reverence.] Not a ſlaviſh fear, like that of Devils; but a Godly fear, like that of Saints*, joyned with a ſenſe of an unmoveable Kingdom becometh us: And this the Apoſtle calls a grace neceſſary to make our ſervice acceptable: And therefore the grace neceſſary to make it ſpiritual, ſince nothing finds admiſſion to God, but what is of a ſpiritual nature. The conſideration of his glorious nature, ſhould imprint an awful reſpect upon our Souls to him: His goodneſs ſhould make his Majeſty more adorable to us, as his Majeſty makes his goodneſs more admirable in his condeſcenſions to us. As God is a ſpirit, our worſhip muſt be ſpiritual; and being he is the ſupream ſpirit, our worſhip muſt be reverential: We muſt obſerve the State he takes upon him in his Ordinances; He is in Heaven, we upon the Earth; we muſt not therefore be haſty to utter any thing before God, Eccleſ. 5. 7. Conſider him a Spirit in the higheſt Heavens, and our ſelves ſpirits dwelling in a dreggy Earth. Looſe and gariſh frames debaſe him to our own quality: Slight poſtures of Spirit, intimate him to be ſlight and mean Being: Our being in Covenant with him, muſt not lower our awful apprehenſions of him: As he is the Lord thy God, 'tis a glorious and fearful Name, or wonderful *: Though he lay by his Juſtice to Believers, he doth not lay by his Majeſty, When we have a confidence in him, becauſe he is the Lord our God; we muſt have awful thoughts of his Majeſty, becauſe his name is glorious. God is terrible from his Holy-places in regard of the great things he doth for his Iſrael *: We ſhould behave our ſelves with that inward honour and reſpect of him, as if he were preſent to our bodily eyes: The higher apprehenſions we have of his Majeſty, the greater aw will be upon our hearts in his preſence, and the greater ſpirituality in our acts. We ſhould manage our hearts ſo, as if we had a view of God in his heavenly glory.

* Iſa. 6. 2.
* Daille Sur. 3. Jean. P. 150.
* Heb. 12. 28.
* Deut. 28. 58.
* Pſal. 68. 35.

9. Spiritual Worſhip is to be performed with humility in our Spirits. This is to follow upon the reverence of God. As we are to have high thoughts of God, that we may not debaſe him; we muſt have low thoughts of our ſelves, not to vaunt before him. When we have right notions of the Divine Majeſty; we ſhall be as Worms in our own thoughts, and creep as Worms into his preſence: We can never conſider him in his glory, but we have a fit opportunity to reflect upon our ſelves, and conſider how baſely we revolted from him, and how graciouſly we are reſtored by him: As the Goſpel affords us greater diſcoveries of Gods nature, and ſo enhanceth our reverence of him; ſo it helps us to a fuller underſtanding of our own vileneſs and weakneſs, and therefore is proper to ingender Humility: The more ſpiritual and evangelical therefore any ſervice is, the more humble it is. That is a ſpiritual ſervice, that doth moſt manifeſt the glory of God; and this cannot be manifeſted by us, without manifeſting our own emptineſs and nothingneſs. The Heathens were ſenſible of the neceſſity of Humility by the Light of Nature *; after the Name of God ſignified by Ἐι inſcribed on the Temple at Delphos, followed γνῶθι σεαυτον whereby was inſinuated, that when we have to do with God, who is the only Ens, we ſhould behave our ſelves with a ſenſe of our own infirmity, and infinite diſtance from him. As a perſon, ſo a duty leavened with Pride, hath nothing of ſincerity, and therefore nothing of ſpirituality in it, Hab. 2. 4. His Soul which is lifted up, is not not upright in him. The Elders that were crowned by God to be Kings and Prieſts, to offer ſpiritual Sacrifices; uncrown themſelves in their worſhip of him, and caſt down their Ornaments at his feet *: The Greek word to worſhip προσκυνεῖν ſignifies to creep like a Dog upon his belly before his Maſter; to lie low. How deep ſhould our ſenſe be of the priviledge of Gods admitting us to his worſhip, and affording us ſuch a mercy under our deſerts of wrath? How mean ſhould be our thoughts, both of our perſons and performances? How patiently ſhould we wait upon God for the ſucceſs of worſhip? How did Abraham the Father of the Faithful, equal himſelf to the Earth, when he ſupplicated the God of Heaven, and devote himſelf to him under the title of very Duſt and *Aſhes? Iſaiah did but behold an Evangelical Apparition of God and the Angels worſhipping him, and preſently reflects upon his *own uncleanneſs. Gods preſence both requires and cauſes Humility. How lowly is David in his own opinion, after a magnificent duty performed by himſelf and his people? 1 Chron. 29. 14. Who am I? And what is my people, that we ſhould be able to offer ſo willingly? The more ſpiritual the Soul is in its carriage to God, the more humble it is; and the more gracious God is in his communications to the Soul, the lower it lies.

* Plutarch Moral. p. 344.

* Revel. 4. 10. compared with 5. and the 10

* Gen. 18. 27.

* Iſa. 6. 5.

God commanded not the fiercer Creatures to be offered to him in Sacrifices, but Lambs and Kids, meek and lowly Creatures; none that had ſtings in their tails or venom in their tongues*. The meek Lamb was the daily Sacrifice: The Doves were to be offered by Pairs: God would not have Hony mixed with any Sacrifice, Levit. 2. 11. That breeds Choler, and Choler Pride; but Oyle, he commanded, to be uſed; that ſupples and mollifies the parts. Swelling Pride, and boiling Paſſions render our ſervices carnal; they cannot be ſpiritual, without an humble ſweetneſs and an innocent ſincerity: One grain of this tranſcends the moſt coſtly Sacrifices. A Contrite Heart puts a gloſs upon Worſhip*. The departure of men and Angels from God, began in Pride; Our approaches and return to him muſt begin in Humility: And therefore all thoſe Graces which are bottom'd on Humility, muſt be acted in worſhip, as Faith, and a ſenſe of our own indigence. Our bleſſed Saviour, the moſt ſpiritual Worſhipper, proſtrated himſelf in the Garden with the greateſt lowlineſs, and offered himſelf upon the Croſs a Sacrifice with the greateſt humility. Melted Souls in worſhip, have the moſt ſpiritual conformity to the perſon of Chriſt in the ſtate of humiliation, and his deſign in that ſtate: As worſhip without it is not ſutable to God, ſo neither is it advantageous for us. A time of worſhip, is a time of Gods Communication. The Veſſel muſt be melted to receive the Mould it is deſigned for: Softned wax is fitteſt to receive a ſtamp, and a ſpiritually melted Soul fitteſt to receive a ſpiritual impreſſion. We cannot perform duty in an evangelical and ſpiritual ſtrain, without the meltingneſs and meanneſs in our ſelves which the Goſpel requires.

* Caudam aculeatam vel linguam nigram Alexand. ab Alex. l. 3. c. 12.

* Pſal. 51. 16, 17.

10. Spiritual worſhip is to be performed with Holineſs. God is a holy Spirit; a likeneſs to God muſt attend the worſhipping of God, as he is: Holineſs is alway in ſeaſon; *It becomes his houſe for ever. We can never ſerve the living God, till we have Conſciences purged from dead works, Heb. 9. 14. Dead works in our Conſciences are unſutable to God, an eternal living Spirit. The more mortified the heart, the more quickned the ſervice. Nothing can pleaſe an infinite Purity, but that which is pure: Since God is in his Glory, in his Ordinances; we muſt not be in our Filthineſs. The Holineſs of his Spirit doth ſparkle in his Ordinances; The holineſs of our Spirits ought alſo to ſparkle in our obſervance of them. The Holineſs of God is moſt celebrated in the worſhip of Angels*: Spiritual worſhip ought to be like Angelical: That cannot be with Souls totally impure. As there muſt be perfect holineſs to make a worſhip perfectly ſpiritual; ſo there muſt be ſome degree of holineſs to make it in any meaſure ſpiritual. God would have all the Utenſils of the Sanctuary employed about his ſervice to be holy: The Inwards of the Sacrifice were to be rinſed thrice*. The Crop and Feathers of Sacrificed Doves, was to be hung Eaſtward towards the entrance of the Temple, at a diſtance from the Holy of Holies where the preſence of God was moſt eminent*. When Aaron was to go into the Holy of Holies, he was to ſanctifie himſelf in an extraordinary manner*. The Prieſts were to be bare footed in the Temple, in the exerciſe of their Office; ſhoes alway were to be put off upon holy ground: Look to thy foot when thou goeſt to the Houſe of God,

* Pſal. 93. 5.

* Iſa. 6. 3. Revel. 4. 8.

* As the Jewiſh Doctors obſerve on Lev. 1. 9.
* Lev. 1. 16.
* Lev. 16. 4.

God, ſaith the wiſe man, Eccleſ. 5. 1. Strip the affections, the feet of the Soul, of all the dirt contracted; diſcard all earthly and baſe thoughts from the heart. A Beaſt was not to touch the Mount Sinai, without loſing his Life: Nor can we come near the Throne with brutiſh affections, without loſing the life and fruit of the worſhip. An unholy Soul degrades himſelf from a Spirit to a Brute, and the worſhip from ſpiritual to brutiſh. If any unmortified ſin be found in the Life, as it was in the comers to the Temple, it taints and pollutes the *Worſhip. All worſhip is an acknowledgment of the excellency of God as he is holy: Hence it is called a ſanctifying Gods Name: How can any perſon ſanctifie Gods Name, that hath not a holy reſemblance to his Nature? If he be not holy as he is holy, he cannot worſhip him according to his excellency in Spirit and in Truth: No worſhip is ſpiritual wherein we have not a communion with God. But what intercourſe can there be between a holy God, and an impure Creature; between Light and darkneſs? We have no fellowſhip with him in any ſervice, unleſs we walk in the Light, in ſervice and out of ſervice, as he is Light*. The Heathen thought not their Sacrifices agreeable to God, without waſhing their hands, whereby they ſignified the preparation of their hearts, before they made the Oblation: Clean hands without a pure heart, ſignifie nothing: The frame of our hearts muſt anſwer the purity of the outward Symbols. Pſal. 26. 6. I will waſh my hands in Innocence, ſo will I compaſs thine Altar, O Lord: He would obſerve the appointed Ceremonies, but not without cleanſing his heart as well as his hands. Vain Man is apt to reſt upon outward acts and rites of worſhip: But this muſt alway be practiſed: The words are in the preſent Tenſe, I waſh, I compaſs. Purity in worſhip ought to be our continual Care. If we would perform a ſpiritual ſervice, wherein we would have communion with God, it muſt be in Holineſs: If we would walk with Chriſt, it muſt be in *white; alluding to the white Garments the Prieſts put on, when they went to perform their ſervice: As without this we cannot ſee God in Heaven, ſo neither can we ſee the beauty of God in his own Ordinances.

* Iſa. 1. 15. * Jer. 7. 9, 10. * 1 John 1. 7. * Revel. 3. 4.

11. Spiritual Worſhip is performed with ſpiritual ends, with raiſed aims at the glory of God. No duty can be ſpiritual that hath a carnal aim: Where God is the ſole Object, he ought to be the principal End: In all our actions he is to be our End, as he is the principle of our Being; much more in Religious Acts, as he is the Object of our worſhip. The worſhip of God in Scripture, is expreſt by the *ſeeking of him: Him, not our ſelves; all is to be referred to God. As we are not to live to our ſelves, that being the ſign of a carnal ſtate; ſo we are not to worſhip for our ſelves, Rom. 14. 7, 8. As all actions are denominated good from their end, as well as their object; ſo upon the ſame account they are denominated ſpiritual. The end ſpiritualizeth our natural actions; much more our religious: Then are our faculties devoted to him when they center in him. If the intention be evil, there is nothing but darkneſs in the whole ſervice, Luke 11. 34. The firſt inſtitution of the Sabbath, the ſolemn day for worſhip, was to contemplate the glory of God in his ſtupendous works of Creation, and render him a homage for them, Revel. 4. 11. Thou art worthy O Lord, to receive Honour, Glory and Power; for thou haſt created all things, and for thy pleaſure they are and where Created. No worſhip can be returned, without a glorifying of God; and we cannot actually glorifie him, without direct aims at the promoting his honour. As we have immediately to do with God, ſo we are immediately to mind the praiſe of God. As we are not to content our ſelves with habitual grace, but be rich in the exerciſe of it in worſhip; ſo we are not to acquieſce in habitual aims at the glory of God, without the actual outflowings of our hearts in thoſe aims.

* Heb. 11. 6.

'Tis natural for Man to worſhip God for ſelf: Self-righteouſneſs is the rooted aim of Man in his worſhip ſince his revolt from God, and being ſenſible it is not to be found in his natural actions, he ſeeks for it in his moral and religious. By the firſt Pride we flung God off from being our Soveraign, and from being our end; ſince, a Phariſaical Spirit ſtruts it in nature, not only to do things to be ſeen of men, but to be admired by God, Iſa. 58. 3. Wherefore have we faſted and thou takeſt no knowledge? This is to have God worſhip them, inſtead of being worſhipped by them. Cain's carriage after his Sacrifice, teſtified ſome baſe end in his worſhip; he came not to God as a Subject to a Soveraign, but as if he had been the Soveraign, and God the Subject; and when his design is not answered, and his desire not gratified, he proves more a Rebel to God, and a Murderer of his Brother. Such base scents will rise up in our worship from the body of death which cleaves to us, and mix themselves with our services, as Weeds with the Fish in the Net. David therefore, after his People had offered willingly to the Temple, begs of God, that their

* 1 Chr. 29. 18. *hearts might be prepared to him ; that their hearts might stand right to God, without any squinting to self-ends.

Some present themselves to God, as poor men offers a present to a great person, not to honour him, but to gain for themselves a reward richer than their gift. What profit is it that we have kept his Ordinance, &c. ? Mal. 3. 14. Some worship him, intending thereby to make him amends for the wrong they have done him, wipe off their scores, and satisfie their debts; as though a spiritual wrong could be recompensed with a bodily service, and an infinite Spirit be outwitted and appeased by a carnal flattery. Self is the Spirit of Carnality: To pretend a homage to God, and intend only the advantage of self, is rather to mock him, than worship him. When we believe that we ought to be satisfied, rather than God glorified; we set God below our selves, imagine that he should submit his own honour to our advantage: We make our selves more glorious than God, as though we were not made for him, but he hath a Being only for us; this is to have a very low esteem of the Majesty of God. Whatsoever any man aims at in worship above the glory of God, that he forms as an Idol to himself instead of God, and sets up a Golden Image. God counts not this as a Worship. The Offerings made in the Wilderness for forty years together, God esteemed as not offered to him, Amos 5. 25. Have you offered to me Sacrifices and Offerings in the Wilderness forty years, O House of Israel ? They did it not to God, but to themselves; for their own security, and the attainment of the possession of the promised Land. A spiritual Worshipper performs not worship for some hopes of carnal advantage; he uses ordinances as means to bring God and his Soul together; to be more fitted to honour God in the world, in his perticular place: When he hath been inflamed and humble in any address or duty, he gives God the glory; his heart suites the doxology at the end of the Lords-prayer, ascribes the Kingdom, Power and glory to God alone; and if any viper of Pride starts out upon him, he endeavours presently to shake it off. That which was the first end of our framing, ought to be the chief end of our acting towards God: But when men have the same ends in worship as Brutes, the satisfaction of a sensitive part; the service is no more than brutish. The acting for a sensitive end, is unworthy of the Majesty of God to whom we address, and unbecoming a rational Creature. The acting for a sensitive end, is not rational, much less can it be a spiritual service; though the Act may be good in it self yet not good in the Agent, because he wants a due end: We are then spiritual, when we have the same end in our redeemed services, as God had in his redeeming love, viz. his own glory.

12. Spiritual service is offered to God in the name of Christ. Those are only spiritual
* 1 Pet. 2. 5. *Sacrifices, that are offered up to God by Jesus Christ ; that are the fruits of the Sanctification of the Spirit, and offered in the mediation of the Son: As the Altar sanctifies the gift, so doth Christ spiritualize our services for Gods acceptation; as the Fire upon the Altar separated the airy and finer parts of the sacrifice from the terreen and earthly: This is the Golden Altar upon which the Prayers of the Saints are offered
* Revel. 8. 3. up *before the Throne. As all that we have from God streams through his blood: so all that we give to God ascends by vertue of his merits. All the blessings God gave
* Psal. 134. 3. The Lord bless thee out of Sion. to the Israelites came out of *Sion, that is, from the Gospel hid under the Law; all the duties we present to God are to be presented in Sion, in an evangelical manner: All our worship must be bottomed on Christ. God hath intended that we should honour the Son as we honour the Father: As we honour the Father by offering our service only to him, so we are to honour the Son by offering it only in his name: In him alone God is well pleased, because in him alone he finds our services spiritual and worthy of acceptation: We must therefore take fast hold of him with our Spirits, and the faster we hold him, the more spiritual is our worship. To do any thing in the name of Christ, is not to believe the worship shall be accepted for it self, but to have our eye fixed upon Christ for the acceptance of it, and not to rest upon the work done as carnal people are apt to do. The Creatures present their acknowledgments ledgments to God by Man; and man can only preſent his by Chriſt. It was utterly unlawful after the building of the Temple, to ſacrifice any where elſe: The Temple being a Type of Chriſt, it is utterly unlawful for us to preſent our ſervices in any other name than his.

This is the way to be ſpiritual. If we conſider God out of Chriſt, we can have no other notions but thoſe of horror and bondage. We behold him a Spirit, but environ'd with Juſtice and Wrath for ſinners: But the conſideration of him in Chriſt, vails his Juſtice; draws forth his Merey; repreſents him more a Father than a Judge. In Chriſt the aſpect of Juſtice is changed, and by that the temper of the Creature; ſo that in and by this Mediator, we can have a ſpiritual boldneſs, and acceſs to God with confidence *; whereby the Spirit is kept from benummedneſs, and diſtraction; and our Souls quickned and refined. The thoughts kept upon Chriſt in a duty of Worſhip, quickly elevates the Soul, and ſpiritualizeth the whole ſervice. Sin makes our ſervices black, and the blood of Chriſt makes both our perſons and ſervices white. * Eph. 3. 12.

To conclude this Head.

God is a Spirit infinitely happy, therefore we muſt approach to him with cheerfulneſs; He is a Spirit of infinite Majeſty, therefore we muſt come before him with reverence; He is a Spirit infinitely high, therefore we muſt offer up our Sacrifices with the deepeſt humility; He is a Spirit infinitely holy, therefore we muſt addreſs with purity; He is a Spirit infinitely glorious, we muſt therefore acknowledge his excellency in all that we do, and in our meaſures contribute to his glory, by having the higheſt aims in his worſhip; He is a Spirit infinitely provoked by us, therefore we muſt offer up our worſhip in the name of a pacifying Mediator and Interceſſour.

3. The third general is, why a ſpiritual worſhip is due to God, and to be offered to him. We muſt conſider the Object of Worſhip, and the Subject of worſhip; the Worſhipper and the Worſhipped. God is a Spiritual Being; Man is a reaſonable Creature. The nature of God informs us, what is fit to be preſented to him; our own nature informs us, what is fit to be preſented by us.

Reaſon 1. The beſt we have is to be preſented to God in worſhip. For

1. Since God is the moſt excellent Being, he is to be ſerved by us with the moſt excellent thing we have, and with the choiceſt veneration. God is ſo incomprehenſibly excellent, that we cannot render him what he deſerves; We muſt render him what we are able to offer; the beſt of our affections; the flower of our ſtrength; the Cream and Top of our Spirits. By the ſame reaſon that we are bound to give to God the beſt worſhip, we muſt offer it to him in the beſt manner. We cannot give to God any thing too good for ſo Bleſſed a Being: God being a great King, ſlight ſervices become not his Majeſty *: 'Tis unbecoming the Majeſty of God, and the reaſon of a Creature, to give him a trivial thing: 'Tis unworthy to beſtow the beſt of our ſtrength on our Luſt, and the worſt and weakeſt in the ſervice of God. An infinite Spirit, ſhould have affections as near to infinite as we can: As he is a Spirit without bounds, ſo he ſhould have a ſervice without limits: When we have given him all, we cannot ſerve him according to the excellency of his nature *; and ſhall we give him leſs than all? His infinite excellency and our dependance on him, as Creature, demands the choiceſt adoration: Our Spirits being the nobleſt part of our nature, are as due to him, as the ſervice of our bodies which are the vileſt: To ſerve him with the worſt only, is to diminiſh his honour. * Mal. 1. 13, 14. * Joſh. 24. 19.

2. Under the Law, God commanded the beſt to be offered him. He would have the Males, the beſt of the kind; the fat, the beſt of the Creature *: He commanded them to offer him the Firſtlings of the flock; not the Firſtlings of the Womb, but the Firſtlings of the Year: The Jewiſh Cattle having two breeding times, in the beginning of the Spring, and the beginning of September; the latter breed was the weaker which Jacob knew *, when he laid the Rods before the Cattle when they were ſtrong in the Spring, and witheld them when they were feeble in the Autumn. One reaſon (as the Jews ſay) why God accepted not the offerings of Cain was, becauſe he brought the meaneſt, not the beſt of the fruit; and therefore 'tis ſaid, only that he brought of the fruit of the Ground, Gen. 4. 3. not the firſt of the fruit, or the beſt of the fruit; as Abel who brought the Firſtling of his Flock, and the Fat thereof, v. 4. * Exod. 29. 13. The inward fat not the off-falls. * Gen. 30.

3. And this the Heathen practiced by the light of Nature. They for the moſt part offered Males, as being more worthy; and burnt the Male, not the Female Frankincenſe, as it is divided into thoſe two kinds: They offered the beſt, when they offered their Children to Moloch. Nothing more excellent than Man, and nothing dearer to Parents than their Children, which are parts of themſelves. When the Iſraelites would have a Golden-Calf for a repreſentation of God, they would dedicate their Jewels, and ſtrip their Wives and Children of their richeſt Ornaments, to ſhew their devotion. Shall men ſerve their dumb Idols with the beſt of their ſubſtance, and the ſtrength of their Souls; and ſhall the living God have a duller ſervice from us, than Idols had from them? God requires no ſuch hard, but delightful worſhip from us, our Spirits.

4. All Creatures ſerve Man, by the providential order of God, with the beſt they have. As we by Gods appointment receive from Creatures the beſt they can give, ought we not with a free will render to God the beſt we can offer? The Beaſts give us their beſt Fat; the Trees their beſt Fruit; the Sun its beſt Light; the Fountains their beſt ſtreams: Shall God order us the beſt from Creatures, and we put him off with the worſt from our ſelves?

5. God hath given us the choiceſt thing he had. A Redeemer that was the Power of God, and the Wiſdom of God: The beſt he had in Heaven, his own Son, and in himſelf, a Sacrifice for us, that we might be enabled to preſent our ſelves a Sacrifice to Him. And Chriſt offered himſelf for us, the beſt he had, and that with the ſtrength of the Deity through the Eternal Spirit; and ſhall we grudge God the beſt part of our ſelves? As God would have a worſhip from his Creature, ſo it muſt be with the beſt part of his Creature. If we have *given our ſelves to the Lord, we can worſhip with no leſs than our ſelves. What is the Man without his Spirit? If we are to worſhip God with all that we have received from him, we muſt worſhip him with the beſt part we have received from him: 'Tis but a ſmall glory we can give him with the beſt, and ſhall we deprive him of his right by giving him the worſt? As what we are, is from God; ſo what we are, ought to be for God. Creation is the foundation of worſhip, Pſal. 100. 2, 3. Serve the Lord with gladneſs: Know ye that the Lord he is God; 'tis he that hath made us: He hath ennobled us with ſpiritual affections; where is it fitteſt for us to employ them, but upon him? and at what time, but when we come ſolemnly to converſe with him? Is it Juſtice to deny him the honour of his beſt gift to us? Our Souls are more his gift to us, than any thing in the World: Other things are ſo given that they are often taken from us, but our Spirits are the moſt durable gift. Rational faculties cannot be removed without a diſſolution of nature.

* 2 Cor. 8. 5.

Well then *; As he is God, he is to be honoured with all the propenſions and ardor that the infiniteneſs and excellency of ſuch a Being requires, and the incomparable obligations he hath laid upon us in this ſtate deſerve at our hands: In all our worſhip therefore, our minds ought to be filled with the higheſt admiration, love and reverence. Since our end was to glorifie God, we anſwer not our end, and honour him not, unleſs we give him the choiceſt we have.

* Amyrald. Mor. Tom. 2. p. 311.

Reaſon 2. We cannot elſe act towards God according to the nature of rational Creatures. Spiritual worſhip is due to God, becauſe of his nature; and due from us, becauſe of our nature. As we are to adore God, ſo we are to adore him as men: The nature of a rational Creature makes this impreſſion upon him: He cannot view his own nature without having this duty ſtriking upon his mind. As he knows by inſpection into himſelf, that there was a God that made him; ſo, that he is made to be in ſubjection to God; ſubjection to him in his Spirit as well as his Body, and ought morally to teſtifie this natural dependance on him: His conſtitution informs him, that he hath a capacity to converſe with God; that he cannot converſe with him, but by thoſe inward faculties: If it could be managed by his Body without his Spirit, Beaſts might as well converſe with God as Men. It can never be a reaſonable ſervice as it ought to be*, unleſs the reaſonable faculties be employed in the management of it: It muſt be a worſhip prodigiouſly lame, without the concurrence of the cheifeſt part of Man with it. As we are to act conformably to the nature of the object, ſo alſo to the nature of our own faculties. Our faculties in the very gift of them to us were deſtined to be exerciſed; about what? What? All other things but the Author of them: 'Tis a conceit cannot enter into the heart of a rational Creature, that he ſhould act as ſuch a Creature in other things, and as a ſtone in things relating to the Donor of them; as a man, with his mind about him in the affairs of the world, as a Beaſt without reaſon in his acts towards God. If a man did not employ his reaſon in other things, he would be an unprofitable Creature in the world: If he do not employ his ſpiritual faculties in worſhip, he denies them the proper end and uſe for which they were given him; 'tis a practical denial that God hath given him a Soul, and that God hath any right to the exerciſe of it. If there were no worſhip appointed by God in the world, the natural inclination of man to ſome kind of Religion would be in vain; and if our inward faculties were not employed in the duties of Religion, they would be in vain: The true end of God in the endowment of us with them would be defeated by us, as much as lies in us, if we did not ſerve him with that which we have from him ſolely at his own coſt. As no man can with reaſon conclude, that the reſt commanded on the Sabbath and the Sanctification of it, was only a reſt of the body; that had been performed by the Beaſts as well as Men; but ſome higher end was aimed at for the rational Creature: So no man can think that the Command for worſhip, terminated only in the preſence of the Body; that God ſhould give the Command to Man as a reaſonable Creature, and expect no other ſervice from him than that of a Brute.

* Rom. 12. 1.

thor

God did not require a worſhip from man, for any want he had, or any eſſential honour that could accrue to him; but that men might teſtifie their gratitude to him, and dependance on him. 'Tis the moſt horrid ingratitude, not to have lively and deep ſentiments of gratitude after ſuch obligations, and not to make thoſe due acknowledgments that are proper for a rational Creature. Religion is the higheſt and choiceſt act of a reaſonable Creature: No Creature under Heaven is capable of it that wants reaſon. As it is a violation of reaſon not to worſhip God, ſo it is no leſs a violation of reaſon not to worſhip him with the Heart and Spirit: It is a high diſhonour to God, and defeats him not only of the ſervice due to him from Man, but that which is due to him from all the Creatures. Every Creature, as it is an effect of Gods Power and VViſdom, doth paſſively worſhip God; that is, it doth afford matter of adoration to man that hath reaſon to collect it and return it where it is due: VVithout the exerciſe of the Soul we can no more hand it to God, than without ſuch an exerciſe we can gather it from the Creature: So that by this neglect, the Creatures are reſtrained from anſwering their chief end; they cannot pay any ſervice to God without man; nor can man without the employment of his rational faculties, render a homage to God, any more than beaſts can. This engagement of our inward power ſtands firm and unviolable, let the modes of worſhip be what they will, or the changes of them by the Soveraign Authority of God never ſo frequent; this could not expire or be changed, as long as the nature of Man indured. As man had not been capable of a Command for VVorſhip, unleſs he had been indued with ſpiritual faculties; ſo he is not active in a true practice of VVorſhip, unleſs they be imployed by him in it. The conſtitution of Man makes this manner of worſhip perpetually obligatory; and the obligation can never ceaſe, till man ceaſe to be a Creature furniſht with ſuch faculties: In our worſhip therefore, if we would act like rational Creatures, we ſhould extend all the powers of our Souls to the utmoſt pitch, and eſſay to have apprehenſions of God, equal to the excellency of his Nature, which though we may attempt, we can never attain.

Reaſon 3. Without this engagement of our Spirits, no act is an act of worſhip. True worſhip being an acknowledgment of God and the perfections of his Nature, reſults only from the Soul, that being only capable of knowing God and thoſe perfections, which are the object and motive of worſhip: The poſture of the body is but to teſtifie the inward temper and affection of the mind: If therefore it teſtifies what it is not, 'tis a lie and no worſhip: The cringes a Beaſt may be taught to make to an Altar, may as well be called Worſhip; ſince a man thinks as little of that God he pretends to honour, as the beaſt doth of the Altar to which he bowes. Worſhip is a reverent remembrance of God, and giving ſome honour to him with the intention of the Soul: It cannot juſtly have the name of Worſhip, that wants the eſſential part of it: 'Tis an aſcribing to God the glory of his Nature, an owning ſubjection and obedience to him as our Soveraign Lord: This is as impoſſible to be performed without without the Spirit, as that there can be life and motion in a body without a Soul: 'Tis a drawing near to God, not in regard of his eſſential preſence; ſo all things are near to God; but in an acknowledgment of his excellency, which is an act of the Spirit; without this, the worſt of men in a place of worſhip, are as near to God as the beſt. The neceſſity of the conjunction of our Soul, ariſeth from the nature of worſhip; which being the moſt ſerious thing we can be employed in, the higheſt converſe with the higheſt object, requires the choiceſt temper of Spirit in the performance. That cannot be an act of worſhip, which is not an act of Piety and Vertue; but there is no act of vertue done by the members of the Body, without the concurrence of the Powers of the Soul. We may as well call the preſence of a dead Carcaſs in a place of worſhip, an act of Religion, as the preſence of a living body without an intent Spirit: The ſeparation of the Soul from one is natural, the other moral; that renders the body lifeleſs, but this renders the act loathſome to God: As the being of the Soul gives life to the Body, ſo the operation of the Soul gives life to the actions: As he cannot be a man that wants the form of a man, a rational Soul; ſo that cannot be a worſhip that wants an eſſential part, the act of the Spirit: God will not vouchſafe any acts of man ſo noble a title, without the requiſite qualifications, Hoſ. 5. 6. They ſhall go with their Flocks and their Herds, to ſeek the Lord, &c. A multitude of Lambs and Bullocks for Sacrifice, to appeaſe Gods Anger: God would not give it the title of worſhip, though inſtituted by himſelf, when it wanted the qualities of ſuch a ſervice: The Spirit of Whoredom was in the midſt of them, v. 4. In the judgment of our Saviour, it is a *vain worſhip, when the Traditions of Men are taught for the Doctrines of God; and no leſs vain muſt it be, when the Bodies of Men are preſented to ſupply the place of their Spirits. As an omiſſion of duty is a contempt of Gods Soveraign Authority, ſo the omiſſion of the manner of it, is a contempt of it, and of his amiable excellency; and that which is a contempt and mockery, can lay no juſt claim to the title of Worſhip.

* Mat. 15. 9.

Reaſon 4. There is in worſhip, an approach of God to Man. It was inſtituted to this purpoſe, that God might give out his bleſſings to Man: And ought not our Spirits to be prepared and ready to receive his communications? We are in ſuch acts, more peculiarly in his preſence. In the Iſralites hearing the Law, it is ſaid God was to come among them: Then, men are ſaid to ſtand before the Lord: God before whom I ſtand, that is, whom I worſhip: And therefore when Cain forſook the worſhip of God ſetled in his Fathers Family, he is ſaid to go out from the preſence of the Lord, Gen. 4. 16. God is eſſentially preſent in the world; graciouſly preſent in his Church. The name of the Evangelical City is, *Jehovah Shammah, the Lord is there. God is more graciouſly preſent in the Evangelical inſtitutions, than in the Legal: He Loves the Gates of Zion, more then all the dwellings of Jacob*: His Evangelical-Law and Worſhip which was to go forth from Zion, as the other did from Sinai, Mic. 4. 2. God delights to approach to Men, and converſe with them in the worſhip inſtituted in the Goſpel, more than in all the dwellings of Jacob. If God be graciouſly preſent, ought not we to be ſpiritualy preſent? A liveleſs Carcaſs ſervice, becomes not ſo high and delectable a preſence as this: 'Tis to thruſt him from us, not invite him to us: 'Tis to practice in the Ordinances, what the Prophet predicts concerning mens uſage of our Saviour, Iſa. 53. 2. There is no form, no comelineſs, nor beauty that we ſhould deſire him. A ſlightneſs in worſhip, reflects upon the excellency of the object of worſhip. God and his worſhip are ſo linkt together, that whoſoever thinks the one not worth his inward care, eſteems the other not worth his inward affection. How unworthy a ſlight is it of God, who profers the opening his Treaſure; the reimpreſſing his Image; conferring his bleſſings; admits us into his preſence, when he hath no need for us, who hath millions of Angels to attend him in his Court, and celebrate his Praiſe? He that worſhips not God with his Spirit, regards not Gods preſence in his Ordinances, and ſlights the great end of God in them, and that perfection he may attain by them. We can only expect, what God hath promiſed to give, when we render to him what he hath commanded us to preſent. If we put off God with a Shell, he will put us off with a Husk. How can we expect his heart, when we do not give him ours? or hope for the bleſſing needful for us, when we render not the glory due to him? It cannot be an

* Exod. 19. 10, 11.
* Deut. 10. 8.
* Kings 1. 17.
* Ezek. 48. 35.
* Pſal. 87. 2.

ad-

advantageous worſhip, without ſpiritual graces; for thoſe are uniting, and Union is the ground of all Communion.

Reaſon 5. To have a ſpiritual worſhip is Gods end in the reſtoration of the Creature; both in Redemption by his Son, and Sanctification by his Spirit. A fitneſs for ſpiritual Offerings, was the end of the Coming of Chriſt *; He ſhould purge them, as gold and ſilver by Fire, a Spirit burning up their droſs, melting them into a holy compliance with, and ſubmiſſion to God: To what purpoſe? That they may offer to the Lord and Offering in Righteouſneſs; a pure Offering from a purified Spirit: He came to bring us to God * in ſuch a Garb, as that we might be fit to converſe with him: Can we be thus, without a fixedneſs of our Spirits on him? * Mal. 3. 3. * 1 Pet. 3. 18.

The offering of ſpiritual Sacrifices is the end of making any a ſpiritual Habitation, and a holy Prieſt-hood *. We can no more be Worſhippers of God, without a Worſhippers nature, than a man be a man without humane nature. As man was at firſt created for the honour and worſhip of God; ſo the deſign of reſtoring that Image which was defaced by ſin, tends to the ſame end. We are not brought to God by Chriſt, nor are our ſervices preſented to him, if they be without our Spirits: Would any man that undertakes to bring another to a Prince, introduce him in a ſlovenly and ſordid habit, ſuch a garb that he knows hateful to him? Or bring the Cloaths or skin of a Man ſtuft with ſtraw, inſtead of the Perſon? To come with our skins before God without our Spirits, is contrary to the deſign of God, in Redemption and Regeneration. * 1 Pet. 2. 5.

If a carnal worſhip would have pleaſed God, a carnal heart would have ſerved his turn, without the expence of his Spirit in Sanctification: He beſtows upon man a ſpiritual nature, that he may return to him a ſpiritual ſervice: He enlightens the Underſtanding, that he may have a rational ſervice; and new moulds the Will, that he may have a voluntary ſervice. As it is the Milk of the Word wherewith he feeds us, ſo it is the ſervice of the Word wherewith we muſt glorifie him. So much as there is of confuſedneſs in our underſtanding, ſo much of ſtarting and levity in our Wills; ſo much of ſlipperineſs and skipping in our affections, ſo much is abated of the due qualities of the worſhip of God, and ſo much we fall ſhort of the end of Redemption and Sanctification.

Reaſon 6. A ſpiritual Worſhip is to be offered to God, becauſe no worſhip but that can be acceptable. We can never be ſecured of acceptance without it; He being a Spirit, nothing but the worſhip in Spirit can be ſutable to him: What is unſutable, cannot be acceptable: There muſt be ſomething in us, to make our ſervices capable of being preſented by Chriſt for an actual acceptation. No ſervice is acceptable to God by Jeſus Chriſt, but as it is a ſpiritnal Sacrifice, and offered by a ſpiritual heart, 1 Pet. 2. 5. The Sacrifice is firſt ſpiritual, before it be acceptable to God by Chriſt: When it is an offering in righteouſneſs, it is then, and only then pleaſant to the Lord, Mal. 3. 3, 4. No Prince would accept a gift that is unſutable to his Majeſty, and below the condition of the perſon that preſents it: Would he be pleaſed with a bottle of water for drink, from one that hath his Cellar full of wine? How unacceptable muſt that be, that is unſutable to the Divine Majeſty? And what can be more unſutable, than a withdrawing the operations of our Souls from him, in the oblation of our Bodies? We as little glorifie God, as God, when we give him only a corporeal worſhip; as the Heathen did, when they repreſented him in a corporeal ſhape *; one as well as the other denies his ſpiritual nature: This is worſe, for had it been lawful to repreſent God to the eye, it could not have been done, but by a bodily figure ſuted to the ſenſe; but ſince it is neceſſary to worſhip him, it cannot be by a corporeal attendance, without the operation of the Spirit. A ſpiritual frame is more pleaſing to God, than the higheſt exterior adornments; than the greateſt gifts, and the higheſt Prophetical illumination. The glory of the ſecond Temple exceeded the glory of the firſt *: As God accounts the ſpiritual glory of Ordinances moſt beneficial for us, ſo our ſpiritual attendance upon Ordinances is moſt pleaſing to him; He that offers the greateſt ſervices without it, offers but fleſh, Hoſ. 8. 13. They ſacrifice Fleſh for the Sacrifices of my Offerings, but the Lord accepts them not. Spiritual frames are the Soul of Religious ſervices; all other carriages without them, are contemptible to this Spirit: We can never lay claim to that promiſe of God, none ſhall ſeek my face in vain: We affect a vain ſeeking of him, when we want a due temper * Rom. 1. 21. * Hag. 2. 8, 9.

of

of Spirit for him: And vain Spirits ſhall have vain returns: 'Tis more contrary to the nature of Gods Holineſs to have communion with ſuch, than it is contrary to the nature of Light to have communion with Darkneſs.

To make uſe of this,

Uſe 1. Firſt it ſerves for information.

1. If ſpiritual worſhip be required by God; How ſad is it for them that are ſo far from giving God a ſpiritual worſhip, that they render him no worſhip at all? I ſpeak not of the neglect of publick, but of private; when men preſent not a devotion to God from one years end to the other. The ſpeech of our Saviour, that we muſt worſhip God in Spirit and in Truth, implies that a worſhip is due to him from every one: That is the common impreſſion upon the Conſciences of all men in the world, if they have not by ſome conſtant courſe in groſs ſins, hardned their Souls, and ſtifled thoſe natural ſentiments. There was never a Nation in the world, without ſome kind of Religion; and no Religion was ever without ſome modes, to teſtifie a devotion: The Heathens had their Sacrifices and Purifications; and the Jews by Gods order had their Rites, whereby they were to expreſs their Allegiance to God.

Conſider,

1. Worſhip is a duty incumbent upon all men. 'Tis a homage Mankind owes to God, under the relation wherein he ſtands obliged to him: 'Tis a prime and immutable juſtice to own our Allegiance to him. 'Tis as unchangeable a truth that God is to be worſhipped, as that God is: He is to be worſhipped as God; as Creator; and therefore by all, ſince he is the Creator of all, the Lord of all, and all are his Creatures, and all are his Subjects. Worſhip is founded upon Creation, Pſal. 100. 2, 3. 'Tis due to God for himſelf and his own eſſential excellency, and therefore due from all: 'Tis due upon the account of mans nature: The human rational nature is the ſame in all. Whatſoever is due to God upon the account of mans nature, and the natural obligations he hath laid upon man, is due from all men, becauſe they all enjoy the benefits which are proper to their nature.

Man in no ſtate was exempted, nor can be exempted from it: In Paradiſe he had his Sabbaths and Sacraments; Man therefore diſſolves the obligation of a reaſonable nature, by neglecting the worſhip of God.

Religion is in the firſt place to be minded. As ſoon as Noah came out of the Ark, he contrived not a Habitation for himſelf, but an Altar for the Lord, to acknowledge him the Author of his preſervation from the Deluge *: And whereſoever Abraham came, his firſt buſineſs was to erect an Altar, and pay his arrears of gratitude to God, before he ran upon the ſcore for new mercies *; He left a teſtimony of worſhip where ever he came.

* Gen. 8. 20.

* Gen. 12. 7. Gen. 13. 4, 18.

2. Wholly therefore to neglect it, is a high degree of Atheiſm. He that calls not upon God, ſaith in his heart there is no God; and ſeems to have the ſentiments of natural Conſcience, as to God, ſtifled in him*: It muſt ariſe from a conceit that there is no God, or that we are equal to him, adoration not being due from perſons of an equal ſtate; or that God is unable, or unwilling to take notice of the adoring acts of his Creatures: What is any of theſe but an undeifying the ſupream Majeſty? When we lay aſide all thoughts of paying any homage to him, we are in a fair way opinionatively to deny him, as much as we practically diſown him. Where there is no knowledge of God, that is, no acknowledgment of God, a gap is opened to all licentiouſneſs *: And that by degrees brawns the Conſcience, and raſeth out the the ſenſe of God. Thoſe forſake God that forget his Holy Mountain *; They do not practically own him as the Creator of their Souls or bodies. 'Tis the ſin of Cain, who turning his back upon worſhip, is ſaid to go out from the preſence of the Lord *. Not to worſhip him with our Spirits, is againſt his Law of Creation: Not to worſhip him at all, is againſt his act of Creation: Not to worſhip him in truth is Hypocriſie: Not to worſhip him at all is Atheiſm, whereby we render our ſelves worſe than the worms in the Earth, or a toad in a Ditch.

* Pſal. 14. 1, 4.

* Hoſ. 4. 1, 2.

* Iſa. 65. 11.

* Gen. 4. 16.

3. To perform a worſhip to a falſe God, or to the true God in a falſe manner, ſeems to be leſs a ſin, than to live in perpetual neglects of it. Though it be directed to a falſe Object inſtead of God; yet it is under the notion of a God, and ſo is an acknowledgement of ſuch a Being as God in the world; whereas the total neglect of any worſhip, is a practical denying of the exiſtence of any ſupream Majeſty.

Who-

Whoſoever conſtantly omits a publick and private worſhip, tranſgreſſes againſt an univerſally received dictate; for all Nations have agreed in the common notion of worſhipping God, though they have diſagreed in the ſeveral modes and rites whereby they would teſtifie that adoration. By a worſhip of God, tho ſuperſtitious, a veneration and reverence of ſuch a being is maintained in the world; whereas by a total neglect of worſhip, he is vertually diſowned and diſcarded, if not from his Exiſtence, yet from his Providence and Government of the world: All the mercies we breath in are denied to flow from him. A fooliſh worſhip owns Religion, though it beſpatters it. As if a ſtranger coming into a Country miſtakes a Subject for the Prince, and pays that reverence to the Subject, which is due to the Prince, though he miſtakes the object, yet he owns an Authority; or if he pays any reſpect to the true Prince of that Country after the mode of his own, though appearing ridiculous in the place where he is, he owns the Authority of the Prince; whereas the omiſſion of all reſpect would be a contempt of Majeſty: And therefore the Judgments of God have been more ſignal upon the Sacrilegious Contemners of worſhip among the Heathens, than upon thoſe that were diligent and devout in their falſe worſhip; and they generally owned the bleſſings received, to the preſervation of a ſenſe, and worſhip of a deity among them. Though ſuch a worſhip be not acceptable to God, and every man is bound to offer to God a devotion agreeable to his own mind; yet it is commendable, not as worſhip, but as it ſpeaks an acknowledgment of ſuch a Being as God in his power in Creation, and his beneficence in his Providence.

Well then, omiſſions of worſhip are to be avoided. Let no man execute that upon himſelf, which God will pronounce at laſt as the greateſt miſery, and bid God depart from him, who will at laſt be loath to hear God bid him depart from him. Though man hath natural ſentiments that God is to be worſhipped; yet having an hoſtility in his nature, he is apt to neglect, or give it him in a ſlight manner: He therefore ſets a perticular mark and notice of attention upon the fourth Command, Remember thou keep holy the Sabbath day. Corrupt nature is apt to neglect the worſhip of God, and flag in it: This Command therefore which concerns his worſhip, he fortifies with ſeveral reaſons.

Nor let any neglect worſhip, becauſe they cannot find their hearts ſpiritual in it. The further we are from God, the more carnal ſhall we be. No man can expect heat by a diſtance from the Sun beams, or other means of warmth. Though God commanded a circumciſed heart in the Jewiſh ſervices; yet he did not warrant a neglect of the outward teſtimonies of Religion he had then appointed; he expected according to his Command, that they ſhould offer the Sacrifices, and practice the legal Purifications he had commanded; he would have them diligently obſerved, though he had declared that he impoſed them only for a time. And our Saviour ordered the practiſe of thoſe poſitive rites as long as the Law remained unrepealed, as in the Caſe of the *Leper. 'Tis an injuſtice to refuſe the offering our ſelves to God according to the manner he hath in his Wiſdom preſcribed and required. * Mark 14. 4.

If ſpiritual worſhip be required by God; then

2. It informs us, that diligence in outward worſhip is not to be reſted in. * Men may attend all their days on worſhip, with a juiceleſs heart and unquickned frame, and think to compenſate the neglect of the manner, with abundance of the matter of ſervice. Outward expreſſions are but the Badges and Liveries of ſervice, not the ſervice it ſelf. As the ſtrength of ſin lies in the inward frame of the heart, ſo the ſtrength of worſhip in the inward complexion and temper of the Soul. What do a thouſand ſervices avail, without cutting the throat of our carnal affections? What are loud Prayers, but as ſounding Braſs and tinkling Cymbals, without Divine Charity? A Phariſaical diligence in outward forms without inward Spirit, had no better a title vouchſafed by our Saviour, than that of hypocritical. God deſires not Sacrifices, nor delights in burnt Offerings: Shadows are not to be offered inſtead of ſubſtance. God required the heart of man for it ſelf; but commanded outward Ceremonies, as ſubſervient to inward worſhip, and goads and ſpurs unto it: They were never appointed as the ſubſtance of Religion, but auxiliaries to it. What value had the Offering of the human Nature of Chriſt been of, if he had not had a divine Nature to qualifie him to be the Prieſt? And what is the oblation of * Daille melange. des Sermons Ser. 2.

our Bodies, without a Prieſtly act of the Spirit in the preſentation of it? Could the Iſraelites have called themſelves Worſhippers of God according to his Order, if they had brought a thouſand Lambs that had died in a Ditch, or been killed at home? They were to be brought living to the Altar; the blood ſhed at the foot of it: A thouſand Sacrifices killed without, had not been ſo valuable as one brought alive to the place of Offering: One ſound Sacrifice is better than a thouſand rotten ones. As God took no pleaſure in the blood of Beaſts without its relation to the Antitype; So he takes no pleaſure in the outward rites of worſhip, without Faith in the Redeemer. To offer a Body with a ſapleſs Spirit, is a Sacriledge of the ſame nature with that of the Iſraelites when they offered dead Beaſts. A man without ſpiritual worſhip is dead whiles he worſhips, though by his diligence in the externals of it, he may like the Angel of the Church of Sardis, have a name to live *. What ſecurity can we expect from a multitude of dead ſervices? What weak ſhields are they againſt the holy eye, and revenging wrath of God? What man, but one out of his wits, would ſolicite a dead man to be his Advocate or Champion?

* Revel. 3. 1.

Diligence in outward worſhip is not to be reſted in.

Uſe II. Shall be for Examination: Let us try our ſelves concerning the manner of our worſhip. We are now in the end of the world, and the dregs of time; wherein the Apoſtle predicts, there may be much of a *form, and little of the power of Godlineſs. : And therefore it ſtands us in hand to ſearch into our ſelves, whether it be not thus with us? Whether there be as much reverence in our Spirits, as there may be devotion in our countenances and outward carriages.

* 2 Tim. 3. 1, 5.

1. How therefore are our hearts prepared to worſhip? Is our diligence greater, to put our hearts in an adoring poſture, than our bodies in a decent garb? Or are we content to have a muddy Heart, ſo we may have a dreſt Carcaſs? To have a Spirit a Cage of unclean Birds, while we wipe the filth from the outſide of the Platter, is no better than a Phariſaical devotion, and deſerves no better a name, than that of a whited Sepulcher.

Do we take opportunities to excite and quicken our Spirits to the performance, and cry aloud with David, awake, awake, my glory? Are not our hearts aſleep when Chriſt knocks; when we hear the voice of God, ſeek my face; Do we anſwer him with warm reſolutions, *thy face Lord we will ſeek ? Do we comply with ſpiritual motions, and ſtrike whiles the Iron is hot? Is there not more of reluctancy, than readineſs? Is there a quick riſing of the Soul in reverence to the motion, as Eglon to Ehud; or a ſullen hanging the head at the firſt approach of it? Or if our hearts ſeem to be engaged, and on fire; What are the motives that quicken that fire? Is it only the Blaſt of a natural Conſcience; fear of Hell; deſires of Heaven as abſtracted from God? Or is it an affection to God; an obedient will to pleaſe him; longings to enjoy him, as a holy and ſanctifying God in his Ordinances, as well as a bleſſed and glorified God in Heaven?

* Pſal. 27. 8.

What do we expect in our approaches from him? That which may make divine impreſſions upon us, and more exactly conform us to the divine nature? Or do we deſign nothing but an empty formality, a rowling eye, and a filling the Air with a few words, without any openings of heart to receive the incomes, which according to the nature of the duty might be conveyed to us? Can this be a ſpiritual worſhip? The Soul then cloſely waits upon him, when its expectation is only from him, Pſal. 62. 6. Are our hearts ſeaſoned with a ſenſe of ſin; a ſight of our ſpiritual wants; raiſed notions of God; glowing affections to Him; ſtrong appetite after a ſpiritual fulneſs? Do we rouze up our ſleepy Spirits, and make a Covenant with all that is within us to attend upon him? So much as we want of this, ſo much we come ſhort of a ſpiritual worſhip: In Pſal. 57. 7. My heart is fixed, O God, my heart is fixed. David would fix his heart, before he would engage in a praiſing act of worſhip: He appeals to God about it, and that with doubling the expreſſion, as being certain of an inward preparedneſs: Can we make the ſame appeals in a fixation of Spirit?

2. How are our hearts fixed upon him, How do they cleave to him in the [illegible] Do we reſign our Spirits to God, and make them an intire Holocauſt, a whole burnt-offering in his worſhip? O do we not willingly admit carnal thoughts to mix themſelves with ſpiritual duties, and faſten our minds to the Creature, under pretences of directing them to the Creator? Do we not paſs a neer complement on God, by ſome ſuperficial act of devotion; while ſome covetous, envious, ambitious, voluptuous imagination may poſſeſs our minds? Do we not invert Gods order, and worſhip a Luſt inſtead of God with our Spirit, that ſhould not have the leaſt ſervice, either from our Souls or Bodies, but with a ſpiritual diſdain be ſacrificed to the juſt indignation of God? How often do we fight againſt his Will, while we cry hail Maſter; inſtead of Crucifying our own thoughts, Crucifying the Lord of our Lives; Our outward carriage plauſible, and our inward ſtark naught? Do we not often regard iniquity more than God in our hearts, in a time of Worſhip? Roul ſome filthy imagination as a ſweet morſel under our tongues, and taſte more ſweetneſs in that, than in God? Do not our Spirits ſmell rank of Earth, while we offer to Heaven, and have we not hearts full of thick Clay, as their hands were full of blood *? When we ſacrifice, do we not wrap up our Souls in communion with ſome ſordid fancy, when we ſhould entwine our Spirits about an amiable God? While we have ſome fear of him, may we not have a love to ſomething elſe above him? This is to worſhip, or ſwear by the Lord, and by Malchom *. How often doth an Apiſh-fancy render a ſervice inwardly ridiculous, under a grave outward poſture; skipping to the Shop, Ware-houſe, Compting-houſe in the ſpace of a ſhort Prayer? And we are before God as a Babel, a confuſion of internal languages; and this in thoſe parts of worſhip which are in the right uſe moſt agreeable to God; profitable for our ſelves; ruinous to the Kingdom of Sin and Satan, and means to bring us into a cloſer communion with the Divine Majeſty: Can this be a ſpiritual worſhip?

of

* Iſa. 1. 15.

* Zeph. 1. 5.

3. How do we act our Graces in worſhip? Though the Inſtrument be ſtrung, if the ſtrings be not wound up, what melody can be the iſſue? All readineſs and alacrity diſcover a ſtrength of Nature, and a readineſs in Spirituals, diſcovers a ſpirituality in the heart. As unaffecting thoughts of God are not ſpiritual thoughts; ſo unaffecting addreſſes to God, are not ſpiritual addreſſes. Well then, what awakenings, and elevations of Faith and Love have we? What ſtrong outflowings of our Souls to him? What indignation againſt Sin? What admirations of redeeming Grace? How low have we brought our corruptions to the foot-ſtool of Chriſt, to be made his conquered Enemies? How ſtraitly have we claſpt our faith about the Croſs and the Throne of Chriſt, to become his intimate Spouſe? Do we in hearing hang upon the lips of Chriſt; in prayer take hold of God, and will not let him go; in confeſſions rent the Caul of our hearts, and indite our Souls before him with a deep humility? Do we act more by a ſoaring love than a drooping fear? So far as our Spirits are ſervile, ſo far they are legal and carnal; ſo much as they are free and ſpontaneous, ſo much they are Evangelical and ſpiritual. As men under the Law are ſubject to the conſtraint of Bondage * all their life-time, in all their worſhip: ſo under the Goſpel they are under a conſtraint of love *: How then are believing affections exerciſed, which are always accompanied with holy fear, a fear of his goodneſs that admits us into his preſence, and a fear to offend him in our act of worſhip? So much as we have of forced or feeble affection, ſo much we have of carnality.

* Heb. 2. 15.

* 2 Cor. 5. 14.

4. How do we find our hearts after worſhip? By an after carriage, we may judge of the ſpirituality of it.

1. How are we as to inward ſtrength? When a worſhip is ſpiritually performed, grace is more ſtrengthened, corruption more mortified: The Soul, like Sampſon after his awakening, goes out with a renewed ſtrength: As the inward man is renewed day by day, that is, every day; ſo it is renewed in every worſhip. Every ſhower makes the graſs and fruit grow in good ground where the root is good, and the weeds where the ground is naught: The more prepared the heart is to obedience in other duties after worſhip, the more evidence there is that it hath been ſpiritual in the exerciſe of it. 'Tis the end of God in every diſpenſation, as in that of John Baptiſt, To make ready a People prepared for the Lord *. When the heart is by worſhip prepared for freſh acts of obedience, and hath a more exact watchfulneſs againſt the incroachments of Sin. As carnal men after worſhip ſprout up in ſpiritual wickedneſs; ſo do ſpiritual Worſhippers in ſpiritual graces: Spiritual fruits, are a ſign of a ſpiritual frame. When men are more prone to ſin after duty, 'tis a ſign there was but little communion with God in it, and a greater ſtrength of ſin, becauſe ſuch an act is

* Lev. 1. 17.

contrary to the end of Worſhip, which is the ſubduing of Sin. 'Tis a ſign the Phyſick hath wrought well, when the ſtomach hath a better appetite to its appointed food; and worſhip hath been well performed, when we have a ſtronger inclination to other acts well pleaſing to God, and a more ſenſible diſtaſte of thoſe temptations we too much reliſht before. 'Tis a ſign of a good Concoction, when there is a greater ſtrength in the vitals of Religion, a more eager deſire to know God. When Moſes had been praying to God, and prevailed with him; he puts up a higher re-
* Exod. 33 13, 18. queſt; to *behold his Glory. When the appetite ſtands ſtrong to fuller diſcoveries of God, it is a ſign there hath been a ſpiritual converſe with him.

2. How is it eſpecially as to Humility? The Phariſees Worſhip was without diſpute, carnal; and we find them not more humble after all their devotions, but over-grown with more Weeds of Spiritual pride; they performed them as their righteouſneſs. What men dare plead before God in his day, they plead before him in their hearts, in their day; but this men will do at the day of Judgment, we have propheſied in thy Name, &c. Mat. 7. 11. They ſhew what tincture their ſervices left upon their Spirits: That which excludes them from any acceptation at the laſt day, excludes them from any eſtimation of being ſpiritual in this day. The carnal Worſhippers charge God with injuſtice in not rewarding them, and claim an acceptation as a compenſation due to them, Iſa. 58. 3. Wherefore have we afflicted our Souls, and thou takeſt no knowledge? A ſpiritual Worſhipper looks upon his duties with ſhame, as well as he doth upon his ſins with confuſion, and implores the mercy of God for the one as well as the other. In the Pſalm. 143. v. 2. The Prophet David after his ſupplications, begs of God not to enter into Judgment with him, and acknowledges any anſwer that God ſhould give him, as a fruit of his faithfulneſs to his promiſe, and not the merit of his wor-
* Pſal. 143. 2. ſhip. In thy Faithfulneſs anſwer me, &c. Whatſoever ſprings from a gracious Principle, and is the breath of the Spirit, leaves a man more humble; whereas that which proceeds from a ſtock of nature, hath the true blood of nature running in the veins of it, viz. That Pride which is naturally derived from Adam. The breathing of the Divine Spirit is in every thing to conform us to our Redeemer; that being the main work of his Office, is his work in every particular Chriſtian-act influenced by him. Now Jeſus Chriſt in all his actions was an exact Pattern of Humility. After the inſtitution and celebration of the Supper, a ſpecial act of Worſhip in the Church; though he had a ſenſe of all the Authority his Father had given him, yet
* John 13. 2, 3, 4 he *humbles himſelf to waſh his Diſciples feet: And after his ſublime Prayer, John 17. He humbles himſelf to the death, and offers himſelf to his Murderers, becauſe of his Fathers pleaſure, John 18. 1. When he had ſpoken thoſe words, he went over the Brook Kedron into the Garden. What is the end of God in appointing Worſhip, is the end of a ſpiritual heart in offering it; not his own exaltation but Gods glory: Glorifying the name of God, is the fruit of that Evangelical-worſhip the Gentiles were in time to give to God, Pſal. 86. 9. All Nations which thou haſt made, ſhall come and worſhip before thee, O Lord, and ſhall gloriſie thy Name. Let us examin then what debaſing our ſelves there is in a ſenſe of our own vileneſs, and diſtance from ſo glorious a ſpirit. Self-denial is the heart of all Goſpel-grace. Evangelical Spiritual-worſhip cannot be without the ingredient of the main Evangelical Principle.

3. What delight is there after it? What pleaſure is there, and what is the Object of that pleaſure? Is it Communion we have had with God, or a Fluency in our ſelves: Is it ſomething which hath touched our hearts, or tickled our fancies? As the ſtrength of ſin is known by the delightful thoughts of it after the commiſſion, ſo is the ſpirituality of duty, by the object of our delightful remembrance after the performance. It was a ſign David was ſpiritnal in the Worſhip of God in the Tabernacle, when he enjoyed it, becauſe he longed for the ſpiritual part of it, when he was exil'd from it: His deſires were not only for Liberty to reviſit the Tabernacle, but to ſee the power and glory of God in the Sanctuary, as he had ſeen it
* Pſal. 63. 2. before*: His deſires for it could not have been ſo ardent, if his reflection upon what had paſt, had not been delightful; nor could his Soul be poured out in him for the want of ſuch opportunities, if the remembrance of the converſe he had had with
* Pſal. 42. 4. God, had not been accompanied with a delightful reliſh *.

Let

Let us examine what delight we find in our ſpirits after worſhip.

Uſe III. Is of Comfort. And 'tis very comfortable to conſider, that the ſmalleſt Worſhip with the Heart and Spirit, flowing from a principle of grace, is more acceptable than the moſt pompous veneration; yea, if the oblation were as precious as the whole Circuit of Heaven and Earth without it. That God, that values a Cup of cold water given to any as his Diſciple, will value a ſincere ſervice above a coſtly Sacrifice. God hath his eye upon them that honour his nature; He would not ſeek ſuch to worſhip him, if he did not intend to accept ſuch a worſhip from them: when we therefore invoke him, and praiſe him, which are the prime parts of Religion; he will receive it as a ſweet ſavour from us, and overlook infirmities mixed with the graces.

The great matter of diſcomfort, and that which makes us queſtion the ſpirituality of Worſhip, is the many ſtarts of our Spirits, and rovings to other things.

For anſwer to which,

1. 'Tis to be confeſt, that theſe ſtarts are natural to us. Who is free from them? We bear in our own boſom a neſt of turbulent thoughts, which like buſie Gnats will be buzzing about us, while we are in our moſt inward and ſpiritual converſes. Many wild beaſts lurk in a mans heart, as in a cloſe and covert wood, and ſcarce diſcover themſelves, but at our ſolemn worſhip.

No duty ſo holy, No worſhip ſo ſpiritual, that can wholly priviledge us from them, They will jog us in our moſt weighty employments, that, as God ſaid to Cain, ſin lyes at the door, and enters in, and makes a riot in our Souls. As it is ſaid of wicked men, they cannot ſleep for multitude of thoughts *; ſo it may be of many a good man; he cannot worſhip for multitude of thoughts: There will be ſtarts, and more in our religious, than natural imployments; 'tis natural to man: Some therefore think, the Bells tied to Aarons Garments between the Pomegranates were to warn the People, and recall their fugitve minds to the preſent ſervice, when they heard the ſound of them, upon the leaſt motion of the High Prieſt. The Sacrifice of Abraham, the Father of the Faithful, was not exempt from the Fowls pecking at it*. Zachariah himſelf was drowſie in the midſt of his Viſions, which being more amazing, might cauſe a heavenly intentneſs*, Zech. 4. 1. The Angel that talked with me, came again and awaked me, as a man is awaked out of ſlesp. He had been rouzed up before, but he was ready to drop down again; his heart was gone, till the Angel jogged him. We may complain of ſuch imaginations, as Jeremiah. doth of the Enemies of the Jews *, Our Perſecutors are ſwifter than Eagles; they light upon us with as much ſpeed, as Eagles upon a Carcaſs; they purſue us upon the Mountain of Divine inſtitution, and they lay wait for us in the Widerneſs, in our retired addreſſes to, God

* Eccleſ. 5. 12.

* Gen. 15. 11.

* Lam. 4. 19.

And this will be ſo while,

1. There is natural corruption in us. There are in a Godly Man two contrary principles, Fleſh and Spirit, which endeavour to hinder one anothers acts, and and are alway ſtirring upon the offenſive or defenſive part . There is a body of death continually exhaliug its noyſom vapours; 'Tis a body of Death in our worſhip, as well as in our natures; it ſnaps our reſolutions aſunder; it hinders us in the doing good and contradicts our Wills in the ſtirring up evil: This corruption being ſeated in all the faculties, and a conſtant Domeſtick in them, has the greater opportunity to trouble us, ſince it is by thoſe faculties that we ſpiritually tranſact with God; and it ſtirs more in the time of Religious exerciſes, though it be in part mortified: As a wounded Beaſt though tired, will rage and ſtrive to its utmoſt, when the Enemy is about to fetch a blow at it. All duties of worſhip tend to the wounding of corruption; and it is no wonder to feel the ſtriving of ſin, to defend it ſelf, and offend us when we have our Arms in our hands to mortifie it, that the blow may be diverted which is directed againſt it.

* Gal. 5. 17.
* Rom. 7. 19.

The Apoſtles had aſpiring thoughts; and being perſwaded of an earthly Kingdom, expected a Grandeur in it: And though we find ſome appearance of it at other times; as when they were caſting out Devils, and gave an account of it to their Maſter, he gives them a kind of a check *, intimating that there was ſome kind of evil in their rejoycing upon that account: Yet this never ſwelled ſo high, as to break out into a quarrel who ſhould be greateſt, until they had the moſt ſolemn

* Luke 10. 20.

Or-

* Luke 22. 24. Ordinance, the Lords Supper to quell it*. Our corruption is like Lime, which diſcovers not its fire by any ſmoke or heat, till you caſt water, the Enemy of fire, upon it: Neither doth our natural corruption rage ſo much, as when we are uſing means to quench and deſtroy it.

2. While there is a Devil, and we in his Precinct. As he accuſeth us to God, ſo he diſturbs us in our ſelves: He is a bold Spirit, and loves to intrude himſelf when we are converſing with God: We read, that when the Angels preſented themſelves before God, Satan comes among them*. Motions from Satan will thruſt themſelves in with our moſt raiſed and Angelical frames; He loves to take off the edge of our Spirits from God; He acts but after the old rate; He from the firſt envied God an obedience from man, and envied man the felicity of communion with God; He is unwilling God ſhould have the honour of Worſhip, and that we ſhould have the fruit of it: He hath himſelf loſt it, and therefore is unwilling we ſhould enjoy it; and being ſubtil, he knows how to make impreſſions upon us ſutable to our inbred corruptions, and aſſault us in the weakeſt part: He knows all the avenues to get within us, (as he did in the temptation of Eve) and being a Spirit, he wants not a power to dart them immediately upon our fancy; and being a Spirit, and therefore active and nimble, he can ſhoot thoſe darts faſter than our weakneſs can beat them off: He is diligent alſo, and watcheth for his Prey, and ſeeks to devour our ſervices as well as our Souls, and Snatch our beſt morſels from us: We know he mixed himſelf with our Saviours retirements in the Wilderneſs, and endeavoured to Fly-blow his holy converſe with his Father in the preparation to his Mediatory work.

* Job. 1. 6.

Satan is Gods Ape, and imitates the Spirit in the Office of a Remembrancer: As the Spirit brings good thoughts and divine promiſes to mind, to quicken our worſhip; ſo the Devil brings evil things to mind, and endeavours to faſten them in our Souls to diſturb us: And though all the fooliſh ſtarts we have in worſhip are not purely his iſſue; yet being of kin to him, he claps his hands, and ſets them on like ſo many Maſtives to tear the ſervice in pieces.

And both thoſe diſtractions which ariſe from our own corruption, and from Satan, are moſt rife in worſhip, when we are under ſome preſſing affliction. This ſeems to be David's Caſe, Pſal. 86. When in v. 11. He prays God to unite his heart to fear and worſhip his Name; he ſeems to be under ſome affliction, or fear of his Enemies; Oh free me from thoſe diſtractions of Spirit, and thoſe paſſions which ariſe in my Soul, upon conſidering the deſigns of my Enemies againſt me, and preſs upon me in my addreſſes to thee, and attendances on thee. Job alſo in his affliction complains, Job. 17. 11. That his purpoſes were broken off: He conld not make an even thread of thoughts and reſolutions; they were frequently ſnapt aſunder, like rotten Yarn when one is winding it up.

Good men and ſpiritual Worſhippers have lain under this trouble: Though they are a ſign of weakneſs of grace, or ſome obſtructions in the acting of ſtrong grace; yet they are not alway evidences of a want of grace: What ariſeth from our own corruption, is to be matter of humiliation and reſiſtance; what ariſeth from Satan, ſhould edge our minds to a noble conqueſt of them. If the Apoſtle did comfort himſelf with his diſapproving of what roſe from the natural ſpring of ſin within him, with his conſent to the Law, and diſſent from his Luſt; and charges it not upon himſelf, but upon the ſin that dwelt in him, with which he had broken off the former League, and was reſolved never to enter into Amity with it: By the ſame reaſon we may comfort our ſelves, if ſuch thoughts are undelighted in, and alienate not our hearts from the worſhip of God by all their buſie intruſions to interrupt us.

2. Theſe diſtractions (not allowed) may be occaſions by an Holy improvement to make our hearts more ſpiritual after worſhip, though they diſturb us in it: By anſwering thoſe ends for which we may ſuppoſe God permits them to invade us. And that is,

1. When they are occaſions to humble us.

(1) For our carriage in the perticluar worſhip. There is nothing ſo dangerous as ſpiritual pride; It deprived Devils and Men of the preſence of God, and will hinder us of the influence of God. If we had had raiſed and uninterrupted motions in worſhip, we ſhould be apt to be lifted up; and the Devil ſtands ready to tempt us to ſelf confidence. You know how it was with *Paul ; His buffetings were occaſions to render him more ſpiritual than his raptures, becauſe more humble. God ſuffers

* 2 Cor. 12. from v. 7.

thoſe

thoſe wandrings, ſtarts, and diſtractions to prevent our ſpiritual pride, which is as a Worm at the root of ſpiritual worſhip, and minds us of the duſty frame of our Spirits, how eaſily they are blown away: As he ſends ſickneſs to put us in mind of the ſhortneſs of our breath, and the eaſineſs to loſe it. God would make us aſhamed of our ſelves in his preſence; that we may own, that what is good in any duty, is meerly from his Grace and Spirit, and not from our ſelves. That with Paul we may cry out, by Grace we are what we are, and by Grace we do what we do: We may be hereby made ſenſible, that God can alway find ſomething in our exacteſt worſhip, as a ground of denying us the ſucceſsful fruit of it. If we cannot ſtand upon our duties for Salvation, what can we bottom upon in our ſelves? If therefore they are occaſions to make us out of love with any righteouſneſs of our own, to make us break our hearts for them, becauſe we cannot keep them out; If we mourn for them as our ſins, and count them our great afflictions; we have attained that brokenneſs which is a choice ingredient in a ſpiritual Sacrifice: Though we have been diſturbed by them, yet we are not robbed of the ſucceſs; we may behold an anſwer of our worſhip in our humiliation, in ſpite of all of them.

(2.) For the baſeneſs of our Nature. Theſe unſteady motions help us to diſcern that heap of vermin that breeds in our nature. Would any man think he had ſuch an averſeneſs to his Creator and Benefactor ſuch an unſutableneſs to him; ſuch an eſtrangedneſs from him, were it not for his inſpection into his diſtracted frames? God ſuffers this to hang over us as a Rod of Correction, to diſcover and fetch out the folly of our hearts. Could we imagine our natures ſo highly contrary to that God who is ſo infinitely amiable, ſo deſirable an Object; or that there ſhould be ſo much folly and madneſs in the heart, as to draw back from God in thoſe ſervices, which God hath appointed as pipes through which to communicate his grace, to convey himſelf, his love, and goodneſs to the Creature? If therefore we have a deep ſenſe of, and ſtrong reflections upon our baſe nature, and bewail that maſs of averſneſs which lies there, and that fulneſs of irreverence towards the God of our mercies, the Object of our worſhip; 'tis a bleſſed improvement of our wandrings and diverſions. Certainly if any Iſraelite had brought a lame and rotten Lamb to be ſacrificed to God, and afterward had bewailed it, and laid open his heart to God in a ſenſible and humble confeſſion of it; That Repentance had been a better Sacrifice, and more acceptable in the ſight of God; than if he had brought a ſound and a living Offering.

(2.) When they are occaſions to make us prize duties of worſhip: When we argue, as rationally we may, that they are of ſingular uſe; ſince our corrupt hearts and a malicious Devil doth chiefly endeavour to hinder us from them: And that we find we have not thoſe gadding thoughts when we are upon worldly buſineſs, or upon any ſinful deſign which may diſhonour God and wound our Souls: This is a ſign Sin and Satan diſlike worſhip; for he is too ſubtle a Spirit to oppoſe that which would further his Kingdom. As it is an argument the Scripture is the Word of God, becauſe the wickedneſs of the world doth ſo much oppoſe it; ſo it is a ground to believe the profitableneſs and excellency of worſhip, becauſe Satan and our own unruly hearts do ſo much interrupt us in it: If therefore we make this uſe of our croſs ſteps in worſhip, to have a greater value for ſuch duties, more affections to them and deſires to be frequent in them: Our hearts are growing ſpiritual, under the weights that would depreſs them to carnality.

(3.) When we take a riſe from hence, to have Heavenly admirations of the graciouſneſs of God. That he ſhould pity and pardon ſo many ſlight addreſſes to him, and give any gracious returns to us. Though men have fooliſh ranging every day, and in every duty; yet free grace is ſo tender as not to puniſh them, Gen. 8. 21. And the Lord ſmelt a ſweet ſavour; and the Lord ſaid in his heart, I will not curſe the Ground for mans ſake, for the imagination of mans heart is evil from his youth. 'Tis obſervable, that this was juſt after a Sacrifice which Noah offered to God, v. 20. But probably not without infirmities common to human nature, which may be grounded upon the reaſon God gives; that though he had deſtroyed the Earth before, becauſe of the evil of mans imaginations, Gen. 6. 5. He ſtill found evil imaginations; He doth not ſay in the heart of Cham, or others of Noah's Family; but in mans heart, including Noah alſo; who had both the Judgments of God upon the former world, and the mercy of God in his own preſervation before his eyes; yet God ſaw evil imaginations rooted in the nature of Man; and though it were ſo, yet he would be merciful: If therefore we can, after finding our hearts ſo vagrant in worſhip, have real frames of thankfulneſs that God hath ſpared us; and be heightned in our admirations at Gods giving us any fruit of ſuch a diſtracted worſhip; we take advantage from them, to be raiſed into an Evangelical frame, which conſiſts in the humble acknowledgments of the grace of God. When David takes a review of thoſe tumultuous paſſions which had ruffled his mind, and poſſeſſed him with unbelieving notions of God in the perſons of his Prophets *; how high doth his Soul mount in aſtoniſhment and thankfulneſs to God for his mercy *? Motwithſtanding his diſtruſt, God did graciouſly perform his promiſe, and anſwer his deſire; Then it is, what ſhall I render to the Lord? His heart was more affected for it, becauſe it had been ſo paſſionate in former diſtruſts. 'Tis indeed a ground of wondring at the patience of the Spirit of God, that he ſhould guide our hearts when they are ſo apt to ſtart out; as it is the patience of a Maſter to guide the hand of his Scholar, while he mixes his writing with many blots. 'Tis not one or two infirmities the Spirit helps us in, and helps over, but many *. 'Tis a ſign of a ſpiritual heart, when he can take a riſe to bleſs God for the renewing and blowing up his affections, in the midſt of ſo many incurſions from Satan to the contrary, and the readineſs of the heart too much to comply with them.

and

* Pſa. 116.11.
* verſe 12.
* Rom. 8. 26.

(4.) When we take occaſion from thence to prize the mediation of Chriſt. The more diſtractions jog us, the more need we ſhould ſee of going out to a Saviour by Faith. One part of our Saviours Office is to ſtand between us and the infirmities of our worſhip: As he is an Advocate, he preſents our ſervices, and pleads for them and us *; for the ſins of our duties, as well as for our other ſins. Jeſus Chriſt is an High-prieſt, appointed by God to take away the iniquities of our holy things, which was typified by Aarons Plate upon his Mitre *. Were there no imperfections, were there no creeping up of thoſe Frogs into our minds, we would think our worſhip might merit acceptance with God upon its own account: But if we behold our own weakneſs, that not a tear, a groan, a ſigh is ſo pure, but muſt have Chriſt to make it entertainable; that there is no worſhip without thoſe blemiſhes; and upon this, throw all our ſervices into the Arms of Chriſt for acceptance, and ſolicite him to put his merits in the front, to make our ciphers appear valuable; 'tis a ſpiritual act, the deſign of God in the Goſpel being to advance the honour and mediation of his Son. That is a ſpiritual and evangelical act, which anſwers the evangelical deſign. The deſign of Satan and our own corruption is defeated, when thoſe interruptions make us run ſwifter, and take faſter hold on the High-prieſt, who is to preſent our worſhip to God, and our own Souls receive comfort thereby. Chriſt had temptations offered to him by the Devil in his Wilderneſs retirement; that from an experimental knowledge, he might be able more compaſſionatly to ſuccour us *; we have ſuch aſſaults in our retir'd worſhip eſpecially, that we may be able more highly to value him and his mediation.

* 1 John 2. 1.
* Exod. 28. 36, 38.
* Heb. 2. 18.

3. Let us not therefore be diſcourged by thoſe interruptions and ſtarts of our hearts.

(1.) If we find in our ſelves a ſtrong reſiſtance of them. The Fleſh will be luſting; that cannot be hindered; yet if we do not fulfil the luſts of it, riſe up at its command and go about its work, we may be ſaid to walk in the Spirit *: We walk in the Spirit, if we fulfil not the luſts of the Fleſh, though there be a luſting of the Fleſh againſt the Spirit: So we worſhip in the Spirit, though there be carnal thoughts ariſing, if we do not fullfil them; though the ſtirring of them diſcovers ſome contrariety in us to God, yet the reſiſtence manifeſts, that there is a principle of contrariety in us to them; that as there is ſomething of Fleſh that luſts againſt the Spirit, ſo there is ſomething of Spirit in worſhip which luſts againſt the Fleſh: We muſt take heed of omitting worſhip, becauſe of ſuch in-rodes; and lying down in the mire of a total neglect. If our Spirits are made more lively and vigorous againſt them; If thoſe cold vapours which have riſen from our hearts, make us like a ſpring in the midſt of the cold Earth, more warm: There is in this caſe more reaſon for us to bleſs God, than to be diſcouraged. God looks upon it as the diſeaſe, not the willfulneſs of our nature; as the weakneſs of the Fleſh, not the willingneſs of the Spirit. If we would ſhut the door upon them, it ſeems they are unwelcome company:

* Gal. 5. 16, 17.

pany: Men do not uſe to lock their doors upon thoſe they love; if they break in and diſturb us with their impertinences, we need not be diſcomforted, unleſs we give them a ſhare in our affections, and turn our back upon God to entertain them: If their preſence makes us ſad, their flight would make us joyful.

(2.) If we find our ſelves excited to a ſtricter watch over our hearts againſt them. As Travellers will be careful when they come to places where they have been robb'd before, that they be not ſo eaſily ſurprized again. We ſhould not only lament when we have had ſuch fooliſh imaginations in worſhip breaking in upon us, but alſo bleſs God that we have had no more, ſince we have hearts ſo fruitful of weeds. We ſhould give God the glory when we find our hearts preſerved from theſe intruders, and not boaſt of our ſelves, but return him our praiſe for the watch and guard he kept over us to preſerve us from ſuch Thieves.

Let us not be diſcomforted; for as the greatneſs of our ſins upon our turning to God is no hinderance to our juſtification, becauſe it doth not depend upon our converſion as the meritorious cauſe, but upon the infinite value of our Saviours ſatisfaction, which reaches the greateſt ſins as well as the leaſt; ſo the multitude of our bewail'd diſtractions in worſhip are not a hinderance to our acceptation, becauſe of the uncontroulable power of Chriſts interceſſion.

Uſe III. Is for exhortation. Since Spiritual worſhip is due to God, and the Father ſeeks ſuch to worſhip him, how much ſhould we endeavour to ſatisfie the deſire and order of God, and act conformable to the Law of our Creation and the love of Redemption? Our end muſt be the ſame in worſhip which was Gods end in Creation and Redemption; to glorifie his name, ſet forth his perfections, and be rendred fit as Creatures and Redeemed ones to partake of that grace which is the fruit of worſhip. An Evangelical diſpenſation requires a Spiritual homage; to neglect therefore either the matter or manner of Goſpel duties, is to put a ſlight upon Goſpel priviledges. The manner of duty is ever of more value than the matter; the Scarlet dye is more precious than the cloth tinctured with it. God reſpects more the diſpoſition of the Sacrificer than the multitude of the Sacrifices *. The Solemn feaſts appointed by God, were but Dung, as managed by the Jews, Mal. 2. 3. The heart is often welcome without the body, but the body never grateful without the heart; The inward acts of the Spirit require nothing from without to conſtitute them good in themſelves; but the outward acts of devotion require inward acts to render them ſavory to God. As the goodneſs of outward acts conſiſts not in the acts themſelves, ſo the acceptableneſs of them reſults not from the acts themſelves, but from the inward frame animating and quickning thoſe acts, as blood and Spirits running through the veins of a duty to make it a living ſervice in the ſight of God. Imperfections in worſhip hinder not Gods acceptation of it, if the heart Spirited by Grace be there to make it a ſweet Saviour. The ſtench of burning fleſh and fat in the legal Sacrifices might render them noyſome to the outward ſenſes; but God ſmelt a ſweet ſavour in them, as they reſpected Chriſt. When the heart and Spirit are offered up to God, it may be a ſavory duty, though attended with unſavory imperfections. But a thouſand Sacrifices without a ſtamp of faith, a thouſand Spiritual duties with an habitual carnality, are no better than ſtench with God.

* Μᾶλλον τὸ δαιμόνιον πρὸς τὸ ἅγιον φύεντων ἢ θ ἅγιον θυομένων πλῆθος Porphyr. de Abſtinentia.

The heart muſt be purged, as well as the Temple was by our Saviour, of the Thieves that would rob God of his due worſhip. Antiquity had ſome Temples, wherein it was a crime to bring any gold; therefore thoſe that came to worſhip laid their gold aſide, before they went into the Temple. We ſhould lay aſide our worldly and trading thoughts before we addreſs to worſhip, Iſa. 26. 9. With my Spirit within me will I ſeek thee early. Let not our minds be gadding abroad, and exil'd from God and themſelves. It will be thus when the deſire of our Soul is to his name and the remembrance of him, ver. 8. When he hath given ſo great and admirable a gift, as that of his Son, in whom are all things neceſſary to Salvation, Righteouſneſs, Peace, and pardon of ſin, we ſhould manage the remembrance of his name in worſhip with the cloſeſt unitedneſs of heart, and the moſt Spiritual affections. The motion of the Spirit is the firſt act in Religion, to this we are obliged in every act: The Devil requires the Spirit of his votaries; ſhould God have a leſs dedication than the Devil?

Motives to back this exhortation.

1. Not to give God our Spirit is a great ſin. 'Tis a mockery of God, not worſhip contempt, not adoration, whatever our outward fervency or proteſtations may be*. Every alienation of our hearts from him is a real ſcorn put upon him: The acts of the Soul are real, and more the acts of the man than the acts of the body; becauſe they are the acts of the choiceſt part of man, and of that which is the firſt ſpring of all bodily motions; 'tis the λόγος ἐνδιάθετος the Internal ſpeech whereby we muſt ſpeak with God: To give him therefore only an external form of worſhip without the life of it, is a taking his name in vain: We mock him, when we mind not what we are ſpeaking to him, or what he is ſpeaking to us; when the motions of our hearts are contrary to the motions of our tongues; when we do any thing before him ſlovenly, impudently or raſhly. As in a Lutiniſt, it is abſurd to ſing one Tune and play another; ſo it is a foul thing, to tell God one thing with our lips, and think another thing with our hearts; 'tis a ſin like that the Apoſtle chargeth the Heathens with, Rom. 1. 28. They like not to retain God in their knowledge; their ſtomachs are ſick while they are upon any duty, and never leave working, till they have thrown up all the ſpiritual part of worſhip, and rid themſelves of the thoughts of God, which are as unwelcome and troubleſome Gueſts to them: When men behave themſelves in the ſight of God, as if God were not God; they do not only defame him, but deny him, and violate the unchangeable perfections of the Divine Nature

* Non valet proteſtatio contra factum is a rule in the civil law.

(1.) Tis againſt the Majeſty of God. When we have not awful thoughts of that great Majeſty to whom we addreſs; when our Souls cleave not to him, when we petition him in Prayer, or when he gives out his orders in his Word. 'Tis a contempt of the Majeſty of a Prince, if whiles he is ſpeaking to us, we liſten not to him with reverence and attention, but turn our backs on him, to play with one of his Hounds, or talk with a begger; or while we ſpeak to him, to rake in a Dunghill. Solomon adviſeth us to *keep our foot when we go to the Houſe of God. Our affections ſhould be ſteady, and not ſlip away again; why? v. 2. Becauſe God is in Heaven, &c. He is a God of Majeſty? earthly durty frames are unſutable to the God of Heaven; low ſpirits are unſutable to the moſt high. We would not bring our mean Servants, or durty Dogs in a Princes preſence Chamber; yet we bring not only our wordly, but our prophane affections into Gods preſence: We give in this caſe, thoſe ſervices to God, which our Governour would think unworthy of him*. The more excellent and glorious God is, the greater contempt of him it is to ſuffer ſuch fooliſh affections to be Competitors with him for our hearts: 'Tis a ſcorn put upon him to converſe with a Creature while we are dealing with him; but a greater to converſe in our thoughts and fancies with ſome ſordid luſt, which is moſt hateful to him: And the more aggravation it attracts, in that we are to apprehend him the moſt glorious Object ſitting upon his Throne in time of worſhip, and our ſelves ſtanding as vile Creatures before him, ſupplicating for our lives, and the conveyances of grace and mercy to our Souls: As if a grand Mutineer, inſtead of humble begging the pardon of his offended Prince, ſhould preſent his Petition not only ſcribled and blotted, but beſmeared with ſome loathſome excrement. 'Tis unbecoming the Majeſty both of God, and the Worſhip it ſelf, to preſent him with a Picture inſtead of Subſtance, and bring a world of naſty affections in our hearts, and ridiculous toys in our heads before him, and worſhip with indiſpoſed and heedleſs Souls.

* Eccleſ. 5. 1.

* Mal. 1. 8.

Malach. 1. 14. He is a great King, therefore addreſs to him with fear and reverence.

(2.) 'Tis againſt the Life of God. Is a dead worſhip proportioned to a living God? The ſeparation of heavenly affections from our Souls before God, makes them as much a Carcaſs in his ſight, as the divorce of the Soul makes the Body a Carcaſs; When the affections are ſeparated, worſhip is no longer Worſhip, but a dead offering, a liveleſs bulk; for the eſſence and Spirit of Worſhip is departed: Though the Soul be preſent with the body in a way of information, yet it is not preſent in a way of affection, and this is the worſt; for it is not the ſeparation of the Soul from informing, that doth ſeparate a man from God, but the removal of our affections from him. If a man pretend an application to God, and ſleep and ſnore all the time; without queſtion ſuch a one did not Worſhip: In a careleſs worſhip, the heart is morally dead while the eyes are open: *The heart of the Spouſe awaked whiles her eyes ſlept, and our hearts on the contrary ſleep while our eyes awake. * Cant. 5. 2.

is

Our bleſſed Saviour hath died to purge our Conſciences from dead works and frames, that we may ſerve the living God *; to ſerve God as a God of Life. Davids Soul cried and fainted for God under this conſideration *: But to preſent our Bodies without our Spirits, is ſuch a uſage of God, that implies he is a dead Image, not worthy of any but a dead and heartleſs ſervice: Like one of thoſe Idols the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks of *, that have eyes and ſee not, ears and hear not, no life in it: Though it be not an objective Idolatry, becauſe the Worſhip is directed to the true God; yet I may call it a ſubjective Idolatry, in regard of the frame, fit only to be preſented to ſome ſenſeleſs ſtock. We intimate God to be no better than an Idol, and to have no more knowledge of us, and in-ſight into us, than an Idol can have: If we did believe him to be the living God, we durſt not come before him with ſervices ſo unſutable to him, and reproaches of him. * Heb. 9. 14. * Pſal. 42. 2. * Pſal. 115. 5.

(3.) 'Tis againſt the infiniteneſs of God. We ſhould worſhip God with thoſe boundleſs affections which bear upon them a Shadow or Image of his Infiniteneſs; ſuch are the deſires of the Soul which know no limits, but ſtart out beyond whatſoever enjoyment the heart of man poſſeſſes. No creeping Creature was to be offered to God in Sacrifice; but ſuch as had legs to run, or wings to fly: For us to come before God with a light creeping frame, is to worſhip him with the loweſt finite affections; as though any thing though never ſo mean or torn, might ſatisfie and infinite being; as though a poor ſhallow Creature could give enough to God without giving him the heart, when indeed we cannot give him a worſhip proportionable to his infiniteneſs, did our hearts ſwell as large as Heaven in our deſires for him in every act of our duties.

(4.) 'Tis againſt the ſpirituality of God. God being a Spirit, calls for a worſhip in ſpirit; to withold this from him, implies him to be ſome groſs corporeal matter: As a Spirit, he looks for the heart; a Wreſtling heart in Prayer; a trembling heart in the word *: To bring nothing but the Body when we come to a ſpiritual God to beg ſpiritual benefits, to wait for ſpiritual communications, which can only be diſpenſed to us in a ſpiritual manner, is unſutable to the ſpiritual nature of God: A meer carnal ſervice implicitely denies his ſpirituality, which requires of us higher engagements than meer corporeal ones. * Iſa. 66. 2.

Worſhip ſhould be rational, not an imaginative ſervice, wherein is required the activity of our nobleſt faculties; and our fancy ought to have no ſhare in it, but in ſubſerviency to the more ſpiritual part of our Soul.

(5.) 'Tis againſt the ſupremacy of God. As God is one, the only Soveraign; ſo our hearts ſhould be one, cleaving wholly to him, and undivided from him: In pretending to deal with him, we acknowledge his Deity and Soveraignty; but in with-holding our choiceſt faculties and affections from him, and the ſtarting of our minds to vain Objects, we intimate their equality with God, and their right as well as his to our hearts and affections: Tis as if a Princeſs ſhould commit Adultery with ſome baſe Scullion, while ſhe is before her Husband; which would be a plain denial of his ſole right to her. It intimates that other things are ſuperior to God; they are true Soveraigns that ingroſs our hearts. If a man were addreſſing himſelf to a Prince, and ſhould in an inſtant turn his back upon him, upon a beck or nod from ſome inconſiderable perſon; is it not an evidence, that that perſon that invited him away, hath a greater Soveraignty over him, than that Prince to whom he was applying himſelf? And do we not diſcard Gods abſolute dominion over us, when at the leaſt beck of a corrupt inclination, we can diſpoſe of our hearts to it, and alienate them from God? As they in Ezek. 33. 31. Left the ſervice of God for the ſervice of their covetouſneſs; which evidenced that they owned the authority of ſin more than the authority of God: This is not to ſerve God as our Lord and abſolute Maſter, but to make God ſerve our turn, and ſubmit his Soveraignity to the Supremacy of ſome unworthy affection. The Creature is preferred before the Creator, when the heart runs moſt upon it in time of Religious worſhip, and our own carnal intereſt ſwallows up the affections that are due to God: Tis *an Idol ſet up in the heart in his ſolemn preſence, and attracts that devotion to it ſelf, which we only owe to our Soveraign Lord; and the moſt baſe and contemptible that is to which the Spirit is * Ezek. 14. 4.

devoted, the more contempt there is of Gods dominion. Judas his kiſs with a Hail Maſter, was no act of Worſhip, or an owning his Maſters authority; but a deſigning the ſatisfaction of his Covetouſneſs in the betraying of him.

(6.) Tis againſt the Wiſdom of God. God as a God of order, has put earthly things in ſubordination to heavenly; and we by this unworthy carriage invert this order, and put heavenly things in ſubordination to Earthly; in placing mean and low things in our hearts, and bringing them ſo placed into Gods preſence, which his Wiſdom at the Creation put under our feet. A ſervice without ſpiritual affections, is a ſacrifice of Fools, Eccleſ. 5.1. Which have loſt their Brains and Underſtandings: A fooliſh Spirit is very unſutable to an infinitely wiſe God: Well may God ſay of ſuch a one, as Achiſh of David who ſeemed mad; Why have you brought this Fellow to play the Mad-man in my preſence? Shall this Fellow come into my Houſe? 1 Sam. 21. 15.

(7.) 'Tis againſt the Omniſciency of God. To carry it fair without and impertinently within, is as though God had not an all-ſeeing eye that could pierce into the heart, and underſtand every motion of the inward faculties; As though God were eaſily cheated with an outward fawning ſervice, like an Apothecaries box with a guilded title, that may be full of Cobwebs within: What is ſuch a carriage, but a deſign to deceive God; when with Herod we pretend to worſhip Chriſt, and intend to murder all the motions of Chriſt in our Souls? A heedleſs Spirit, an eſtrangement of our Souls, a giving the Reins to them to run out from the preſence of God to ſee every Reed ſhaken with the Wind, is to deny him to be Searcher of hearts, and the Diſcerner of ſecret thoughts; as though he could not look through us to the darkneſs and remoteneſs of our minds, but were an ignorant God, who might be put off with the worſt as well as the beſt in our Flock. If we did really believe there were a God of infinite Knowledge, who ſaw our frames, and whether we came dreſt with Wedding-garments ſutable to the duties we are about to perform; ſhould we be ſo gariſh, and put him off with ſuch trivial ſtuff, without any reverence of his Majeſty?

(8.) 'Tis againſt the Holineſs of God. To alienate our Spirits, is to offend him while we pretend to worſhip him; though we may be mighty officious in the external part, yet our baſe and carnal affections make all our worſhip but as a heap of Dung; and who would not look upon it as an affront, to lay Dung before a Prince's Throne? Pro. 21 27. The Sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination: How much more when he brings it with a wicked mind? A putrified Carcaſs under the Law, had not been ſo great an affront to the Holineſs of God, as a frothy unmelted heart, and a wanton fancy in a time of worſhip. God is ſo holy, that if we could offer the worſhip of Angels, and the quinteſcence of our Souls in his ſervice, it would be beneath his infinite purity: How unworthy then are they of him, when they are preſented not only without the ſenſe of our uncleanneſs, but ſullied with the fumes and exhalations of our corrupt affections, which are as ſo many Plague-ſpots upon our duties, contrary to the unſpoted purity of the Divine Nature? Is not this an unworthy conceit of God, and injurious to his infinite Holineſs?

(9.) 'Tis againſt the Love and Kindneſs of God. 'Tis a condeſcenſion in God to admit a piece of Earth to offer up a duty to him, when he hath miriads of Angels to attend him in his Court and celebrate his Praiſe: To admit Man to be an Attendant on him, and a Partner with Angels, is a high favour. Tis not a ſingle mercy, but a heap of mercies to be admitted into the preſence of God, Pſal. 5.7. I will come into thy houſe in the multitude of thy mercies. When the bleſſed God is ſo kind as to give us acceſs to his Majeſty, do we not undervalue his kindneſs when we deal uncivilly with him, and deny him the choiceſt part of our ſelves? Tis a contempt of his Soveraignty, as our Spirits are due to him by nature; a contempt of his Goodneſs, as our Spirits are due to him by gratitude? How abuſive a carriage is it to make uſe of his mercy to encourage our impudence, that ſhould excite our fear and reverence? How unworthy would it be for an indigent Debtor to bring to his indulgent Creditor, an empty Purſe inſtead of Payment? When God holds out his Golden Scepter to encourage our approaches to him; ſtands ready to give us the pardon of ſin and full felicity, the beſt things he hath; is it a fit requital of his kind-kindneſs, to give him a formal outſide only, a ſhadow of Religion; to have the heart overſwayed with other thoughts and affections; as if all his proffers were ſo contemptible, as to deſerve only a ſlight at our hands? 'Tis a contempt of the love and kindneſs of God.

(10.) 'Tis againſt the Sufficiency and Fullneſs of God. When we give God our Bodies and the Creature our Spirits, it intimates a conceit, that there is more content to be had in the Creature than in God bleſſed for ever; that the waters in the Ciſtern are ſweeter than thoſe in the Fountain: Is not this a practical giving God the Lye, and denying thoſe promiſes wherein he hath declared the ſatisfaction he can give to the Spirit, as he is the God of the Spirits of all Fleſh?

If we did imagin the excellency and lovelineſs of God were worthy to be the ultimate Object of our affections, the heart would attend more cloſely upon him, and be terminated in him; did we believe God to be allſufficient, full of grace and goodneſs, a tender Father, not willing to forſake his own; willing, as well as able to ſupply their wants; the heart would not ſo lamely attend upon him, and would not upon every impertinency be diverted from him. There is much of a wrong notion of God, and a predominancy of the world above him in the heart, when we can more ſavourly reliſh the thoughts of low inferior things than heavenly, and let our Spirits upon every trifling occaſion be fugitives from him: 'Tis a Teſtimony that we make not God our chiefeſt good. If apprehenſions of his excellency did poſſeſs our Souls, they would be faſtned on him, glued to him; we ſhould not liſten to that rabble of fooliſh thoughts that ſteal our hearts ſo often from him. Were our breathings after God as ſtrong as the pantings of the Hart after the water Brooks, we ſhould be like that Creature not diverted in our Courſe by every Puddle. Where God the predominant ſatisfactory Object in our eye, he would carry our whole Soul along with him.

When our Spirits readily retreat from God in Worſhip upon every giddy motion, 'tis a kind of repentance that ever we did come near him, and implies, that there is a fuller ſatisfaction, and more attractive excellency in that which doth ſo eaſily divert us, than in that God to whoſe worſhip we did pretend to addreſs our ſelves: 'Tis as if, when we were petitioning a Prince, we ſhould immediatly turn about, and make requeſt to one of his Guard; as though ſo mean a perſon were more able to give us the boon we want, than the Soveraign is.

2. Conſideration by way of motive. To have our Spirits off from God in worſhip, is a bad ſign. It was not ſo in Innocence. The heart of Adam could cleave to God; the Law of God was engraven upon him; he could apply himſelf to the fulfilling of it without any twinkling; there was no folly and vanity in his mind, no independency in his thoughts, no duty was his burden; for there was in him a proneſs to, and delight in all the duties of worſhip: 'Tis the Fall hath diſtempered us; and the more unwieldineſs there is in our Spirits, the more carnal our affections are in worſhip, the more evidence there is of the ſtrength of that revolted ſtate.

(1.) It argues much corruption in the heart. As by the eructations of the ſtomach, we may judge of the windineſs and foulneſs of it; ſo by the inordinate motions of our minds and hearts, we may judge of the weakneſs of its complexion. A ſtrength of ſin is evidenced by the eruptions and ebullitions of it in worſhip, when they are more ſudden, numerous, and vigorus than the motions of grace. When the heart is apt like tinder to catch fire from Satan, 'tis a ſign of much combuſtible matter ſuitable to his temptation. Were not corruption ſtrong, the Soul could not turn ſo eaſily from God when it is in his preſence, and hath advantageous opportunity to create a fear and aw of God in it: Such baſe fruit could not ſprout up ſo ſuddenly, were there not much ſap and juice in the root of ſin.

What communion with a living root can be evidenced without exerciſes of an inward life? That Spirit which is a Well of living waters in a gracious heart, will be eſpecially ſpringing up when it is before God.

(2.) It ſhews much affection to earthly things, and little to heavenly. There muſt needs be an inordinate affection to earthly things, when upon every ſlight ſolicitation we can part with God, and turn the back upon a ſervice glorious for him, and advantageous for our ſelves, to wed our hearts to ſome idle fancy that ſignifies nothing. How can we be ſaid to entertain God in our affections, when we give him not the precedency in our underſtandings, but let every trifle juſtle the ſenſe of God out of our minds? Were our hearts fully determined to ſpiritual things, ſuch vanities could not ſeat themſelves in our underſtandings, and divide our Spirits from God. Were our hearts ballanced with a love to God, the world could never ſteal our hearts ſo much from his worſhip, but his worſhip would draw our hearts to it.

not

It ſhews a baſe neutrality in the greateſt concernments; a halting between God and Baal; a contrariety between Affection an Conſcience, when natural Conſcience preſſes a man to duties of worſhip, and his other affections pull him back, draw him to carnal objects, and make him ſlight that whereby he may honour God. God argues the prophaneſs of the Jews hearts from the wickedneſs they brought into his houſe, and acted there, Jer. 23. Tea in my houſe, that is, my worſhip, I found their wickedneſs, ſaith the Lord. Carnality in worſhip is a kind of an Idolatrous frame; when the heart is renewed, Idols are caſt to the Moles and the Batts. Iſa. 2. 20.

(3.) It ſhews much hypocriſie to have our Spirits off from God. The mouth ſpeaks and the carriage pretends what the heart doth not think; there is a diſſent of the heart from the pretence of the body.

Inſtability is a ſure ſign of hypocriſie. Double thoughts argue a double heart. The Wicked are compared to Chaff *, for the uncertain and various motions of their minds, by the leaſt wind of fancy. The leaſt motion of a carnal Objects diverts the Spirit from God, as the ſcent of Carrion doth the Raven from the flight it was ſet upon.

* Pſal. 1 4.

The People of God are called Gods Spouſe, and God calls himſelf their Husband; whereby is noted, the moſt intimate union of the Soul with God, and that there ought to be the higheſt love an affection to him, and faithfulneſs in his worſhip; but when the heart doth ſtart from him in worſhip, it is a ſign of the unſtedfaſtneſs of it with God, and a diſreliſh of any communion with him; It is as God complains of the Iſraelites, a going a whoring after our own imaginations.

As grace reſpects God as the object of Worſhip, ſo it looks moſt upon God in approaching to him. Where there is a likneſs and love, there is a deſire of converſe and intimacy; if there be no ſpiritual entwining about God in our worſhip, it is a ſign there is no likeneſs to him, no true ſenſe of him, no renewed image of God in us: Every living image will move ſtrongly to joyn it ſelf with its original Copy, and be glad with Jacob, to ſit ſteadily in thoſe Chariots that ſhall convey him to his beloved Joſeph.

Motive 3. Conſider the danger of a Carnal worſhip.

(1.) We loſe the comfort of worſhip. The Soul is a great Gainer when it offers a ſpiritual worſhip, and as great a loſer when it is unfaithful with God. Treachery and perfidiouſneſs hinder commerce among men; ſo doth Hypocriſie in its own nature, communion with God. God never promiſed any thing to the Carcaſs but to the Spirit of worſhip. God hath no obligation upon him by any word of his, to reward us with himſelf, when we perform it not to himſelf: When we give an outſide worſhip, we have only the outſide of an ordinance: We can expect no kernel, when we give God only the ſhell: He that only licks the outſide of the Glaſs, can never be refreſhed with the rich Cordial encloſed within. A cold and lazy formality, will make God to withdraw the light of his countenance, and not ſhine with any delightful communications upon our Souls; but if we come before him with a livelineſs of affections, and ſteadineſs of heart; he will draw the vail, and cauſe his glory to diſplay it ſelf before us. An humble praying Chriſtian, and a warm affectionate Chriſtian in worſhip, will ſoon find a God who is delighted with ſuch frames and cannot long withold himſelf from the Soul: When our hearts are enflamed with love to him in worſhip, tis a preparation tho ſome act of love on his part whereby he intends further to gratifie us. When John was in the Spirit on the Lords day, that is iu ſpiritual employment, and meditation and other duties, he had that great Revelation of what ſhould happen to the Church in all Ages *; His being in the Spirit, intimates his ordinary courſe on that day, and not any extraordinary act in him though it was followed with an extraordinary diſcovery of God to him; When he was thus engaged, he heard a voice behind him.

* Rev. 1. 10.

God

God doth not require of us ſpirituality in worſhip to advantage himſelf, but that we might be prepared to be advantaged by him. If we have a clear and well diſpoſed eye, 'tis not a benefit to the Sun, but fits us to receive benefits from his Beams. Worſhip is an act that perfects our own Souls; they are then moſt widened by ſpiritual frames, to receive the influence of divine bleſſings, as an eye moſt opened receives the fruit of the Suns light, better than the eye that is ſhut. The communications of God are more or leſs, according as our ſpiritual frames are more or leſs in our worſhip: God will not give his bleſſings to unſutable hearts. What a naſty Veſſel is a carnal heart for a ſpiritual communication? The chief end of every duty enjoyned by God, is to have communion with him; and therefore it is called, a drawing near to God: 'Tis impoſſible therefore, that the outward part of any duty can anſwer the end of God in his inſtitution. 'Tis not a bodily appearance or geſture whereby men can have communion with God, but by the impreſſions of the heart and reflections of the heart upon God: Without this, all the rich ſtreams of grace will run beſides us, and the growth of the Soul be hindered and impaired. A diligent hand makes rich, ſaith the wiſe man; a diligent heart in ſpiritual Worſhip, brings in rich incomes to the humble and ſpiritual Soul.

(2.) It renders the worſhip not only unacceptable, but abominable to God. It makes our Gold to become Droſs; it ſoyls our duties, and beſpotts our Souls. A carnal and unſteady frame ſhews an indifferency of Spirit at beſt; and luke warmneſs is as ungrateful to God, as heavy and nauſeous meat is to the ſtomach, he *ſpues them out of his mouth. As our gracious God doth overlook infirmities where intentions are good, and endeavours ſerious and ſtrong; ſo he loaths the ſervices where the frames are ſtark naught; Pſal. 66. 18. If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear my Prayer. Luke warm and indifferent ſervices ſtink in the Noſtrils of God. The heart ſeems to loath God when it ſtarts from him upon every occaſion, when it is unwilling to employ it ſelf about, and ſtick cloſe to him: And can God be pleaſed with ſuch a frame? The more of the heart and Spirit is in any ſervice, the more real goodneſs there is in it, and the more ſavoury it is to God; the leſs of the Heart and Spirit, the leſs of goodneſs, and the more nauſeous to God, who loves Righteouſneſs and *Truth in the inward parts. And therefore infinite Goodneſs and Holineſs cannot but hate Worſhip preſented to him with deceitful, carnal and flitting affections: They muſt be more nauſeous to God, than a putrified Carcaſs can be to Man: They are the prophanings of that which ſhould be the habitation of the Spirit: They make the Spirit, the ſeat of duty, a filthy dunghil; and are as loathſome to God, as Mony-changers in the Temple were to our Saviour.

* Rev. 3. 16.

* Pſal. 51. 6.

We ſee the evil of carnal frames, and the neceſſity and benefit of ſpiritual frames: For further help in this laſt, let us practiſe theſe following directions.

Direction 1. Keep up ſpiritual frames out of worſhip. To avoid low affections, we muſt keep our hearts as much as we can in a ſetled elevation. If we admit unworthy diſpoſitions at one time, we ſhall not eaſily be rid of them at another*: As he that would not be bitten with Gnats in the night, muſt keep his windows ſhut in the day; when they are once entred tis not eaſie to expel them: In which reſpect, one adviſeth, to be ſuch out of worſhip as we would be in worſhip. If we mix ſpiritual affections with our worldly employments, worldly affections will not mingle themſelves ſo eaſily with our heavenly engagements. If our hearts be ſpiritual in our outward calling, they will ſcarce be carnal in our religious ſervice. If *we walk in the Spirit, we ſhall not fulfil the luſts of the Fleſh. A ſpiritual walk in the day, will hinder carnal luſtings in worſhip. The Fire was to be kept alive upon the Altar when Sacrifices were not offered, from morning till night, from night till morning, as well as in the very time of Sacrifice. A ſpiritual life and vigour out of worſhip, would render it at its ſeaſon ſweet and eaſie, and preſerve a ſpontaneity and preparedneſs to it, and make it both natural and pleaſant to us.

* Fitzherbert pol. in relig. part. 2. cap. 15. § 12.

* Gal. 5. 16.

Any thing that doth unhinge and diſcompoſe our Spirits, is inconſiſtent with religious ſervices, which are to be performed with the greateſt ſedateneſs and gravity. All irregular paſſions diſturb the ſerenity of the Spirit, and open the door for *Satan. Saith the Apoſtle, Let not the Sun go down upon your wrath, neither give place to the Devil.

* Eph. 4. 25. 27.

Devil. Where wrath breaks the Lock, the Devil will quickly be over the Threſhold; and though they be allayed, yet they leave the heart ſometime after, like the Sea rowling and ſwelling after the ſtorm is ceaſed.

Mixture with ill company leaves a tincture upon us in worſhip. Ephraims allying himſelf with the Gentiles, bred an indifferency in Religion. Hoſ. 7. 8. Ephraim hath mixed himſelf with the People. Ephraim is a Cake not turn'd: It will make our hearts, and conſequently our ſervices half Dough, as well as half bak'd: Theſe and the like make the holy Spirit withdraw himſelf, and then the Soul lies like a wind-bound Veſſel and can make no way. When the Sun departs from us, it carries its Beams away with it; then doth Darkneſs ſpread it ſelf over the Earth, and the Beaſts of the Forreſts creep out *. When the Spirit withdraws a while from a good man, it carries away, (though not habitual, yet) much of the exciting and aſſiſting grace; and then carnal diſpoſitions perk up themſelves from the boſome of natural corruption. To be ſpiritual in worſhip, we muſt bar the door at other times againſt that which is contrary to it: As he that would not be infected with a contagious diſeaſe, carries ſome Preſervative about with him, and inures himſelf to good ſcents.

* Pſal. 104. 20.

To this end, be much in ſecret ejaculations to God, theſe are the pureſt flights of the Soul, that have more of fervor and leſs of carnality; they preſerve a livelineſs in the Spirit, and make it more fit to perform ſolemn ſtated worſhip with greater freedom and activity: A conſtant uſe of this would make our whole lives, lives of worſhip. As frequent ſinful acts ſtrengthen habits of ſin; ſo frequent Religious acts ſtrengthen habits of grace.

Direction 2. Excite and exerciſe particularly a love to God, and dependence on him.

Love is a commanding affection, a uniting grace; it draws all the faculties of the Soul to one Center. The Soul that loves God, when it hath to do with him, is bound to the beloved Object; It can mind nothing elſe during ſuch impreſſions. When the affection is ſet to the worſhip of God, every thing the Soul hath will be beſtowed upon it: As David's diſpoſition was to the Temple, 1 Chron. 29. 3. Carnal frames like the Fowls, will be lighting upon the Sacrifice; but not when it is enflam'd: Though the ſcent of the fleſh invite them, yet the heat of the fire drives them to their diſtance. A flaming love will ſinge the Flies that endeavour to interrupt and diſturb us. The happineſs of Heaven conſiſts in a full attraction of the Soul to God, by his glorious influence upon it; There will be ſuch a diffuſion of his goodneſs throughout the Souls of the bleſſed, as will unite the affections perfectly to him: Theſe affections which are ſcattered here, will be there gathered into one flame, moving to him and centring in him: Therefore the more of a heavenly frame poſſeſſes our affections here, the more ſettled and uniform will our hearts be in all their motions to God, and operations about him.

Excite a dependence on him, Pro. 16. 3. Commit thy works to the Lord, and thy thoughts ſhall be eſtabliſhed. Let us go out in Gods ſtrength and not in our own; vain is the help of man in any thing, and vain is the help of the heart: 'Tis through God only we can do valiantly in ſpiritual concerns as well as temporal; the want of this makes but ſlight impreſſions upon the Spirit.

Direction 3. Nouriſh right conceptions of the Majeſty of God in your minds. Let us conſider, that we are drawing to God; the moſt amiable Object, the beſt of Beings, worthy of infinite honour, and highly meriting the higheſt affections we can give; a God that made the world by a word; that upholds the great frame of Heaven and Earth; a Majeſty above the conceptions of Angels; who uſes not his power to ſtrike us to our deſerved puniſhment, but his love and bounty to allure us; a God that gave all the Creatures to ſerve us, and can in a trice make them as much our Enemies as he hath now made them our Servants. Let us view him in his greatneſs, and in his goodneſs, that our hearts may have a true value of the worſhip of ſo great a Majeſty, and count it the moſt worthy employment with all diligence to attend upon him. When we have a fear of God, it will make our worſhip ſerious; when we have a joy in God, it will make our worſhip durable. Our affections will be raiſed, when we repreſent God in the moſt reverential, endearing, and obliging circumſtances. We honour the Majeſty of God, when we conſider him with due reverence according to the greatneſs and perfection of his works; and in this reverence of his Majeſty doth worſhip chiefly conſiſt. Low thoughts of God will make make low frames in us before him: If we thought God an infinite glorious Spirit, how would our hearts be lower than our knees in his presence? How humbly, how believingly pleading is the Psalmist, when he considers God to be without comparison in the Heavens; to whom none of the Sons of the mighty can be likened; when there was none like to him in strength or faithfulness round about* ? We should have also deep impressions of the Omniscience of God; and remember we have to deal with a God that searcheth the heart and tryeth the reins; to whom the most secret temper is as visible, as the loudest words are Audible; that though man judges by outward expressions, God judges by inward affections. As the Law of God regulates the inward frames of the heart; so the eye of God pitches upon the inward intentions of the Soul. If God were visibly present with us, should we not approach to him with strong affections; summon our Spirits to attend upon him; behave our selves modestly before him? Let us consider, he is as really present with us, as if he were visible to us; let us therefore preserve a strong sense of the presence of God. No man but one out of his wits, when he were in the presence of a Prince, and making a speech to him; would break off at every period, and run after the catching of Butter-flyes. Remember in all worship you are before the Lord, to whom all things are open and naked.

* Psal. 89. 6, 7, 8.

Direction 4. Let us take heed of inordinate desires after the world. As the world steals away a mans heart from the Word, so it doth from all other worship; *It chokes the Word ; it stifles all the spiritual breathings after God in every duty: The edge of the Soul is blunted by it, and made too dull for such sublime exercises. The Apostles rule in Prayer, when he joyns sobriety with watching unto Prayer, is of concern in all worship, sobriety in the pursuite and use of all worldly things. A man drunk with worldly fumes cannot watch, cannot be heavenly, affectionate, spiritual in service. There is a magnetick force in the Earth, to hinder our flights to Heaven: Birds, when they take their first flights from the Earth, have more flutterings of their wings, than when they are mounted further in the Air, and got more without the Sphear of the Earths attractiveness; the motion of their wings is more steady, that you can scarce perceive them stir; they move lik a Ship with a full Gale. The world is a clog upon the Soul, and a bar to spiritual frames: 'Tis as hard to elevate the heart to God in the midst of a hurry of worldly affairs, as it is difficult to meditate when we are near a great noise of waters falling from a Precipice, or in the midst of a Volley of Muskets. Thick claiy affections bemire the heart, and make it unfit for such high flights it is to take in worship: Therefore get your hearts clear from worldly thoughts and desires, if you would be more spiritual in worship.

* Mat. 13. 27.

* 1 Pet. 4. 7.

5. Let us be deeply sensible of our present wants, and the supplies we may meet with in worship. Cold affections to the things we would have, will grow cooler: Weakness of desire for the Communications in worship, will freez our hearts at the time of worship, and make way for vain and foolish diversions. A Begger that is ready to perish, and knows he is next door to ruin, will not slightly and dully beg an Alms; and will not be diverted from his importunity by every slight call, or the moving of an Atom in the Air. Is it Pardon we would have? Let us apprehend the blackness of sin with the aggravations of it as it respects God; Let us be deeply sensible of the want of pardon and worth of mercy, and get our affections into such a frame, as a condemned man would do: Let us consider, that as we are now at the Throne of Gods grace, we shall shortly be at the Bar of Gods Justice; and if the Soul should be forlorn there, how fixedly and earnestly would it plead for mercy? Let us endeavour to stir up the same affections now, which we have seen some dying men have, and which we suppose despairing Souls would have done at Gods Tribunal.

* We must be sensible that the life or death of our Souls depends upon worship. Would we not be ashamed to be ridiculous in our carriage while we are eating; and shall we not be ashamed to be cold or garish before God, when the Salvation of our Souls as well as the Honour of God is concerned? If we did see the heaps of sins, the eternity of punishment due to them; If we did see an angry and offended Judge; If we did see the riches of mercy, the glorious outgoings of God in the Sanctuary, the blessed Doles he gives out to men when they spiritually attend upon him; both the one and the other would make us perform our duties humbly, sincerely, earnestly, and affectionately, and wait upon him with our whole Souls, to have miſery averted and mercy beſtowed. Let our ſenſe of this be encouraged by the conſideration of our Saviour preſenting his merits; With what affection doth he preſent his merits, his blood ſhed upon the Croſs now in Heaven? And ſhall our hearts be cold and frozen, flitting and unſteady, when his affections are ſo much concerned? Chriſt doth not preſent any Mans caſe and duties without a ſenſe of his wants, and ſhall we have none of our own?

* Guliel Paris Rhetor. Divin. cap. 26. p. 350. Col. 1.

Let me add this; let us affect our hearts with a ſenſe of what ſupplies we have met with in former worſhip, The delightful remembrance of what converſe we have had with God in former worſhip, would ſpiritualize our hearts for the preſent worſhip. Had Peter had a view of Chriſts glory in the Mount, freſh in his thoughts, he would not ſo eaſily have turned his back upon his Maſter: Nor would the Iſralites have been at leaſure for their Idolatry, had they preſerved the ſenſe of the Majeſty of God diſcovered in his late Thunders from Mount Sinai.

6. If any thing intrudes that may choak the Worſhip, caſt it ſpeedily out. We cannot hinder Satan and our own Corruption from preſenting Coolers to us, but we may hinder the ſucceſs of them: We cannot hinder the Gnats from buzing about us when we are in our buſineſs, but we may prevent them from ſetling upon us. A man that is running on a conſiderable Errand, will ſhun all unneceſſary diſcourſe that may make him forget or loyter in his buſineſs. What though there may be ſomething offered that is good in it ſelf; yet if it hath a tendency to deſpoil God of his honour, and our ſelves of the ſpiritual intentneſs in worſhip, ſend it away. Thoſe that weed a Field of Corn, examine not the nature and perticular virtues of the Weeds; but conſider only how they choak the Corn, to which the native juyce of the Soil is deſign'd. Conſider what you are about; and if any thing interpoſe that may divert you, or cool your affections in your preſent worſhip, caſt it out.

7. As to private worſhip, let us lay hold of the moſt melting opportunities and frames. When we find our hearts in a more than ordinary ſpiritual frame, let us look upon it as a Call from God to attend him: Such impreſſions and motions are Gods Voice, inviting us into communion with him in ſome particular act of worſhip, and promiſing us ſome ſucceſs in it. When the Pſalmiſt had a ſecret motion to ſeek Gods face, and complied with it *, the iſſue is the encouragement of his heart, which breaks out into an exhortation to others to be of good courage, and wait on the Lord, v. 13, 14. Wait on the Lord, be of good courage and he ſhall ſtrengthen thy heart, wait I ſay on the Lord.

* Pſal. 27. 8.

* One blow will do more on the Iron when it is hot, than a hundred when it is cold: Melted Metals may be ſtampt with any impreſſion; but once hardned, will with difficulty be brought into the figure we intend.

* Reynold's.

8. Let us examin our ſelves at the end of every act of worſhip, and chide our ſelves for any carnality we perceive in them. Let us take a review of them, and examine the reaſon; why art thou ſo low and carnal O my Soul? As David did of his diſquietedneſs, Pſalm 42. 5. Why art thou caſt down O my Soul, and why art thou diſquieted within me? If any unworthy frames have ſurprized us in worſhip, let us ſeek them out after worſhip; call them to the bar; make an exact ſcrutiny into the cauſes of them, that we may prevent their incurſions another time; let our pulſes beat quick, by way of anger and indignation againſt them: This would be a repairing what hath been amiſs; otherwiſe they may grow, and clog an after worſhip more than they did a former. Dayly examination is an Antidote againſt the temptations of the following day, and conſtant examination of our ſelves after duty, is a Preſervative againſt vain encroachments in following duties; and upon the finding them out, let us apply the blood of Chriſt by Faith for our Cure, and draw ſtrength from the death of Chriſt for the conqueſt of them, and let us alſo be humbled for them. God lifts up the humble: When we are humbled for our carnal frames in one duty, we ſhall find our ſelves by the Grace of God more elevated in the next.

A DISCOURSE UPON THE ETERNITY OF GOD.

Psalm 90. 2.

Before the Mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the Earth and the World; even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God.

THE Title of this Psalm is a Prayer; The Author Moses. Some think not only this, but the Ten following Psalms were composed by him. The Title wherewith he is dignified, is The Man of God, as also in Deut. 33. 1. One inspir'd by him, to be his Interpreter, and deliver his Oracles; One particularly directed by him: * One who as a Servant, did diligently employ himself in his Masters business, and acted for the glory of God; * He was the Minister of the Old-Testament, and the Prophet of the New.

* Coccei in Loc.

* Austin in Loc.

There are two parts of this Psalm.

1. A complaint of the frailty of Mans Life in general, verse 3, 4, 5, 6. And then a particular complaint of the condition of the Church, v. 8, 9, 10. * Parens in loc.

2. A Prayer, v. 12.

But before he speaks of the shortness of human life, he fortifies them by the consideration of the refuge they had, and should find in God, v. 1. Lord thou hast been our dwelling place in all Generations.

We have had no settled abode in the Earth, since the time of Abraham's being called out from Ur of the Chaldees: We have had Canaan in a promise, we have it not yet in possession; We have been exposed to the Cruelties of an oppressing Enemy, and the incommodities of a desert Wilderness; we have wanted the fruits of the Earth, but not the dews of Heaven. Thou hast been our dwelling place in all Generations. Abraham was under thy Conduct; Isaac and Jacob under thy Care: Their Posterity were multiplied by thee, and that under their oppressions. Thou hast been our Shield against dangers, our security in the times of trouble: When we were pursued to the Red-sea, it was not a Creature delivered us; and when we feared the pinching of our Bowels in the Desert, it was no Creature rain'd Manna upon us. Thou hast been our dwelling place; Thou hast kept open house for us, sholtered us against storms, and preserved us from mischief, as a house doth an Inhabitant from wind and weather; and that not in one or two, but in all Generations: Some think an alluſion is here made to the Ark, to which they were to have recourſe in all emergencies. Our refuge and defence hath not been from created things; not from the Ark, but from the God of the Ark.

Obſerve,

1. God is a perpetual refuge and ſecurity to his People. His Providence is not confin'd to one Generation; 'tis not one Age only that taſtes of his bounty and compaſſion: His eye never yet ſlept, nor hath he ſuffered the little Ship of his Church to be ſwallowed up, though it hath been toſt upon the waves: He hath always been an Haven to preſerve us, a Houſe to ſecure us; He hath always had compaſſions to pity us, and power to protect us; He hath had a Face to ſhine, when the world hath had an angry Countenance to frown; * He brought Enoch home by an extraordinary tranſlation from a brutiſh world; and when he was reſolved to reckon with men for their brutiſh lives, he lodged Noah, the Phœnix of the world, in an Ark, and kept him alive as a ſpark in the midſt of many waters, whereby to rekindle a Church in the world: In all Generations he is a dwelling place, to ſecure his people here, or entertain them above.

* Theodoret in loc.

His Providence is not wearied nor his Care fainting: He never wanted Will to relieve us, For he hath been our refuge; Nor ever can want Power to ſupport us; for he is a God from everlaſting to everlaſting. The Church never wanted a Pilot to ſteer her, and a Rock to ſhelter her, and daſh in pieces the waves which threaten her.

2. How worthy is it to remember former benefits, when we come to beg for new? Never were the Records of Gods mercies ſo exactly reviſed, as when his people have ſtood in need of new Editions of his Power. How neceſſary are our wants to ſtir us up to pay the rent of thankfulneſs in arrear? He renders himſelf doubly unworthy of the mercies he wants, that doth not gratefully acknowledge the mercies he hath received. God ſcarce promiſed any deliverance to the Iſralites, and they in their diſtreſs ſcarce prayed for any deliverance, but that from Egypt was mentioned on both ſides; by God to encourage them, and by them to acknowledge their confidence in him. The greater our dangers, the more we ſhould call to mind Gods former kindneſs. We are not only thankfully to acknowledge the mercies beſtowed upon our perſons, or in our age, but thoſe of former times. Thou haſt been our dwelling place in all Generations.

Moſes was not living in the former Generations, yet he appropriates the former mercies to the preſent Age. Mercies as well as Generations proceed out of the loyns of thoſe that have gone before. All Mankind are but one Adam; the whole Chuch but one Body.

In the ſecond verſe he backs his former conſideration.

1. By the greatneſs of his Power in forming the world.

2. By the boundleſneſs of his duration; From everlaſting to everlaſting. As thou haſt been our dwelling place, and expended upon us the ſtrength of thy power, and riches of thy love; ſo we have no reaſon to doubt the continuance on thy part, if we be not wanting on our parts; For the vaſt Mountains, and fruitful Earth are the works of thy hands; and there is leſs power requiſite for our relief, than there was for their Creation: and though ſo much ſtrength hath been upon various occaſions manifeſted, yet thy Arm is not weakned; for from everlaſting to everlaſting, thou art God *.

* אל ſtrong.

* Thou haſt always been God, and no time can be aſſigned as the beginning of thy Being: The Mountains are not of ſo long a ſtanding as thy ſelf; they are the effects of thy power, and therefore cannot be equal to thy duration; ſince they are effects, they ſuppoſe a precedency of their cauſe. If we would look back, we can reach no further then the beginning of the Creation, and account the years from the firſt foundation of the world; but after that we muſt loſe our ſelves in the Abyſs of Eternity; we have no Clew to guide our thoughts; we can ſee no bounds in thy Eternity: But as for Man he traverſeth the world a few days, and by thy order pronounced concerning all men, returns to the Duſt, and moulders into the Grave.

* Amyrald. in loc.

By Mountains ſome underſtand Angels, as being Creatures of a more elevated Nature: By Earth, they underſtand humane Nature, the Earth being the habitation of Men. There is no need to divert in this place, from the Letter to ſuch a ſenſe.

The

The deſcription ſeems to be poetical, and amounts to this; He neither began with the beginning of Time, nor will expire with the End of it *: He did not begin when he made himſelf known to our Fathers; but his being did precede the Creation of the world; before any created Being was formed, and any time ſettled.

* ἀναρχος καὶ ἀτελεύτητος, Theodoret in loc.

Before the Mountains were brought forth, Or before they were begotten or born; The word being uſed in thoſe ſenſes in Scripture; before they ſtood up higher than the reſt of the earthly Maſs God had created. It ſeems that Mountains were not caſually caſt up by the force of the deluge, ſoftning the Ground, and driving ſeveral parcels of it together to grow up into a maſſy body, as the Sea doth the Sand in ſeveral places; but they were at firſt formed by God.

The Eternity of God is here deſcribed.

1. In his Priority [Before the World.]

2. In the extenſion of his duration. [From everlaſting to everlaſting, thou art God.] He was before the world, yet he neither began nor ends: He is not a Temporary, but an eternal God: It takes in both parts of Eternity, what was before the Creation of the World, and what is after: Though the Eternity of God be one permanent ſtate without ſucceſſion, yet the Spirit of God ſuiting himſelf to the weakneſs of our conception, divides it into two parts, one paſt before the foundation of the world, another to come after the deſtruction of the world; as he did exiſt before all ages, and as he will exiſt after all ages.

Many Truths lye coucht in the verſe.

1. The World hath a beginning of being. It was not from Eternity, it was once nothing; had it been of a very long duration, ſome Records would have remained of ſome memorable actions done of a longer date than any extant,

2. The World owes it Being to the creating Power of God. [Thou hadſt formed it] out of nothing into being, Thou, that is God; it could not ſpring into being of it ſelf; it was nothing; it muſt have a Former.

3. God was in being before the world. The cauſe muſt be before the Effect; that Word which gives Being muſt be before that which receives Being.

4. This Being was from Eternity. [From Everlaſting]

5. This being ſhall endure to Eternity. [To Everlaſting]

6. There is but one God, one Eternal. [From everlaſting to everlaſting, thou art God.] None elſe but one hath the Property of Eternity; the Gods of the Heathen cannot lay claim to it.

Doct. God is of an eternal duration. The Eternity of God is the foundation of the ſtability of the Covenant, the great comfort of a Chriſtian. The deſign of God in Scripture is to ſet forth his dealing with men in the way of a Covenant. The Priority of God before all things begins the Bible: In the beginning God created. His Covenant can have no foundation, but in his duration before and after the world: And Moſes here mentions his Eternity; not only with reſpect to the Eſſence of God, but to his fœderal Providence: As he is the dwelling place of his People in all Generations. The duration of God for ever, is more ſpoken of in Scripture than his Eternity à parte ante, though that is the foundation of all the comfort we can take from his Immortality: If he had a beginning, he might have an end; and ſo all our happineſs, hope and being would expire with him; but the Scripture ſometimes takes notice of his being without beginning, as well as without end. * Thou art from everlaſting. * Bleſſed be God from everlaſting to everlaſting: * I was ſet up from everlaſting: If his wiſdom were from everlaſting, himſelf was from everlaſting: Whether we underſtand it of Chriſt the Son of God, or of the Eſſential wiſdom of God, 'tis all one to the preſent purpoſe. The Wiſdom of God ſuppoſeth the Eſſence of God, as habits in Creatures ſuppoſe the being of ſome power or faculty as their Subject. The Wiſdom of God ſuppoſeth Mind and Underſtanding, Eſſence and Subſtance.

* Gen. 1. 1.

* Calv. in loc.

* Pſal. 93. 2.
* Pſal. 41. 13.
* Pro. 8. 23.

The notion of Eternity is difficult, as Auſtin ſaid * of time; If no man will ask me the queſtion what time is; I know well enough what it is: But if any ask me what it is, I know not how to explain it: So may I ſay of Eternity; 'tis eaſie in the word pronounced, but hardly underſtood, and more hardly expreſt; 'tis better expreſt by negative than poſitive words.

* Confeſſ. lib. 11. Confeſ. 15.

Though we cannot comprehend Eternity, yet we may comprehend that there is an an Eternity; as though we cannot comprehend the Eſſence of God, what he is, yet we may comprehend that he is; we may underſtand the notion of his Exiſtence, though we cannot underſtand the infiniteneſs of his nature; Yet we may better underſtand Eternity than Infiniteneſs; we can better conceive a time with the addition of numberleſs days and years, than imagin a Being without bounds; whence the

* Rom. 1. 20 Apoſtle joyns his Eternity with his Power; His Eternal Power, and God-head; Becauſe next to the Power of God apprehended in the Creature, we come neceſſarily by reaſoning to acknowledge the Eternity of God. He that hath an incomprehenſible Power, muſt needs have an Eternity of Nature: His Power is moſt ſenſible in the Creatures to the eye of man, and his Eternity eaſily from thence deducible by the reaſon of Man.

Eternity is a perpetual duration, which hath neither beginning nor end: Time hath both. Thoſe things we ſay are in time, that have beginning, grow up by degrees, have ſucceſſion of parts: Eternity is contrary to time, and is therefore a permanent and immutable ſtate; a perfect poſſeſſion of life without any variation: It comprehends in it ſelf all years, all Ages, all periods of Ages; It never begins: it endures after every duration of time, and never ceaſeth; it doth as much out-run time, as it went before the beginning of it: Time ſuppoſeth ſomething before it, but there can be nothing before Eternity, it were not then Eternity. Time hath a continual ſucceſſion; the former time paſſeth away, and another ſucceeds; the laſt year is not this year, nor this year the next. We muſt conceive of Eternity contrary to the notion of time; As the nature of time conſiſts in the ſucceſſion of parts, ſo
* Moulin. Coo. 1. Ser. 2. p. 52. the Nature of Eternity in an infinite immutable duration *. Eternity and Time differ as the Sea and Rivers; the Sea never changes place, and is always one water; but the Rivers glide along, and are ſwallowed up in the Sea; ſo is time by eternity.

A thing is ſaid to be eternal, or everlaſting rather, in Scripture,

2. When it is of a long duration, though it will have an end; When it hath no meaſures of time determined to it; ſo Circumciſion is ſaid to be in the Fleſh for an
* Gen. 17. 14. *everlaſting Covenant ; not purely everlaſting, but ſo long as that adminiſtration of the Covenant ſhould endure.

And ſo when a Servant would not leave his Maſter, but would have his ear bored; 'tis ſaid, he ſhould be a Servant for ever, * i. e. Till the Jubilee, which was every
* Deut. 15. 17. fiftieth year: So the Meat-offering they were to offer, is ſaid to be Perpetual:
* Levit. 6 20. * Canaan is ſaid to be given to Abraham for an everlaſting poſſeſſion *: When as the
* Gen. 17. 8. Jews are expelled from Canaan, which is given a Prey to the barbarous Nations. Indeed Circumciſion was not everlaſting; yet the ſubſtance of the Covenant whereof this was a ſign, viz. That God would be the God of Believers, endures for ever; and that Circumciſion of the heart which was ſignified by Circumciſion of the fleſh, ſhall remain for ever in the Kingdom of Glory: It was not ſo much the laſting of the ſign, as of the thing ſignified by it, and the Covenant ſealed by it: The ſign had its abolition, ſo that the Apoſtle is ſo peremptory in it, that he aſſerts, that if any went
* Gal. 5. 2. about to eſtabliſh it, he excluded himſelf from a participation of Chriſt *. The Sacrifices were to be perpetual, in regard of the thing ſignified by them, viz. The death of Chriſt, which was to endure in the efficacy of it: And the Paſſover was to be for ever *, in regard of the Redemption ſignified by it, which was to be of ever-
* Exod 12. 24. laſting remembrance. Canaan was to be an everlaſting poſſeſſion in regard of the glory of Heaven typified, to be for ever conferr'd upon the ſpiritual Seed of Abraham.

3. When a thing hath no end, though it hath a beginning. So Angels, and Souls are everlaſting; though their being ſhall never ceaſe, yet there was a time when their being began; they were nothing before they were ſomething, though they ſhall never be nothing again, but ſhall live in endleſs happineſs or miſery.

But that properly is eternal, that hath neither beginning nor end; and thus Eternity is a Property of God. In this Doctrin I ſhall ſhew

1. How God is eternal, or in what reſpects Eternity is his Property.
2. That he is eternal, and muſt needs be ſo.
3. That Eternity is only proper to God, and not common to him with any Creature.
4. The Uſe.

1. How

1. How God is eternal, or in what reſpects he is ſo. Eternity is a Negative Attribute, and is a denying of God any meaſures of time, as Immenſity is a denying of him any bounds of place; As Immenſity is the diffuſion of his Eſſence, ſo Eternity is the duration of his Eſſence: And when we ſay God is eternal, we exclude from him all poſſibility of beginning and ending, all flux and change: As the Eſſence of God cannot be bounded by any place, ſo it is not to be limited by any time; as it is his Immenſity to be every where, ſo it is his Eternity to be always. * As created things are ſaid to be ſomewhere in regard of place, and to be preſent, paſt, or future, in regard of time; ſo the Creator in regard of place, is every where; in regard of time, is ſemper: * His duration is as endleſs, as his Eſſence is boundleſs; He always was and always will be, and will no more have an End than he had a Beginning; and this is an excellency belonging to the Supream Being: * As his Eſſence comprehends all beings and exceeds them, and his Immenſity ſurmounts all places; ſo his Eternity comprehends all times, all durations, and infinitely excells them.

* Gaſſend.

* Crellius de Deo cap. 18. p. 41.
* Lingend Tom. 2. p. 496.

1. God is without beginning.

* In the beginning God created the World: God was then before the beginning of it; and what point can be ſet wherein God began, if he were before the beginning of created things? God was without beginning, though all other things had time and beginning from him. As Unity is before all Numbers, ſo is God before all his Creatures. Abraham called upon the name of the everlaſting God; * The eternal God: 'Tis oppoſed to the Heathen Gods, which were but of Yeſterday, new coyn'd, and ſo new; but the Eternal God, was before the world was made: In that ſenſe it is to be underſtood, * The Myſtery which was kept ſecret ſince the world began, but now is made manifeſt; and by the Scriptures of the Prophets according to the Command of the everlaſting God, made known to all Nations for the Obedience of Faith. The Goſpel is not preached by the Command of a new and temporary God, but of that God that was before all Ages; though the manifeſtation of it be in time, yet the purpoſe and reſolve of it was from Eternity.

* Gen. 1. 1.

* Gen. 21. 33. אלעולם

* Rom. 16. 26.

If there were Decrees before the foundation of the World, there was a Decreer before the foundation of the World: Before the foundation of the world he lov'd Chriſt as a Mediator: * A fore-ordination of him was before the foundation of the world; a Choice of men, and therefore a Chooſer before the foundation of the world; a Grace given in Chriſt before the world began, * and therefore a Donor of that Grace. From thoſe places, ſaith Crellius, it appears that God was before the foundation of the world, but they do not aſſert an abſolute Eternity; * But to be before all Creatures, is equivalent to his Being from Eternity. Time began with the foundation of the world, but God being before time, could have no beginning in time: Before the beginning of the Creation, and the beginning of Time, there could be nothing but Eternity; nothing but what was uncreated, that is nothing but what was without beginning. To be in time, is, to have a beginning; to be before all time, is never to have a beginning, but always to be: For as between the Creator and Creatures there is no Medium, ſo between Time and Eternity, there is no Medium. 'Tis as eaſily deduced, that he that was before all Creatures is Eternal, as he that made all Creatures is God: If he had a beginning, he muſt have it from another, or from himſelf; if from another, that from whom he received his Being would be better than he, ſo more a God than he. He cannot be God, that is not Supream; he cannot be Supream that owes his being to the Power of another: He would not be ſaid only to have Immortality as he is, * if he had it dependent upon another; nor could he have a beginning from himſelf; if he had given beginning to himſelf, then he was once nothing, there was a time when he was not; if he was not, how could he be the Cauſe of himſelf? 'Tis impoſſible for any to give a Beginning and Being to it ſelf: If it acts, it muſt exiſt; and ſo exiſt, before it exiſted: A thing would exiſt as a Cauſe, before it exiſted as an Effect. He that is not, cannot be the Cauſe that he is; If therefore God doth exiſt, and hath not his being from another, he muſt exiſt from Eternity: Therefore when we ſay God is of and from himſelf, we mean not that God gave Being to himſelf; but it is negatively to be underſtood, that he hath no cauſe of Exiſtence without himſelf.

* John 17. 24.

* Eph. 1. 4.
* 2 Tim. 1. 9.

* Coccei Sum. p. 48. Theol. Gerhard Exeges. cap. 86. 4. p. 266.

* 1 Tim. 6. 16.

Whatſoever Number of Millions of Millions of Years we can imagin before the Creati-

Creation of the World, yet God was infinitely before thoſe; he is therefore called
* Dan. 7. 9. the Ancient of Days,* as being before all days and time, and eminently containing in himſelf all times and ages: Though indeed God cannot properly be called ancient, that will teſtifie that he is decaying, and ſhortly will not be; no more than he can be called young, which would ſignifie that he was not long before. All created things are new and freſh; but no Creature can find out any beginning of God: 'Tis impoſſible there ſhould be any beginning of him.

2. God is without end. He always was, always is, and always will be what he is; He remains always the ſame in Being; ſo far from any change, that no ſhadow of it can
* James 1. 17. touch him: * He will continue in being, as long as he hath already enjoy'd it; and if we could add never ſo many Millions of years together, we are ſtill as far from an
* Pſal. 9. 7. end, as from a beginning; for the Lord ſhall indure for ever: * As it is impoſſible he ſhould not be, being from all Eternity; ſo it is impoſſible that he ſhould not be to all Eternity. The Scripture is moſt plentiful in teſtimonies of this Eternity of God,
* Rev. 4. 9,10. à parte poſt, or after the Creation of the world: He is ſaid to live for ever. * The Earth ſhall periſh, but God ſhall endure for ever, and his years ſhall have no end.
* Pſal. 102. 27. Plants and Animals grow up from ſmall beginnings; arrive to their full growth and decline again, and have always remarkable alterations in their nature; But there is no declination in God by all the revolutions of time: Hence ſome think the incorruptibility of the Deity was ſignified by the Shittim, or Cedar wood, whereof the
* Exod. 25.10. Ark was made, it being of an incorruptible nature *.

That which had no beginning of duration can never have an end, or any interruptions in it. Since God never depended upon any, what ſhould make him ceaſe to be what eternally he hath been, or put a ſtop to the continuance of his perfections? He cannot will his own deſtruction, that is againſt univerſal nature in all things to ceaſe from being, if they can preſerve themſelves. He cannot deſert his own Being, becauſe he cannot but love himſelf as the beſt and chiefeſt good. The reaſon that any thing decays, is either its own native weakneſs, or ſuperior Power of
* Crellius de Deo cap. 18. p. 41. ſomething contrary to it: * There is no weakneſs in the nature of God that can introduce any Corruption, becauſe he is infinitely ſimple without any mixture; Nor can he be overpowered by any thing elſe; a weaker cannot hurt him, and a ſtronger than he there cannot be; Nor can he be outwited or circumvented, becauſe of his infinite Wiſdom: As he received his Being from none, ſo he cannot be deprived of it by any; As he doth neceſſarily exiſt, ſo he doth neceſſarily always exiſt: This indeed is the Property of God; nothing ſo proper to him, as always to be. Whatſoever perfection any Being hath, if it be not eternal, it is not
* 1 Tim. 6. 16. Daille in loc. divine. God only is immortal; * he only is ſo by a neceſſity of nature: Angels, Souls and bodies too, after the Reſurrection ſhall be immortal; not by nature but grant; they are ſubject to return to nothing, if that word that raiſed them from nothing ſhould ſpeak them into nothing again: 'Tis as eaſie with God to ſtrip them of it, as to inveſt them with it; nay, it is impoſſible but that they ſhould periſh, if God ſhould withdraw his Power from preſerving them, which he exerted in creating them: But God is immovably fixed in his own Being; that as none gave him his Life, ſo none can deprive him of his Life, or the leaſt particle of it; not a jot of the happineſs and life, which God infinitely poſſeſſes, can be loſt: It will be as durable to everlaſting, as it hath been poſſeſſed from everlaſting.

3. There is no ſucceſſion in God. God is without ſucceſſion or change; 'Tis a part of Eternity; From everlaſting to everlaſting he is God, i. e. the ſame. God doth not only always remain in Being, but he always remains the ſame in that Being,
* Pſal. 102. 27. * Thou art the ſame. The Being of Creatures is ſucceſſive; the Being of God is permanent, and remains intire with all its perfections, unchanged in an infinite duration: Indeed the firſt notion of Eternity is to be without beginning and end, which notes to us the duration of a Being in regard of its Exiſtence; but to have no ſucceſſion, nothing firſt or laſt, notes rather the perfection of a Being in regard of its Eſſence.

The Creatures are in a perpetual Flux; ſomething is acquired, or ſomething loſt every day. A Man is the ſame in regard of Exiſtence when he is a Man, as he was when he was a Child; but there is a new ſucceſſion of quantities and qualities in him; every day he acquires ſomething till he comes to his maturity; every day he loſeth

ſome-

ſomething till he comes to his Period. A Man is not the ſame at night that he was in the morning; ſomething is expir'd, and ſomething is added; every day there is a change in his age, a change in his ſubſtance, a change in his accidents: But God hath his whole Being in one and the ſame point, or moment of Eternity; He receives nothing as an Addition to what he was before; He loſeth nothing of what he was before; He is always the ſame excellency and perfection in the ſame infiniteneſs as ever; His years do not fail, * his years do not come and go as others do; there is not this day, to morrow, or yeſterday with him: As nothing is paſt or future with him in regard of Knowledge, but all things are preſent; ſo nothing is paſt or future in regard of his Eſſence; He is not in his Eſſence this day what he was not before, or will be the next day and year what he is not now; * All his perfections are moſt perfect in him every moment, before all Ages, after all Ages; As he hath his whole Eſſence undivided in every place, as well as in immenſe ſpace; ſo he hath all his Being in one moment of time, as well as in infinite intervalls of time. * Some illuſtrate the difference between Eternity and Time, by the ſimilitude of a Tree, or a Rock ſtanding upon the ſide of a River, or Shore of the Sea; the Tree ſtands always the ſame and unmoved, while the waters of the River glide along at the foot; The Flux is in the River, but the Tree acquires nothing but a diverſe reſpect and relation of preſence to the various parts of the River as they flow; The waters of the River preſs on, and puſh forward one another, and what the River had this minute, it hath not the ſame, the next: So are all ſublunary things in a continual Flux. And though the Angels have no ſubſtantial change, yet they have an accidental; for the actions of the Angels this day, are not the ſame individual actions which they performed yeſterday: But in God there is no change, He always remains the ſame.

* Heb. 1. 12.

* Leſſius de perfect. divin. lib. 4. cap. 1.

* Gamacheus in Aquin part. 1. Qu. 10 cap. 1.

* Of a Creature it may be ſaid, he was, or he is, or he ſhall be; Of God it cannot be ſaid, but only he is; He is what he always was, and he is what he always will be; whereas a Creature is what he was not, and will be what he is not now; As it may be ſaid of the flame of a Candle, 'tis flame; but it is not the ſame individual flame as was before, nor is it the ſame that will be preſently after; there is a continual diſſolution of it into Air, and a continual ſupply for the generation of more; While it continues, it may be ſaid there is a flame; yet not intirely one, but in a ſucceſſion of parts: So of a Man it may be ſaid, he is in a ſucceſſion of parts; but he is not the ſame that he was, and will not be the ſame that he is: But God is the ſame without any ſucceſſion of part: and of time; of him it may be ſaid, He is; He is no more now than he was, and he ſhall be no more hereafter than he is. * God poſſeſſes a firm and abſolute Being, always conſtant to himſelf; He ſees all things ſliding under him in a continual variation; He beholds the revolutions in the world without any change of his moſt glorious and immoveable nature: All other things paſs from one ſtate to another; from their Original, to their Eclipſe and deſtruction: But God poſſeſſes his Being in one indiviſible point, having neither beginning, end, nor middle.

* Gaſſend. Tom. 1. Phyſic. § 1. l. 2. c. 7. p. 223.

* Daille Melange de Sermon p. 252.

1. There is no ſucceſſion in the Knowledge of God. The variety of ſucceſſions and changes in the world, make not ſucceſſion or new Objects in the Divine Mind; for all things are preſent to him from Eternity in regard of his knowledge, though they are not actually preſent in the world in regard of their Exiſtence: He doth not know one thing now, and another anon; He ſees all things at once; known unto God are all things from the beginning of the world: * But in their true order of ſucceſſion, as they lye in the eternal Council of God, to be brought forth in time. Though there be a ſucceſſion and order of things as they are wrought, yet there is no ſucceſſion in God in regard of his knowledge of them. God knows the things that ſhall be wrought, and the order of them in their being brought upon the Stage of the World; yet both the things and the order he knows by one act. Though all things be preſent with God, yet they are preſent in him in the order of their appearance in the world, and not ſo preſent with him as if they ſhould be wrought at once. The Death of Chriſt was to precede his Reſurrection in order of time; there is a ſucceſſion in this; both at once are known by God, yet the act of his knowledge is not exerciſed about Chriſt as dying, and riſing at the ſame time; ſo that there is ſucceſſion in things, when there is no ſucceſſion in Gods knowledge of them. Since

* Acts 15. 18.

God knows time, he knows all things as they are in time; He doth not know all things to be at once, though he knows at once what is, has been, and will be. All things are paſt, preſent, and to come in regard of their Exiſtence; but there is not paſt, preſent, and to come in regard of Gods Knowledge of them; * becauſe he ſees and knows not by any other, but by himſelf; He is his own Light by which he ſees, his own Glaſs wherein he ſees; beholding himſelf, he beholds all things.

* Pariſienſis.

2. There is no ſucceſſion in the Decrees of God. He doth not decree this now, which he decreed not before; for as his works were known from the beginning of the world, ſo his works were decreed from the beginning of the world; as they are known at once, ſo they are decreed at once; there is a ſucceſſion in the execution of them, firſt grace, then glory; but the purpoſe of God for the beſtowing of both, was in one and the ſame moment of Eternity. * He choſe us in him before the foundation of the world, that we ſhould be holy. The choice of Chriſt, and the choice of ſome in him to be holy, and to be happy, were before the foundation of the world. 'Tis by the eternal Counſel of God, all things appear in time; they appear in their order according to the Counſel and Will of God from Eternity. The Redemption of the world is after the Creation of the world; but the Decree whereby the world was created, and whereby it was redeemed, was from Eternity.

* Eph. 1. 4.

4. God is his own Eternity. He is not eternal by grant, and the diſpoſal of any other, but by Nature and Eſſence. * The Eternity of God, is nothing elſe but the Duration of God; and the Duration of God, is nothing elſe but his Exiſtence enduring. If Eternity were any thing diſtinct from God, and not of the Eſſence of God; then there would be ſomething which was not God, neceſſary to perfect God. As Immortality is the great perfection of a rational Creature, ſo Eternity is the choice perfection of God, yea, the gloſs and luſtre of all others. Every perfection would be imperfect, if it were not always a perfection.

* Calov. Socinian.

Exiſtentia durans.

God is eſſentially whatſoever he is; and there is nothing in God but his Eſſence: Duration, or Continuance in being in Creatures, differs from their being; for they might exiſt but for one inſtant; in which caſe they may be ſaid to have being, but not duration, becauſe all duration includes prius, & poſterius. All Creatures may ceaſe from being, if it be the pleaſure of God; they are not therefore durable by their Eſſence, and therefore are not their own duration, no more than they are their own Exiſtence. And though ſome Creatures, as Angels, and Souls may be called everlaſting, as a perpetual life is communicated to them by God; yet they can never be called their own Eternity; becauſe ſuch a duration is not ſimply neceſſary, nor eſſential to them, but accidental, depending upon the pleaſure of another; there is nothing in their nature that can hinder them from loſing it, if God, from whom they received it, ſhould deſign to take it away: But as God is his own neceſſity of exiſting, ſo he is his own duration in exiſting: * As he doth neceſſarily exiſt by himſelf, ſo he will always neceſſarily exiſt by himſelf.

* Gaſſend.

5. Hence all the perfections of God are eternal. In regard of the Divine Eternity, all things in God are Eternal, his Power, Mercy, Wiſdom, Juſtice, Knowledge. God himſelf were not eternal, if any of his perfections which are eſſential to him were not eternal alſo; He had not elſe been a perfect God from all Eternity, and ſo his whole ſelf had not been eternal. If any thing belonging to the nature of a thing be wanting, it cannot be ſaid to be that thing which it ought to be. If any thing requiſite to the Nature of God had been wanting one moment, he could not have been ſaid to be an eternal God.

The ſecond Thing, God is eternal. The Spirit of God in Scripture condeſcends to our Capacities in ſignifying the Eternity of God by days and years, which are terms belonging to time, whereby we meaſure it: * But we muſt no more conceive that God is bounded, or meaſured by time, and hath ſucceſſion of days becauſe of thoſe expreſſions, than we can conclude him to have a Body, becauſe Members are aſcribed to him in Scripture, to help our conceptions of his glorious nature and operations.

* Pſal. 102. 27.

Though years are aſcribed to him; yet they are ſuch as cannot be numbered, cannot be finiſhed, ſince there is no proportion between the duration of God, and the years of Men. The number of his years cannot be ſearched out; for he makes ſmall

the

the drops of water; they pour down Rain according to the vapour thereof. * The numbers of the drops of Rain which have fallen in all parts of the Earth since the Creation of the world, if substracted from the number of the years of God, would be found a small quantity, a meer nothing to the years of God. As all the Nations in the world compared with God, are but as the drop of a Bucket, worse than nothing, than vanity; So all the Ages of the world, if compared with God, amount not to so much as the One hundred thousandth part of a minute: The Minutes from the Creation may be numbred, but the years of the duration of God being infinite, are without measure. * Job 36. 26, 27. * Isa. 40. 15.

As one day is to the Life of Man, so are a Thousand years to the Life of God: * The Holy-Ghost expresseth himself to the capacity of Man, to give us some Notion of an infinite Duration, by a resemblance suted to the capacity of Man. If a Thousand years be but as a day to the Life of God; then as a year is to the Life of Man, so are Three hundred sixty five thousand years to the Life of God: And as Seventy years are to the Life of Man, so are twenty five Millions four Hundred and fifty thousand years to the life of God: Yet still, since there is no proportion between Time and Eternity, we must dart our thoughts beyond all those; * For years and days measure only the duration of created things, and of those only that are material and corporeal, subject to the motion of the Heavens, which makes days and years. * Psal. 90. 5. Amyrald Trin. p. 44. * Daille Vent. Sermons, Ser. 1. sur. 102. Psal. 27. p. 21.

Sometimes this Eternity is expresst by parts, as looking backward and forward; by the differences of time, past, present and to come, * which was, and is, and is to come. Though this might be spoken of any thing in being, though but for an hour; it was the last minute, it is now, and it will be the next minute; yet the Holy-Ghost would declare something proper to God, as including all parts of time; He always was, is now, and always shall be; It might always be said of him he was, and it may always be said of him he will be: There is no time when he began, no time when he shall cease. It cannot be said of a Creature he always was, he always is what he was, and he always will be what he is: But God always is what he was, and always will be what he is; so that it is a very significant expression of the Eternity of God as can be suted to our capacities. * Revel. 1. 8. Revel. 4. 8. Crellius weakens this argument De Deo. cap. 18. p. 42.

1. His Eternity is evident by the Name God gives himself. * And God said unto Moses, I am that I am; thus shalt thou say to the Children of Israel, I am hath sent me unto you. This is the Name whereby he is distinguisht from all Creatures; I am, is his proper name; This description being in the Present Tense, shews that his Essence knows no past, nor future: If it were he was, it would intimate he were not now what he once was; if it were he will be, it would intimate he were not yet what he will be. But I am; I am the only being, the root of all Beings, he is therefore at the greatest distance from not Being, and that is eternal. So that is signifies his Eternity, as well as his perfection and Immutability: As I am speaks the want of no blessedness, so it speaks the want of no duration; and therefore the French where ever they find this word Jehovah in the Scripture, which we translate Lord, and Lord eternal, render it the Eternal. I am always, and immutably the same. The Eternity of God is opposed to the Volubility of Time, which is extended into past, present, and to come. Our time is but a small drop, as Sand to all the Atoms and small particles of which the world is made; but God is an unbounded Sea of Being; I am that I am, i. e. and infinite Life. I have not that now, which I had not formerly; I shall not afterwards have that which I have not now; I am that in every moment which I was, and will be in all moments of time; Nothing can be added to me, nothing can be detracted from me: There is nothing superior to him, which can detract from him; nothing desirable that can be added to him. * Now if there were any beginning and end of God, any succession in him, he could not be I am; For in regard of what was past he would not be, in regard of what was to come he is not yet: And upon this account, a Heathen argues well, of all Creatures it may be said they were, or they will be; but of God it cannot be said any thing else but Est, God is, because he fills an eternal duration: A Creature cannot be said to be, if it be not yet, nor if it be not now, but hath been.* * Exod. 3. 14. * Thes. Salmur. p. 1. p. 145. Thes. 14. * Plutarch de E, 1. p. 462.

God only can be called I am; all Creatures have more of not being than being; for every Creature was nothing from Eternity, before it was made something in time; * Perer. in Exo. 3. Disput. 13.

and if it be corruptible in its whole nature, it will be nothing to Eternity after it hath been ſomething in time; and if it be not corruptible in its nature, as the Angels; or in every part of its nature, as man in regard of his Soul; yet it hath not properly a Being, becauſe it is dependent upon the pleaſure of God, to continue it, or deprive it of it; and while it is, it is mutable, and all mutability is a mixture of not being: If God therefore be properly I am, i. e. Being, it follows that he always was; for if he were not always, he muſt, as was argued before, be produced by ſome other, or by himſelf; By another he could not, then he had not been God but a Creature; nor by himſelf; for then as producing, he muſt be before himſelf, as produced; he had been before he was: And he always will be, for being I am, having all being in himſelf, and the fountain of all being to every thing elſe, how can he ever have his Name changed to I am not?

1. God hath Life in himſelf, John 5. 26. The Father hath Life in himſelf; He is the living God, therefore ſtedfaſt for ever *: He hath Life by his Eſſence, not by Participation; He is a Sun to give Light and Life to all Creatures, but receives not Light or Life from any thing; and therefore he hath an unlimited Life, not a drop of life but a fountain, not a ſpark of a limited life but a life tranſcending all bounds: He hath life in himſelf: All Creatures have their life in him and from him. He that hath life in himſelf doth neceſſarily exiſt, and could never be made to exiſt; for then he had not life in himſelf, but in that which made him to exiſt, and gave him life; What doth neceſſarily exiſt therefore, exiſts from Eternity; what hath being of it ſelf, could never be produced in time, could not want being one moment, becauſe it hath being from its Eſſence without influence of any efficient cauſe.

* Dan. 6. 26.

* When God pronounced his Name, I am that I am, Angels and Men were in being; the world had been created above two thouſand four hundred years; Moſes to whom he then ſpeaks, was in being; yet, God only is, becauſe he only hath the fountain of being in himſelf, but all that they were, was a rivulet from him; He hath from nothing elſe, that he doth ſubſiſt; every thing elſe hath its ſubſiſtence from him as their root, as the Beam from the Sun, as the Rivers and Fountains from the Sea. All life is ſeated in God, as in its proper Throne; in its moſt perfect Purity. God is Life; 'tis in him originally, radically, therefore eternally: He is a pure act, nothing but vigor and act; He hath by his nature that life, which others have by his grant; whence the Apoſtle ſaith *, not only that he is is immortal, but he hath immortality in a full poſſeſſion; fee-ſimple, not depending upon the Will of another, but containing all things within himſelf. He that hath life in himſelf, and is from himſelf, cannot but be: He alwayes was, becauſe he received his being from no other, and none can take away that being which was not given by another *. If there were any ſpace before he did exiſt, then there were ſomething which made him to exiſt; life would not then be in him, but in that which produced him into being; he could not then be God, but that other which gave him being, would be God, And to ſay, God ſprung into being by chance, when we ſee nothing in the world that is is brought forthe by chance, but hath ſome cauſe of its exiſtence, would be vain; for ſince God is a Being, Chance which is nothing, could not bring forth ſomething; and by the ſame reaſon that he ſprung up by chance, he might totally vaniſh by chance. What a ſtrange notion of a God would this be, ſuch a God that had no life in himſelf, but from chance;

* Petav. Theol. Dogm. Tom. 1. lib. 1. c. 6. § 6, 7.

* 1 Tim. 6. 16.

* Amyrald de Trinit. p. 48.

Since he had life in himſelf, and that there was no cauſe of his exiſtence; he can have no cauſe of his limitation, and can no more be determined to a time, than he can to a place. What hath life in it ſelf, hath life without bounds, and can never deſert it, nor be deprived of it: So that he lives neceſſarily, and it is abſolutely impoſſible that he ſhould not live; whereas all other things live, and move, and have their being in him *; and as they live by his Will, ſo they can return to nothing at his Word.

* Acts 17. 28.

3. If God were not eternal, he were not immutable in his nature. 'Tis contrary to the nature of immutability to be without eternity; for whatſoever begins, is changed in its paſſing from not being to being: It began to be what it was not, and if it ends, it ceaſeth to be what it was; It cannot therefore be ſaid to be God, If there were either beginning or ending, or ſucceſſion in it, Mal. 3. 6. I am the Lord, I change not, Job. 37. 23. (Touching the Almighty, we cannot find him out.) God argues here ſaith Calvin, from his unchangeable nature as Jehovah, to his immutabili-

ty

ty in his purpose: Had he not been eternal, there had been the greatest change from nothing to something: A change of the Essence, is greater than a change of purpose. God is a Sun glittering always in the same glory; No growing up in Youth; no passing on to Age: If he were not without succession, standing in one point of Eternity, there would be a change from past to present, from present to future. The Eternity of God is a Shield against all kind of mutability. If any thing sprang up in the Essence of God that was not there before, he could not be said to be either an eternal, or an unchanged Substance.

4. God could not be an infinitely perfect Being, if he were not eternal. A finite duration is inconsistent with infinite perfection. Whatsoever is contracted within the limits of time, cannot swallow up all perfections in it self. God hath an unsearchable perfection. Canst thou by searching find out God; canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?* He cannot be found out, he is infinite, because he is incomprehensible: Incomprehensibility ariseth from an infinite perfection, which cannot be fathom'd by the short lines of Man's Understanding: His Essence, in regard of its diffusion, and in regard of its duration, is incomprehensible as well as his action: If God therefore had beginning, he could not be infinite; if not infinite, he did not possess the highest perfection, because a perfection might be conceived beyond it; If his being could fail, he were not perfect: Can that deserve the name of the highest perfection, which is capable of corruption and dissolution? To be finite and limited, is the greatest imperfection, for it consists in a denial of being. He could not be the most blessed Being, if he were not always so, and should not for ever remain to be so; and whatsoever perfections he had, would be sowred by the thoughts, that in time they would cease; and so could not be pure perfections, because not permanent; but He is blessed from everlasting to everlasting. * Had he a beginning, he could not have all perfection without limitation; he would have been limited by that which gave him beginning; that which gave him being would be God, and not himself, and so more perfect than he: But since God is the most sovereign perfection, than which nothing can be imagined perfecter by the most capacious understanding, He is certainly eternal; being infinite, nothing can be added to him, nothing detracted from him.

* Job. 11. 7.

* Psal. 41. 13.

5. God could not be Omnipotent, Almighty, if he were not Eternal. The title of Almighty, agrees not with a nature that had a beginning; whatsoever hath a beginning was once nothing, and when it was nothing could act nothing. Where there is no being, there is no power; neither doth the title of Almighty agree with a perishing nature: He can do nothing to purpose, that cannot preserve himself against the outward force and violence of Enemies, or against the inward causes of corruption and dissolution. No account is to be made of man, because his breath is in his Nostrils *; Could a better account be made of God, if he were of the like condition? He could not properly be Almighty, that were not always mighty: If he be omnipotent, nothing can impair him; He that hath all power, can have no hurt*, If he doth whatsoever he pleaseth, nothing can make him miserable, since misery consists in those things which happen against our Will. The Almightiness and Eternity of God are linkt together: I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending saith the Lord, which was, and which is, and which is to come, the Almighty: * Almighty because Eternal, and Eternal because Almighty.

* Isa. 2. 22.

* Voet. Natural. Theol. p. 310.

* Rev. 1. 8.

6. God would not be the first Cause of all if he were not Eternal; But he is the first, and the last; the first cause of all things, the last end of all things*: That which is the first cannot begin to be, it were not then the first; it cannot cease to be: Whatsoever is dissolved, is dissolved into that whereof it doth consist, which was before it, and then it was not the first. * The world might not have been, it was once nothing; it must have some cause to call it out of nothing; Nothing hath no power to make it self something, there is a superior Cause: by whose Will and Power it comes into Being, and so gives all the Creatures their distinct forms.

* Rev. 1. 8. Ficin. de Immort. l. 2. cap. 5.

* Cocceii Sum. Theol.

This Power cannot but be eternal; it must be before the world; the Founder must be before the *Foundation; and his Existence must be from Eternity, or we must say nothing did exist from Eternity: And if there were no being from Eternity, there could not now be any being in time: What we see, and what we are, must arise from

* Crellius de Deo cap. 18. p. 43.

from it ſelf or ſome other; it cannot from it ſelf: If any thing made it ſelf, it had a power to make it ſelf; it then had an active power before it had a being; It was ſomething in regard of Power, and was nothing in regard of Exiſtence at the ſame time: Suppoſe it had a Power to produce it ſelf, this power muſt be conferred upon it by another; and ſo the power of producing it ſelf, was not from it ſelf, but from another; But if the power of being was from it ſelf, why did it not produce it ſelf before? Why was it one moment out of being? *If there be any exiſtence of things 'tis neceſſary that that which was the firſt Cauſe, ſhould exiſt from Eternity. Whatſoever was the immediate cauſe of the world, yet the firſt and chief Cauſe wherein we muſt reſt, muſt have nothing before it; if it had any thing before it, it were not the firſt; He therefore that is the firſt Cauſe muſt be without beginning, nothing muſt be before him; If he had a beginning from ſome other, he could not be the firſt principle and Author of all things; If he be the firſt Cauſe of all things, he muſt give himſelf a beginning, or to be from Eternity, He could not give himſelf a beginning; whatſoever begins in time was nothing before, and when it was nothing it could do nothing; it could not give it ſelf any thing, for then it gave what it had not, and did what it could not: If he made himſelf in time, why did he not make himſelf before? What hindred him; It was either becauſe he could not, or becauſe he would not! if he could not, he always wanted power, and always would unleſs it were beſtowed upon him, and then he could not be ſaid to be from himſelf? If he would not make himſelf before, then he might have made him ſelf when he would: How had he the power of willing and nilling without a Being? Nothing cannot will or nill, Nothing hath no faculties: So that it is neceſſary to grant ſome eternal Being, or run into inextricable Labyrinths and Mazes. If we deny ſome eternal being, we muſt deny all being; our own being, the being of every thing about us; unconceivable abſurdities will ariſe.

*Petav. Theol. Dogmat. Tom. 1. l. 1. c. 10. 11.

So then if God were the Cauſe of all things, He did exiſt before all things, and that from Eternity.

The third thing is, Eternity is only proper to God and not communicable. *'Tis as great a madneſs to aſcribe Eternity to the Creature, as to deprive the Lord of the Creature of Eternity. 'Tis ſo proper to God, that when the Apoſtle would prove the Deity of Chriſt, he proves it by his immutability and eternity, as well as his creating power: Thou art the ſame, and thy years ſhall not fail.* The argument had no ſtrength, if Eternity belonged eſſentially to any but God; and therefore he is ſaid only to have Immortality *: All other things receive their being from him, and can be deprived of their being by him: All things depend on him, he of none: All other things are like Cloths, which would conſume if God preſerved them not. Immortality is appropriated to God, i. e. an independent Immortality. Angels and Souls have an Immortality, but by donation from God, not by their own Eſſence; dependent upon their Creator, not neceſſary in their own nature: God might have annihilated them after he had created them; ſo that their duration cannot properly be called an Eternity, it being extrinſical to them, and depending upon the will of their Creator, by whom they may be extinguiſht: It is not an abſolute and neceſſary, but a precarious Immortality. Whatſoever is not God, is temporary: Whatſoever is eternal, is God.

*Hebr. 10, 11, 12.

* 1 Tim. 6. 16.

'Tis a contradiction to ſay a creature can be eternal! as nothing eternal is created, ſo nothing created is eternal. What is diſtinct from the nature of God cannot be eternal, Eternity being the Eſſence of God. Every Creature in the notion of a Creature ſpeaks a dependence on ſome Cauſe, and therefore cannot be eternal. *As it is repugnant o the nature of God not to be eternal, ſo it is repugnant to the nature of a Creature to be eternal; for then a Creature would be equal to the Creator, and the Creator or the Cauſe would not be before the Creature or Effect.

* Leſſius de Perfect. l. 4. c. 2.

It would be all one to admit many Gods, as many Eternals; and all on to ſay God can be created, as to ſay a Creature can be uncreated, which is to be eternal.

1. Creation is a producing ſomething from nothing. What was once nothing, cannot therefore be eternal; not being was eternal; therefore its being could not be eternal, for it ſhould be then before it was, and would be ſomething when it was nothing. 'Tis the nature of a Creature to be nothing before it was created; what was nothing before it was, cannot be equal with God in an Eternity of Duration.

was

2. There is no Creature but is mutable, therefore not eternal. As it had a change from nothing to something, so it may be changed from being to not being. If the Creature were not mutable it would be most perfect, and so would not be a Creature but God; for God only is most perfect: 'Tis as much the Essence of a Creature to be mutable, as it is the Essence of God to be immutable: Mutability and Eternity are utterly inconsistent.

3. No Creature is infinite, therefore not eternal. To be infinite in Duration is all one, as to be infinite in Essence: * 'Tis as reasonable to conceive a Creature immense, filling all places at once, as eternal, extended to all ages; because neither can be without infiniteness which is the Property of the Deity. A Creature may as well be without bounds of place, as limitations of time. * Lessius de perfect. l. 4. c. 2.

4. No effect of an intellectual free Agent, can be equal in duration to its Cause. The Production of natural Agents are as antient often as themselves; the Sun produceth a Beam as old in time as its self; But who ever heard of a piece of wise Workmanship as old as the wise Artificer? God produced a Creature, not necessarily and naturally, as the Sun doth a Beam, but freely, as an intelligent Agent. The Sun was not necessary; it might be or not be, according to the pleasure of God. * A free act of the Will is necessary to precede in order of time as the Cause of such effects as are purely voluntary. Those Causes that act as soon as they exist, act naturally, necessarily, not freely, and cannot cease from acting. * Crellius de Deo cap. 18. p. 43.

But suppose a Creature might have existed by the Will of God from Eternity; yet, as some think, it could not be said absolutely, and in its own nature to be eternal; because Eternity was not of the Essence of it. The Creature could not be its own Duration; for though it were from Eternity, it might not have been from Eternity; because its Existence depended upon the free Will of God, who might have chose, whether he would have created it or no.

God only is eternal, the first and the last, the beginning and the end; who, as he subsisted before any Creature had a being, so he will eternally subsist if all Creatures were reduced to nothing.

IV. Use.

1. Information.

1. If God be of an eternal duration, then Christ is God: Eternity is the Property of God, but it is ascribed to Christ; He is before all things, * i. e. all created things: He is therefore no Creature; and if no Creature, eternal. All things were Created by him, both in Heaven and in Earth, Angels as well as Men, * whether they be Thrones or Dominions: If all things were his Creatures, then he is no Creature; if he were, all things were not created by him, or he must create himself. * Col. 1. 17. * Col. 1. 16.

He hath no difference of time; for he is the same yesterday, to day, and for ever; * The same, with the Name of God, I am, which signifies his Eternity; He is no more to day than he was yesterday, nor will be any other to morrow than he is to day; And therefore Melchisedeck whose Descent, Birth and Death, Father and Mother, Beginning and End of days are not upon Record, was a Type of the Existence of Christ without difference of time. * Having neither beginning of Days nor end of Life, but made like the Son of God. The suppression of his Birth and Death, was intended by the Holy-Ghost as a Type of the excellency of Christ's person in regard of his Eternity, and the duration of his Charge in regard of his Priest-hood. As there was an appearance of an Eternity in the suppression of the Race of Melchisedeck, so there is a true Eternity in the Son of God. How could the Eternity of the Son of God be expresst by any resemblance so well, as by such a suppression of the Beginning and End of this great Person, different from the custom of the Spirit of God in the Old-Testament, who often records the Generations and Ends of holy Men; and why might not this, which was a kind of a shadow of Eternity, be a representation of the true Eternity of Christ, as well as the restoration of Isaac to his Father without death, is said to be a figure of the Resurrection of Christ after a real death? Melchisedeck is only mentioned once (without any record of his extraction) in his appearance to Abraham after his victory, as if he came from Heaven only for that action, and instantly disappeared again, as if he had been an eternal person. * Heb. 13. 8. Rev. 1. 8. He which is, and which was, and which is to come. * Heb. 7. 3. * Mestrezat. in loc.

And

And Chriſt himſelf hints his one eternity, * I came forth from the Father and am come into the world, again I leave the world and go to the Father. He goes to the Father as he came from the Father; He goes to the Father for everlaſting, ſo he came from the Father from everlaſting; there is the ſame duration in coming forth from the Father, as in returning to the Father. But more plainly; * He ſpeaks of a Glory that he had with the Father before the world was, when there was no Creature in being; this is an actual glory, and not only in Decree: For a decreed glory Believers had, and why may not every one of them ſay the ſame words, Father glorifie me with that glory which I had with thee before the world was, if it were only a glory in decree? Nay, it may be ſaid of every man, he was before the world was, becauſe he was ſo in decree. Chriſt ſpeaks of ſomething peculiar to him, a glory in actual poſſeſſion before the world was; glorifie me, embrace, honour me as thy Son, whereas I have now been in the eyes of the world handled diſgracefully as a ſervant: If it were only in decree, why is not the like expreſſion uſed of others in Scripture as well as of Chriſt? Why did he not uſe the ſame words for his Diſciples that were then with him, who had a glory in decree? His eternity is alſo mentioned in the Old-Teſtament: * The Lord poſſeſſed me in the beginning of his way before his works of old. If he were the work of God, he exiſted before himſelf, if he exiſted before all the works of God; 'tis not ſo properly meant of the eſſential wiſdom of God, ſince the diſcourſe runs in the name of a Perſon; and ſeveral paſſages there are which belong not ſo much to the eſſential wiſdom of God, as v. 13. The evil way and the froward mouth do I hate; which belongs rather to the holineſs of God, than to the eſſential wiſdom of God, beſides it is diſtinguiſht from Jehovah, as poſſeſſed by him, and rejoycing before him. Yet plainer, * Out of thee, i. e. Bethlehem, ſhall he come forth to be Ruler in Iſrael, whoſe goings forth have been from of old, from everlaſting מימי עולם from the ways of Eternity. There are two goings forth of Chriſt deſcribed, one from Bethlehem in the days of his incarnation, and another from Eternity. The Holy-Ghoſt adds after his prediction of his incarnation, his going out from everlaſting, that none ſhould doubt of his Deity: If this going out from everlaſting were only in the purpoſe of God, it might be ſaid of David, and of every Creature: And in Iſa. 9. He is particularly called the Everlaſting, or Eternal Father; Not the Father in the Trinity, but a father to us; yet eternal, the Father of Eternity. As he is the mighty God, ſo he is the everlaſting Father: Can ſuch a title be aſcribed to any, whoſe being depends upon the Will of another, and may be daſht out at the pleaſure of a Superior?

* John. 16. 28.

* John 17. 5.

* Pro. 8. 22.

* Mica. 5. 2.

As the Eternity of God is the ground of all Religion, ſo the Eternity of Chriſt is the ground of the Chriſtian Religion: Could our Sins be perfectly expiated, had he not an eternal Divinity to anſwer for the offences committed againſt an eternal God? Temporary ſufferings had been of little validity, without an infiniteneſs and eternity in his perſon to add weight to his paſſion.

2. If God be eternal, he knows all things as preſent. * All things are preſent to him in his Eternity; for this is the notion of Eternity, to be without ſucceſſion. If Eternity be one indiviſible point, and is not diffuſed into preceding and ſucceeding parts, then that which is known in it or by it, is perceived without any ſucceſſion; for knowledge is as the ſubſtance of the perſon knowing; if that hath various actions and diſtinct from it ſelf, then it underſtands things in differences of time as time preſents them to view: But ſince Gods Being depends not upon the revolutions of time, ſo neither doth his Knowledge; it exceeds all motions of years and days, comprehends infinite ſpaces of paſt and future. God conſiders all things in his Eternity in one ſimple knowledge; as if they were now acted before him: * Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world ἀπ' αἰῶνος à ſeculo; from eternity. Gods knowledge is co-eternal with him: If he knows that in time which he did not know from eternity, he would not be eternally perfect, ſince knowledge is the perfection of an intelligent nature.

* Petav.

* Acts 15. 18.

3. How bold and fooliſh is it for a mortal Creature, to cenſure the Counſels and Actions of an eternal God, or be too curious in his inquiſitions? 'Tis by the conſideration of the unſearchable number of the years of God that Elihu checks too bold enquiries: Who hath enjoyned him his way, or who can ſay, thou haſt wrought iniquity? Behold, God is great and we know him not, neither can the number of his years be ſearched out. Eter-

* Job. 36. 26. compar'd with the 23.

nity

Eternity ſets God above our Enquiries and Cenſures. Infants of a day old are notable to underſtand the acts of wiſe and gray Heads : Shall we, that are of ſo ſhort a being and underſtanding as yeſterday, preſume to meaſure the motions of Eternity by our ſcanty Intellects ? We that cannot foreſee an unexpected accident which falls in to blaſt a well laid deſign, and run a Ship many Leagues back from the intended Harbour; We cannot underſtand the reaſon of things we ſee done in time, the motions of the Sea, the generation of Rain, the nature of Light, the Sympathies and Antipathies of the Creatures; and ſhall we dare to cenſure the actions of an eternal God ſo infinitely beyond our reach? The Counſels of a boundleſs Being are not to be ſcann'd by the Brain of a ſilly Worm, that hath breathed but a few minutes in the world : Since Eternity cannot be comprehended in time, 'tis not to be judged by a Creature of time, Let us remember to magnifie his works which we behold, becauſe he is eternal, which is the exhortation of Elihu, backt by this Doctrin of Gods Eternity; * and not accuſe any work of him who is the Ancient of days, or preſume to direct him, of whoſe Eternity we come infinitely ſhort: When ever therefore any unworthy notion of the Counſels and Works of God is ſuggeſted to us by Satan, or our own corrupt hearts; let us look backward to Gods eternal and our own ſhort duration, and ſilence our ſelves with the ſame Queſtion wherewith God put a ſtop to the reaſoning of Job; * Where waſt thou, when I laid the foundations of the Earth? and reprove our ſelves for our curioſity; ſince we are of ſo ſhort a ſtanding, and were nothing when the eternal God laid the firſt Stone of the World.

* Job. 36. 24.

* Job. 38. 4.

4. What a folly and boldneſs is there in Sin, ſince an eternal God is offended thereby? All Sin is aggravated by Gods Eternity : The blackneſs of the Heathen Idolatry was in changing the glory of the incorruptible God, * erecting reſemblances of him contrary to his immortal nature; as if the eternal God, whoſe life is as unlimited as Eternity, were like thoſe Creatures whoſe beings are meaſured by the ſhort Ell of Time, which are of a corruptible nature, and daily paſſing on to Corruption : They could not really deprive God of his Glory and Immortality, but they did in Eſtimation. There is in the nature of every ſin a tendency to reduce God to a not Being. He that thinks unworthily of God, or acts unworthily towards him, doth (as much as in him lies) ſully and deſtroy theſe two perfections of his, Immutability and Eternity : 'Tis a carriage, as if he were as contemptible as a Creature that were but of yeſterday, and ſhall not remain in being to morrow. He that would put an end to Gods glory by darkning it, would put an end to Gods life by deſtroying it. He that ſhould love a Beaſt with as great an affection as he loves a Man, contemns a rational nature; and he that loves a periſhing thing with the ſame affection he ſhould love an everlaſting God, contemns his Eternity; He debaſeth the duration of God below that of the World : The low valuation of God ſpeaks him in his eſteem, no better than withering Graſs, or a Gourd, which laſts for a night; and the Creature which poſſeſſes his affection, to be a Good that laſts for ever. How fooliſh then is every ſin, that tends to deſtroy a Being that cannot deſtroy or deſert himſelf; a Being, without whoſe Eternity the Sinner himſelf could not have had the capacity of a being, to affront him? How baſe is that, which would not let the works of God remain in their eſtabliſhed poſture ? How much more baſe in not enduring the fountain and glory of all Beings, that would not only put an end to the Beauty of the world, but the Eternity of God?

* Rom. 1. 23.

5. How dreadful is it to lye under the ſtroke of an eternal God? His Eternity is as great a terror to him that hates him, as it is a comfort to him that loves him; becauſe he is the living God, an everlaſting King, the Nations ſhall not be able to abide his indignation. * Though God be leaſt in their thoughts, and is made light of in the world; yet the thoughts of Gods Eternity, when he comes to judge the world, ſhall make the Slighters of him tremble : That the Judge and Puniſher lives for ever, is the greateſt grievance to a Soul in miſery, and adds an unconceivable weight to it, above what the infiniteneſs of Gods executive Power could do without that duration: His Eternity makes the puniſhment more dreadful than his Power; his Power makes it ſharp, but his Eternity renders it perpetual; ever to endure, is the ſting at the end of every laſh.

* Jer. 10. 10.

And how ſad is it, to think that God lays his Eternity to pawn for the puniſhment of obſtinate Sinners, and engageth it by an Oath, that he will whet his glittering Sword, that his hand ſhall take hold of Judgment, that he will render Vengeance to his Enemies, and a Reward to them that hate him; a reward proportioned to the greatneſs of their offences, and the glory of an eternal God? * I lift up my hand to Heaven, and ſay, I live for ever, i. e. as ſurely as I live for ever, I will whet my glittering Sword. As none can convey good with a perpetuity, ſo none can convey evil with ſuch a laſtingneſs as God. 'Tis a great loſs to loſe a Ship richly fraught in the bottom of the Sea, never to be caſt upon the Shore; But how much greater is it, to loſe eternally a Soveraign God, which we were capable of eternally enjoying, and undergo an evil as durable as that God we ſlighted; and were in a poſſibility of avoiding? The miſeries of men after this Life are not eaſed, but ſharpen'd by the Life and Eternity of God.

* Deut. 32. 40, 41.

The Second Uſe is of Comfort. What foundation of comfort can we have in any of Gods Attributes, were it not for his Infiniteneſs and Eternity; though he be merciful, good, wiſe, faithful? What ſupport could there be, if they were perfections belonging to a corruptible God? What hopes of a Reſurrection to Happineſs can we have, or of the duration of it; if that God that promiſed it were not immortal to continue it, as well as powerful to effect it? His Power were not Almighty, if his duration were not Eternal.

1. If God be eternal, his Covenant will be ſo. 'Tis founded upon the Eternity of God; the Oath whereby he confirms it, is by his Life: Since there is none greater than himſelf, he ſwears by himſelf, * or by his own Life, which he engageth together with his Eternity for the full performance; ſo that if he lives for ever, the Covenant ſhall not be diſannull'd, 'tis an immutable Counſel: * The immutability of his Counſel follows the immutability of his Nature. Immutability and Eternity go hand in hand together. The promiſe of eternal Life is as ancient as God himſelf in regard of the purpoſe of the promiſe, or in regard of the promiſe made to Chriſt for us. * Eternal life which God promiſed before the world began. As it hath an ante-eternity, ſo it hath a poſt-eternity; Therefore the Goſpel, which is the new Covenant publiſht, is term'd the everlaſting Goſpel; * which can no more be altered and periſh, than God can change and vaniſh into nothing: He can as little morally deny his truth, as he can naturally deſert his life. The Covenant is there repreſented in a Green Colour, to note its perpetual Verdure: The Rain-bow, the Embleme of the Covenant, about the Throne, was like to an Emrald, a Stone of a green colour; * whereas the natural Rain-bow hath many colours; this but one, to ſignifie its Eternity.

* Heb. 6. 13.

* Heb. 6. 16, 17.

* Tit. 1. 2.

* Rev. 14. 6.

* Rev. 4. 3.

2. If God be eternal, he being our God in Covenant, is an eternal Good and Poſſeſſion. This God is our God for ever and ever; * He is a dwelling place in all Generations. We ſhall traverſe the world a while, and then arrive at the bleſſings Jacob wiſhed for Joſeph; * The bleſſings of the everlaſting hills. If an Eſtate of a thouſand Pound per Annum render a mans life comfortable for a ſhort term, how much more may the Soul be ſwallowed up with joy in the enjoyment of the Creator, whoſe years never fail, who lives for ever to be enjoyed, and can keep us in life for ever to enjoy him? Death indeed will ſeize upon us by Gods irreverſible order, but the immortal Creator will make him diſgorge his morſel, and land us in a glorious immortality; our Souls at their Diſſolution, and our Bodies at the Reſurrection, after which they ſhall remain for ever, and imploy the extent of that boundleſs Eternity in the fruition of the Soveraign and Eternal God: For 'tis impoſſible that the Believer, who is united to the immortal God that is from everlaſting to everlaſting, can ever periſh; for being in conjunction with him who is an ever flowing Fountain of Life, he cannot ſuffer him to remain in the jaws of Death. While God is eternal, and always the ſame; 'tis not poſſible that thoſe that partake of his ſpiritual life, ſhould not alſo partake of his eternal. 'Tis from the conſideration of the endleſneſs of the years of God that the Church comforts her ſelf, that her Children ſhall continue, and their Seed be eſtabliſhed for ever. * And from the eternity of God, Habbakkuk, chap. 1. 12. concludes the eternity of Believers, Art not thou from everlaſting O Lord my God, my holy One? We ſhall not dye O Lord. After they are retired from this world, they ſhall live for ever with God without any change by the multitude of thoſe imaginable years and ages that ſhall run for ever. 'Tis that God that hath

* Pſal. 48. 14.

* Gen. 49. 26.

* Pſal. 102. 27, 28.

hath neither beginning nor end, that is our God; who hath not only immortality in himself, but immortality to give out to others. As he hath abundance of Spirit to quicken them*, so he hath abundance of Immortality to continue them. 'Tis only in the consideration of this a man can with wisdom say, Soul take thy ease, thou hast Goods laid up for many years; to say it of any other possession, is the greatest folly in the judgment of our Saviour. * Mortality shall be swallowed up of Immortality: Rivers of pleasure shall be for evermore. Death is a word never spoken there by any, never heard by any in that possession of Eternity; 'tis for ever put out as one of Christs conquered enemies.

* Mal. 2. 15.

*Luke 12. 19, 20.

The happiness depends upon the presence of God, with whom Believers shall be for ever present. Happiness cannot perish as long as God lives: He is the first and the last; the first of all delights, nothing before him; the last of all pleasures, nothing beyond him: A Paradise of delights in every Point without a flaming Sword.

2. The enjoyment of God will be as fresh and glorious after many ages, as it was at first. God is eternal, and Eternity knows no change; there will then be the fullest possession without any decay in the Object enjoy'd. There can be nothing past, nothing future; time neither adds to it, nor detracts from it; That infinite fulness of perfection which flourisheth in him now, will flourish eternally, without any discolouring of it in the least by those innumerable ages that shall run to Eternity, much less any dispoyling him of them. He is the same in his endless Duration. * As God is, so will the Eternity of him be, without succession, without division: The fulness of joy will be always present; without past to be thought of with regret for being gone; without future to be expected with tormenting desires. When we enjoy God, we enjoy him in his Eternity without any flux; an entire possession of all together, without the passing away of pleasures that may be wished to return, or expectation of future joys which might be desired to hasten. Time is fluid, but Eternity is stable, and after many ages, the joys will be as savoury and satisfying, as if they had been but that moment first tasted by our hungry appetites. When the glory of the Lord shall rise upon you, it shall be so far from ever setting, that after millions of years are expired, as numerous as the Sands on the Sea-shore, the Sun, in the light of whose Countenance you shall live, shall be as bright as at the first appearance: He will be so far from ceasing to flow, that he will flow as strong, as full as at the first communication of himself in glory to the Creature. God therefore as sitting upon his Throne of Grace, and acting according to his Covenant, is like a Jasper-stone, which is of a green colour, a colour always delightful; * Because God is always vigorous, and flourishing; a pure act of life, sparkling new and fresh rays of life and light to the Creature, flourishing with a perpetual Spring, and contenting the most capacious desire; forming your interest, pleasure and satisfaction, with an infinite variety, without any change or succession: He will have variety to increase delights, and eternity to perpetuate them; This will be the fruit of the enjoyment of an infinite, an eternal God: He is not a Cistern but a Fountain, wherein water is always living and never putrifies.

* Psl. 102. 27.

* Rev. 4. 3.

4. If God be eternal, Here is a strong ground of comfort against all the distresses of the Church. and the threats of the Churches Enemies. Gods abiding for ever, is the Plea Jeremy makes for his return to his forsaken Churh. * Thou, O Lord, remainest for ever, thy Throne from Generation to Generation. The Church is weak; created things are easily cut off? What prop is there, but that God that lives for ever? What though Jerusalem lost its Bulwarks, the Temple were defaced, the Land wasted; yet the God of Jerusalem sits upon an eternal Throne, and from everlasting to everlasting there is no diminution of his Power. The Prophet intimates in this complaint, that it is not agreeable to Gods Eternity to forget his People, to whom he hath from Eternity bore good will. In the greatest confusions, the Churches eyes are to be fixed upon the Eternity of Gods Throne, where he sits as Governour of the world: No Creature can take any comfort in this perfection, but the Church; other Creatures depend upon God, but the Church is united to him.

* Lament. 5. 20.

The first discovery of the Name I am, which signifies the Divine Eternity as well as Immutability, was for the comfort of the oppress Israelites in Egypt *; It was then publisht from the secret place of the Almighty, as the only strong Cordial to refresh them: It hath not yet, it shall not ever lose its vertue in any of the miseries that have, or ſhall ſucceſſively befall the Church, 'Tis a comfort as durable as the God, whoſe name it is: He is ſtill, I am, and the ſame to the Church, as he was then to his Iſrael. His ſpiritual Iſrael have a greater to right the glories of it, than the carnal Iſrael could have. No oppreſſion can be greater than theirs; what was a comfort ſuted to that diſtreſs, hath the ſame ſutableneſs to every other oppreſſion. It was not a temporary name, but a name for ever; his memorial to all Generations, * and reacheth to the Church of the Gentiles, with whom he treats as the God of Abraham, ratifying that Covenant by the Meſſiah, which he made with Abraham the Father of the Faithful.

* Exod. 3. 14 15.

* V. 15.

The Churches enemies are not to be fear'd; they may ſpring as the graſs, but ſoon after do wither by their own inward principles of decay, or are cut down by the hand of God. * They may be inſtruments of the anger of God, but they ſhall be ſcatter'd as the workers of iniquity by the hand of the Lord, that is high for evermore, v. 8. and is engaged by his promiſe, to preſerve a Church in the World. They may threaten, but their breath may vaniſh, as ſoon as their threatnings are pronounc'd: for they carry their breath in no ſurer a place than their own Noſtrils, upon which the eternal God can put his hand, and ſink them with all their rage. Do the Prophets and Inſtructors of the Church, live for ever? * No, Shall then the Adverſaries and Diſturbers of the Church live for ever? They ſhall vaniſh as a ſhadow, their being depends upon the eternal God of the faithful, and the everlaſting Judge of the wicked. He that inhabits Eternity, is above them that inhabit Mortality, and muſt, whether they will or no, ſay to Corruption, thou art my Father, and to the Worm, thou art my Mother, and my Siſter. * When they will act with a confidence, as if they were living Gods, he will not be mated, but evidence himſelf to be a living God above them. Why then ſhould mortal men be fear'd in their frowns, when an immortal God hath promiſed protection in his Word, and lives for ever to perform it?

* Pſ. 92. 7,8,9.

* Zach. 1. 5.

* Job 17. 14.

5. Hence follows another comfort; ſince God is eternal, he hath as much power, as will to be as good as his word. His promiſes are eſtabliſhed upon his eternity, and this perfection is a main ground of truſt; Truſt in the Lord for ever: for in the Lord* Jehovah is everlaſting ſtrength. כִּי יְהוָה צוּר עֹלָמִים His name is doubled, that name Iah, and Jehovah, which was always the ſtrength of his people; and not a ſingle one, but the ſtrength or rock of Eternities; not a failing but an eternal truth and power; that as his ſtrength is eternal, ſo our truſt in him ſhould imitate his Eternity in its perpetuity; and therefore in the deſpondency of his people, as if God had forgot his promiſes, and made no account of them, or his word, and were weary of doing good, he calls them to reflect on what they had heard of his Eternity, which is attended with immutability, who hath an infiniteneſs of power to perform his will, and an infiniteneſs of underſtanding to judge of the right ſeaſons of it. * His Wiſdom, Will, Truth, have alway's been, and will to Eternity be the ſame. He wants not life, any more then love, for ever to help us; ſince his word is paſt, he will never fail us; ſince his life continues, he can never be out of a capacity to relieve us: and therefore when ever we fooliſhly charge him by our diſtruſtful thoughts, we forget his love, which made the promiſe, and his eternal life, which can accompliſh it. As his word is the bottom of our truſt, and his truth is the aſſurance of his ſincerity, ſo his Eternity is the aſſurance of his ability to perform. His word ſtands for ever. * A man may be my friend this day, and be in another world to morrow; and though he be never ſo ſincere in his word, yet death ſnaps his life aſunder, and forbids the execution. But as God cannot die, ſo he cannot lie; becauſe he is the Eternity of Iſrael. * The ſtrength of Iſrael will not lie, nor repent, נֵצַח perpetuity or eternity of Iſrael. Eternity implies immutability; we could have no ground for our hopes, if we knew him not to be longer liv'd than our ſelves. The Pſalmiſt beats off our hands from truſt in men, becauſe their breath goes forth, they return to their earth, and in that day their thoughts periſh. * And if the God of Jacob were like them, what happineſs could we have in making him our help? As his Soveraignty in giving precepts had not been a ſtrong ground of Obedience, without conſidering him as an eternal Law-giver, who could maintain his rights; So his kindneſs in making the promiſes, had not been a ſtrong ground of confidence, without conſidering him as an Eternal promiſer, whoſe thoughts, and whoſe life can never periſh. * And this may be

* Iſa. 26. 4.

* Iſa. 40. 27, 28

* Iſa. 40. 8,

* 1 Sam. 15. 29.

* Pſ. 146. 3,4.

* Crellius de Deo cap. 18. P. 44, 45.

one

one reaſon, why the Holy Ghoſt mentions ſo often the poſt-eternity of God, and ſo little his ante-eternity: becauſe that is the ſtrongeſt foundation of our faith, and hope, which reſpects chiefly, that which is future, and not that which is paſt; yet indeed no aſſurance of his after-Eternity can be had, if his ante-Eternity be not certain. If he had a beginning, he may have an end; And if he had a change in his nature, he might have in his Counſels; But ſince all the reſolves of God are as himſelf is, eternal, and all the promiſes of God are the fruits of his Counſel, therefore they cannot be chang'd: If he ſhould change them for the better, he would not have been eternally Wiſe, to know what was beſt; If for the worſe, he had not been eternally good or juſt. Men may break their promiſes, becauſe they are made without foreſight; but God that inhabits Eternity, foreknows all things, that ſhall be done under the Sun, as if they had been then acting before him; and nothing can intervene, or work a change in his reſolves; becauſe the leaſt circumſtances were eternally foreſeen by him. Though there may be variations, and changes to our ſight, the winds may tack about, and every hour new and croſs accidents happen; yet the eternal God, who is eternally true to his word, Sits at the Helm, and the Winds and the Waves obey him. And though he ſhould defer his promiſe a thouſand years, yet he is not ſlack: For he defers it but a day to his eternity; * And who would not with comfort ſtay a day in expectation of a conſiderable advantage? * 2 Pet. 3. 8,9.

3. Uſe is for Exhortation.

1. To ſomething which concerns us in our ſelves.
2. To ſomething which concerns us with reſpect to God.

1. To ſomething which concerns us in our ſelves.

1. Let us be deeply affected with our ſins long ſince committed. Though they are paſt with us, they are in regard of Gods eternity preſent with him; there is no ſucceſſion in Eternity, as there is in time: All things are before God at once; our ſins are before him, as if committed this moment, though committed long ago. As he is what he is in regard of duration, ſo he knows what he knows in regard of knowledge. As he is not more than he was, nor ſhall not be any more than he is, ſo he always knew what he knows, and ſhall not ceaſe to know, what he now know's. As himſelf, ſo his knowledge is one indiviſible point of eternity. He knows nothing, but what he did know from eternity; he ſhall know no more for the future, than he now knows. Our ſins being preſent with him in his eternity, ſhould be preſent with us in our regard of remembrance of them, and ſorrow for them. What though many years are laps'd, much time run out, and our iniquities almoſt blotted out of our memory? yet ſince a thouſand years are in Gods ſight, and in regard of his eternity but as a day; * A thouſand years in thy ſight are but as yeſterday, when it is paſt, and as a watch in the night; They are before him For ſuppoſe a man were as old as the World, above five thouſand ſix hundred years; the ſins committed five thouſand years ago; are according to that rule, but as if they were committed five daies ago; ſo that ſixty two years, are but as an hour and a half, and the ſins committed forty years ſince, are as if they were committed but this preſent hour. But if we will go further, and conſider them but as a Watch of the Night, about three hours (for the Night conſiſting of twelve hours, was divided into ſet Watches) then a thouſand years are but as three hours in the ſight of God; and then ſins committed ſixty years ago, are but as if they were committed within this five minutes, * Pſal. 90. 4.

Let none of us ſet light by the iniquities committed many years ago, and imagine that length of time can wipe out their guilt; No, let us conſider them in relation to Gods eternity, and excite an inward remorſe, as if they had been but the birth of this moment.

2. Let the conſideration of Gods Eternity abate our pride. This is the deſign of the Verſes following the Text, The Eternity of God being ſo ſufficient to make us underſtand our own nothingneſs, which ought to be one great end of man, eſpecially as fall'n. The eternity of God ſhould make us as much diſeſteem our ſelves, as the excellency of God made Job abhor himſelf. * His excellency ſhould humble us under a ſenſe of our vanity, and his eternity under a ſenſe of the ſhortneſs of our duration. If man compares himſelf with other Creatures, he may be too ſenſible of his greatneſs, but if he * Job. 42. 5,6.

he compares himſelf with God, he cannot but be ſenſible of his baſeneſs.

1. In regard of our impotence, to comprehend this Eternity of God. How little do we know? How little can we know of Gods Eternity? We cannot fully conceive it, much leſs expreſs it; we have but a brutiſh underſtanding in all thoſe things, as Agur ſaid of himſelf. *

*Prov. 30. 7. *Charrontois. vent. Livr. 1. chap. 5. p. 17. &c.

* What is Infinite and Eternal cannot be comprehended by finite and temporary Creatures; If it could, it would not be infinite and eternal: For to know a thing, is to know the Extent, and cauſe of it; Tis repugnant to Eternity to be known, becauſe it hath no limits, no cauſes; the moſt ſoaring underſtanding cannot have a proportionable underſtanding of it. What diſproportion is there between a drop of water, and the Sea in their greatneſs and motion? Yet by a drop, we may arrive to a knowledge of the nature of the Sea, which is a Maſs of drops joyn'd together. But the longeſt duration of times cannot make us know, what Eternity is: Becauſe there is no proportion between time and Eternity. The years of God are as numberleſs, as his thoughts, * and our minds as far from reckoning the one as the other. If our underſtandings are too groſs, to comprehend the Majeſty of his infinite works, they are much more too ſhort to comprehend the infiniteneſs of his Eternity.

* Pſal. 40. 5.

2. In regard of the vaſt diſproportion of our duration to this duration of God.

1. We have more of not being than being. We were nothing from an unbegun Eternity, and we might have been nothing to an endleſs Eternity, had not God call'd us into being; and if he pleaſe, we may be nothing by as ſhort an annihilating word, as we were ſomething by a Creating word. As it is the prerogative of God to be, I am that I am; ſo it is the property of a Creature, to be, I am not what I am; I am not by my ſelf what I am, but by the Indulgence of another. I was nothing formerly, I may be nothing again, unleſs he that is, I am, make me to ſubſiſt what I now am. Nothing is as much the title of the Creature, as Being is the title of God. Nothing is ſo holy as God, becauſe nothing hath being as God. * There is none holy as the Lord, for there is none beſides thee. Mans life is an Image, a dream, which are next to nothing; and if compar'd with God, worſe than nothing; a nullity as well as a vanity: Becauſe with God only is the fountain of life. * The Creature is but a drop of life from him, dependent on him. A drop of water is a nothing, if compar'd with the vaſt conflux of waters, and numberleſs drops in the Ocean.

* 1 Sam. 2. 2.

* Pſal. 36. 9.

How unworthy is it for duſt and aſhes kneaded together in time, to ſtrut againſt the Father of Eternity? Much more unworthy for that which is nothing, worſe than nothing, to quarrel with that which is only being, and equal himſelf with him that inhabits Eternity.

2. What being we have, had a beginning. After an unaccountable Eternity was run out, in the very dregs of time, a few years ago we were created, and made of the baſeſt and vileſt droſs of the world, the ſlime and duſt of the Earth; made of that, wherewith Birds build their neſts; made of that, which Creeping things make their habitation, and beaſts trample upon; How monſtrous is pride in ſuch a Creature, to aſpire, as if he were the Father of Eternity, and as Eternal as God, and ſo his own Eternity?

3. What being we have, is but of a ſhort duration in regard of our life in this World. Our life is in a conſtant change, and flux, we remain not the ſame an intire day; Youth quickly ſucceeds Child-hood, and age as ſpeedily treads upon the heels of Youth; there is a continual defluxion of minutes, as there is of ſands in a glaſs. He is as a Watch wound up at the beginning of his life, and from that time is running down, till he comes to the bottom; ſome part of our lives is cut off every day, every minute. Life is but a moment, what is paſt cannot be recalled; what is future cannot be inſured: If we enjoy this moment, we have loſt that which is paſt, and ſhall preſently loſe this by the next that is to come.

The ſhort duration of men is ſet out in Scripture by ſuch Creatures, as ſoon diſappear. A worm, * that can ſcarce out live a winter. Graſs, that withers by the Summer Sun. Life is a flower ſoon withering, * a vapour ſoon vaniſhing, * a ſmoke ſoon diſappearing. * The ſtrongeſt man is but compacted duſt, the fabrick muſt moulder, the higheſt Mountain falls and comes to nought. Time gives place to E-

* Job. 25. 6.
* Job. 14. 2.
* James 4. 14.
* Pſal. 102. 3.

eternity

ternity, we live now, and die to morrow. Not a Man ſince the world began, ever lived a day in Gods ſight: For no man ever lived a thouſand years. The longeſt day of any mans life never amounted to twenty four hours in the account of divine Eternity: A life of ſo many hundred years, with the addition he dyed, makes up the greateſt part of the Hiſtory of the Patriarchs. * And ſince the life of man hath been curtaild, if any be in the world eighty years, he ſcarce properly lives ſixty of them, ſince the fourth part of time is at leaſt conſumed in ſleep. * Gen. 5.

A greater difference there is between the duration of God, and that of a Creature, than between the life of one for a minute, and the life of one that ſhould live as many years as the whole globe of Heaven and Earth, if changed into papers, could contain figures: And this life, tho but of a ſhort duration according to the period God hath determined, is eaſily cut off; the treaſure of life is depoſited in a brittle veſſel: A ſmall ſtone hitting againſt Nebuchadnezzars Statue, will tumble it down into a poor and naſty grave: A Grape ſtone, the bone of a fiſh, a ſmall fly in the throat, a moiſt damp are enough to deſtroy an Earthly Eternity, and reduce it to nothing.

What a Nothing then is our ſhortneſs, if compared with Gods Eternity? Our frailty, with Gods duration? How humble then ſhould periſhing Creatures be before an Eternal God, with whom our days are as a hands breadth, and our age as nothing? * The Angels that have been of as long a duration as Heaven and Earth, tremble before him, the Heavens melt at his preſence; and ſhall we that are but of yeſterday, approach a Divine Eternity with unhumbled Souls, and offer the Calves of our lips with the pride of Devils, and ſtand upon our terms with him, without falling upon our faces, with a ſenſe that we are but duſt and aſhes, and Creatures of time? How eaſily is it to reaſon out mans humility, but how hard is it to reaſon man into it? * Pſal. 39. 5.

3. Let the conſideration of Gods Eternity take off our love and confidence from the world, and the things thereof. The Eternity of God reproaches a purſuit of the world, as preferring a momentary pleaſure before an everlaſting God; as tho a temporal world could be a better ſupply, than a God whoſe years never fail. Alas! what is this Earth, men are ſo greedy of, and will get, tho by blood and ſweat? What is this whole Earth, if we had the entire poſſeſſion of it, if compared with the vaſt Heavens, the ſeat of Angels and bleſſed Spirits? Tis but as an Atome to the greateſt Mountain, or as a drop of dew to the immenſe Ocean. How fooliſh is it, to prefer a drop before the Sea, or an Atome before the world? The Earth is but a point to the Sun; the Sun with its whole Orb, but a little part of the Heavens, if compared with the whole Fabrick. If a man had the poſſeſſion of all thoſe, there could be no compariſon between thoſe that have had a beginning, and ſhall have an end, and God who is without either of them. Yet, how many are there, that make nothing of the divine Eternity, and imagine an Eternity of nothing?

1. The world hath been but of a ſhort ſtanding. 'Tis not yet ſix thouſand years ſince the foundations of it were laid; and therefore it cannot have a boundleſs excellency, as that God, who hath been from everlaſting, doth poſſeſs. If Adam had liv'd to this day, and been as abſolute Lord of his Poſterity, as he was of the other Creatures, had it been a competent object to take up his heart; had he not been a mad man, to have prefer'd this little created pleaſure before an everlaſting uncreated God? A thing that had a dependent Beginning, before that which had an independent Eternity?

2. The beauties of the world are tranſitory and periſhing. The whole world is nothing elſe but a fluid thing, the Faſhion of it is a Pageantry, paſſing away; * tho the glories of it might be conceived greater than they are, yet they are not conſiſtent, but tranſient; There cannot be an entire enjoyment of them; becauſe they grow up, and expire every moment, and ſlip away between our fingers, while we are uſing them. Have we not heard of Gods diſperſing the greateſt Empires like Chaff before a whirlwind, or as ſmoke out of a Chimny; * which tho it appears as a compacted cloud, as if it would choak the Sun, is quickly ſcattered into ſeveral parts of the Air, and becomes inviſible? Nettles have often been heirs to ſtately Palaces, as God threatens Iſrael. * We cannot promiſe our ſelves over night any thing the next day. A Kingdom with the glory of a throne may be cut off in a morning. * The new wine may be taken from the mouth, when the Vintage is ripe; the devour- * 1 Cor. 7. 31. * Hoſ. 13. 3. * Hoſ. 9. 6. * Hoſ. 10. 15.

devouring locuſt may ſnatch away both the hopes of that, and the harveſt *: They are therefore things which are not; and nothing cannot be a fit object for confidence or affection. * Wilt thou ſet thy eyes upon that which is not? For rickes certainly make themſelves wings. They are not properly beings; becauſe they are not ſtable, but flitting; They are not; becauſe they may not be the next moment to us, what they are this; they are but Ciſterns, not ſprings, and broken Ciſterns, not ſound and ſtable; no ſolidity in their ſubſtance, nor ſtability in their duration. What a fooliſh thing is it then, to prefer a tranſient felicity, a meer nullity before an eternal God? What a ſenſeleſs thing would it be in a man, to prefer the Map of a Kingdom, which the hand of a Child can tear in pieces, before the Kingdom ſhadowed by it; How much more inexcuſable is it to value things, that are ſo far from being Eternal, that they are not ſo much as dusky reſemblances of an Eternity? Were the things of the world more glorious than they are, yet they are but as a counterfeit Sun in a Cloud, which comes ſhort of the true Sun in the Heavens both in glory and duration; and to eſteem them before God, is unconceiveably baſer, than if a man ſhould Value a particolour'd bubble in the Air, before a durable rock of Diamonds. The comforts of this world are as Candles that will end in a Snuff; whereas the felicity that flows from an eternal God, is like the Sun, that ſhines more and more to a perfect day.

* Joel 1. 15.

* Prov. 23. 5.

3. They cannot therefore be fit for a ſoul, which was made to have an intereſt in Gods Eternity. The ſoul being of a perpetual nature was made for the fruition of an Eternal good; without ſuch a good it can never be perfect. Perfection, that noble thing, riſeth not from any thing in this world, nor is it a Title due to a Soul while in this world; 'tis then they are ſaid to be made perfect, when they arrive at that entire conjunction with the eternal God in another life. * The Soul cannot be enobled by an acquaintance with theſe things, or eſtabliſh'd by a dependence on them, they cannot confer, what a rational nature ſhould deſire, or ſupply it with what it wants.

* Heb. 12. 23.

The ſoul hath a reſemblance to God in a poſt-Eternity: Why ſhould it be drawn aſide by the blandiſhments of earthly things, to neglect its true eſtabliſhment, and laquey after the Body, which is but the ſhadow of the Soul, and was made to follow it and ſerve it? But while it buſieth it ſelf altogether in the concerns of a periſhing body, and ſeeks ſatisfaction in things that glide away, it becomes rather a body than ſoul, deſcends below its nature, reproacheth that God, who hath imprinted upon it an image of his own Eternity, and loſeth the comfort of the everlaſtingneſs of its Creator. How ſhall the whole world, if our lives were as durable as that, be an happy Eternity to us, who have Souls, that ſhall ſurvive all the delights of it, which muſt fry in thoſe flames, that ſhall fire the whole frame of nature at the general conflagration of the world? *

* 2 Pet. 3. 10.

4. Therefore let us provide for an happy intereſt in the Eternity of God. Man is made for an eternal ſtate. The Soul hath ſuch a perfection in its nature, that it is fit for Eternity; and cannot diſplay all its operations but in Eternity: To an Eternity it muſt go, and live as long as God himſelf lives. Things of a ſhort duration are not proportion'd to a Soul made for an eternal continuance; to ſee that it be a comfortable eternity, is worth all our care. Man is a forecaſting Creature, conſiders not only the preſent, but the the future too, in his proviſions for his family; and ſhall he diſgrace his nature, in caſting off all conſideration of a future eternity? Get poſſeſſion therefore of the eternal God: A portion in this life is the lot of thoſe, who ſhall be for ever miſerable. * But God, an everlaſting portion, is the lot of them that are deſign'd for happineſs. * God is my portion for ever.

* Pſal. 17. 14.

* Pſal. 73. 26.

Time is ſhort. * The whole time for which God deſign'd this building of the world is of a little compaſs; tis a Stage erected for rational Creatures to act their parts upon for a few thouſand years; the greateſt part of which time is run out; and then ſhall time like a rivulet fall into the Sea of Eternity, from whence it ſprung. As time is but a ſlip of Eternity, ſo it will end in eternity; our advantages conſiſt in the preſent inſtant; what is paſt, never promiſed a return, and cannot be fetcht back by all our vows: What is future, we cannot promiſe our ſelves to enjoy; we may be ſnatcht away before it comes. Every minute that paſſeth, ſpeaks the fewer remaining till the time of death. And as we are every hour further from our beginning, we are nearer our end. The Child born this day grows up, to grow nothing at laſt.

* 1 Cor. 7. 29.

In

In all Ages, there is but a ſtep between us and Death, as David ſaid of himſelf. * The little time that remains for the Devil till the day of Judgment, envenoms his wrath; he rageth, becauſe his time is ſhort. * The little time that remains between this moment and our death, ſhould quicken our diligence to inherit the endleſs and unchangeable Eternity of God. * 1 Sam. 20. 3. * Rev. 12. 12.

5. Often meditate on the Eternity of God. The Holineſs, Power and Eternity of God, are the fundamental Articles of all Religion, upon which the whole body of it leans; His Holineſs for conformity to him, his Power and Eternity for the ſupport of Faith and Hope. The ſtrong and inceſſant Cries of the four Beaſts, repreſenting that Chriſtian Church, are, holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come. * Though his Power is intimated, yet the chiefeſt are his Holineſs, three times expreſt; and his Eternity which is repeated, v. 9. who lives for ever and ever. This ought to be the conſtant practice in the Church of the Gentiles, which this Book chiefly reſpects: The meditation of his converting Grace manifeſted to Paul, raviſht the Apoſtles heart, but not without the triumphant conſideration of his Immortality and Eternity, which are the principal parts of the Doxology. * Now unto the King Eternal, immortal, inviſible, only wiſe God, be honour and glory for ever and ever. It could be no great tranſport to the Spirit, to conſider him glorious without conſidering him immortal: The unconfinedneſs of his perfections in regard of time, preſents the Soul with matter of the greateſt complacency. The happineſs of our Souls depends upon his other Attributes, but the perpetuity of it upon his Eternity. Is it a comfort to view his immenſe Wiſdom; his overflowing Goodneſs; his tender Mercy; his unerring Truth? What comfort were there in any of thoſe, if it were a Wiſdom that could be baffled; a Goodneſs that could be dampt; a Mercy that can expire, and a Truth that can periſh with the Subject of it? Without Eternity, what were all his other Perfections, but as glorious, yet withering Flowers; a great, but a decaying Beauty? By a frequent meditation of Gods Eternity, we ſhould become more ſenſible of our own vanity and the worlds triflingneſs: How nothing ſhould our ſelves; How nothing would all other things appear in our eyes? How coldly ſhould we deſire them? How feebly ſhould we place any truſt in them? Should we not think our ſelves worthy of contempt to dote upon a periſhing glory, to expect ſupport from an Arm of Fleſh, when there is an eternal Beauty to raviſh us, an eternal Arm to protect us? Aſaph, when he conſidered God a Portion for ever, thought nothing of the Glories of the Earth, or the Beauties of the created Heavens worth his appetite or complacency, but God. * Beſides, an elevated frame of heart at the conſideration of Gods Eternity, would batter down the ſtrong holds and engines of any temptation: A ſlight temptation will not know where to find and catch hold of a Soul high and hid in a meditation of it; and if it doth, there will not be wanting from hence preſervatives to reſiſt and conquer it. What tranſitory pleaſures will not the thoughts of Gods Eternity ſtifle? When this work buſieth a Soul, 'tis too great to ſuffer it to deſcend, to liſten to a ſleeveleſs errand from Hell or the World. The wanton allurements of the Fleſh will be put off with indignation. The profers of the world will be ridiculous when they are caſt into the Ballance with the Eternity of God, which ſticking in our thoughts, we ſhall not be ſo eaſie a Prey for the Fowlers Gin. * 1 Tim. 1. 15, 16, 17. *Pſ. 73. 25, 26.

Let us therefore often meditate upon this, but not in a bare ſpeculation without engaging our affections, and making every notion of the Divine Eternity end in a ſutable impreſſion upon our hearts: This would be much like the Diſciples gazing upon the Heavens at the aſcenſion of their Maſter, while they forgat the practice of his Orders: * We may elſe find ſomething of the nature of God: and loſe our ſelves, not only in Eternity but to Eternity. * Acts 1. 11.

2. And hence the ſecond part of the Exhortation is to ſomething which concerns us with a reſpect to God.

1. If God be eternal, How worthy is he of our choiceſt affections, and ſtrongeſt deſires of communion with him? Is not every thing to be valued according to the greatneſs of its Being? How then ſhould we love him, who is not only lovely in his nature, but eternally lovely; having from everlaſting all thoſe perfections centred in himſelf, which appear in time? If every thing be lovely, by how much the more it partakes of the nature of God who is the chief Good, how much more infinitely lovely is God, who is ſuperior to all other goods, and eternally ſo.? Not a God of a few minutes, months, years, or millions of years; not of the dregs of time or the top of time, but of Eternity; above time, unconceivably immenſe beyond time: The loving him infinitely, perpetually, is an act of homage due to him for his eternal excellency: We may give him the one, ſince our Souls are immortal, though we cannot the other, becauſe they are finite: Since he encloſeth in himſelf all the excellences of Heaven and Earth for ever, he ſhould have an affection, not only of time in this world, but of etenity in the future; and if we did not owe him a love for what we are by him, we owe him a love for what he is in himſelf; and more for what he is, than for what he is to us: He is more worthy of our affections becauſe he is the eternal God, than becauſe he is our Creator; becauſe he is more excellent in his nature than in his tranſient actions: The beams of his goodneſs to us, are to direct our thoughts and affections to him; but his own eternal excellency, ought to be the ground and foundation of our affections to him. And truly, ſince nothing but God is eternal, nothing but God is worth the loving; and we do but a juſt right to our love, to pitch it upon that which can always poſſeſs us, and be poſſeſſed by us; upon an Object that cannot deceive our affection, and put it out of countenance by a diſſolution.

And if our happineſs conſiſts in being like to God, we ſhould imitate him in loving him as he loves himſelf, and as long as he loves himſelf: God cannot do more to himſelf than love himſelf; he can make no addition to his Eſſence, nor diminution from it. What ſhould we do leſs to an eternal Being, than to beſtow affections upon him, like his own to himſelf: ſince we can find nothing ſo durable as himſelf, for which we ſhould love it?

2. He only is worthy of our beſt Service. The Ancient of days is to be ſerved before all that are younger than himſelf; Our beſt obedience is due to him as a God of unconfined excellency: Every thing that is excellent deſerves a veneration ſutable to its excellency. As God is infinite, he hath right to a boundleſs ſervice; as he is eternal, he hath right to a perpetual ſervice: As Service is a debt of Juſtice upon the account of the excellency of his nature, ſo a perperual ſervice is as much a debt of juſtice upon the account of his Eternity. If God be infinite and eternal, he merits an honour and comportment from his Creatures ſuted to the unlimited perfection of his Nature, and the duration of his Being. How worthy is the Pſalmiſts reſolution? I will ſing unto the Lord as long as I live, I will ſing praiſes to my God while I have any being: * 'Tis the uſe he makes of the endleſs duration of the Glory of God, and will extend to all other ſervice as well as praiſe. To ſerve other things, or to ſerve our ſelves, is too vaſt a ſervice upon that which is nothing. In devoting our ſelves to God, we ſerve him that is; that was, ſo as that he never began; Is to come, ſo as that he never ſhall end; By whom all things are what they are; who hath both eternal knowledge to remember our ſervice, and eternal goodneſs to reward It.

* Pſal. 104.33.

A DISCOURSE UPON THE IMMUTABILITY OF GOD.

Pſalm 102. 26, 27.

They ſhall periſh, but thou ſhalt endure; yea, all of them ſhall wax old as a Garment; as a Veſture ſhalt thou change them, and they ſhall be changed: But thou art the ſame, and thy years ſhall have no end.

THIS Pſalm contains a Complaint of a People preſſed with a great Calamity; ſome think of the Jewiſh Church in Babylon, others think the Pſalmiſt doth here perſonate Mankind lying under a ſtate of corruption, becauſe he wiſhes for the coming of the Meſſiah, to accompliſh that Redemption promiſed by God, and needed by them. Indeed the title of the Pſalm is a Prayer of the Afflicted, when he is overwhelmed, and pours out his complaint before the Lord: Whether afflicted with the ſenſe of corruption, or with the ſenſe of oppreſſion. And the Redemption by the Meſſiah, which the ancient Church looked upon as the fountain of their Deliverance from a ſinful or a ſervile Bondage, is in this Pſalm, ſpoken of: A ſet time appointed for the diſcovery of his mercy to Sion, *v.*13. An appearance in glory to build up Sion, *v.*16. The looſening of the Priſoner by Redemption, and them that are appointed to Death, *v.*20. The calling of the Gentiles, v. 22. And the later part of the Pſalm, wherein are the verſes I have read, are applied to Chriſt, Heb. 1. Whatſoever the deſign of the Pſalm might be, many things are intermingled that concern the Kingdom of the Meſſiah, and Redemption by Chriſt.

Some make three parts of the Pſalm,

1. A Petition plainly delivered, v. 1. 2. Hear my Prayer, O Lord, and let my cry come unto thee, &c.

2. The Petition ſtrongly and argumentatively enforced and pleaded, v. 3. from the miſery of the Petitioner in himſelf, and his reproach from his Enemies.

3. An acting of Faith in the expectation of an Anſwer in the general Redemption promiſed, v. 12, 13. But thou O Lord ſhalt endure for ever; thou ſhalt ariſe and have mercy upon Sion; The Heathen ſhall fear thy Name.

The firſt part is the Petition pleaded; the ſecond part is the Petition anſwered in an aſſurance, that there ſhould in time be a full deliverance. * The deſign of the Pen-man is to confirm the Chuch in the truth of the Divine Promiſes; that though the foundations of the World ſhould be ript up, and the Heavens clatter together, and the whole Fabrick of them be unpinn'd and fall to pieces, the firmeſt parts of it diſſolved; yet the Church ſhould continue in its ſtability, becauſe it ſtands not upon the changeableneſs of Creatures, but is built upon the immutable Rock of the Truth of God, which is as little ſubject to change as his Eſſence:

* Pareus.

They ſhall periſh, thou ſhalt change them. As he had before aſcribed to God the *foundation of Heaven and Earth, ſo he aſcribes to God here the deſtruction of them: Both the beginning and end of the World are here aſcertained. There is nothing indeed from the preſent appearance of things that can demonſtrate the ceſſation of the world; The Heaven and Earth ſtand firm; the motions of the heavenly Bodies are the ſame, their beauty is not decayed: Individuals corrupt; but the Species and Kinds remain: The Succeſſions of the Year obſerve their due order; but the Sin of Man renders the change of the preſent appearance of the world neceſſary, to accompliſh the deſign of God for the glory of his Elect. The Heavens do not naturally periſh, as ſome fanced an old age of the world, wherein it muſt neceſſarily decay as the Bodies of Animals do; or that the parts of the Heavens are broken off by their rubbing one againſt another in their motion, and falling to the Earth, are the Seeds of thoſe things that grow up among us. *

* Verſe 25.

* Plin Hiſt. lib. 2. cap. 3.

The Earth and Heavens. He names here the moſt ſtable parts of the world, and the moſt beautiful parts of the Creation; thoſe that are freeſt from corruptibility and change, to illuſtrate thereby the Immutability of God; that though the Heavens and Earth have a Prerogative of fixedneſs above other parts of the world, and the Creatures that reſide below; the Heavens remain the ſame as they were created, and the Center of the Earth retains its fixedneſs, and are as beautiful and freſh in their age as they were in their youth many years ago, notwithſtanding the change of the Elements; Fire and Water being often turned into Air, ſo that there may remain but little of that Air which was firſt created by reaſon of the continual tranſmutation; yet this firmneſs of the Earth and Heavens, is not to be regarded in compariſon of the unmoveableneſs and fixedneſs of the Being of God: As their beauty comes ſhort of the glory of his Being, ſo doth their firmneſs come ſhort of his ſtability.

Some by Heavens and Earth, underſtand the Creatures which reſide in the Earth, and thoſe which are in the Air, which is called Heaven often in Scripture; but the ruin and fall of theſe being ſeen every day, had been no fit illuſtration of the unchangeableneſs of God.

They ſhall periſh, they ſhall be changed.

1. They may periſh, ſay ſome; they have it not from themſelves that they do not periſh, but from thee, who didſt indue them with an incorruptible nature; They ſhall periſh if thou ſpeakeſt the word; Thou canſt with as much eaſe deſtroy them as thou didſt create them: But the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks not of their poſſibility, but the certainty of their periſhing.

2. They ſhall periſh in their qualities and motion, not in their ſubſtance, ſay others: They ſhall ceaſe from that motion which is deſigned properly for the generation and corruption of things in the Earth; but in regard of their ſubſtance and beauty they ſhall remain: As when the ſtrings or Wheels of a Clock or Watch are taken off, the material parts remain; though the motion of it, and the uſe for diſcovering the time of the day ceaſeth. * To periſh, doth not ſignifie always a falling into nothing, an annihilation, by which both the matter and the form are deſtroyed; but a ceaſing of the preſent appearance of them; a ceaſing to be what they now are, as a man is ſaid to periſh when he dies, whereas the better part of man doth not ceaſe to be: The figure of the Body moulders away, and the matter of it returns to Duſt; but the Soul being immortal ceaſeth not to act, when the Body by reaſon of the abſence of the Soul is uncapable of acting. So the Heavens ſhall periſh; the appearance they now have ſhall vaniſh, and a more glorious and incorruptible frame be erected by the power and goodneſs of God. The diſſolution of Heaven and Earth is meant by the word [periſh]; the raiſing a new frame is ſignified by the word [changed]

* Coccei. in loc.

[changed]; as if the Spirit of God would prevent any wrong meaning of the word [periſh] by alleviating the ſenſe of that, by another which ſignifies only a mutation and change; as when we change a Habit and Garment, we quit the old to receive the new.

[As a Garment, as a Veſture.] Thou ſhalt change them*, ἑλίξεις Thou ſhalt fold them up. The Heavens are compared to a Curtain*, and ſhall in due time be folded up as cloaths and Curtains are. As a Garment encompaſſeth the whole body, ſo do the Heavens encircle the Earth. *Some ſay as a Garment is folded up to be laid aſide, that when there is need it may be taken again for uſe; ſo ſhalt thou fold up the Heavens like a Garment, that when they are repaired, thou mayſt again ſtretch them out about the Earth; thou ſhalt fold them up, ſo that what did appear ſhall not now appear. It may be illuſtrated by the metaphor of a Scrole or Book, which the Spirit of God uſeth, *Iſa.*34.4 *Rev.*6.14. The Heavens departed as a Scrole when it is rouled together. When a Book is rouled up or ſhut, nothing can be read in it till it be opened again; ſo the Face of the Heavens, wherein the Stars are as Letters declaring the Glory of God, ſhall be ſhut or rouled together, ſo that nothing ſhall appear till by its renovation it be opened again: As a Garment it ſhall be changed, not to be uſed in the ſame faſhion and for the ſame uſe again. It ſeems indeed to be for the worſe; an old garment is not changed but into rags, to be put to other uſes, and afterwards thrown upon the Dung-hill: But Similitudes are not to be preſſed too far; and this will not agree with the new Heavens and new Earth, phyſically ſo, as well as metaphorically ſo. 'Tis not likely the Heavens will be put to a worſe uſe than God deſigned them for in Creation: However a change as a Garment, ſpeaks not a total corruption, but an alteration of qualities; as a Garment not to be uſed in the the ſame faſhion, as before. We may obſerve,

* Septuag.

* Pſal. 104. 2.

* Eſtius in Heb. 1.

1. That 'tis probable, the world ſhall not be annihilated but refin'd. It ſhall loſe its preſent form and faſhion, but not its foundation: Indeed as God raiſed it from nothing, ſo he can reduce it into nothing; yet it doth not appear that God will annihilate it, and utterly deſtroy both the matter and form of it; part ſhall be conſumed, and part purified, 2 *Pet.*3. 12, 13. The Heavens ſhall be on fire and diſſolved, nevertheleſs we according to his promiſe look for a new Heaven and a new Earth. They ſhall be melted down as Gold by the Artificer, to be refined from its Droſs, and wrought into a more beautiful faſhion, that they may ſerve the deſign of God for thoſe that ſhall reſide therein; a new world wherein Righteouſneſs ſhall dwell: The Apoſtle oppoſing it thereby, to the old world wherein wickedneſs did reſide. The Heavens are to be purged, as the Veſſels that held the Sin-offering were to be purified by the fire of the Sanctuary.

God indeed will take down this Scaffold which he hath built to publiſh his Glory. As every Individual hath a certain term of its duration; ſo an end is appointed for the univerſal nature of Heaven and Earth, Iſa. 51.6. The Heavens ſhall vaniſh like Smoke, which diſappears. As ſmoke is reſolved and attenuated into Air, not annihilated; ſo ſhall the world aſſume a new face, aud have a greater clearneſs and ſplendor: As the bodies of men diſſolved into Duſt, ſhall have more glorious qualities at their Reſurrection: As a Veſſel of Gold is melted down to remove the batterings in it, and receive a more comely form by the Skill of the Workman.

(1.) The World was not deſtroyed by the Deluge: It was rather waſhed by water than conſumed; So it ſhall be rather refined by the laſt fire, than lie under an irrecoverable ruin.

(2.) 'Tis not likely God would liken the everlaſtingneſs of his Covenant, and the perpetuity of his ſpiritual Iſrael, to the duration of the ordinances of the Heavens, (as he doth in Jer.21.35, 36.) if they were wholly to depart from before him. Though that place may only tend to an aſſurance of a Church in the world while the world endures; yet it would be but ſmall comfort, if the happineſs of Believers ſhould endure no longer than the Heavens and Earth, if they were to have a total period.

(3.) Beſides, the Bodies of the Saints muſt have place for their ſupport to move in, and glorious objects ſuted to thoſe glorious ſenſes which ſhall be reſtored to them; Not in any carnal way which our Saviour rejects, when he ſaith there is no eating, or drinking, or marrying, &c. in the other world; but whereby they may glorifie God; though how or in what manner their ſenſes ſhall be uſed, would be raſhneſs to determine; only only ſomething is neceſſary for the corporeal ſtate of men, that there may be an employment for their ſenſes as well as their Souls.

Rom. 8. 21. (4.) Again, How could the Creature, the world or any part of it be ſaid to be delivered from the bondage of Corruption, into the glorious liberty of the Sons of God; if the whole Frame of Heaven and Earth were to be annihilated, Rom. 8. 21? The Apoſtle alſo ſaith that the Creature waits with an earneſt expectation for this manifeſtation of the Sons of God, v. 19. Which would have no foundation, if the whole frame ſhould be reduced to nothing. What joyful expectation can there be in any of a total ruin? How ſhould the Creature be capable of partaking in this glorious liberty of the Sons of God?

* Hyper. in Heb. 1. * As the World for the ſin of man loſt its firſt dignity, and was curſed after the fall, and the Beauty beſtowed upon it by Creation defaced; So it ſhall recover that ancient glory, when he ſhall be fully reſtored by the Reſurrection to that dignity he loſt by his firſt ſin. As man ſhall be freed from his corruptibility to receive that glory which is prepared for him; ſo ſhall the Creatures be freed from that imperfection or corruptibility, thoſe ſtains and ſpots upon the face of them, to receive a new glory ſuted to their nature and anſwerable to the deſign of God; when the glorious liberty of

* Meſtraʒat ſur. Heb. 1. the Saints ſhall be accompliſht. * As when a Prince's Nuptials are ſolemnized, the whole Country eccho's with joy; ſo the inanimate Creatures, when the time of the Marriage of the Lamb is come, ſhall have a delight and pleaſure from that renovation. The Apoſtle ſets forth the whole world as a perſon groaning, and the Scripture is frequenrt in ſuch Metaphors; as when the Creatures are ſaid to wait upon God, and to be troubled *; the Hills are ſaid to leap, and the Mountains to rejoyce: The Crea-

* Pſal. 104. 27, 29. ture is ſaid to groan, as the Heavens are ſaid to declare the glory of God, paſſively, naturally, not rationally. 'Tis not likely Angels are here meant, though they cannot but deſire it; ſince they are affected with the diſhonour and reproach God hath in the world, they cannot but long for the reſtoration of his honour in the reſtoration of the Creature to its true end: And indeed the Angels are employed to ſerve man in this ſinful ſtate, and cannot but in holineſs wiſh the Creature freed from his corruption: Nor is it meant of the new Creatures which have the firſt fruits of the Spi-

* Verſe 23. rit, thoſe he brings in afterwards, groaning and waiting for the Adoption *; where he diſtinguiſheth the rational Creature from the Creature he had ſpoken of before: If he had meant the believing Creature by that Creature that deſired the liberty of the Sons of God; what need had there been of that additional diſtinction, and not only they, but we alſo who have the firſt fruits of the Spirit, groan within our ſelves? Whereby it ſeems he means ſome Creatures below rational Creatures, ſince neither Angels nor bleſſed Souls can be ſaid to travail in pain, with that diſtreſs as a Woman in travail hath, as the word ſignifies, who perform the work joyfully which God ſets

* Meſtraʒat ſur. Heb. 1. them upon *. If the Creatures be ſubject to vanity by the ſin of man, they ſhall alſo partake of a happineſs by the reſtoration of man. The Earth hath born Thorns and Thiſtles, and venemous Beaſts; The Air hath had its Tempeſts and infectious Qualities; The Water hath cauſed its Floods and Deluges. The Creature hath been abuſed to luxury and intemperance, and been tyranniz'd over by Man, contrary to the end of its creation: 'Tis convenient that ſome time ſhould be allotted for the Creature's attaining its true end, and that it may partake of the peace of Man, as it hath done of the fruits of his ſin; otherwiſe it would ſeem that ſin had prevailed more than grace, and would have had more power to deface than grace to reſtore things into their due order.

* Pſal. 96. 11, 12, 13. 5. Again, upon what account ſhould the Pſalmiſt exhort the Heavens to rejoyce, and the Earth to be glad, when God comes to judge the world with righteouſneſs *; if they ſhould be annihilated and ſunk for ever into nothing? It would ſeem, ſaith Daille, to be an impertinent figure, if the Judge of the world brought them to a total deſtruction; an entire ruin could not be matter of triumph to Creatures, who naturally have that inſtinct or inclination put into them by their Creator to preſerve themſelves, and to affect their own preſervation.

6. Again, The Lord is to rejoyce in his works, Pſal. 104. 31. The Glory of the Lord ſhall endure for ever; the Lord ſhall rejoyce in his works; not hath, but ſhall rejoyce in his works: In the works of Creation; which the Pſalmiſt had enumerated, and which is the whole ſcope of the Pſalm: And he intimates that it is part of the glory of the Lord which endures for ever, that is, his manifeſtative glory, to rejoyce in his works:

works: The Glory of the Lord must be understood with reference to the Creation he had spoken of before. How short was that joy God had in his works after he had sent them beautified out of his hand? How soon did he repent, not only that he had made Man, but was grieved at the heart also, that he made the other Creatures which Man's sin had disordered? What joy can God have in them, since the Curse upon the entrance of sin into the world, remains upon them? If they are to be annihilated upon the full restoration of his Holiness, what time will God have to rejoyce in the other works of Creation? 'Tis the joy of God to see all his works in their due order; every one pointing to their true end; marching together in their excellency, according to his first intendment in their Creation. Did God create the World to perform its end only for one day; scarce so much, if Adam fell the very first day of his Creation? What would have been their end, if Adam had been confirm'd in a state of happiness as the Angels were; 'tis likely will be answered and performed upon the compleat restoration of Man to that happy state from whence he fell. What Artificer compiles a work by his skill but to rejoyce in it? And shall God have no joy from the works of his hands? Since God can only rejoyce in goodness, the Creatures must have that goodness restored to them which God pronounced them to have at the first Creation, and which he ordained them for, before he can again rejoyce in his works: The goodness of the Creatures is the glory and joy of God.

* Gen. 6. 7.

Inference 1. We may infer from hence, what a base and vile thing Sin is, which lays the foundation of the worlds change. Sin brings it to decrepit age: Sin overturned the whole work of God *; so that to render it useful to its proper end, there is a necessity of a kind of a new creating it: This causes God to fire the Earth for a purification of it from that infection and contagion brought upon it by the apostacy and corruption of Man: It hath served sinful man, and therefore must undergo a purging Flame to be fit to serve the holy and righteous Creator. As Sin is so riveted in the body of man, that there is need of a change by death to raise it out; so hath the Curse for sin got so deep into the bowels of the world, that there is need of a change by fire to refine it for its Masters use. Let us look upon Sin with no other notion than as the Object of Gods hatred, the cause of his grief in the Creatures, and the Spring of the pain and ruin of the World.

* Gen. 3. 17.

2. How foolish a thing is it to set our hearts upon that which shall perish, and be no more what it is now? The Heavens and Earth, the solidest and firmest parts of the Creation shall not continue in the posture they are; they must perish and undergo a refining change: How feeble and weak are the other parts of the Creation, the little Creatures walking upon and fluttering about the world, that are perishing and dying every day; and we scarce see them clothed with life and beauty this day, but they wither and are dispoyl'd of all the next; and are such frail things fit Objects for our everlasting Spirits and Affections? Though the daily employment of the Heavens is the declaration of the glory of God *, yet neither this, nor their harmony, order, beauty, amazing greatness and glory of them, shall preserve them from a dissolution and melting at the presence of the Lord: Though they have remained in the same posture from the Creation till this day, and are of so great antiquity; yet they must bow down to a change before the Will and Word of their Creator; and shall we rest upon that which shall vanish like Smoke? Shall we take any Creature for our support like Ice, that will crack under our feet, and must by the order of their Lord Creator deceive our hopes? Perishing things can be no support to the Soul; If we would have rest, we must run to God and rest in God. How contemptible should that be to us: whose fashion shall pass away, which shall not endure long in its present form and appearance; contemptible as a rest, not contemptible as the work of God; contemptible as an end, not contemptible as a means to attain our end? If these must be changed, how unworthy are other things to be the Center of our Souls, that change in our very using of them, and slide away in our very enjoyment of them?

* Psal. 19. 1.

Thou art the same. The Essence of God with all the perfections of his nature are pronounced the same, without any variation from Eternity to Eternity: So that the Text doth not only assert the eternal duration of God, but his Immutabily in that duration: his Eternity is signified in that expression thou shalt endure; his Immutabi-lity in this, thou art the ſame. * To endure, argues indeed his Immutability as well as Eternity; For what endures, is not changed, and what is changed, doth not endure: But thou art the ſame * doth more fully ſignifie it: He could not be the ſame if he could be changed into any other thing than what he is; The Pſalmiſt therefore puts, not thou haſt been or ſhalt be, but thou art the ſame without any alteration; thou art the ſame, that is, the ſame God, the ſame in Eſſence and Nature, the ſame in Will and Purpoſe, Thou doſt change all other things as thou pleaſeſt; but thou art immutable in every reſpect, and receiveſt no ſhadow of change, though never ſo light and ſmall. * The Pſalmiſt here alludes to the name Jehovah, I am; and doth not only aſcribe Immutability to God, but exclude every thing elſe from partaking in that perfection: All things elſe are tottering; God ſees all other things in continual motion under his feet, like Water paſſing away and no more ſeen, while he remains fixed and immoveable: His Wiſdom and Power, his knowledge and Will are alway the ſame. His Eſſence can receive no alteration, neither by it ſelf not by any external Cauſe; whereas other things either naturally decline to deſtruction, paſs from one term to another till they come to their period; or ſhall at the laſt day be wrapped up, after God hath compleated his Will in them and by them; as a man doth a Garment he intends to repair and transform to another uſe.

lity

* Eſtius in Heb. 1.

Chryſoſtom אחה הוא

* Αλλοιώσεως κρείττων, above all change Theodor.

So that in the Text God as immutable, is oppoſed to all Creatures as periſhing and changeable.

Doct. God is unchangeable in his Eſſence, Nature, and Perfections. Immutability and Eternity are linkt together; and indeed true Eternity is true Immutability, whence Eternity is defin'd the Poſſeſſion of an immutable Life. Yet Immutability differs from Eternity in our conception: Immutability reſpects the Eſſence or Exiſtence of a thing, Eternity reſpects the duration of a being in that State; or rather, * Immutability is the State it ſelf, Eternity is the meaſure of that State. A thing is ſaid to be changed, when it is otherwiſe now in regard of Nature, State, Will, or any Quality than it was before; when either ſomething is added to it or taken from it; when it either loſes or acquires: But now it is the eſſential property of God, not to have any acceſſion to, or diminution of his Eſſence or Attributes, but to remain entirely the ſame: He wants nothing; He loſes nothing, but doth uniformly exiſt by himſelf, without any new nature, new thoughs, new will, new purpoſe, or new place.

* Gamacheus.

* This unchangeableneſs of God was anciently repreſented by the figure of a Cube, a piece of Metal or Wood framed four-ſquare; when every ſide is exactly of the ſame equality, caſt it which way you will, it will always be in the ſame poſture, becauſe it is equal to it ſelf in all its dimenſions: He was therefore ſaid to be the Center of all thiugs, and other things the Circumference; the Center is never moved while the Circumference is; it remains immoveable in the midſt of the Circle: There is no variableneſs nor ſhadow of turning with him. * The Moon hath her Spots, ſo hath the Sun; there is a mixture of Light and Darkneſs; it hath its changes; ſometimes it is in the increaſe, ſometimes in the wane; it is always either gaining or loſing; and by the turnings and motions, either of the Heavenly-bodies or of the Earth, 'tis in its Eclipſe: by the interpoſition of the Earth between that and the Sun. The Sun alſo hath its diurnal and annual motion; it riſeth and ſets, and puts on a different Face: It doth not alway ſhine with a noon-day light; 'tis ſometimes vail'd with Clouds and Vapours; it is always going from one Tropick to another, whereby it makes various ſhadows on the Earth, and produceth the various ſeaſons of the year; 'tis not always in our Hemiſphere, nor doth it always ſhine with an equal force and brightneſs in it: Such ſhadows and variations have no place in the eternal Father of Lights; He hath not the leaſt ſpot or diminution of Brightneſs; nothing can cloud him or eclipſe him. For the better underſtanding this Perfection of God,

* Amyraut ſur Heb. 9. p. 153.

* James 1. 17.

I ſhall Premiſe three things.

1. The Immutability of God is a Perfection. Immutability conſidered in it ſelf without relation to other things, is not a Perfection. 'Tis the greateſt miſery and imperfection of the evil Angels, that they are immutable in malice againſt God: But as God is infinite in Eſſence, infinitely good, wiſe, holy; ſo it is a Perfection neceſſary to his Nature, that he ſhould be immutably all this; all excellency, goodneſs, wiſdom, immutably all that he is; without this be would be an imperfect Being.

Are

Are not the Angels in Heaven, who are confirmed in a holy and happy ſtate, more perfect than when they were in a poſſibility of committing evil and becoming miſerable; Are not the Saints in Heaven, whoſe Wills by Grace do unalterably cleave to God and goodneſs, more perfect than if they were as Adam in Paradiſe, capable of loſing their Felicity as well as preſerving it? We count a Rock in regard of its ſtability, more excellent than the Duſt of the Ground, or a Feather that is toſſed about with every Wind; Is it not alſo the perfection of the body to have a conſtant tenor of health, and the glory of a man not to warp aſide from what is juſt and right, by the perſwaſions of any temptations?

2. Immutability is a Glory belonging to all the Attributes of God. 'Tis not a ſingle perfection of the Divine Nature, nor is it limited to particular Objects thus and thus diſpoſed. Mercy and Juſtice have their diſtinct objects, and diſtinct acts; Mercy is converſant about a Penitent, Juſtice converſant about an obſtinate Sinner. In our notion and conception of the Divine Perfections, his Perfections are different; The Wiſdom of God is not his Power, nor his Power his Holineſs; but Immutability is the Center wherein they all unite: There is not one Perfection but may be ſaid to be, and truly is immutable; none of them will appear ſo glorious without this Beam, this Sun of Immutability, which renders them highly excellent without the leaſt ſhadow of imperfection: How cloudy would his Bleſſedneſs be, if it were changeable? How dim his Wiſdom, if it might be obſcur'd? How feeble his Power if it were capable to be ſickly and languiſh? How would Mercy loſe much of its luſtre, if it could change into wrath; and Juſtice much of its dread, if it could be turned into Mercy, while the object of Juſtice remains unfit for Mercy, and one that hath need of Mercy continues only fit for the Divine Fury? But unchangeableneſs is a Thread that runs through the whole Web; 'Tis the enamel of all the reſt; none of them without it could look with a triumphant aſpect; His Power is unchangeable; * In the Lord Jehovah is everlaſting ſtrength; his Mercy and his Holineſs endure for ever; He never could, nor ever can look upon iniquity *: He is a Rock in the righteouſneſs of his ways, the truth of his word, the holineſs of his proceedings, and the rectitude of his nature: All are expreſt, Deut. 32. 4. He is a Rock, his work is perfect, for all his ways are Judgment; A God of Truth and without Iniquity, juſt and right is he. All that we conſider in God is unchangeable; for his Eſſence and his Properties are the ſame, and therefore what is neceſſarily belonging to the Eſſence of God, belongs alſo to every perfection of the nature of God; none of them can receive any addition or diminution: From the unchangeableneſs of his nature, the Apoſtle James 1. 17. infers the unchangeableneſs of his Holineſs; and himſelf in Mal. 3. 6. the unchangeableneſs of his Counſel.

* Iſa. 26. 4.

* Hab. 1. 13.

3. Unchangeableneſs doth neceſſarily pertain to the Nature of God. 'Tis of the ſame neceſſity with the rectitude of his Nature; He can no more be changeable in his Eſſence, than he can be unrighteous in his Actions. God is a neceſſary Being; He is neceſſarily what he is, and therefore is unchangeably what he is. Mutability belongs to contingency. If any perfection of his nature could be ſeparated from him, he would ceaſe to be God: What did not poſſeſs the whole Nature of God, could not have the Eſſence of God; 'Tis reciprocated with the Nature of God. Whatſoever is immutable by Nature, is God; whatſoever is God, is immutable by Nature. Some Creatures are immutable by his Grace and Power: * God is holy, happy, wiſe, good by his Eſſence; Angels and Men are made holy, wiſe, happy, ſtrong and good by Qualities and Graces: The Holineſs, Happineſs and Wiſdom of Saints and Angels, as they had a beginning, ſo they are capable of increaſe and diminution, and of an end alſo; for their ſtanding is not from themſelves, or from the nature of created ſtrength, holineſs or wiſdom, which in themſelves are apt to fail, and finally to decay; but from the ſtability and confirmation they have by the Gift and Grace of God: The Heaven and Earth ſhall be changed, and after that renewal and reparation, they ſhall not be changed. Our Bodies after the Reſurrection ſhall not be changed; but for ever be made conformable to the glorious Body of Chriſt *; but this is by the powerful Grace of God: So that indeed thoſe things may be ſaid afterwards rather to be unchanged than unchangeable, becauſe they are not ſo by nature, but by ſoveraign diſpenſation. As Creatures have not neceſſary Beings, ſo they have not neceſſary Immutability. Neceſſity of being, and therefore Immutability of being belongs by nature only to God; otherwiſe if there were any change in God he would be ſometimes what he was not, and would ceaſe to be what he was; which is againſt the nature, and indeed againſt the natural notion of a Deity. Let us ſee then,

* Archbiſh. Serm.

* Phil. 3. 21.

1. In what regards God is immutable.
2. Prove that Gods is immutable.
3. That this is proper to God, and incommunicable to any Creature.
4. Some propoſitions to clear the unchangeableneſs of God from any thing that ſeems contrary to it.
5. The Uſe.

Firſt in what reſpects God is unchangeable.

1. God is unchangeable in his Eſſence. He is unalterably fixed in his Being, that not a Particle of it can be loſt from it, not a Mite added to it. If a Man continue in being as long as Methuſelah, Nine hundred and Sixty nine years; yet there is not a day, nay an hour, wherein there is not ſome alteration in his ſubſtance; though no ſubſtantial part is wanting, yet there is an addition to him by his Food, a diminution of ſomething by his Labour; He is always making ſome acquiſition, or ſuffering ſome loſs: But in God there can be no alteration, by the acceſſion of any thing to make his ſubſtance greater or better, or by diminution to make it leſs or worſe. He who hath no being from another, cannot but be always what he is: God is the firſt Being, an independent Being; He was not produced of himſelf, or of any other, but by nature always hath been; and therefore cannot by himſelf, or by any other be changed from what he is in his own nature. That which is not, may as will aſſume to it ſelf a Being, as he, who hath and is all Being, have the leaſt change from what he is. Again, becauſe he is a Spirit, he is not ſubject to thoſe mutations which are found in corporeal and bodily Natures; Becauſe he is an abſolutely ſimple Spirit, not having the leaſt particle of compoſition; he is not capable of thoſe changes which may be in created Spirits.

1. If his Eſſence were mutable. God would not truly be; It could not
* Exod. 3, 14. be truly ſaid by himſelf, I am that I am, * if he were ſuch a Thing or Being at this time, and a different Being at another time. Whatſoever is changed, properly is not, becauſe it doth not remain to be what it was: That which is changed was ſomething, is ſomething, and will be ſomething; a Being remains to that thing which is changed; yet though it may be ſaid ſuch a thing is, yet it may be alſo ſaid ſuch a thing is not, becauſe it is not what it was in its firſt being; 'tis not now what it was, 'tis now what it was not; 'tis another thing than it was, it was another thing than it is; it will be another thing than what it is or was: 'Tis indeed a Being, but a different Being from what it was before. But if God were changed, it could not be ſaid of him that he is, but it might alſo be ſaid of him that he is not; or if he were changeable or could be changed, it might be ſaid of him he is, but he will not be what he is; or he may not be what he is, but there will be or may be ſome difference in his Being, and ſo God would not be I am that I am; for though he would not ceaſe utterly to be, yet he would ceaſe to be what he was before.

2. Again, If his Eſſence were mutable, he could not be perfectly bleſſed, and fully rejoyce in himſelf. If he changed for the better, he could not have an infinite pleaſure in what he was before the change, becauſe he was not infinitely bleſſed; and the pleaſure of that ſtate could not be of a higher kind than the ſtate it ſelf, or at leaſt the apprehenſion of a happineſs in it: If he changed for the worſe, he could, not have a pleaſure in it after the change; for according to the diminution of his ſtate, would be the decreaſe of his pleaſure: His pleaſure could not be infinite before the change, if he changed for the better; it could not be infinite after the change, if he changed for the worſe: If he changed for the better, he would not have had an infinite Goodneſs of being before; and not having an infinite Goodneſs of Being, he would have a finite Goodneſs of Being; for there is no medium between finite and infinite: Then though the change were for the better, yet being finite before, ſomething would be ſtill wanting to make him infinitely bleſſed; becauſe being finite, he could not change to that which is infinite; for finite and infinite are extreams ſo diſtant; that they can never paſs into one another; that is, that that which is finite ſhould become infinite, or that which is infinite ſhould become finite: So that ſuppoſing him mutable, his Eſſence in no ſtate of change, could furniſh him with an infinite peace and bleſſedneſs.

3. Again,

3. Again, if Gods Eſſence be changed, *he either encreaſeth or diminiſheth: Whatſoever is changed, doth either gain by receiving ſome thing larger and greater than it had in it ſelf before, or gains nothing by being changed. If the former, then it receives more than it ſelf, more than it had in it ſelf before. The Divine Nature cannot be encreaſed; for whatſoever receives any thing than what it had in it ſelf before, muſt neceſſarily receive it from another, becauſe nothing can give to it ſelf that which it hath not: But God cannot receive from another what he hath not already, becauſe whatſoever other things poſſeſs, is derived from him, and therefore contained in him, as the Fountain contains the Vertue in it ſelf which it conveys to the ſtreams; ſo that God cannot gain any thing: If a thing that is changed gain nothing by that change, it loſeth ſomething of what it had before in it ſelf; and this loſs muſt be by it ſelf or ſome other. God cannot receive any loſs from any thing in himſelf; he cannot will his own diminution; that is repugnant to every Nature: He may as well will his own deſtruction as his own decreaſe; Every decreaſe is a partial deſtruction: But it is impoſſible for God to dye any kind of Death, to have any reſemblance of death, for he is immortal, and *only hath Immortality, therefore impoſſible to be diminiſht in any particle of his Eſſence; nor can he be diminiſht by any thing in his own Nature, becauſe his infinite ſimplicity admits of nothing diſtinct from himſelf, or contrary to himſelf. All decreaſes come from ſomething contrary to the nature of that thing which doth decreaſe: Whatſoever is made leſs than it ſelf, was not truly Unum, one and ſimple, becauſe that which divides it ſelf in ſeparation was not the ſame in conjunction. Nor can he be diminiſht by any other without himſelf; becauſe nothing is ſuperior to God, nothing ſtronger than God which can oppreſs him: But whatſoever is changed, is weaker than that which changeth it, and ſinks under a Power it cannot ſucceſſfully reſiſt; Weakneſs belongs not to the Deity. Nor laſtly, can God change from a State wherein he is, to another State equal to the former, as men in ſome caſes may do; for in paſſing from one ſtate to another equal to it, ſomething muſt be parted with which he had before, that ſome other thing may accrue to him as a recompenſe for that loſs, to make him equal to what he was: This recompenſe then he had not before, though he had ſomething equal to it: And in this caſe it could not be ſaid by God I am that Iam, but I am equal to what I was; for in this caſe there would be a diminution and increaſe which (as was ſhewed) cannot be in God.

* Hugo Victorin. in petavio.

* 1 Tim. 6 16.

* Victorinus. in petavio.

4. Again, *God is of himſelf, from no other: Natures, which are made by God, may increaſe, becauſe they began to be; they may decreaſe, becauſe they were made of nothing, and ſo tend to nothing; the condition of their original leads them to defect, and the Power of their Creator brings them to increaſe. But God hath no original, he hath no defect, becauſe he was not made of nothing; He hath no increaſe, becauſe he had no beginning: He was before all things, and therefore depends upon no other thing which by its own change can bring any change upon him. *That which is from it ſelf cannot be changed, becauſe it hath nothing before it, nothing more excellent than it ſelf; But that which is from another, as its firſt cauſe and chief good, may be changed by that which was its efficient cauſe and laſt end.

* Auſtin. Fulgen. in Petavio.

* Petav. Tom. 1. p. 173.

2. God is immutable in regard of Knowledge. God hath known from all Eternity all that which he can know, ſo that nothing is hid from him; He knows not at preſent any more than he hath known from Eternity, and that which he knows now, he always knows; All things are open and naked before him, Heb. 4. 13. A man is ſaid to be changed in regard of knowledge, when he knows that now which he did not know before, or knows that to be falſe now which he thought true before, or hath ſomething for the Object of his Underſtanding now, which he had not before: But

1. This would be repugnant to the Wiſdom and Omniſcience which belongs to the Notion of a Deity. That cannot be God, that is not infinitely wiſe; that cannot be infinitely wiſe, that is either ignorant of, or miſtaken in his apprehenſion of any one thing. If God be changed in knowledge, it muſt be for want of Wiſdom; all change of this nature in Creatures, implies this defect preceding or accompanying it: Such a though of God, would have been unworthy of him that is only wiſe; that hath no Mate for Wiſdom*! none wiſe beſides himſelf: If he knew that thing this day which he knew not before, he would not be an only wiſe Being; for a being that did know every thing at once, might be conceived, and ſo a wiſer Being be apprehended by the mind of man. If God underſtood a thing at one time, which he did not at another he would be changed from Ignorance to Knowledge; As if he could not do that this day which he could do to morrow, he would be changed from Impotence to Power: He could not be always Omniſcient, becauſe there might be yet ſomething ſtill to come which he yet knows not, though he may know all things that are paſt. What way ſoever you ſuppoſe a change, you muſt ſuppoſe a preſent or a paſt Ignorance; If he be changed in his knowledge for the perfection of his underſtanding, he was ignorant before; If his underſtanding be impaired by the change, he is ignorant after it.

* 1 Tim. 1 17.

2. If God were changeable in his Knowledge, it would make him unfit to be an Object of Truſt to any rational Creature. His Revelations would want the due ground for entertainment, if his Underſtanding were changeable; for that might be revealed as truth now which might prove falſe hereafter, and that as falſe now which hereafter might prove true; and ſo God would be an unfit Object of Obedience in regard of his Precepts, and an unfit Object of confidence in regard of his Promiſes: For if he be changeable in Knowledge, he is defective in Knowledge, and might promiſe that now which he would know afterwards was unfit to be promiſed, and therefore unfit to be performed: It would make him an incompetent Object of dread, in regard of his threatnings; for he might threaten that now, which he might know hereafter were not fit or juſt to be inflicted. A changeable mind and underſtanding cannot make a due and right judgment of things to be done, and things to be avoided. No wiſe man would judge it reaſonable to truſt a weak and flitting perſon.

God muſt needs be unchangeable in his Knowledge: But, as the Schoolmen ſay, that as the Sun always ſhines, ſo God always knows; as the Sun never ceaſeth to ſhine, ſo God never ceaſeth to know: Nothing can be hid from the vaſt compaſs of his Underſtanding; no more than any thing can ſhelter it ſelf without the Verge of his Power. This farther appears in that,

1. God knows by his own Eſſence. He doth not know as we do, by habits, qualities, ſpecies, whereby we may be miſtaken at one time, and rectified at another: He hath not an Underſtanding diſtinct from his Eſſence as we have; but being the moſt ſimple Being, his Underſtanding is his Eſſence; and as from the infiniteneſs of his Eſſence we conclude the infiniteneſs of his Underſtanding, ſo from the unchangeableneſs of his Eſſence, we may juſtly conclude the unchangeableneſs of his Knowledge. Since therefore God is without all compoſition, and his Underſtanding is not diſtinct from his Eſſence; what he knows, he knows by his Eſſence; and there can then be no more mutability in his knowledge, than there can be in his Eſſence; and if there were any in that, he could not be God, becauſe he would have the property of a Creature, If his Underſtanding then be his Eſſence, his Knowledge is as neceſſary, as unchangeable as his Eſſence: As his Eſſence eminently contains all perfections in it ſelf, ſo his Underſtandings comprehends all things paſt, preſent, and future, in it ſelf: If his Underſtanding and his Eſſence were not one and the ſame, he were not ſimple but compounded; if compounded, he would conſiſt of parts; if he conſiſted of parts, he would not be an independent Being, and ſo would not be God.

2. God knows all things by one intuitive act. As there is no ſucceſſion in his Being, ſo that he is one thing now and another thing hereafter; ſo there is no ſucceſſion in his knowledge: He knows things that are ſucceſſive, before their exiſtence and ſucceſſion, by one ſingle act of intuition; by one caſt of his eye all things future are preſent to him in regard of his Eternity and Omnipreſence: So that though there is a change and variation in the things known, yet his Knowledge of them and their ſeveral changes in nature, is invariable and unalterable. As imagin a Creature that could ſee with his eye at one glance the whole compaſs of the Heavens, by ſending out beams from his eye without receiving any ſpecies from them, he would ſee the whole Heavens uniformly; this part now in the Eaſt, then in the Weſt, without any change in his eye; for he ſees every part and every motion together; and though that great Body varies and whirls about, and is in continual agitation; his eye remains ſtedfaſt, ſuffers no change, beholds all their motions at once and by one glance. * God knows all things from Eternity, and therefore perpetually knows them; the reaſon is becauſe the Divine Knowledge is infinite *, and therefore

* Suarez. vol. 1. pa. 137.

* Pſal. 145. 5. His underſtanding is infinite.

com-

comprehends all knowable Truths at once. An eternal Knowledge comprehends in it ſelf all Time, and beholds paſt and preſent in the ſame manner, and therefore his Knowledge is immutable: By one ſimple Knowledge he conſiders the infinite ſpaces of paſt and future.

3. Gods knowledge and Will is the cauſe of all things and their ſucceſſions. * There can be no pretence of any changeableneſs of knowledge in God, but in this caſe, before things come to paſs, he knows that they will come to paſs; after they are come to paſs, he knows that they are paſt and ſlide away. This would be ſomething if the ſucceſſion of things were the cauſe of the Divine Knowledge, as it is of our knowledge; but on the contrary, the Divine Knowledge and Will is the cauſe of the ſucceſſion of them: God doth not know Creatures becauſe they are, but they are becauſe he knows them. All his works were known to him from the beginning of the world. * All his works were not known to him, if the events of all thoſe works were not alſo known to him; If they were not known to him how ſhould he make them? He could not do any thing ignorantly: He made them then after he knew them, and did not know them after he made them: His Knowledge of them made a change in them, their exiſtence made no change in his Knowledge: He knew them when they were to be Created, in the ſame manner that he knew them after they were Created; before they were brought into act, as well as after they were brought into act; before they were made, they were, and were not; they were in the Knowledge of God, when they were not in their own nature: God did not receive his knowledge from their exiſtence, but his knowledge and Will acted upon them to bring them into being.

* Auſtin. Bradwardine.

* Acts 15. 18.

4. Therefore the diſtinction of paſt and future makes no change in the Knowledge of God. When a thing is paſt, God hath no more diſtinct knowledge of it after it is paſt, than he had when it was to come; all things were all in their Circumſtances of paſt, preſent, and to come, ſeen by his Underſtanding, as they were determined by his Will. * Beſides to know a day to be paſt or future, is only to know the ſtate of that day in it ſelf, and to know its relation, to that which follows and that which went before: This day wherein we are, if we conſider it in the ſtate wherein it was yeſterday, it was to come, it was future; but if we conſider it in that ſtate wherein it will be to morrow, we underſtand it as paſt. This in man cannot be ſaid to be a different knowledge of the thing it ſelf, but only of the circumſtance attending a thing, and the different relation of it. As I ſee the Sun this day, I know it was up yeſterday, I know it will be up to morrow; my knowledge of the Sun is the ſame; if there be any change it is in the Sun not in my knowledge, only I apply my knowledge to ſuch particular circumſtances. How much more muſt the knowledge of thoſe things in God be unchangeable, who knows all thoſe ſtates, conditions and circumſtances moſt perfectly from Eternity, wherein there is no ſucceſſion, no paſt or future, and therefore will know them for ever? He always beholds the ſame thing; he ſees indeed ſucceſſion in things, and he ſees a thing to be paſt which before was future: As from Eternity he ſaw Adam as exiſting in ſuch a time; In the firſt time he ſaw that he would be, in the following time he ſaw that he had been: But this he knew from Eternity, this he knew in the ſame manner; tho there was a variation in Adam, yet there was no variation in Gods knowledge of him in all his ſtates; though Adam was not preſent to himſelf, yet in all his ſtates he was preſent to Gods Eternity.

* Gamch 1. pa. Aquin. Qu. 9. cap. 1. pa. 73.

5. Conſider, that the knowledge of God, in regard of the manner of it as well as the objects, is incomprehenſible to a finite Creature. So that tho we cannot arrive to a full underſtanding of the manner of Gods Knowledge, yet we muſt conceive ſo of it, as to remove all imperfection from him in it: And ſince it is an imperfection to be changeable, we muſt remove that from God; the Knowledge of God about things paſt, preſent, and future, muſt be unconceivably above ours: His underſtanding is infinite, Pſal. 147. 5. There is no number of it; it can no more be calculated or drawn into an account by us, than infinite ſpaces which have no bounds and limits can be meaſured by us. We can no more arrive, even in Heaven, to a comprehenſive underſtanding of the manner of his Knowledge, than of the infinite glory of his Eſſence; we may as well comprehend one as the other. This we muſt conclude, that God being not a Body, doth not ſee one thing with eyes and another thing with mind, as we

we do; but being a Spirit, he ſees and knows only with Mind, and his Mind is himſelf, and is as unchangeable as himſelf; and therefore as he is not now another thing than what he was, ſo he knows not any thing now in another manner than as he knew it from Eternity: He ſees all things in the Glaſs of his own Eſſence; as therefore the Glaſs doth not vary, ſo neither doth his Viſion.

3. God is unchangeable in regard of his Will and Purpoſe. A change in purpoſe is, when a man determins to do that now which before he determined not to do, or to do the contrary; when a man hates that thing which he loved, or begins to love that which he before hated: When the Will is changed, a man begins to will that which he willed not before, and ceaſeth to will that which he willed before: But whatſoever God hath decreed, is immutable; whatſoever God hath promiſed, ſhall be accompliſht; The Word that goes forth of his Mouth ſhall not return to him void, but it ſhall accompliſh that which he pleaſeth *; whatſoever he purpoſeth, he will do *; His Decrees are therefore called Mountains of Braſs *; Braſs, as having ſubſtance and ſolidity; Mountains, as being immoveable, not only by any Creature but by himſelf, becauſe they ſtand upon the Baſis of infallible Wiſdom, and are ſupported by uncontroulable Power. From this Immutability of his Will publiſht to Man, there could be no releaſe from the ſeverity of the Law, without ſatisfaction made by the death of a Mediator, ſince it was the unalterable Will of God that death ſhould be the wages of Sin; and from this immutable Will it was, that the length of Time from the firſt promiſe of the Redeemer to his miſſion, and the daily provocations of men altered not his purpoſe for the accompliſhment of it in the fullneſs of that time he had reſolved upon; Nor did the wickedneſs of former Ages hinder the addition of ſeveral promiſes as Buttreſſes to the firſt.

* Iſa. 55. 11. Iſa. 46. 11. *Numb. 23. 19. * Zach. 6. 1.

To make this out, conſider,

1. The Will of God is the ſame with his Eſſence. If God had a Will diſtinct from his Eſſence, he would not be the moſt ſimple Being. God hath not a faculty of Will diſtinct from himſelf: As his Underſtanding is nothing elſe but Deus intelligens, God underſtanding; ſo his Will is nothing elſe but Deus volens, God willing; being therefore the Eſſence of God, though it is conſidered according to our weakneſs as a faculty, 'tis as his Underſtanding and Wiſdom, eternal and immutable, and can no more be changed than his Eſſence; The Immutability of the Divine Counſel depends upon that of his Eſſence: He is the Lord Jehovah, therefore he is true to his Word, Mal. 3. 6. Iſa. 43. 13. Yea, before the Day was, I am, He, and there is none that can deliver out of my hand. He is the ſame, immutable in his Eſſence, therefore irreſiſtable in his Power.

2. There is a concurrence of Gods Will and Underſtanding in every thing. As his Knowledge is eternal, ſo is his Purpoſe. Things created had not been known to be, had not God reſolved them to be the act of his Will; the exiſtence of any thing ſuppoſeth an Act of his Will. Again as God knows all things by one ſimple viſion of his Underſtanding, ſo he wills all things by one act of volition; therefore the Purpoſe of God in the Scripture is not expreſt by Counſels in the Plural Number, but Counſel, ſhewing that all the purpoſes of God are not various, but as one Will, branching it ſelf out into many acts towards the Creature; but all knit in one Root, all links of one Chain. Whatſoever is eternal, is immutable: As his Knowledge is eternal, and therefore immutable, ſo is his Will; He wills or nills nothing to be in Time, but what he willed and nilled from Eternity; if he willed in Time that to be, that he willed not from Eternity, then he would know that in Time which he knew not from Eternity: For God knows nothing future, but as his Will orders it to be future and in time to be brought into being.

3. There can be no Reaſon for any change in the Will of God. When men change in their minds, it muſt be for want of foreſight, becauſe they could not foreſee all the Rubs and Bars which might ſuddenly offer themſelves; which if they had foreſeen, they would not have taken ſuch meaſures; hence men often will that which they afterwards wiſh they had not willed, when they come to underſtand it clearer, and ſee that to be injurious to them which they thought to be good for them; or elſe the change proceeds from a natural inſtability without any juſt cauſe, and an eaſineſs to be drawn into that which is unrighteous; or elſe it proceeds from a want of power, when men take new Counſels, becauſe they are invincibly hindred from executing the old. But none of thoſe can be in God.

1. It

1. It cannot be for want of foreſight. What can be wanting to an infinite Underſtanding? How can any unknown event defeat his Purpoſe; ſince nothing happens in the world but what he wills to effect, or wills to permit; and therefore all future events are preſent with him? Beſides, it doth not conſiſt with Gods Wiſdom to reſolve any thing, but upon the higheſt reaſon; and what is the higheſt and infinite reaſon, cannot but be unalterable in it ſelf; for there can be no Reaſon and Wiſdom higher than the higheſt. All Gods purpoſes are not bare acts of Will, but acts of Counſel, Eph. 1. 11. He works all things according to the Counſel of his own Will; and he doth not ſay ſo much that his Will, as that his Counſel ſhall ſtand Iſa. 46. 10. It ſtands becauſe it is Counſel: And the Immutability of a Promiſe is called the Immutability of his Counſel, Heb. 6. 17. as being introduced and ſettled by the moſt perfect Wiſdom, and therefore to be carried on to a full and compleat execution: His Purpoſe then cannot be changed for want of foreſight; for this would be a charge of weakneſs.

2. Nor can it proceed from a natural Inſtability of his Will, or an eaſineſs to be drawn to that which is unrighteous: If his Will ſhould not adhere to his Counſel, 'tis becauſe it is not fit to be followed, or becauſe it will not follow it; If not fit to be followed, 'tis a reflection upon his Wiſdom; if it be eſtabliſht and he will not follow it, there is a contrariety in God, as there is in a fallen Creature, Will againſt wiſdom: That cannot be in God, which he hates in a Creature, viz. the diſorder of faculties, and being out of their due place. The Righteouſneſs of God is like a great Mountain, Pſal. 36. 6. The rectitude of his Nature is as immovable in it ſelf, as all the great Mountains in the World are by the ſtrength of Man. He is not as a Man, that he ſhould repent or lye, Numb. 23. 19. who often changes, out of a perverſity of Will, as well as want of wiſdom to foreſee, or want of ability to perform. His eternal Purpoſe muſt either be righteous or unrighteous; if righteous and holy, he would become unholy by the change; if not righteous nor holy, then he was unrighteous before the change; which way ſoever it falls, it would reflect upon the Righteouſneſs of God, which is a blaſphemous imagination. * If God did change his Purpoſe, it muſt be either for the better, then the Counſel of God was bad before; or for the worſe, then he was not wiſe and good before.

* Maxim. Tyrius diſſert. 3. 30.

3. Nor can it be for want of ſtrength. Who hath power to controul him? Not all the combin'd devices and endeavours of men can make the Counſel of God to totter Prov. 19. 21. There are many devices in a mans heart, nevertheleſs the Counſel of the Lord, that ſhall ſtand; that, and that only ſhall ſtand: Man hath a power to deviſe and imagin, but no power to effect and execute of himſelf. God wants no more Power to effect what he will, than he wants Underſtanding to know what is fit.

Well then, ſince God wanted not Wiſdom to frame his Decrees, nor Holineſs to regulate them, nor Power to effect them; what ſhould make him change them? Since there can be no reaſon ſuperior to His; no event unforeſeen by him; no Holineſs comparable to His; no Unrighteouſneſs found in Him; no Power equal to His to put a rub in his way.

4. Though the Will of God be immutable, yet it is not to be underſtood ſo, as that the things themſelves ſo willed, are immutable; Nor will the immutability of the things willed by him, follow upon the unchangeableneſs of his Will in willing them; though God be firm in willing them, yet he doth not will that they ſhould alway be. God did not perpetually will the doing thoſe things which he once decreed to be done: He decreed that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer, but he did not decree that Chriſt ſhould alway ſuffer; ſo he willed the Moſaical Rites for a time, but he did not will that they ſhould alway continue; He willed that they ſhould endure only for a time, and when the time came for their ceaſing, God had been mutable if he had not put an end to them, becauſe his Will had fixed ſuch a Period: So that the changing of thoſe things which he had once appointed to be practiſed, is ſo far from charging God with changeablneſs, that God would be mutable if he did not take them away, ſince he decreed as well their abolition at ſuch a time, as their continuance till ſuch a time; ſo that the removal of them was purſuant to his unchangeable Will and Decree. If God had decreed that ſuch Laws ſhould alway continue, and afterwards changed that Decree, and reſolved the abrogation of them; then indeed God had been mutable; He had reſcinded one Decree by another; He had then ſeen an error in his firſt reſolve, and there muſt be ſome weakneſs in the reaſon and wiſdom whereon it was grounded: * But it was not ſo here; for the change of thoſe Laws is ſo far from ſlurring God with any mutability, that the very change of them is no other than the Iſſue of his eternal Decree; for from Eternity he purpoſed in himſelf to change this or that diſpenſation, though he did decree to bring ſuch a diſpenſation into the world: The Decree it ſelf was eternal and immutable, but the thing decreed was temporary and mutable. As a Decree from Eternity doth not make the thing decreed to be eternal; ſo neither doth the immutability of the Decree, render the thing ſo decreed to be immutable: As for Example, God decreed from all Eternity to create the World; the Eternity of this Decree did not make the world to be in being and actually created from Eternity; ſo God decreed immutably that the world ſo created ſhould continue for ſuch a time; The Decree is immutable if the world periſh at that time, and would not be immutable if the world did endure beyond that time that God hath fixed for the duration of it: As when a Prince orders a mans remaining in Priſon for ſo many days; if he be prevailed with to give him a Delivery before thoſe days, or to continue him in cuſtody for the ſame Crime after thoſe days, his Order is changed; But if he orders the delivery of him juſt at that time, till which he had before decreed that he ſhould continue in Priſon, the Purpoſe and Order of the Prince remains firm, and the change in the ſtate of the Priſoner, is the fruit of that firm and fixed reſolution: So that we muſt diſtinguiſh between the Perſon decreeing, the Decree if ſelf, and the Thing decreed. The Perſon decreeing, viz. God is in himſelf immutable, and the Decree is immutable; but the Thing decreed may be mutable; and if it were not changed according to the firſt purpoſe, it would argue the Decree it ſelf to be changed; For whiles a Man wills that this may be done now, and another thing done afterwards; the ſame Will remains, and though there be a change in the Effect, there is no change in the Will.

changed

* Turretin, de ſatisfac. p. 266.

5. The Immutability of Gods Will doth not infringe the Liberty of it. The Liberty of Gods Will conſiſts with the neceſſity of continuing his Purpoſe. God is neceſſarily good, immutably good; yet he is freely ſo, and would not be otherwiſe than what he is. God was free in his firſt Purpoſe; and purpoſing this or that by an infallible and unerring Wiſdom, it would be a weakneſs to change the Purpoſe: But indeed the Liberty of Gods Will doth not ſeem ſo much to conſiſt in an indifferency to this or that, as in an independency on any thing without himſelf: His Will was free, becauſe it did not depend upon the Objects about which his Will was converſant. To be immutably good, is no point of Imperfection, but the height of Perfection.

4. As God is unchangeable in regard of Eſſence, Knowledge, Purpoſe; ſo he is unchangeable in regard of Place, He cannot be changed in Time, becauſe he is Eternity; ſo he cannot be changed in Place, becauſe he hath Ubiquity: He is eternal, therefore cannot be changed in time; He is omnipreſent, therefore cannot be changed in Place: He doth not begin to be in one Place wherein he was not before, or ceaſe to be in a Place wherein he was before. He that fills every place in Heaven and Earth, cannot change Place; He cannot leave one to poſſeſs another, that is equally in regard of his Eſſence in all; He fills Heaven and Earth, Jer. 23. 24. The Heavens that are not ſubject to thoſe changes to which ſublunary Bodies are ſubject, that are not diminiſht in quantity or quality; yet they are alway changing place in regard of their motion; no part of them doth alway continue in the ſame point: But God hath no change of his Nature, becauſe he is moſt inward in every thing; He is ſubſtantially in all Spaces, real and imaginary; There is no part of the world which he doth not fill; no place can be imagined wherein he doth not exiſt. Suppoſe a Million of worlds above and about this, encircling one another; his Eſſence would be in every part and point of thoſe Worlds; Becauſe it is indiviſible, it cannot be divided; nor can it be contained within thoſe created limits of Millions of worlds, when the moſt ſoaring and beſt coyning fancy hath run through all Creatures, to the higheſt Sphear of the Heavens, and imagined one world after another, till it can fancy no more: None of theſe, nor all of theſe can contain God; for the Heaven of Heavens

vens cannot contain him, 1 Kings 8. 27. He is higher than Heaven, deeper than Hell,* and poſſeſſes infinite imaginary ſpaces beyond created limits. He who hath no cauſe of being, can have no limits of being: * And though by Creation he began to be in the world; yet he did not begin to be where the world is, but was in the ſame imaginary ſpace from all Eternity; for he was alway in himſelf by his own eternal Ubi.

* Job. 11. 8.

* Gamacheus. ut ſupra.

Therefore obſerve, that when God is ſaid to draw near to us, when we draw near to him*, 'tis not by local motion or change of place, but by ſpecial and ſpiritual influences, by exciting and ſupporting grace. As we ordinarily ſay, the Sun is come into the Houſe when yet it remains in its place and order in the Heavens, becauſe the Beams pierce through the Windows and enlighten the Room: So when God is ſaid to come down or deſcend*; 'tis not by a change of place, but a change of outward acts, when he puts forth himſelf in ways of freſh Mercy or new Judgments, in the effluxes of his Love or the flames of his Wrath. When good men feel the warm Beams of his Grace refreſhing them, or wicked men feel the hot Coals of his Anger ſcorching them. Gods drawing near to us, is not ſo much his coming to us, but his drawing us to him: * As when Water-men pull a Rope that is in one end faſtened to the Shore, and the other end to the Veſſel; the Shore is immoveable, yet it ſeems to the eye to come to them, but they really move to the Shore. God is an immoveable Rock; we are floating and uncertain Creatures; while he ſeems to approach to us, he doth really make us to approach to him: He comes not to us by any change of place himſelf, but draws us to him by a change of Mind, Will, and Affections in us.

* James 4. 8.

* Gen. 11. 5. Exod. 34. 5.

* The Ancients as Dionyſius, expreſt it by this ſimilitude.

2. The ſecond thing propounded, is the reaſons to prove God immutable. The Heathens acknowledged God to be ſo; Plato, and the Pythagorians called God, or the Stable good Principle ἀυτὸν, Idem: The evil Principle, ἕτερον, another thing, changeable; one thing one time, and another thing another time.

* Plato calls God ἑστὼς καὶ ἀχώρητον lib. 1. de Re. * Stabiliſq; manens dat cuncta moveri, Boet. Conſolat. lib. 3.

Daniel 6. 26. He is the living God and ſtedfaſt for ever.

1. The Name Jehovah ſignifies this Attribute, Exod 3. 14. I am that I am, I am hath ſent me to you. It ſignifies his Immutability as well as Eternity. I am ſignifies his Eternity; that or the ſame that I am, his Immutability: As it reſpects the Eſſence of God, it ſignifies his unchangeable Being from Eternity to Eternity; * As it reſpects the Creature, it ſignifies his conſtancy in his Counſels and Promiſes, which ſpring from no other cauſe but the unchangeableneſs of his Nature. The reaſon why Men ſtand not to their Covenant, is becauſe they are not always the ſame: I am, that is, I am the ſame, before the Creation of the World, and ſince the creation of the World; before the entrance of Sin, and ſince the entrance of Sin; before their going into Egypt, and whiles they remain in Egypt. * The very Name Jehovah, bears according to the Grammatical Order, a mark of Gods Unchangeableneſs; It never hath any thing added to it, nor any thing taken from it; It hath no Plural Number, no Affixes, a Cuſtom peculiar to the Eaſtern Languages; It never changes its letters as other words do. * That only is a true being, which hath not only an eternal Exiſtence, but ſtability in it: That is not truly a Being that never remains in the ſame ſtate. All things that are changed, ceaſe to be what they were, and begin to be what they were not, and therefore cannot have the title truly applied to them they are; they are indeed, but like a River in a continual Flux, that no man ever ſees the ſame; let his eye be fixed upon one place of it, the water he ſees, ſlides away and that which he ſaw not, ſucceeds in its place; let him take his eye off but for the leaſt moment, and fix it there again, and he ſees not the ſame that he ſaw before. All ſenſible things are in a perpetual ſtream; that which is ſometimes this and ſometimes that, is not, becauſe it is not always the ſame; whatſoever is changed, is ſomething now which it was not alway: But of God it is ſaid I am, which could not be if he were changeable; for it may be ſaid of him he is not, as well he is, becauſe he is not what he was; If we ſay not of him, he was, nor he will be, but only he is; whence ſhould any change arrive? He muſt invincibly remain the ſame, of whoſe Nature, Perfections, Knowledge and Will, it cannot be ſaid it was, as if it were not now in him; or it ſhall be, as if it were not yet in him; But he is, becauſe he doth not only exiſt: but doth alway exiſt the ſame. I am, that is, I receive from no other what I am in my ſelf; He depends upon no other in his Eſſence, Knowledge, Purpoſes, and therefore hath no changing Power over him.

* Trap. on Exod. * Amyrald. de Trinitat. p. 433.

* Spanhe Syntag. part. 1. p. 39.

* Petav. Theol. Dogmat. Tom. 1. cap. 7. § 6, 7, 8.

2. If God were changeable, He could not be the moſt perfect Being. God is the moſt perfect Being, and poſſeſſes in himſelf infinite and eſſential Goodneſs, Mat. 5. 48. Your heavenly Father is perfect: If he could change from that Perfection, he were not the higheſt Exemplar and Copy for us to write after. If God doth change, it muſt be either to a greater Perfection than he had before, or to a leſs, mutatio perfectiva vel amiſſiva; If he changes to acquire a Perfection he had not, then he was not before the moſt excellent Being neceſſarily; He was not what he might be; there was a defect in him, and a privation of that which is better than what he had and was; and then he was not alway the beſt, and ſo was not alway God; and being not alway God, could never be God; for to begin to be God is againſt the Notion of God: Not to a leſs perfection than he had; that were to change to imperfection, and to loſe a perfection which he poſſeſſed before, and ceaſe to be the beſt Being; for he would loſe ſome good which he had, and acquire ſome evil which he was free from before: So that the ſoveraign Perfection of God, is an invincible Bar to any change in him; For which way ſoever you caſt it for a change, his ſupream Excellency is impaired and nulled by it: For in all change, there is ſomething from which a thing is changed, and ſomething to which it is changed; ſo that on the one part there is a loſs of what it had, and on the other part there is an acquiſition of what it had not: If to the better, he was not perfect, and ſo was not God; if to the worſe, he will not be perfect, and ſo be no longer God after that change.

If God be changed, his change muſt be voluntary or neceſſary; if voluntary, he then intends the change for the better, and choſe it to acquire a Perfection by it: The Will muſt be carried out to any thing under the notion of ſome Goodneſs in that which it deſires. Since Good is the Object of the deſire and will of the Creature, Evil cannot be the Object of the deſire and will of the Creator. And if he ſhould be changed for the worſe when he did really intend the better, it would ſpeak a defect of Wiſdom, and a miſtake of that for good which was evil and imperfect in it ſelf; and if it be for the better, it muſt be a motion or change for ſomething without himſelf; that which he deſireth is not poſſeſſed by himſelf but by ſome other: There is then ſome good without him and above him, which is the end in this change; for nothing acts but for ſome end, and that end is within it ſelf or without it ſelf; If the end for which God changes be without himſelf, then there is ſomething better than himſelf: Beſides, if he were voluntarily changed for the better, why did he not change before? If it were for want of Power, he had the imperfection of weakneſs; If for want of knowledge of what was the beſt Good, he had the imperfection of Wiſdom, he was ignorant of his own Happineſs; If he had both Wiſdom to know it and Power to effect it, it muſt be for want of Will; He then wanted that love to himſelf and his own Glory, which is neceſſary in the ſupream Being: Voluntarily he could not be changed for the worſe, he could not be ſuch an Enemy to his own Glory, there is nothing but would hinder its own Imperfection and becoming worſe: Neceſſarily he could not be changed, for that neceſſity muſt ariſe from himſelf, and then the difficulties ſpoken of before will recur; or it muſt ariſe from another; He cannot be bettered by another, becauſe nothing hath any good but what it hath received from the hands of his bounty, and that without loſs to himſelf; nor made worſe; if any thing made him worſe, it would be Sin, but that cannot touch his Eſſence or obſcure his Glory, but in the deſign and nature of the Sin it ſelf, Job. 35. 6, 7. If thou ſinneſt, what doſt thou againſt him? Or if thy Tranſgreſſions be multiplyed, what doſt thou unto him? If thou be righteous what giveſt thou him; or what receives he at thy hand? He hath no addition by the Service of Man, no more than the Sun hath of Light by a multitude of Torches kindled on the Earth; nor any more impair by the Sins of Men, than the Light of the Sun hath by mens ſhooting Arrows againſt it.

3. * God were not the moſt ſimple Being, if he were not immutable. There is in every thing that is mutable, a Compoſition, either eſſential or accidental; and in all changes, ſomething of the thing changed remains, and ſomething of it ceaſeth and is done away, as for example, in an accidental change, If a white Wall be made black, it loſes its white Colour; but the Wall it ſelf which was the Subject of that Colour, remains and loſes nothing of its ſubſtance: Likewiſe in a ſubſtantial change, as when Wood

* Gamach. in prim. part. Aquin. queſt. 9. cap. 1. part. 72.

Wood is burnt, the ſubſtantial part of Wood is loſt, the earthly part is changed into Aſhes, the airy part aſcends in Smoke, the watery parts is changed into Air by the Fire: There is not an annihilation of it, but a reſolution of it into thoſe parts whereof it was compounded; and this change doth evidence, that it was compounded of ſeveral parts diſtinct from one another. If there were any change in God, 'tis by ſeparating ſomething from him or adding ſomething to him; if by ſeparating ſomething from him, then he was compounded of ſomething diſtinct from himſelf; for if it were not diſtinct from himſelf, it could not be ſeparated from him without loſs of his Being; if by adding any thing to him, then it is a compounding of him, either ſubſtantially or accidentially.

Mutability is abſolutely inconſiſtent with Simplicity, whether the change come from an internal or external Principle. If a change be wrought by ſomething without, it ſuppoſeth either contrary or various parts in the thing ſo changed, whereof it doth conſiſt; if it be wrought by any thing within, it ſuppoſeth that the thing ſo changed doth conſiſt of one part that doth change it, and another part that is changed, and ſo it would not be a ſimple Being. If God could be changed by any thing within himſelf, all in God would not be God; his Eſſence would depend upon ſome parts, whereof ſome would be ſuperior to others: If one part were able to change or deſtroy another, that which doth change would be God, that which is changed would not be God; ſo God would be made up of a Deity and a non-Deity, and part of God would depend upon God; part would be dependent, and part would be independent; part would be mutable, part immutable: So that Mutability is againſt the notion of Gods Independency as well as his Simplicity. *God is the moſt ſimple Being; for that which is firſt in Nature, having nothing beyond it, cannot by any means be thought to be compounded; for whatſoever is ſo, depends upon the parts whereof it is compounded, and ſo is not the firſt Being: Now God being infinitely ſimple, hath nothing in himſelf which is not himſelf, and therefore cannot will any change in himſelf, he being his own Eſſence and Exiſtence.

* Ficinus Zachar. mitylen in Peta. Tom. 1 p. 169.

4. God were not eternal if he were mutable. In all change there is ſomething that periſhes, either ſubſtantially or accidentally. All change is a kind of death, or imitation of death; that which was, dies, and begins to be what it was not. The Soul of man, though it ceaſeth not to be and exiſt; yet when it ceaſeth to be in quality what it was, is ſaid to die. Adam died when he changed from Integrity to Corruption, though both his Soul and Body were in being*; and the Soul of a regenerate Man is ſaid to die to Sin, when it is changed from Sin to Grace*. In all change there is a reſemblance of death: So the Notion of Mutability is againſt the Eternity of God. If any thing be acquired by a change, then that which is acquired was not from Eternity, and ſo he was not wholly eternal; if any thing be loſt which was from Eternity, he is not wholly everlaſting: If he did decreaſe by the change, ſomething in him which had no beginning would have an end; if he did increaſe by that change, ſomething in him would have a beginning that might have no end*. What is changed doth not remain, and what doth not not remain is not eternal. Though God alway remains in regard of Exiſtence, he would be immortal and live alway; yet if he ſhould ſuffer any change, he could not properly be eternal; becauſe he would not alway be the ſame, and would not in every part be eternal; for all change is finiſhed in Time, one moment preceding, another moment following; but that which is before time cannot be changed by Time. God cannot be eternally what he was, that is, he cannot have a true eternity, if he had a new knowledge, new Purpoſe, a new Eſſence; if he were ſometimes this and ſometimes that, ſometimes know this and ſometimes know that, ſometimes purpoſe this, and afterwards hath a new purpoſe? he would be partly temporary and partly eternal, not truly and univerſally eternal: He that hath any thing of newneſs, hath not properly and truly an intire Eternity. Again, by the ſame reaſon that God could in the leaſt ceaſe to be what he was, he might alſo ceaſe wholly to be; and no reaſon can be rendred, why God might not ceaſe wholly to be, as well as ceaſe to be intirely and uniformly what he was: All changeableneſs implies a corruptibility.

* Gen. 2. 17. * Rom. 6. 11.

* Auſtin in Pet. Tom. 1 p. 201.

5. If God were changeable, He were not infinite and Almighty. All change ends in addition or diminution; if any thing be added, he was not infinite before; if any thing be diminiſht, he is not infinite after. All change implies bounds and limits to that which is changed; but God is infinite, His greatneſs is unſearchable *: We can add Number to Number without any end, and can conceive an infinite Number; Yet the Greatneſs of God is beyond all our Conceptions: But if there could be any change in his Greatneſs for the better, it would not be unſearchable before that change; if for the worſe, it would not be unſearchable after that change: Whatſoever hath limits and is changeable, is conceivable and ſearchable; But God is not only not known, but impoſſible in his own Nature to be known and ſearched out, and therefore impoſſible to have any diminution in his Nature. All that which is changed arrives to ſomething which it was not before, or ceaſeth in part to be what it was before.

* Pſal. 145. 3. אין חקר no end, no term.

He would not alſo be Almighty. What is Omnipotent cannot be made worſe; for to be made worſe, is in part to be corrupted: If he be made better, he was not Almighty before, ſomething of Power was wanting to him: if there ſhould be any change, it muſt proceed from himſelf or from another; if from himſelf, it would be an inability to preſerve himſelf in the perfection of his Nature; if from another, he would be inferior in Strength, Knowledge and Power to that which changes him, either in his Nature, Knowledge or Will; in both an inability; an inability in him to continue the ſame, or an inability in him to reſiſt the Power of another.

6. The World could not be ordered and governed, but by ſome Principle or Being which were immutable. Principles are alway more fixed and ſtable, than things which proceed from thoſe Principles; and this is true both in Morals and Naturals. Principles in Conſcience, whereby men are governed, remain firmly engraven in their Minds. The Root lies firmly in the Earth, while Branches are ſhaken with the Wind. The Heavens, the cauſe of Generation, are more firm and ſtable than thoſe things which are wrought by their influence. All things in the world are moved by ſome Power and Vertue which is ſtable; and unleſs it were ſo, no Order would be obſerved in motion, no Motion could be regularly continued. He could not be a full ſatisfaction to the infinite deſire of the Souls of his People. Nothing can truly ſatisfie the Soul of Man but Reſt; and nothing can give it reſt, but that which is perfect and immutably perfect; for elſe it would be ſubject to thoſe agitations and variation, which the Being depends upon is ſubject to.

The Principle of all things muſt be immutable*; which is deſcribed by ſome by a Unite, the Principle of Number, wherein there is a reſemblance of Gods Unchangeableneſs. A Unite is not variable, it continues in its own Nature immutably an Unite; It never varies from it ſelf, it cannot be changed from it ſelf, but is as it were ſo omnipotent towards others, that it changes all Numbers: If you add any Number, it is the beginning of that Number, but the Unite is not encreaſed by it; a new Number ariſeth from that Addition, but the Unite ſtill remains the ſame, and adds a value to other Figures, but receives none from them.

* Fotherby Atheomaſtix. p. 308. Gerhard. loc. com.

2. The third thing to ſpeak to is,

That Immutability is proper to God, and incommunicable to any Creature. Mutability is natural to every Creature as a Creature, and Immutability is the ſole perfection of God: He only is infinite Wiſdom, able to fore-know future events; He only is infinitely powerful, able to call forth all means to effect; So that wanting neither Wiſdom to contrive, nor Strength to execute, he cannot alter his Counſel: None being above him, nothing in him contrary to him, and being defective in no Bleſſedneſs and Perfection, he cannot vary in his Eſſence and Nature. Had not Immutability as well as Eternity been a Property ſolely pertaining to the Divine Nature, as well as creative Power and eternal Duration; the Apoſtles Argument to prove Chriſt to be God from this perpetual ſameneſs, had come ſhort of any convincing ſtrength. Theſe words of the Text he applies to Chriſt, Heb. 1. 10, 11, 12. They ſhall be changed, but thou art the ſame. There had been no ſtrength in the reaſon, if Immutability by Nature did belong to any Creature.

The changeableneſs of all Creatures is evident;

1. Of corporeal Creatures, it is evident to ſenſe. All Plants and Animals, as they have their duration bounded in certain limits; ſo while they do exiſt, they proceed

ceed from their riſe to their fall; they paſs through many ſenſible alterations, from one degree of Growth to another, from buds to bloſſoms, from bloſſoms to flowers and fruits; they come to their pitch that Nature hath ſet them, and return back to the ſtate from whence they ſprung; there is not a day, but they make ſome acquiſition, or ſuffer ſome loſs; they dye and ſpring up every day; nothing in them more certain than their inconſtancy: *The Creature is ſubject to vanity. The Heavenly Bodies are changing their place; the Sun every day is running his Race, and ſtays not in the ſame Point; and though they are not changed in their Eſſence, yet they are in their Place: Some indeed ſay there is a continual generation of Light in the Sun, as there is a loſs of Light by the caſting out its Beams, as in a Fountain there is a flowing out of the Streams, and a continual generation of ſupply: And though theſe heavenly Bodies have kept their ſtanding and motion from the time of their Creation; yet both the Suns ſtanding ſtill in Joſhuah's time, and its going back in Hezekiah's time, ſhew that they are changeable at the pleaſure of God. * Rom. 8. 20.

But in Man, the change is perpetually viſible; every day there is a change from Ignorance to knowledge, from one Will to another, from Paſſion to Paſſion, ſometimes ſad and ſometimes cheerful, ſometimes craving this and preſently nauſeating it; his Body changes from health to ſickneſs, or from weakneſs to ſtrength; ſome alteration there is either in Body or Mind. Man, who is the nobleſt Creature, the ſubordinate end of the Creation of other things, cannot aſſure himſelf of a conſiſtency and fixedneſs in any thing the ſhort ſpace of a day, no not of a minute; all his Months are *Months of vanity ; whence the Pſalmiſt calls Man at the beſt eſtate, altogether vanity, a meer heap of vanity: As he contains in his Nature the Nature of all Creatures, ſo he inherits in his Nature the Vanity of all Creatures: A little World, the Center of the World, and of the Vanity of the World; yea, *lighter than Vanity ; more moveable than a Feather; toſt between Paſſion and Paſſion, daily changing his end, and changing the means; An Image of nothing. * Job 7. 3. * Pſal. 35. * Pſal 62. 9.

2. Spiritual Natures, as Angels, They change not in their Being, but that is from the indulgence of God: They change not in their Goodneſs, but that is not from their Nature, but Divine Grace in their confirmation; but they change in their Knowledge, they know more by Chriſt than they did by *Creation ; They have an addition of knowledge every day, by the providential diſpenſations of God to his *Church ; and the increaſe of their aſtoniſhment and Love, is according to the increaſe of their Knowledge and Inſight: They cannot have a new diſcovery, without new admirations of what is diſcovered to them; There is a change in their joy, *when there is a change in a Sinner : They were changed in their Eſſence, when they were made ſuch glorious Spirits of nothing; Some of them were changed in their Will, when of holy they became impure: The good Angels were changed in their Underſtandings, when the Glories of God in Chriſt were preſented to their view; and all can be changed in their Eſſence again; and as they were made of nothing, ſo by the Power of God may be reduced to nothing again. So glorified Souls ſhall have an unchanged operation about God, for they ſhall behold his face without any grief or fear of loſs, without vagrant thoughts; but they can never be unchangeable in their Nature, becauſe they can never paſs from finite to infinite. * 1 Tim. 3. 16. * Eph. 3. 10. * Luke 15. 10.

No Creature can be unchangeable in its Nature.

1. Becauſe every Creature roſe from nothing. As they roſe from nothing, ſo they tend to nothing unleſs they are preſerved by God: The Notion of a Creature ſpeaks changeableneſs; becauſe to be a Creature, is to be made ſomething of nothing, and therefore Creation is a change of nothing into ſomething: The Being of a Creature begins from change, and therefore the Eſſence of a Creature is ſubject to change: God only is uncreated, and therefore unchangeable; If he were made he could not be immutable; for the very making is a change of not being into being. All Creatures were made good as they were the fruits of Gods Goodneſs and Power; but muſt needs be mutable, becauſe they were the extracts of nothing.

2. Becauſe every Creature depends purely upon the Will of God. They depend not upon themſelves, but upon another for their Being: As they received their Being from the Word of his mouth and the Arm of his Power, ſo by the ſame Word they can be cancell'd into nothing, and return into as little ſignificancy as when they were nothing: He that created them by a Word, can by a Word deſtroy them, Pſalm 104. 29. If God ſhould take away their breath, they dye and return into their Duſt. As it was in the power of the Creator that things might be, before they actually were; ſo it is in the power of the Creator that things after they are, may ceaſe to be what they are; and they are in their own Nature as reducible to nothing, as they were producible by the power of God from nothing; for there needs no more than an Act of Gods Will to null them, as there needed only an Act of Gods Will to make them. Creatures are all ſubject to a higher Cauſe: They are all *reputed as nothing: He doth according to his Will in the Armies of Heaven, and among the Inhabitants of the Earth, and none can ſtay his Hand, or ſay unto him what doſt thou? But God is unchangeable, becauſe he is the higheſt Good; none above him, all below him; all dependent on him; Himſelf upon none.

can

* Dan. 4. 35.

3. No Creature is abſolutely perfect. No Creature can be ſo perfect or can ever be, but ſomething by the infinite Power of God may be added to it; for whatſoever is finite may receive greater additions, and therefore a change. No Creature you can imagin, but in your thoughts you may fancy him capable of greater perfections than you know he hath, or than really he hath: The perfections of all Creatures are ſearchable; the perfection of God is only *unſearchable, and therefore he only immutable.

* Job 11. 6.

God only is always the ſame: Time makes no addition to him, nor diminiſheth any thing of him; His nature and Eſſence, his Wiſdom and Will have always been the ſame from Eternity, and ſhall be the ſame to Eternity without any variation.

4. The fourth thing propounded, is ſome Propoſitions to clear this Unchangeableneſs of God, from any thing that ſeems contrary to it.

Firſt, There was no change in God when he began to create the World in Time. The Creation was a real change, but the change was not ſubjectively in God, but in the Creature; the Creature began to be what it was not before. Creation is conſidered as active or paſſive*; active Creation is the Will and Power of God to create; this is from Eternity, becauſe God willed from Eternity to create in Time; This never had beginning, for God never began in time to underſtand any thing, to will any thing, or to be able to do any thing; but he alway underſtood, and alway willed thoſe things which he determined from Eternity to produce in Time. The Decree of God may be taken for the Act decreeing, that is eternal and the ſame; or for the Object decreed, that is in Time: So that there may be a change in the Object, but not in the Will whereby the Object doth exiſt.

* Gamach. in part. 1. Aquin. Qu. 9. cap. 1. p. 72.

1. There was no change in God by the Act of Creation, becauſe there was no new Will in him. There was no new Act of his Will which was not before. The Creation begun in Time, but the Will of Creating was from Eternity. The Work was new, but the Decree whence that new work ſprung, was as ancient as the Ancient of days: VVhen the time of creating came, God was not made ex nolente volens, as we are; for whatſoever God willed to be now done, he willed from Eternity to be done; but he willed alſo that it ſhould not be done till ſuch an inſtant of time, and that it ſhould not exiſt before ſuch a time. If God had willed the Creation of the VVorld only at that time when the VVorld was produced and not before, then indeed God had been changeable: But though God ſpake that word, which he had not ſpoke before, whereby the World was brought into act; yet he did not will that Will he willed not before. God did not create by a new Counſel or new Will but by that which was from Eternity, Eph. 1. 9. All things are wrought according to that purpoſe in himſelf, and according to the Counſel of his Will, v. 11. And as the holineſs of the Elect is the fruit of his eternal Will before the foundation of the World, v. 4. So likewiſe is the Exiſtence of things, and of thoſe perſons whom he did elect: As when an Artificer frames a houſe or a Temple according to that Model he had in his mind ſome years before, there is no change in the Model in his mind, the Artificer is the ſame, though the work is produced by him ſometime after he had framed that Copy of it in his own mind; but there is a change of the thing produced by him according to that Model. Or when a rich man intends four or five years hence if he lives, to build an Hoſpital, Is there any change in his VVill, when after the expirapiration of that time he builds and endows it? Though it be after his Will, yet it is the fruit of his precedent Will: So God from all Eternity did will and command that the Creatures ſhould exiſt in ſuch a part of time; and by this eternal Will, all things, whether paſt, preſent or to come, did, do and ſhall exiſt at that point of time, which that Will did appoint for them; Not as though God had a new Will when things ſtood up in Being, but only that which was prepared in his immutable Counſel and Will from Eternity, doth then appear. There can be no Inſtant fixed from Eternity, wherein it can be ſaid, God did not will the Creation of the World; For had the Will of God for the ſhorteſt Moment been undetermined to the Creation of the World, and afterwards reſolved upon it, there had been a moral change in God from not willing to willing; But this there was not, for God executes nothing in Time which he had not ordained from Eternity, and appointed all the means and circumſtances whereby it ſhould be brought about. As the Determination of our Saviour to ſuffer was not a new Will, but an eternal Counſel, and wrought no change in God. * Acts 2. 23.

2. There is no change in God by the act of Creation, becauſe there was no new Power in God. Had God had a Will at the time of the Creation which he had not before, there had been a moral change in him; ſo had there been in him a Power only to create then and not before, there had been a phyſical change in him from weakneſs to ability. There can be no more new Power in God, than there can be a new Will in God; for his Will is his Power, and what he willeth to effect, that he doth effect: As he was unchangeably Holy: ſo he was unchangeably Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come *; which was Almighty, and is Almighty, and ever will be Almighty. The Work therefore makes no change in God, but there is a change in the thing wrought by that Power of God. Suppoſe you had a Seal engraven upon ſome Metal a Hundred years old, or as old as the Creation; and you ſhould this day, ſo many Ages after the engraving of it, make an impreſſion of that Seal upon Wax; would you ſay the Engravement upon the Seal were changed, becauſe it produced that ſtamp upon the Wax now, which it did not before? No, the change is purely in the Wax, which receives a new figure or form by the impreſſion; not in the Seal, that was capable of imprinting the ſame long before. God was the ſame from Eternity as he was when he made a Signature of himſelf upon the Creatures by Creation, and is no more changed by ſtamping them into ſeveral forms, than the Seal is changed by making impreſſion upon the Wax: As when a houſe is enlightned by the Sun, or that which was cold is heated by it; there is a change in the houſe from darkneſs to light, from coldneſs to heat; but is there any change in the light and heat of the Sun? There is a change in the thing enlightned or warmed by that light and heat which remains fixed and conſtant in the Sun, which was as capable in it ſelf to produce the ſame effects before, as at that inſtant when it works them: So when God is the Author of a new Work, he is not changed; becauſe he works it by an eternal Will and an eternal Power. * Rev. 4. 8.

3. Nor is there any new relation acquired by God by the Creation of the World. There was a new relation acquired by the Creature; as when a Man ſins, he hath another relation to God than he had before; he hath relation to God, as a Criminal to a Judge; But there is no change in God, but in the Malefactor. The Being of Men makes no more change in God than the Sins of Men. As a Tree in now on our right hand, and by our turning about it is on our left hand, ſometimes before us, ſometimes behind us, according to our motion neer it or about it: and the turning of the Body; There is no change in the Tree, which remains firm and fixed in the Earth; but the change is wholly in the poſture of the Body: whereby the Tree may be ſaid to be before us or behind us, or on the right hand or on the left hand. * God gained no new relation of Lord or Creator by the Creation; for though he had created nothing to rule over, yet he had the Power to create and rule though he did not create and rule: As a Man may be called a skillful Writer, though he does not write, becauſe he is able to do it when he pleaſes; or a Man skillful in Phyſick is called a Phyſitian, though he doth not practice that Skill, or diſcover his Art in the diſtribution of Medicines; becauſe he may do it when he pleaſes, it depends upon his own will to ſhew his Art when he has a mind to it: So the Name Creator and Lord, belongs to God from Eternity, becauſe he could create and rule, though he did not create create and rule: But howſoever, if there were any ſuch change of relation, that God may be called Creator and Lord, after the Creation and not before; 'tis not a change in Eſſence, nor in Knowledge, nor in Will; God gains no perfection nor diminution by it, his Knowledge is not increaſed by it; He is no more by it than he was, and will be, if all thoſe things ceaſed; and therefore Auſtin illuſtrates it by this ſimilitude; as a piece of Mony when it is given as the price of a thing, or depoſited only as a pledge for the ſecurity of a thing borrowed; the Coyn is the ſame and is not changed, though the relation it had as a pledge and as a price be different from one another: ſo that ſuppoſe any new relation be added, yet there is nothing happens to the Nature of God which may infer any change.

* Petav. Theol. Dogmat. Tom. 1. lib.

2. The ſecond Propoſition, There was no change in the Divine Nature of the Son, when he aſſumed Human Nature. There was an Union of the two Natures, but no change of the Deity into the Humanity, or of the Humanity into the Deity; both preſerved their peculiar Properties: The Humanity was changed by a Communication of excellent Gifts from the Divine Nature; not by being brought into an Equality with it, for that was impoſſible that a Creature ſhould become equal to the Creator; He took the Form of a Servant, but he loſt not the Form of God, he deſpoiled not himſelf of the Perfections of the Deity; He was indeed emptied, and became of no reputation *, but he did not ceaſe to be God, though he was reputed to be only a Man, and a very mean one too: The Glory of his Divinity was not extinguiſht nor diminiſht, though it was obſcur'd and darkned under the vail of our infirmities; but there was no more change in the hiding of it, than there is in the Body of the Sun when it is ſhadowed by the interpoſition of a Cloud; His blood while it was pouring out from his Veins was the blood of God ; and therefore when he was bowing the Head of his Humanity upon the Croſs, he had the Nature and Perfections of God; for had he ceaſed to be God, he had been a meer Creature, and his ſufferings would have been of as little value and ſatisfaction as the ſufferings of a Creature.

* Phil. 2. 7.

* Acts 20. 28.

He could not have been a ſufficient Mediator, had he ceaſed to be God; and he had ceaſed to be God, had he loſt any one Perfection proper to the Divine Nature; and loſing none, he loſt not this of unchangeableneſs, which is none of the meaneſt belonging to the Deity: Why by his Union with the Human Nature ſhould he loſe this, any more than he loſt his Omniſcience, which he diſcovered by his knowledge of the thoughts of Men; or his Mercy, which he manifeſted to the height in the time of his ſuffering? That is truly a change, when a thing ceaſeth to be what it was before; This was not in Chriſt, He aſſumed our Nature without laying aſide his own. * When the Soul is united to the Body, doth it loſe any of thoſe perfections that are proper to its Nature? Is there any change either in the ſubſtance or qualities of it? No, but it makes a change in the Body, and of a dull Lump it makes it a living Maſs, conveys vigor and ſtrength to it; and by its power, quickens it to ſence and motion; So did the Divine Nature and Human remain intire; there was no change of the one into the other, as Chriſt by a Miracle changed Water into Wine, or Men by Art change Sand or Aſhes into Glaſs: And when he prays for the Glory he had with God before the World was *, he prays that a Glory he had in his Deity, might ſhine forth in his Perſon as Mediator, and be evidenced in that height and ſplendor ſutable to his Dignity which had been ſo lately darkned by his abaſement; that as he had appeared to be the Son of Man in the infirmity of the Fleſh, he might appear to be the Son of God in the glory of his Perſon, that he might appear to be the Son of God and the Son of Man in one Perſon.

* Zanch. de Immutab. Dei. * Goulart de Immutab. de Dieu.

* John 17. 5.

* Again, there could be no change in this Union; for in a real change, ſomething is acquired which was not poſſeſſed before, neither formally nor eminently; But the Divinity had from Eternity before the Incarnation, all the perfections of the Human Nature eminently in a nobler manner than they are in themſelves, and therefore could not be changed by a real Union.

* Gamach. in part. 1. Aquin. qu. 9. cap. 1.

3. The third Propoſition. Repentance and other Affections aſcribed to God in Scripture, argue no change in God. We often read of Gods repenting, repenting of the Good he promiſed*, and of the Evil he threatned*, or of the Work he hath wrought.*

* Jer. 18. 10. * Exod. 32. 14. John 3. 10. * Gen. 6. 6.

We muſt obſerve therefore that

1. Repentance is not properly in God. He is a pure Spirit, and is not capable of thoſe thoſe Paſſions, which are ſigns of weakneſs and impotence, or ſubject to thoſe regrets, we are ſubject to: Where there is a proper repentance, there is a want of foreſight, an ignorance of what would ſucceed or a defect, in the examination of the occurrences, which might fall within conſideration: All repentance of a fact, is grounded upon a miſtake in the event, which was not foreſeen; or upon an after knowledge of the evil of the thing which was acted by the perſon repenting: But God is ſo wiſe that he cannot err; ſo holy he cannot do evil; and his certain preſcience or foreknowledge, ſecures him againſt any unexpected events: God doth not act but upon clear and infaillible reaſon: And a change upon paſſion is accounted by all ſo great a weakneſs in man, that none can entertain ſo unworthy a conceit of God. Where he is ſaid to repent, * he is alſo ſaid to grieve; now no proper grief can be imagined to be in God: As repentance is inconſiſtent with infallible foreſight, ſo is grief no leſs inconſiſtent with undefiled bleſſedneſs: God is bleſſed for ever, * and therefore nothing can befall him that can ſtain that bleſſedneſs; his bleſſedneſs would be impaired, and interrupted, while he is repenting, tho he did ſoon rectifie that which is the cauſe of his repentance: God is of one mind and who can turn him? what his Soul deſires that he doth. *

* Gen. 6. 6.

* Rom. 9. 8.

* Job. 23. 13.

2. But God accommodates himſelf in the Scripture to our weak capacity. God hath no more of a proper repentance, than he hath of a real body; tho he, in accommodation to our weakneſs aſcribes to himſelf the members of our bodies to ſet out to our underſtanding the greatneſs of his perfections; we muſt not conclude him a body like us; ſo becauſe he is ſaid to have anger and repentance, we muſt not conclude him to have paſſions like us? When we cannot fully comprehend him as he is, he cloaths himſelf with our nature in his expreſſions that we may apprehend him as we are able, and by an inſpection into our ſelves, learn ſomething of the nature of God; yet thoſe human wayes of ſpeaking ought to be underſtood in a manner agreeable to the infinite excellency and Majeſty of God; and are only deſigned to mark out ſomething in God which hath a reſemblance with ſomething in us: As we cannot ſpeak to God as Gods, but as men; ſo we cannot underſtand him ſpeaking to us as a God, unleſs he condeſcends to ſpeak to us like a man. God therefore frames his language to our dulneſs, not to his own ſtate; and informs us by our own phraſes, what he would have us learn of his nature; as Nurſes talk broken language to young Children. In all ſuch expreſſions, therefore we muſt aſcribe the perfection we conceive in them to God, and lay the imperfection at the door of the Creature.

3. Therefore repentance in God is only a change of his outward conduct, according to his infallible foreſight and immutable Will. He changes the way of his Providential proceeding according to the carriage of the Creature, without changing his Will, which is the Rule of his Providence; when God ſpeaks of his repenting that he had made man; * 'tis only his changing his conduct from a way of kindneſs to a way of ſeverity, and is a word ſuted to our capacities to ſignifie his deteſtation of ſin and his reſolution to puniſh it, after man had made himſelf quite another thing, than God had made him; It repents me, that is, I am purpoſed to deſtroy the world; as he that repents of his work throws it away: * As if a Potter caſt away the veſſel he had framed, it were a teſtimony, that he repented that ever he took pains about it: So the deſtruction of them ſeems to be a repentance in God that ever he made them; tis a change of events, not of Counſels. Repentance in us is a grief for a former fact, and a changing of our courſe in it: Grief is not in God, * but his repentance is a willing a thing ſhould not be as it was, which Will was fixed from Eternity; for God foreſeeing Man would fall, and decreeing to permit it, he could not be ſaid to repent in time of what he did not repent from Eternity; and therefere if there were no repentance in God from Eternity; there could be none in time. But God is ſaid to repent, when he changes the diſpoſition of affairs without himſelf; as men when they repent, alter the courſe of their actions, ſo God alters things extra ſe or without himſelf, but changes nothing of his own purpoſe within himſelf. It rather notes the action he is about to do, than any thing in his own nature, or any change in his eternal purpoſe. Gods repenting of his kindneſs is nothing but an inflicting of puniſhment, which the Creature by the change of his carriage hath merited: As his repentiug of the evil threatned is the with-holding the puniſhment denounced denounced; when the Creature hath humbly ſubmitted to his Authority and acknowledged his crime.

* Gen. 6. 6.

* Mercer in loc.

* Petavius Theol. Dogmat.

Or elſe we may underſtand thoſe expreſſions of joy, and grief, and repentance, to ſignifie thus much, * that the things declared to be the objects of joy, and grief, and repentance, are of that nature, that if God were capable of our paſſions, he would diſcover himſelf in ſuch caſes as we do: As when the Prophets mention the joys and applaudings of Heaven, Earth and the Sea, they only ſignifie that the things they ſpeak of are ſo good, that if the Heavens, and the Sea had natures capable of joy, they would expreſs it upon that occaſion in ſuch a manner as we do: So would God have joy at the obedience of men, and grief at the unworthy carriage of men, and repent of his kindneſs, when men abuſe it; and repent of his puniſhment, when men reform under his rod, were the Majeſty of his nature capable of ſuch affections.

* Daille, in Sermon on 2 Pet. 3. 9. pa. 60.

4. Propoſition. The not fulfilling of ſome predictions in Scripture, which ſeem to imply a changeableneſs of the Divine Will, do not argue any change in it. As when he reprieved Hezekiah from death, after a meſſage ſent by the Prophet Iſaiah, that he ſhould die, * and when he made an arreſt of that Judgment he had threatned by Jonah againſt Niniveh. *

* 2 Kings 20. 1. 5. Iſa. 38. 1, 5. * Jon. 3 4, 10.

There is not indeed the ſame reaſon of promiſes and threatnings altogether, for in promiſing the obligation lies upon God, and the right to demand, is in the party that performs the condition of the promiſe: But in threatnings, the obligation lies upon the ſinner, and God's right to puniſh is declared thereby: So that tho God doth not puniſh, his Will is not changed; becauſe his Will was to declare the demerit of ſin, and his right to puniſh upon the Commiſſion of it; tho he may not puniſh according to the ſtrict letter of the threatning the perſon ſinning, but relax his own law for the honour of his Attributes, and transfer the puniſhment from the offender to a perſon ſubſtituted in his room; this was the caſe in the firſt threatning againſt man, and the ſubſtituting a ſurety in the place of the Malefactor.

* Rivet in Geneſ. exercita. 58. pa. 213.

But the anſwer to theſe caſes in this, * that where we find predictions in Scripture declared, and yet not executed, we muſt conſider them, not as abſolute but conditional, or as the Civil Law calls it, an interlocutory Sentence. God declared what would follow by natural cauſes, or by the demerit of man, not what he would abſolutely himſelf do: And in many of thoſe predictions, tho the condition be not expreſt, yet it is to be underſtood; ſo the promiſes of God are to be underſtood with the condition of perſeverance in well doing; and threatnings with a clauſe of revocation annext to them, provided that men repent: And this God lays down as a general caſe, alway to be remembred as a rule for the interpreting his threatnings againſt a Nation, and the ſame reaſon will hold in threatnings againſt a particular perſon. Jer. 18. 7, 8, 9, 10. At what inſtant I ſhall ſpeak concerning a Nation and concerning a Kingdom, to pluck up, and pull down, and deſtroy it; If that Nation againſt whom I have pronounc'd, turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them, and ſo when he ſpeaks of planting a Nation, if they do evil, he will repent of the good, &c. 'Tis a Univerſal rule by which all particular caſes of this nature are to be tried; ſo that when mans repentance arrives, God remains firm in his firſt Will, always equal to himſelf, and it is not he that changes, but man. For ſince the interpoſition of the Mediator, with an eye to whom God governed the world after the fall, the right of puniſhing was taken off if men repented, and mercy was to flow out, if by a converſion men returned to their duty, Ezek. 18. 20, 21. This I ſay is grounded upon Gods entertaining the Mediator; for the Covenant of works diſcovered no ſuch thing as repentance or pardon. Now theſe general rules are to be the interpreters of particular caſes: So that predictions of good are not to be counted abſolute, if men return to evil; nor predictions of evil, if men be thereby reduced to a repentance of their crimes.

So Niniveh ſhall be deſtroyed, that is, according to the general rule, unleſs the inhabitants repent, which they did; they manifeſted a belief of the threatning, and gave glory to God by giving credit to the Prophet: and they had a notion of this rule God lays down in the other Prophets; for they had an apprehenſion that upon their humbling themſelves, they might eſcape the threatned vengeance, and

ſtop

ſtop the ſhooting thoſe Arrows that were ready in the *Bow. Though Jonah proclaimed deſtruction without declaring any hopes of an arreſt of Judgement; yet their natural Notions of God afforded ſome natural hopes of relief, if they did their duty, and ſpurned not againſt the Prophet's meſſage; and therefore ſaith one *[God did not always expreſs this condition, becauſe it was needleſs; his own Rule revealed in Scripture was ſufficient to ſome, and the natural Notion all men had of Gods Goodneſs upon their Repentance, made it not abſolutely neceſſary to declare it: And beſides, ſaith he, it is bootleſs; The expreſſing it can do but little good; ſecure ones will repent never the ſooner, but rather preſume upon their hopes of Gods forbearance, and linger out their Repentance till it be too late: And to work men to Repentance, whom he hath purpoſed to ſpare, he threatens them with terrible Judgements; which by how much the more terrible and peremptory they are, are likely to be more effectual for the end God in his prrpoſe deſigns them, viz. to humble them under a ſenſe of their demerit, and an acknowledgment of his righteous Juſtice; and therefore though they be abſolutely denounced, yet they are to be conditionally interpreted with a reſervation of Repentance: As for that Anſwer which one gives, that by forty days was not meant forty Natural days, but forty Prophetical days, that is, years, a day for year; and that the City was deſtroyed forty years after by the Medes: The expreſſion of Gods repenting upon their Humiliation, puts a Bar to that Interpretation: God repented, that is, he did not bring the puniſhment upon them according to thoſe days the Prophet had expreſt; and therefore forty natural days are to be underſtood; and if it were meant of forty years, and they were deſtroyed at the end of that term, how could God be ſaid to repent, ſince according to that, the puniſhment threatned was according to the time fixed brought upon them? And the deſtruction of it forty years after, will not be eaſily evinced, if Jonah lived in the time of Jeroboam the ſecond King of Iſrael, as he did *; And Niniveh was deſtroyed in the time of Joſiah King of Judah. But the other Anſwer is plain. God did not fulfil what he had threatned, becauſe they reformed what they had committed: When the threatning was made, they were a fit Object for Juſtice; but when they repented, they were a fit Object for a merciful Reſpite. To threaten when ſins are high, is a part of Gods Juſtice; not to execute when ſins are revok'd by Repentance, is a part of Gods Goodneſs. And in the Caſe of Hezekiah *, Iſaiah comes with a Meſſage from God, that he ſhould ſet his houſe in order, for he ſhall dye; that is, the Diſeaſe was mortal, and no outward Applications could in their own nature reſiſt the Diſtemper. Behold, I will add to thy days fifteen years; I will heal thee: It ſeems to me to be one entire Meſſage, becauſe the latter part of it was ſo ſuddenly after the other committed to Iſaiah to be delivered to Hezekiah; for he was not gone out of the Kings houſe, before he was ordered to return with the news of his health, by an extraordinary indulgence of God againſt the power of Nature and force of the Diſeaſe: Behold I will add to thy Life; noting it an extraordinary thing: He was in the ſecond Court of the Kings Houſe when this word came to him *; the Kings houſe having three Courts, ſo that he was not gone above half way out the Palace. God might ſend this Meſſage of Death, to prevent the Pride Hezekiah might ſwell with for his deliverance from Senacherib: As Paul had a Meſſenger of Satan to buffet him to prevent his lifting up *; and this good man was ſubject to this ſin, as we find afterwards in the Caſe of the Babyloniſh Embaſſadors: And God delayed this other part of the Meſſage to humble him, and draw out his Prayer; and as ſoon as ever he found Hezekiah in this temper, he ſent Iſaiah with a comfortable meſſage of recovery: So that the Will of God was to ſignifie to him the mortality of his diſtemper, and afterwards to relieve him by a meſſage of an extraordinary Recovery.

* Sanderſon's Sermon par. 2. p. 257. 158.

* 2 King. 14.25.

* 2 Kings 20.1, 5.

* Iſa. 38. 1, 5.

* 2 Kings 20.4.

* 2 Cor. 12. 7.

5. Propoſition. God is not changed, when of loving to any Creatures he becomes angry with them, or of angry he becomes appeaſed. The change in theſe caſes is in the Creature; according to the alteration in the Creature, it ſtands in a various relation to God: an innocent Creature is the Object of his Kindneſs, an offending Creature is the Object of his Anger; there is a change in the diſpenſation of God, as there is a change in the Creature making himſelf capable of ſuch diſpenſations. God always acts according to the immutable nature of his Holineſs, and can no more change in his Affections to good and evil, than he can in his Eſſence. When the Devils, now fallen, ſtood as glorious Angels, they were the Objects of Gods love, becauſe holy: When they fell, they were the Objects of Gods hatred, becauſe impure; the ſame reaſon which made him love them while they were pure, made him hate them, when they were criminal: The reaſon of his various diſpenſations to them was the ſame in both, as conſidered in God, his immutable holineſs; but as reſpecting the Creature, different; the nature of the Creature was changed, but the Divine holy nature of God remain'd the ſame; * With the pure thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf pure, and with the froward thou wilt ſhew they ſelf froward: He is a refreſhing light to thoſe that obey him, and a conſuming fire to thoſe that reſiſt him. Tho the ſame Angels were not always loved; yet the ſame reaſon that moved him to love them, moved him to hate them. It had argued a change in God, if he had loved them alway, in whatſoever poſture they were towards him: It could not be counted love, but a weakneſs and impotent fondneſs; the change is in the object not in the affection of God: For the object loved before, is not beloved now, becauſe that which was the motive of love, is not now in it: So that the Creature having a different ſtate from what it had, falls under a different affection or diſpenſation.

* Pſal. 18. 26.

It had been a mutable affection in God, to love that which was not worthy of love, which the ſame love wherewith he loved that which had the greateſt reſemblance to himſelf: Had God loved the fallen Angels in that ſtate and for that ſtate, he had hated himſelf, becauſe he had loved that which was contrary to himſelf and the image of his own holineſs, which made them appear before, good in his ſight. The Will of God is unchangeably ſet to love righteouſneſs and hate iniquity, and from this hatred to puniſh it: And if a righteous Creature Contracts the wrath of God, or a ſinful Creature hath the communications of Gods love; it muſt be by a change in themſelves. Is the Sun changed when it hardens one thing and ſoftens another, according to the diſpoſition of the ſeveral ſubjects? Or when the Sun makes a flower more fragrant, and a dead Carcaſs more noyſome? There are divers effects, but the reaſon of that diverſity is not in the Sun, but in the ſubject; the Sun is the ſame, and produceth thoſe different effects, by the ſame quality of heat: So if an unholy Soul approach to God; God looks angrily upon him; If a holy Soul come before him, the ſame immutable perfection in God draws out his kindneſs towards him: As ſome think, the Sun would rather refreſh than ſcorch us, if our bodies were of the ſame nature and ſubſtance with that Luminary.

As the Will of God for Creating the World, was no new, but an Eternal Will, tho it manifeſted it ſelf in time; ſo the Will of God for the puniſhment of ſin, or the reconciliation of the ſinner, was no new Will: Tho his wrath in time break out in the effects of it upon ſinners, and his love flows out in the effects of it upon penitents. Chriſt by his death reconciling God to man, did not alter the Will of God, but did what was conſonant to his Eternal Will: He came not to change his Will but to execute his Will. Lo I come to do thy Will, O God. * And the grace of God in Chriſt, was not a new grace, but an old grace in a new appearance; the Grace of God hath appeared. *

* Heb. 10. 7.
* Tit. 2. 11.

6. Propoſition, A change of Laws by God argues no change in God, when God abrogates ſome Laws which he had ſettled in the Church and enacts others. I ſpake of this ſomething the laſt day: I ſhall only add this. God commanded one thing to the Jews, when the Church was in an infant ſtate; and removed thoſe Laws, when the Church came to ſome growth. The Elements of the world were ſuited to the ſtate of Children. * A Mother feeds not the Infant with the ſame diet as ſhe doth, when it is grown up. Our Saviour acquainted not his Diſciples with ſome things at one time which he did at another, becauſe they were not able to bear them; Where was the change, in Chriſts Will, or in their growth from a ſtate of weakneſs to that of ſtrength? A Phyſitian preſcribes not the ſame thing to a perſon in health, as he doth to one conflicting with a diſtemper; nor the ſame thing in the beginning, as he doth in the ſtate or declination of the diſeaſe. The Phyſitians Will and Skill are the ſame, but the capacity and neceſſity of the Patient for this or that Medicine or Method of proceeding are the ſame.

* Gal. 4. 3.

When God changed the Ceremonial Law, there was no change in the Divine

Will

Will, but an execution of his Will; For when God commanded the obſervance of the Law he intended not the perpetuity of it; nay, in the Prophet he declares the ceſſation of it; he decreed to command it, but he decreed to command it only for ſuch a time; ſo that the abrogation of it was no leſs an execution of his Decree, than the eſtabliſhment of it for a ſeaſon was; The commanding of it was purſuant to his Decree for the appointing of it, and the nulling of it was purſuant to his Decree of continuing it only for ſuch a ſeaſon: So that in all this there was no change in the Will of God.

The Counſel of God ſtands ſure; what changes ſoever there are in the World, are not in God or his Will, but in the events of things, and the different relations of things to God: 'Tis in the Creature, not in the Creator. The Sun alway remains of the ſame hue, and is not diſcoloured in it ſelf, becauſe it ſhines green through a green Glaſs, and blew through a blew Glaſs; the different colours come from the Glaſs, not from the Sun: The change is alway in the diſpoſition of the Creature, not in the Nature of God or his Will.

5. Uſe.

1. For Information.

1. If God be unchangeable in his Nature, and Immutability be a Property of God, Then Chriſt hath a Divine Nature. This in the Pſalm is applyed to Chriſt in the Hebrews, Heb. 1. 11. where he joyns the citation out of this Pſalm with that out of Pſalm 45. 6, 7. Thy Throne O God is for ever and ever; thou haſt loved Righteouſneſs and hated Iniquity, therefore God even thy God hath anointed thee with the Oyl of Gladneſs above thy Fellows; and thou Lord in the beginning haſt laid the Foundation of the Earth, &c. As the firſt muſt neceſſarily be meant of Chriſt the Mediator, and therein he is diſtinguiſh'd from God, as one anointed by him; ſo the other muſt be meant of Chriſt, whereby he is made one with God in regard of the Creation and Diſſolution of the World, in regard of Eternity and Immutability. Both the Teſtimonies are linkt together by the Copulative [and] and thou Lord, declaring thereby that they are both to be underſtood of the ſame Perſon the Son of God: The deſign of the Chapter is to prove Chriſt to be God; and ſuch things are ſpoken of him as could not belong to any Creature, no, not to the moſt excellent of the Angels: The ſame Perſon that is ſaid to be anointed above his Fellows, and is ſaid to lay the foundation of the Earth and Heavens, is ſaid to be the ſame, that is, the ſame in himſelf. The Prerogative of ſameneſs belongs to that Perſon as well as Creation of Heaven and Earth.

The Socinians ſay it is ſpoken of God, and that God ſhall deſtroy the Heavens by Chriſt; if ſo, Chriſt is not a meer Creature, not created when he was incarnate; for the ſame Perſon that ſhall change the World, did create the World; If God ſhall change the world by him, God alſo created the world by by him; He was then before the world was; for how could God create the world by one that was not? That was not in Being till after the Creation of the World? The Heavens ſhall be changed, but the Perſon who is to change the Heavens, is ſaid to be the ſame, or unchangeable in the Creation as well as the Diſſolution of the World. This ſameneſs refers to the whole Sentence.

*The Pſalm wherein the Text is, and whence this in the Hebrews is cited, is properly meant of Chriſt, and Redemption by him, and the compleating of it at the laſt day, and not of the Babyloniſh captivity; That captivity was not ſo deplorable, as the ſtate the Pſalmiſt deſcribes: Daniel and his Companions flouriſhed in that Captivity; It could not reaſonably be ſaid of them, that their days were conſumed like Smoke, their heart withered like Graſs; that they forgot to *eat their Bread: beſides, he complains of *ſhortneſs of Life *; But none had any more reaſon to complain of that in the time of the Captivity, than before and after it, than at any other time: Their Deliverance would contribute nothing to the natural length of their lives. Beſides, when Sion ſhould be built, the Heathen ſhould fear the Name of the Lord, (that is, worſhip God) and all the Kings of the Earth his Glory. The rearing the ſecond Temple after the deliverance, did not proſelyte the Nations; nor did the Kings of the Earth worſhip the Glory of God; nor did God appear in ſuch Glory at the erecting the ſecond Temple: The ſecond Temple was leſs glorious than the firſt, for it wanted ſome of the Ornaments which were the Glory of the firſt;

* Placeus de deitate Chriſti.

* as it is V. 34.
* V. 11.

* V. 15.

But

But it is ſaid of this ſtate, * That when the Lord ſhould build up Sion, he ſhould appear in his Glory; his proper Glory, and extraordinary Glory. Now that God who ſhall appear in Glory and build up Sion, is the Son of God, the Redeemer of the World; He builds up the Church, he cauſes the Nations to fear the Lord, and the Kings of the Earth his Glory; He broke down the partition Wall, and opened a Door for the Entrance of the Gentiles; He ſtruck the Chains from off the Priſoners, and looſed thoſe that were appointed to death by the Curſe of the Law *: And to this Perſon is aſcribed the Creation of the World; and he is pronounced to remain the ſame in the midſt of an infinite number of changes in inferior things: And it is likely the Pſalmiſt conſiders not only the beginning of Redemption, but the compleating of it at the ſecond coming of Chriſt; for he complains of thoſe evils, which ſhall be removed by his ſecond coming, viz. The ſhortneſs of Life, perſecutions and reproaches wherewith the Church is afflicted in this World; and comforts not himſelf with thoſe attributes which are directly oppoſed to ſin, as the mercy of God, the Covenant of God, but with thoſe that are oppoſed to mortality and calamities; as the unchangeableneſs and Eternity of God; and from thence infers a perpetual eſtabliſhment of Believers. * The Children of thy Servants ſhall continue and their ſeed ſhall be eſtabliſhed before thee: So that the Pſalm it ſelf ſeems to aim in the whole diſcourſe at Chriſt, and aſſerts his Divinity, which the Apoſtle as an interpreter doth fully evidence; applying it to him, and manifeſting his Deity by his immutability as well as Eternity. * While all other things loſe their forms, and paſs through multitudes of variations, he conſtantly remains the ſame, and ſhall be the ſame, when all the Empires of the world ſhall ſlide away, and a Period be put to the preſent motions of the Creation: And as there was no change made in his being by the Creation of things, ſo neither ſhall there be by the final alteration of things; he ſhall ſee them finiſh, as he ſaw them riſe up into being, and be the ſame after their reign, as he was before their original; he is the firſt and the laſt. *

* Ver. 16.

* Ver. 20.

* Ver. 28.

* Daile Melang. des *S*ermons Part 2. Sect. 1. p. 8, 9, 10. &c.

* Revel. 1. 17.

2. Here is ground and encouragement for Worſhip. An Atheiſt will make another uſe of this: If God be immutable, why ſhould we worſhip him, why ſhould we pray to him; Good will come if he wills it, evil cannot be averted by all our ſupplications, if he hath ordered it to fall upon us?

But certainly ſince unchangeableneſs in knowing, and willing goodneſs is a perfection: An adoration and admiration is due to God, upon the account of this excellence. If he be God he is to be reverenced, and the more highly reverenc'd, becauſe he cannot but be God.

Again what comfort could it be to pray to a God, that like the Chameleon changed colours every day, every moment? What encouragement could there be to lift up our eyes to one that were of one mind this day, and of another mind to morrow? Who would put up a Petition to an Earthly Prince that were ſo mutable, as to grant a Petition one day, and deny it another, and change his own act? But if a Prince promiſe this or that thing upon ſuch or ſuch a condition, and you know his promiſe to be as unchangeable as the Laws of the Medes and Perſians, would any Man reaſon thus? Becauſe it is unchangeable we will not ſeek to him, we will not perform the condition, upon which the fruit of the Proclamation is to be enjoyed. Who would not count ſuch an inference ridiculous? What bleſſings hath not God promiſed upon the condition of ſeeking him? Were he of an unrighteous nature, or changeable in his mind, this would be a bar to our ſeeking him, and fruſtrate our hopes: But ſince it is otherwiſe, is not this excellency of his nature the higheſt encouragement to ask of him the bleſſings he hath promiſed, and a beam from Heaven to fire our zeal in asking? If you deſire things againſt his Will, which he hath declared he will not grant? Prayer then would be an act of diſobedience, an injury to him, as well as an act of folly in it ſelf; his unchangeableneſs then might ſtifle ſuch deſires: But if we ask according to his Will, and according to our reaſonable wants, what ground have we to make ſuch a ridiculous argument? He hath Willed every thing that may be for our good, if we perform the condition he hath required; and hath put it upon record, that we may know it and regulate our deſires and ſupplications according to it: If we will not ſeek him, his immutability cannnot be a bar, but our own folly is the cauſe; and by our neglect we diſpoil him of this perfection as to us, and either imply that he is not ſincere, and means not as he ſpeaks; or, that he is as changeable as the Wind, ſometimes this thing ſometimes that, and not at all to be confided in. If we ask according to his revealed Will, the unchangeableneſs of his Nature will aſſure us of the Grant; and what a preſumption would it be in a Creature dependent upon his Soveraign, to ask that which he knows he has declared his Will againſt; ſince there is no good we can want, but he hath promiſed to give, upon our ſincere and ardent deſire for it.

our

God hath decreed to give this or that to Man, but conditionally, and by the means of enquiring after him, and asking for it: * Ask and you ſhall receive, as much as to ſay, you ſhall not receive unleſs you ask. When the higheſt promiſes are made, God expects they ſhould be put in ſute: Our Saviour joyns the Promiſe and the Petition together; the Promiſe to encourage the Petition; and the Petition to enjoy the Promiſe: He doth not ſay perhaps it ſhall be given, but it ſhall, that is, it certainly ſhall; your heavenly Father is unchangeably willing to give you thoſe things. We muſt depend upon his Immutability for the thing, and ſubmit to his Wiſdom for the time. Prayer is an acknowledgment of our dependence upon God, which dependence could have no firm foundation without unchangeableneſs. Prayer doth not deſire any change in God, but is offered to God that he would confer thoſe things which he hath immutably willed to communicate, but he willed them not without Prayer as the means of beſtowing them. The light of the Sun is ordered for our comfort, for the diſcovery of viſible things, for the ripening the fruits of the Earth; but withal tis required that we uſe our faculty of ſeeing, that we employ our induſtry in ſowing and planting, and expoſe our fruits to the view of the Sun, that they may receive the influence of it. If a man ſhuts his eyes, and complains that the Sun is changed into darkneſs, it would be ridiculous; the Sun is not changed, but we alter our ſelves; Nor is God changed in not giving us the bleſſings he hath promiſed, becauſe he hath promiſed in the way of a due addreſs to him, and opening our Souls to receive his influence; and to this, his Immutability is the greateſt encouragement. * Ezek. 36. 37. Mat. 7. 7.

3. This ſhews how contrary Man is to God in regard of his inconſtancy. What an infinite diſtance is there between the immutable God, and mutable Man, and how ſhould we bewail this flittingneſs in our Nature?

There is a Mutability in us as Creatures, and a Creature cannot but be mutable by Nature, otherwiſe it were not a Creature but God. The eſtabliſhment of any Creature is from Grace and Gift; Naturally we tend to nothing, as we come from nothing: This Creature-mutability is not our ſin, yet it ſhould cauſe us to lye down under a ſenſe of our own nothingneſs, in the preſence of the Creator. The Angels as Creatures, though not corrupt, cover their faces before him: And the Arguments God uſes to humble Job, though a fallen Creature, are not from his Corruption; for I do not remember that he taxed him with that; but from the greatneſs of his Majeſty and excellency of his Nature declared in his Works * And therefore Men that have no ſenſe of God, and humility before him, forget that they are Creatures as well as corrupt ones. * Job. 38. 39. 40, 41.

How great is the diſtance between God and us, in regard of our inconſtancy in good, which is not natural to us by Creation? For the mind and affections were regular, and by the great Artificer were pointed to God as the Object of Knowledge and Love. We have the ſame faculties of Underſtanding, Will and Affection as Adam had in Innocence; but not with the ſame Light, the ſame Bias, and the ſame Ballaſt. Man by his fall, wounded his head and heart; the wound in his head made him unſtable in the Truth, and that in his heart unſtedfaſt in his Affections: He changed himſelf from the Image of God to that of the Devil, from Innocence to Corruption; and from an ability to be ſtedfaſt, to a perpetual Inconſtancy: His Silver became Droſs, and his Wine was mixed with Water. * He changed, * Iſa. 1. 22.

1. To inconſtancy in Truth, oppoſed to the Immutability of Knowledge in God. How are our Minds floting between Ignorance and Knowledge? Truth in us is like thoſe Ephemera, Creatures of a days continuance, ſprings up in the Morning and expires at Night. How ſoon doth that fly away from us, which we have had, not only ſome weak flaſhes of, but which we have learned and have had ſome reliſh of? The Devil vil ſtood not in the Truth, * and therefore manages his Engines to make us as unſtable as himſelf: Our Minds reel, and corrupt reaſonings overſway us; like Spunges we ſuck up Water, and a light compreſſion makes us ſpout it out again. Truths are not engraven upon our hearts, but writ as in Duſt, defaced by the next puff of Wind; carried about with every Wind of Doctrin, Eph. 4. 14. Like a Ship without a Pilot and Sails, at the courteſie of the next Storm; or like Clouds that are Tenants to the Wind and Sun, moved by the Wind, and melted by the Sun. The Galatians were no ſooner called into the Grace of God, but they were removed from it *; Some have been reported to have menſtruam fidem, kept an Opinion for a Month; and many are like him that believed the Souls Immortality, no longer than he had Plato's Book of that Subject in his hand *: One likens ſuch to Children; they play with Truths as Children do with Babies, one while embrace them, and a little after throw them into the Durt. How ſoon do we forget what the Truth is delivered to us, and what it repreſented us to be *? Is it not a thing to be bewailed, that Man ſhould be ſuch a Weather-cock, turned about with every Breath of Wind, and ſhifting Aſpects as the Wind ſhifts Points?

* John 8. 44.

* Gal. 1. 6.

* Sedgwick Chriſts Counſel, p. 230.

* James 1. 23. 24.

2. Inconſtancy in Will and Affections oppoſed to the Immutability of Will in God. We waver between God and Baal; and while we are not only reſolving, but upon motion a little way, look back with a hankring after Sodom; Sometimes lifted up with heavenly intentions, and preſently caſt down with earthly cares; like a Ship that by an advancing Wave ſeems to aſpire to Heaven, and the next fall of the Waves makes it ſink down to the Depths. We change Purpoſes oftner than Faſhions; and our Reſolutions are like Letters in water, whereof no mark remains: We will be as John to day to love Chriſt, and as Judas to morrow to betray him, and by an unworthy levity, paſs into the Camp of the Enemies of God; reſolv'd to be as holy as Angels in the Morning, when the Evening beholds us as impure as Devils: How often do we hate what before we loved, and ſhun what before we longed for? And our Reſolutions are like Veſſels of Chryſtal, which break at the firſt knock, are daſht in pieces by the next Temptation. Saul reſolved not to perſecute David any more, but you ſoon find him upon his old game. Pharaoh more than once promiſed, and probably reſolved to let Iſrael go; but at the end of the ſtorm his purpoſes vaniſh.* When an Affliction pincheth Men, they intend to change their courſe; and the next news of eaſe changes their intentions: Like a Bow, not fully bent in their inclinations, they cannot reach the Mark, but live many years between reſolutions of Obedience, and affections to Rebellion *: And what promiſes men make to God are often the fruit of their Paſſion, their Fear, not of their Will. The Iſraelites were ſtartled at the terrors wherewith the Law was delivered, and promiſed obedience *, but a Month after forgat them, and make a Golden Calf, and in the ſight of Sinai call for, and dance before their Gods *; Never people more unconſtant, Peter, who vowed an Allegiance to his Maſter, and a Courage to ſtick to him, forſwears him almoſt with the ſame breath. Thoſe that cry out whith a zeal, the Lord he is God, ſhortly after return to the ſervice of their Idols.* That which ſeems to be our pleaſure this day, is our vexation to morrow: A Fear of a Judgment puts us into a religious pang, and a Love to our Luſts reduceth us to a rebellious inclination; As ſoon as the danger is over, the aint is forgotten: Salvation and Damnation preſent themſelves to us, touch us and ingender ſome weak wiſhes, which are diſſolved by the next allurements of a carnal intereſt. No hold can be taken of our promiſes; no credit is to be given to our reſolutions.

* Exod. 8. 27, 32.

* Pſal. 78. 17.

* Exod. 20. 19.

* Exod. 32.

* 1 Kings 18. 39.

3. Inconſtancy in practice. How much beginning in the Spirit, and ending in the Fleſh; one day in the Sanctuary, another in the Stews; clear in the morning as the Sun, and clouded before noon; in Heaven by an excellency of Gifts, in Hell by a courſe of prophaneſs? Like a Flower, which ſome mention, that changes its colour three times a day; one part white, then purple, then yellow. The Spirit luſts againſt the Fleſh, and the Fleſh quickly triumphs over the Spirit. In a good man how often is there a Spiritual Lethargy? Tho he doth not openly defame God yet he doth not alwayes glorifie him; He doth not forſake the truth, but he doth not alwayes make the attainment of it, and ſettlement in it his buſineſs. This levity diſcovers it ſelf in religious duties, when I would do good, evil is preſent with me. Never more preſent, than when we have a mind to do good, and never more present than when we have a mind to do the best and greatest good: How hard is it to make our thoughts and affections keep their stand? place them upon a good Object, and they will be frisking from it, as a Bird from one bough, one fruit to another. We vary postures according to the various objects we meet with. The course of the world is a very airy thing, suted to the uncertain motions of that Prince of the power of the Air, which works in it. * Eph. 2. 2.

* Rom. 7. 21.

do

This ought to be bewail'd by us. Tho we may stand fast in the truth, tho we may spin our resolutions into a firm web, tho the Spirit may triumph over the flesh in our practice, yet we ought to bewail it, because inconstancy is our nature, and what fixedness we have in good is from grace. What we find practised by most men, is natural to all *: As face answers to face in a glass, so doth heart to heart *; a face in the glass is not more like a natural face, whole image it is, than one mans heart is naturally like another. * Lawrence of Faith p. 262. * Pro. 27. 19.

1. 'Tis natural to those out of the Church. Nebuchadnezzar is so affected with Daniels prophetick Spirit, that he would have none accounted the true God, but the *God of Daniel. How soon doth this notion slip from him, and an image must be set up for all to worship, upon pain of a most cruel painful death? Daniels God is quite forgotten: The miraculous deliverance of the three Children for not worshipping his Image, makes him settle a Decree to secure the Honour of God from the reproach of his Subjects *; yet a little while after, you have him strutting in his Palace, as if there were no God but himself. * Dan. 2. 47. * Dan. 3. 29.

2. 'Tis natural to those in the Church. The Israelites were the only Church God had in the World, and a notable Example of inconstancy. After the Miracles of Ægypt they murmured against God, when they saw Pharaoh marching with an Army at their Heels. They desired food, and soon nauseated the Manna they were before fond of: When they came into Canaan, they sometimes worshipped God, and sometimes Idols, not only the Idols of one Nation, but of all their Neighbours: In which regard God calls this his *Heritage or speckled Bird a Peacock saith Hierom, inconstant, made up of varieties of Idolatrous colours and Ceremonies. * Jer. 12. 9.

This levity of Spirit is the root of all mischief; it scatters our thoughts in the Service of God, it is the cause of all revolts and Apostacies from him, it makes us unfit to receive the communications of God; whatsoever we hear is like words writ in sand, ruffled out by the next gale; whatsoever is put into us is like precious liquor in a palsie hand soon spilt: It breeds distrust of God; when we have an uncertain judgment of him, we are not like to confide in him: An uncertain judgment will be followed with a distrustful heart. In fine, where it is prevalent, it is a certain sign of ungodliness; to be driven with the wind like chaffe, and to be ungodly is all one, in the judgment of the Holy Ghost, Psal. 1. 4. The ungodly are like the chaff which the wind drives away, which signifies not their destruction, but their disposition, for their destruction is inferred from it, ver. 5. Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in judgment.

How contrary is this to the unchangeable God, who is always the same, and would have us the same, in our religious Promises and Resolutions for good?

4. If God be immutable, 'tis sad news to those that are resolved in Wickedness, or careless of returning to that duty he requires. Sinners must not expect, that God will alter his will, make a breach upon his nature, and violate his own Word to gratifie their lusts: No, 'tis not reasonable God should dishonour himself to secure them, and cease to be God, that they may continue to be wicked, by changing his own nature, that they may be unchanged in their vanity. God is the same; goodness is as amiable in his sight, and Sin as abominable in his eyes now, as it was at the beginning of the world: Being the same God, he is the same Enemy to the Wicked, as the same Friend to the Righteous; He is the same in Knowledge, and cannot forget sinful acts; He is the same in Will, and cannot approve of unrighteous Practices: Goodness cannot but be alway the Object of his Love, and Wickedness cannot but be alway the Object of his Hatred: And as his aversion to Sin is alway the same, so as he hath been in his Judgments upon Sinners, the same he will be still; for the same perfection of Immutability belongs to his Justice for the punishment of Sin, as to his Holiness for his disaffection to Sin. Though the Covenant of Works was changeable by the crime of man violating it; yet it was unchangeable in regard of Gods justice vindicating it, which is inflexible in the punishment of the breaches of his Law. The aw had a Lpreceptive part, and a minatory part; When man changed the obſervation of the Precept, the righteous nature of God could not null the execution of the threatning: He could not upon the account of this perfection neglect his juſt word, and countenance the unrighteous tranſgreſſion. Tho there were no more rational Creatures in being but Adam and Eve, yet God ſubjected them to that death he had aſſured them of: And from this immutability of his Will, ariſeth the neceſſity of the ſuffering of the Son of God, for the relief of the Apoſtate Creature. His Will in the ſecond Covenant is as unchangeable, as that in the firſt, only repentance is ſettled as the condition of the ſecond, which was not indulged in the firſt; and without repentance the ſinner muſt irrevocably periſh or God muſt change his nature: There muſt be a change in Man, there can be none in God; his bow is bent, his arrows are ready, if the wicked do not turn. * There is not an Atheiſt, an hypocrite, a prophane perſon, that ever was upon the Earth, but Gods Soul abhorred him as ſuch, and the like he will abhor for ever: While any therefore continue ſo, they may ſooner expect the Heavens ſhould roul as they pleaſe, the Sun ſtand ſtill at their order, the Stars change their courſe at their beck, than that God ſhould change his nature, which is oppoſite to prophaneſs and vanity: Who hath hardned himſelf againſt him and hath proſpered? *

* Pſal. 7. 11.

* Job. 9. 4.

Uſe 2. Of Comfort.

The immutability of a good God is a ſtrong ground of conſolation. Subjects wiſh a good Prince to live for ever, as being loath to change him; but care not how ſoon they are rid of an Oppreſſor. This unchangeableneſs of Gods Will, ſhews him as ready to accept any that come to him as ever he was; ſo that we may with confidence make our addreſſes to him, ſince he cannot change his affections to goodneſs. The fear of change in a friend hinders a full reliance upon him; An aſſurance of ſtability encourages hope and confidence. This attribute is the ſtrongeſt Prop for faith in all our addreſſes; tis not a ſingle perfection, but the glory of all thoſe, that belong to his nature; for he is unchangeable in his love, Jer. 31. 3. in his truth, Pſal. 117. 2. The more ſolemn Revelation of himſelf in this name Jehovah, which ſignifies chiefly his Eternity and immutability, was to ſupport the Iſraelites faith, in expectation of a deliverance from Egypt, that he had not retracted his purpoſe, and his promiſe made to Abraham for giving Canaan to his Poſterity. * Herein is the baſis and ſtrength of all his promiſes; therefore ſaith the Pſalmiſt, thoſe that know thy name, will put their truſt in thee; * Thoſe that are Spiritually acquainted with thy name Jehovah, and have a true ſenſe of it upon their hearts, will put their truſt in thee. His goodneſs could not be diſtruſted, if his unchangeableneſs were were well apprehended and conſidered: All diſtruſt would fly before it as darkneſs before the Sun; it only gets advantage of us, when we are not well grounded in his name; and if ever we truſted God, we have the ſame reaſon to truſt him for ever, Iſa. 26. 4. Truſt in the Lord for ever, for in the Lord Jehovah is everlaſting ſtrength or as tis in the Hebrew, a Rock of Ages; that is, perpetually unchangeable. We find the traces of Gods immutability in the Creatures; he has by his peremptory decree, ſet bounds to the Sea, hitherto ſhalt thou come but no further, and here ſhall thy proud, waves be ſtayed. * Do we fear the Sea overflowing us in this Iſland? No, becauſe of his fixt decree: And is not his promiſe in his Word, as unchangeable as his Word concerning inanimate things, as good a ground to reſt upon?

* Exod. 3. 14, 15, 16, 17.

* Pſal. 9. 10.

* Job. 38. 11.

1. The Covenant ſtands unchangeable. Mutable Creatures break their Leagues and Covenants, and ſnap them aſunder like Sampſons Cords, when they are not accommodated to their intereſts. But an unchangeable God keeps his; the Mountains ſhall depart and the hills be removed, but my kindneſs ſhall not depart from thee, nor ſhall the Covenant of my peace be removed. * The Heaven and Earth ſhall ſooner fall aſunder, and the ſtrongeſt and firmeſt parts of the Creation crumble to duſt ſooner than one Iota of my Covenant ſhall fail. It depends upon the unchangeableneſs of his Will, and the unchangeableneſs of his word, and therefore is called the immutability of his Counſel, Heb. 6. 17. Tis the fruit of the everlaſting purpoſe of God; whence the Apoſtle links purpoſe and grace together. * A Covenant with a Nation may be changeable, becauſe it may not be built upon the Eternal purpoſe of God to put his fear in the heart; but with reſpect to the Creatures obedience. Thus God choſe Jeruſalem, as the place wherein he would dwell for ever, * yet he threatens to

* Iſa. 54. 10.

* 2 Tim. 1. 9.

* Pſal. 132. 14.

departed

depart from them, when they had broken Covenant with him, and the glory of the Lord went up from the midst of the City to the Mountain on the east side. * The Covenant of grace doth not run I will be your God, if you will be my people: But I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Hos. 2. 19. &c. I will betroth thee to me for ever, I will say thou art my people, and they shall say thou art my God. His everlasting purpose, is to write his Laws in the hearts of the Elect. He puts a condition to his Covenant of Grace, the condition of Faith, and he resolves to work that condition in the hearts of the Elect; and therefore Believers have two immutable pillars for their support, stronger than those erected by Solomon at the porch of the Temple, 1 Kings 7. 21. Called Jakin and Boaz, to note the firmness of that building dedicated to God; these are Election or the standing Counsel of God, and the Covenant of grace: He will not revoke the Covenant and blot the names of his Elect out of the Book of Life. * Ezek. 11. 33.

2. Perseverance is ascertained. It consists not with the Majesty of God to call a person effectually to himself to day, to make him fit for his Eternal love, to give him faith and take away that faith to morrow; his effectual Call is the fruit of his Eternal Election, and that Counsel hath no other foundation, but his constant and unchangeable Will; a foundation that stands sure, and therefore called the foundation of God, and not of the Creature; the foundation of God stands sure, the Lord knows who are his. * Tis not founded upon our own natural strength, it may be then subject to change, as all the products of nature are: The fallen Angels had Created Grace in their innocency, but lost it by their fall. * Were this the foundation of the Creature, it might soon be shaken; since man after his revolt can ascribe nothing constant to himself, but his own inconstancy: But the foundation is not in the infirmity of nature, but the strength of grace, and of the grace of God who is immutable, who wants not vertue to be able, nor kindness to be willing to preserve his own foundation. To what purpose doth our Saviour tell his Disciples, their names were written in Heaven, * but to mark the infallible certainty of their Salvation, by an opposition to those things which perish and have their names written in the Earth; * or upon the sand, where they may be defaced? And why should Christ order his Disciples to rejoyce, that their names were written in Heaven, if God were changeable to blot them out again? Or why should the Apostle assure us, that tho God had rejected the greatest part of the Jews, he had not therefore rejected his people elected according to his purpose and immutable Counsel; because there are none of the Elect of God but will come to Salvation; For saith he; the Election hath obtained it; * that is, all those that are of the Election have obtained it, and the others are hardened: Where the Seal of Sanctification is stampt, it is a testimony of Gods Election, and that foundation shall stand sure. The foundation of the Lord stands sure having this Seal, the Lord knows who are his, that is the foundation, the naming the name of Christ, or believing in Christ, and departing from iniquity is the Seal. * As tis impossible, when God calls those things that are not, but that they should spring up into being and appear before him: So it is impossible, but that the seed of God by his Eternal purpose, should be brought to a spiritual life; and that calling cannot be retracted; for that gift and calling is without Repentance. * And when repentance is removed from God in regard of some works, the immutability of those works is declared: And the reason of that immutability is their pure dependance on the Eternal favour and unchangeable grace of God, * [purpos'd in himself] and not upon the mutability of the Creature. Hence their happiness is not as Patents among men, quam diu bene se gesserint, so long as they behave themselves well, but they have a promise, that they shall behave themselves so as never wholly to depart from God, Jer. 32. 40. I will make an everlasting Covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them to do them good, but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me. God will not turn from them, to do them good, and promiseth that they shall not turn from him for ever or forsake him: And the bottom of it is the everlasting Covenant, and therefore believing and sealing, for security, are linkt together, Eph. 1. 13. And When God doth inwardly teach us his Law, he puts in a will not depart from it: Psalm 119. 102. I have not departed from thy Judgments; what is the reason? For thou hast taught me. * 2 Tim. 2. 19. * Turretin Ser. p. 322. * Luk. 10. 20. * Jer. 17. 23. * Rom. 11. 7. * Cocceius. * Rom. 11. 29. * Eph. 1. 9, 11.

3. By this, Eternal Happiness is ensured. This is the Inference made from the Eternity and Unchangeableneſs of God in the verſe following the Text, verſe 28. The Children of thy Servants ſhall continue, and their Seed ſhall be eſtabliſhed before thee; This is the ſole concluſion drawn from thoſe Perfections of God ſolemnly aſſerted before. The Children which the Prophets and Apoſtles have begotten to thee, ſhall be totally delivered from the reliques of their Apoſtacy and the puniſhment due to them, and rendred partakers of Immortality with thee, as Sons to dwell in their Fathers houſe for ever. The Spirit begins a ſpiritual Life here, to fit for an immutable Life in Glory hereafter; where Believers ſhall be placed upon a Throne that cannot be ſhaken, and poſſeſs a Crown that ſhall not be taken off their heads for ever.

3. Uſe. Of Exhortation.

1. Let a ſenſe of the changeableneſs and uncertainty of all other things beſide God, be upon us. There are as many changes as there are figures in the world. The whole faſhion of the world is a tranſient thing; every man may ſay as Job,* Changes and War are againſt me. Lot choſe the plain of Sodom, becauſe it was the richer Soyl; He was but a little time there before he was taken Priſoner, and his ſubſtance made the Spoil of his Enemy; that is again reſtored; but a while after, Fire from Heaven devours his wealth, though his Perſon was ſecur'd from the Judgment by a ſpecial Providence. We burn with a deſire to ſettle our ſelves; but miſtake the way, and build Caſtles in the Air, which vaniſh like bubbles of Sope in water.

* Job. 10. 17.

And therefore,

1. Let not our thoughts dwell much upon them. Do but conſider thoſe Souls that are in the poſſeſſion of an unchangeable God, that behold his never fading Glory! Would it not be a kind of Hell to them, to have their thoughts ſtarting out to theſe things, or find any deſire in themſelves to the changeable trifles of the Earth? Nay, have we not reaſon to think, that they cover their faces with ſhame, that ever they ſhould have ſuch a weakneſs of Spirit when they were here below, as to ſpend more thoughts upon them than were neceſſary for this preſent Life; much more that they ſhould at any time value and court them above an unchangeable Good? Do they not diſdain themſelves that they ſhould ever debaſe the immutable perfections of God, as to have neglecting thoughts of him at any time, for the entertainment of ſuch a mean and inconſtant Rival?

2. Much leſs ſhould we truſt in them or rejoyce in them. The beſt things are mutable, and things of ſuch a nature are not fit Objects of confidence, Truſt not in Riches they have their wanes as well as increaſes; they riſe ſometimes like a Torrent and flow in upon men, but reſemble alſo a Torrent in as ſuddain a fall and departure, and leave nothing but ſlime behind them. Truſt not in Honour, all the Honour and Applauſe in the World, is no better than an Inheritance of Wind, which the Pilot is not ſure of, but ſhifts from one corner to another, and ſtands not perpetually in the ſame point of the Heavens. How in a few Ages did the houſe of David a great Monarch, and a man after Gods own heart, deſcend to a mean condition, and all the glory of that houſe ſhut up in the ſtock of a Carpenter? David's Sheep-hook was turned into a Scepter, and the Scepter by the ſame hand of Providence turned into a Hatchet in Joſeph his Deſcendent.

Rejoyce not immoderately in wiſdom; That and Learning languiſh with Age. A wound in the head may impair that which is the Glory of a Man. If an Organ be out of frame, Folly may ſucceed, and all a mans Prudence be wound up in an irrecoverable Dotage. Nebuchadnezzar was no Fool, yet by a ſuddain hand of God he became not only a Fool or a mad Man, but a kind of Brute. Rejoyce not in ſtrength, that decays; and a mighty Man may live to ſee his ſtrong Arm withered, and a *Graſſ-hopper to become a Burthen. *The ſtrong men ſhall bow themſelves, and the Grinders ſhall ceaſe becauſe they are few. Nor rejoyce in Children; they are like Birds upon a Tree, that make a little chirping muſick, and preſently fall into the Fowlers Net. Little did Job expect ſuch ſad news as the loſs of all his Progeny, at a blow, when the Meſſenger knocked at his Gate: And ſuch changes happen oftentimes, when our expectations of comfort, and a contentment in them are at the higheſt. How often doth a ſtring crack when the Muſitian hath wound it up to a juſt height for a Tune, and all his pains and delight marr'd in a Moment? Nay, all theſe things change while we are uſing them, like Ice that melts between our fingers, and Flowers that wither while we are ſmelling to them: The Apoſtle gave them a good title,

* Eccleſ. 12. 5. * V. 3.

when

when he called them uncertain riches, and thought it a ſtronge argument to diſſwade them *from truſting in them. The wealth of the Merchant depends upon the Winds and Waves, and the revenue of the Husbandman upon the Clouds; and ſince they depend upon thoſe things which are uſed to expreſs the moſt changeableneſs, they can be no fit Object for truſt. Beſides, God ſometimes kindles a Fire under all a mans Glory, which doth inſenſibly conſume it* ; and while we have them, the fear of loſing them renders us not very happy in the fruition of them; we can ſcarce tell whether they are contentments or no, becauſe ſorrow follows them ſo cloſe at the heels. 'Tis not an unneceſſary exhortation for good men; the beſt men have been apt to place too much truſt in them. David thought himſelf immutable in his Proſperity; and ſuch thoughts could not be without ſome immoderate outlets of the heart to them, and confidences in them: And Job promiſed himſelf to dye in his Neſt, and multiply his days as the Sand without any interruption*; but he was miſtaken and diſappointed.

* 1 Tim. 6. 17.

* Iſa. 10. 16.

* Job. 29. 18; 19. &c.

Let me add this; truſt not in men who are as inconſtant as any thing elſe, and often change their moſt ardent affections into implacable hatred: And though their affections may not be changed, their Power to help you may. Hamans Friends that depended on him one day, were creſt-fallen the next, when their Patron was to exchange his Chariot of State for an ignominious Gallows.

3. Prefer an immutable God before mutable Creatures. Is it not a horrible thing to ſee what we are, and what we poſſeſs, daily crumbling to duſt, and in a continual flux from us; and not ſeek out ſomething that is permanent, and always abides the ſame, for our portion? In God, or Wiſdom, which is Chriſt, there is ſubſtance, * in which reſpect he is oppoſed to all the things in the world, that are but ſhadows, that are ſhorter or longer according to the motion of the Sun; mutable alſo, by every little body that intervenes. God is ſubject to no decay within, to no force without; nothing in his own nature can change him from what he is, and there is no Power above can hinder him from being what he will to the Soul: He is an Ocean of all Perfection; He wants nothing without himſelf to render him bleſſed, which may allure him to a change: His Creatures can want nothing out of him to make them happy, whereby they may be inticed to prefer any thing before him. If we enjoy other things, 'tis by Gods donation, who can as well withdraw them as beſtow them; and it is but a reaſonable as well as a neceſſary thing, to endeavour the enjoyment of the immutable Benefactor, rather than his revocable Gifts.

* Pro. 8. 21.

If the Creatures had a ſufficient vertue in themſelves to raviſh our thoughts and engroſs our Souls; yet when we take a proſpect of a fixed and unchangeable being, what beauty, what ſtrength have any of thoſe things to vie with him? How can they bear up and maintain their intereſt againſt a lively thought and ſenſe of God? All the Glory of them would fly before him like that of the Stars before the Sun: They were once nothing, they may be nothing again; as their own nature brought them not out of nothing, ſo their Nature ſecures them not from being reduced to nothing. What an unhappineſs is it, to have our our affections ſet upon that which retains ſomething of its non eſſe with its eſſe, its not being with its being; that lives indeed, but in a continual flux and may loſe that pleaſureableneſs to morrow which charms us to day?

2. This Doctrin will teach us Patience under ſuch Providences as declare his unchangeable Will. The rectitude of our Wills conſiſts in conformity to the Divine, as diſcovered in his Words, and manifeſted in his Providence, which are the effluxes of his immmutable Will. The time of tryal is appointed by his *immutable Will; 'tis not in the Power of the Sufferer's will to ſhorten it, nor in the Power of the Enemies will to lengthen it. Whatſoever doth happen, hath been decreed by God, (Eccleſ. 6. 10. That which hath been is named already) therefore to murmur or be diſcontented, is to contend with God, who is mightier than we to maintain his own purpoſes. God doth act all things conveniently for that immutable end intended by himſelf, and according to the reaſon of his own Divine Will, in the true point of time moſt proper for it and for us, not too ſoon or too ſlow, becauſe he is unchangeable in Knowledge and Wiſdom. God doth not act any thing barely by an immutable Will, but by an immutable Wiſdom, and an unchangeable Rule of Goodneſs; and therefore we ſhould not only acquieſce in what he works, but have a complacency in it; and by having our Wills thus knitting themſelves with the immutable Will of God, we attain ſome degree of likeneſs to him in his own Unchangeableneſs. When therefore God hath manifeſted his VVill in opening his Decree to the world by his work of Providence, we muſt ceaſe all diſputes againſt it, and with Aaron hold our peace, though the affliction be very ſmart, * All fleſh muſt be ſilent before God *; For whatſoever is his Counſel ſhall ſtand, and cannot be recall'd; all ſtruggling againſt it, is like a brittle Glaſs contending with a Rock; For if he cut off and ſhut up, or gather together, then who can hinder him? Job 11. 10. Nothing can help us, if he hath determined to afflict us; as nothing can hurt us, if he hath determined to ſecure us. The more clearly God hath evidenced this or that to be his Will, the more ſinful is our ſtruggling againſt it. Pharaoh's ſin was the greater in keeping Iſrael, by how much the more Gods Miracles had been Demonſtrations of his ſettled VVill to deliver them. Let nothing ſnatch our hearts to a contradiction to him, but let us fear and give Glory to him, when the hour of Judgment, which he hath appointed, is come *; that is, comply with the unchangeable will of his Precept, the more he declares the immutable will of his Providence: VVe muſt not think, God muſt diſgrace his Nature and change his Proceedings for us: Better the Creature ſhould ſuffer, than God be impair'd in any of his Perfections. If God changed his Purpoſe, he would change his Nature. Patience is the way to perform the immutable VVill of God, and a means to attain a gracious Immutability for our ſelves by receiving the Promiſe. Heb. 10. 36. Ye have need of Patience, that after ye have done the Will of God, ye might receive the Promiſe.

* Dan. 11. 36.

of

* Rev. 10. 3.
* Zach. 2. 13.
* Revel. 14. 7.

3. This Doctrin will teach us to imitate God in this perfection by ſtriving to be immoveable in goodneſs. God never goes back from himſelf, he finds nothing better than himſelf for which he ſhould change; and can we find any thing better than God to allure our hearts to a change from him? The Sun never declines from the Ecliptick line, nor ſhould we from the paths of Holineſs. A ſtedfaſt obedience is encouraged by an unchangeable God to reward it, 1 Cor. 15. 58. Be ſtedfaſt and immoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that your labour ſhall not be in vain in the Lord. Unſtedfaſtneſs is the note of an Hypocrite, Pſal. 78. 37. Stedfaſtneſs is that which is good, is the mark of a Saint, 'tis the Character of a righteous perſon to keep the truth, Iſa. 26. 2, And it is as poſitively ſaid, that he that abides not in the Doctrin of Chriſt hath not God, 2 Epiſt. John 9. but he that doth, hath both the Father and the Son. So much of uncertainty, ſo much of nature; ſo much of firmneſs in duty, ſo much of Grace. We can never honour God unleſs we finiſh his work; as Chriſt did not glorifie God but in finiſhing the work God gave him to do. * The nearer the world comes to an end, the more is Gods immutability ſeen in his promiſes and predictions, and the more muſt our unchangeableneſs be ſeen in our obedience, Heb. 10. 23, 35. Let us hold faſt the profeſſion of our faith without wavering, and ſo much the more as you ſee the day approaching. The Chriſtian Jews were to be the more tenacious of their faith, the nearer they ſaw the day approaching, the day of Jeruſalems deſtruction propheſied of by Daniel, * which accompliſhment muſt be a great argument to eſtabliſh the Chriſtian Jews in the profeſſion of Chriſt to be the Meſſiah; becauſe the deſtruction of the City was not to be, before the cutting off the Meſſiah. Let us be therefore conſtant in our profeſſion and ſervice of God, and not ſuffer our ſelves to be driven from him by the ill uſage, or flatter'd from him by the Careſſes of the world.

* John 17. 4.
* Dan. 9. 26.

1. 'Tis reaſonable. If God be unchangeable in doing us good, it is reaſon we ſhould be unchangeable in doing him ſervice: If he aſſure us that he is our God, our I am, he would alſo that we ſhould be his people. His we are. If he declare himſelf conſtant in his promiſes, he expects we ſhould be ſo in our obedience: As a Spouſe, we ſhould be unchangeably faithful to him as a Husband: As Subjects, have an unchangeable allegiance to him as our Prince. He would not have us faithful to him for an hour or a day, but to the death; * And it is reaſon we ſhould be his; and if we be his Children imitate him in his conſtancy of his holy purpoſes.

* Rev. 2. 10.

2. 'Tis our glory and intereſt. To be a reed ſhaken with every wind, is no commendation among men, and tis leſs a ground of praiſe with God. It was Jobs glory, that he held faſt in his integrity; * In all this Job ſinned not; In all this, which whole Cities and Kingdoms would have thought ground enough of high exclamations mations againſt God: And alſo againſt the temptation of his Wife, he retained his integrity, Job. 2. 9. Doſt thou ſtill retain thy integrity? The Devil, who by Gods permiſſion ſtript him of his goods and health, yet could not ſtrip him of his grace. As a Traveller, when the wind and ſnow beats in his face, wrapes his clock more cloſely about him to preſerve that and himſelf. Better we had never made profeſſion, than afterwards to abandon it; ſuch a withering profeſſion ſerves for no other uſe than to aggravate the crime, if any of us fly like a coward or revolt like a Traytor: What profit will it be to a Souldier, if he hath withſtood many aſſaults and turn his back at laſt? If we would have God Crown us with an immutable glory, we muſt Crown our beginnings with a happy perſeverance, Rev. 2. 10. Be faithful to the Death and I will give thee a Crown of life: Not as tho this were the cauſe to merit it, but a neceſſary condition to poſſeſs it: Conſtancy in good is accompanied with an immutability of Glory.

* Job 1. 22.

3. By an unchangeable diſpoſition to good we ſhould begin the happineſs of Heaven upon Earth. This is the perfection of bleſſed Spirits, thoſe that are neareſt to God, as Angels and glorified Souls, they are immutable: Not indeed by nature, but by grace; yet not only by a neceſſity of grace, but a liberty of Will: Grace will not let them change; and that grace doth animate their Wills that they would not change; an immutable God fills their underſtandings and affections, and gives ſatisfaction to their deſires. The Saints when they were below, tried other things and found them deficient: But now they are ſo fully ſatisfied with the beatifick viſion, that if Satan ſhould have entrance among the Angels and Sons of God, 'tis not likely he ſhould have any influence upon them; he could not preſent to their underſtandings any thing, that could either at the firſt glance, or upon a deliberate view be preferable to what they enjoy and are fixed in.

Well then let us be immoveable in the Knowledge and Love of God. 'Tis the delight of God to ſee his Creatures reſemble him in what they are able. Let not our Affections to him be as Jonah's Goard, growing up in one Night and withering the next. Let us not only fight a good Fight, but do ſo till we have finiſhed our courſe, and imitate God in an unchangeableneſs of holy purpoſes; and to that purpoſe, examin our ſelves daily what fixedneſs we have arrived unto; And to prevent any temptation to a revolt, let us often poſſeſs our minds with thoughts of the immutability of Gods Nature and Will, which like Fire under Water, will keep a good matter boiling up in us, and make it both retain and increaſe its heat.

4. Let this Doctrin teach us to have recourſe to God, and aim at a near conjunction with him. When our Spirits begin to flag, and a cold aguiſh temper is drawing upon us; let us go to him, who can only fix our hearts, and furniſh us with a Ballaſt to render them ſtedfaſt. As he is only immutable in his Nature, ſo he is the only Principle of Immutability as well as Being in the Creature. Without his Grace, we ſhall be as changeable in our appearances as a Chamelion, and in our turnings as the Wind. When Peter truſted in himſelf, he changed to the worſe: It was his Maſters recourſe to God for him that preſerved in him a reducing Principle, which changed him again for the better and fixed him in it. *

* Luke 22. 32.

It will be our Intereſt to be in conjunction with him, that moves not about with the Heavens, nor is turned by the force of Nature, nor changed by the accidents in the world; but ſits in the Heavens, moving all things by his powerful Arm, according to his infinite Skill: While we have him for our God, we have his Immutability as well as any other Perfection of his Nature for our advantage; The nearer we come to him, the more ſtability we ſhall have in our ſelves; the further from him, the more lyable to change. The Line that is neareſt to the place where it is firſt fixed, is leaſt ſubject to motion; the further it is ſtretched from it, the weaker it is, and more liable to be ſhaken. Let us alſo affect thoſe things which are neareſt to him in this perfection; the righteouſneſs of Chriſt that ſhall never wear out, and the graces of the Spirit that ſhall never burn out; by this means what God is infinitely by Nature, we ſhall come to be finitely immutable by Grace, as much as the capacity of a Creature can contain.

A DISCOURSE UPON God's Omnipresence.

Jeremiah 23. 24.

Can any hide himself in secret places, that I shall not see him, saith the Lord? Do not I fill Heaven and Earth, saith the Lord?

THE occasion of this Discourse begins verse 16. where God admonisheth the people, not to hearken to the words of the false Prophets which spake a Vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the Lord. They made the people vain by their insinuations of Peace, when God had proclaimed War and Calamity; and uttered the Dreams of their Phansies, and not the Visions of the Lord; and so turned the people from the expectation of the evil day which God had threatned, ver. 17. They say still unto them, that despise me, The Lord hath said, Ye shall have peace: and they say unto every one that walks after the Imagination of his own heart, No evil shall come upon you. And they invalidate the Propheſies of those, whom God had sent, v. 18. Who hath stood in the Counsel of the Lord, and hath perceived and heard his word? Who hath marked his word, and heard it? Who hath stood in the Counsel of the Lord? Are they acquainted with the Secrets of God more than we? Who have the word of the Lord, if we have not? Or, it may be a continuation of Gods Admonition: Believe not those Prophets; for who of them have been acquainted with the Secrets of God? or by what means should they learn his Counsel? No, assure your selves, a whirlwind of the Lord is gone forth in fury, even a grievous whirlwind, it shall fall grievously upon the head of the wicked. v. 19. A whirlwind shall come from Babylon, 'tis just at the door, and shall not be blown over, it shall fall with a witness upon the wicked people, and the deceiving Prophets, and sweep them together into Captivity. For v. 20. The anger of the Lord shall not return, until he have executed, and till he have performed the thoughts of his heart. My fury shall not be a childish fury that quickly languisheth, but shall accomplish whatsoever I threaten; and burn so hot, as not to be cool, till I have satisfied my vengeance; in the latter days ye shall consider it perfectly, v. 20. when the storm shall beat upon you, you shall then know, that the Calamities shall answer the words you have heard. When the Conquerour shall waste your Grounds, demolish your Houses, and manacle your hands, then shall you consider it, and have the wishes of Fools, that you had had your eyes in your heads before; you shall then know the falsness of your Guides, and the truth of my Prophets, and discern who stood in the Counsel of the Lord, and subscribe to the Messages, I have sent you.

Some understand this not only of the Babylonish Captivity, but refer it to the time of Christ, and the false Doctrine of mens own Righteousness in opposition to the Righteousness of God; understanding this verse to be partly a threatning of Wrath, which shall end in an advantage to the Jews, who shall in the latter time consider the falsness of their Notions about a legal Righteousness, and so make it a promise; they shall then know the intent of the Scripture, and in the latter days, the latter end of the World, when time shall be near the rouling up, they shall reflect upon upon themſelves; they ſhall look upon him whom they have pierced; and till theſe latter days, they ſhall be hardened, and believe nothing of Evangelical truths.

Now God denieth that he ſent thoſe Prophets, v. 21. I have not ſent theſe Prophets, yet they ran; I have not ſpoken to them, yet they propheſied. They have intruded themſelves without a Commiſſion from me, whatſoever their Brags are. The reaſon to prove it, is v. 22. If they had ſtood in my Counſel, if they had been inſtructed, and inſpired by me, they would have cauſed my people to hear my words; they would have regulated themſelves according to my word, and have turned them from their evil way; i. e. endeavoured to ſhake down their falſe confidences of peace, and make them ſenſible of their falſe Notions of me, and my ways. Now becauſe thoſe falſe Prophets could not be ſo impudent as to boaſt, that they Propheſied in the Name of God, when they had not Commiſſion from him, unleſs they had ſome ſecret Sentiment, that they and their intentions were hid from the Knowledge and Eye of God; He adds, v. 23. Am I a God at hand, and not a God a far off? Can any hide himſelf in ſecret places, that I ſhall not ſee him? Have I not the power of ſeeing and knowing what they do, what they deſign, what they think? Why ſhould I not have ſuch a power, ſince I fill Heaven and Earth by my Eſſence? Am I a God at hand, and not a God afar off? He excludes here the Doctrine of thoſe that excluded the Providence of God from extending its ſelf to the inferior things of the earth; which error was ancient, as ancient as the time of Job, as appears by their opinion. That Gods eyes were hood-winkt and muffled by the thickneſs of the Clouds, and could not pierce through their dark and denſe body: * Thick clouds are a covering to him, that he ſeeth not.

* Job. 22. 14.

* Some refer it to time. Do you imagine me a God new fram'd like your Idols, beginning a little time ago, and not exiſting before the foundation of the World; yea, from Eternity? a God afar off, further than your acuteſt underſtandings can reach? I am of a longer ſtanding, and you ought to know my Majeſty. But it rather refers to place, than time. Do you think I do not behold every thing in the earth, as well as in Heaven? Am I lockt up within the walls of my Palace, and cannot peep out to behold the things done in the World? Or that I am ſo linkt to pleaſure in the place of my Glory, as earthly Kings are in their Courts, that I have no mind, or leaſure to take notice of the carriages of men upon earth? God doth not ſay, He was a far off, but only gives an account of the inward thoughts of their minds, or at leaſt, of the Language expreſt by their Actions.

* Munſter, Vatablus, Caſtalio Oecolamp.

The Interrogation carries in it a ſtrong Affirmation, and aſſures us more of Gods care, and the folly of men in not conſidering it. Am I a God at hand, and not a God afar off? Can any hide himſelf in ſecret places? Heb. in Hiddeneſſes, in the deepeſt Cells: What? are you beſotted by your baſe Luſts, that you think me a God careleſs, ignorant, blind, that I can ſee nothing, but as a purblind man, what is very near my eye? Are you ſo out of your wits, that you imagine you can deceive me? Do not all your behaviours ſpeak ſuch a Sentiment to lie ſecret in your heart, tho not form'd into a full conception, yet teſtified by your Actions? No, you are much miſtaken, 'tis impoſſible but that I ſhould ſee and know all things, ſince I am preſent with all things, and am not at a greater diſtance from the things on earth, than from the things in Heaven; for I fill all that vaſt Fabrick which is divided into thoſe two parts of Heaven and Earth; and he that hath ſuch an infinite eſſence, cannot be diſtant, cannot be ignorant, nothing can be far from his eyes, ſince every thing is ſo near to his Eſſence.

So that it is an Elegant Expreſſion of the Omniſcience of God, and a ſtrong Argument for it. He aſſerts, firſt the Univerſality of his Knowledge; but leſt they ſhould miſtake, and confine his preſence only to Heaven; he adds, That he fills Heaven and Earth. I do not ſee things ſo, as if I were in one place, and the things ſeen in another, as it is with man; but whatſoever I ſee, I ſee not without my ſelf, becauſe every corner of Heaven and Earth is fill'd by me. He that fills all, muſt needs ſee and know all.

And indeed, men that queſtion the knowledge of God, would be more convinc'd by the Doctrine of his immediate preſence with them. And this ſeems to be the deſign and manner of Arguing in this place. Nothing is remote from my knowledge, becauſe nothing is diſtant from my preſence.

I fill Heaven and Earth: He doth not ſay, I am in Heaven and Earth, but I fill Heaven and Earth, i. e. * ſay ſome, with my Knowledge; others, with my Authority, or my Power. But,

* Tum perſpicacia, tum efficacia, Grot.

1. The word filling cannot properly be referred to the act of underſtanding and will. A preſence by knowledge is to be granted, but to ſay ſuch a preſence fills a a place, is an improper Speech. Knowledge is not enough to conſtitute a preſence. A Man at London knows there is ſuch a City as Paris, and knows many things in it; can he be concluded therefore to be preſent in Paris, or fill any place there, or be preſent with the things he knows there? If I know any thing to be diſtant from me, how can it be preſent with me? For by knowing it to be diſtant, I know it not to be preſent. Beſides, filling Heaven and Earth, is diſtinguiſht here from Knowing or Seeing. His preſence is rendred as an Argument to prove his Knowledge. Now a Propoſition, and the proof of that Propoſition, are diſtinct, and not the ſame.

It cannot be immagin'd, that God ſhould prove idem per idem, as we ſay; for what would be the import of the Speech then? I know all things, I ſee all things, becauſe I know and ſee all things *. The Holy Ghoſt here accommodates himſelf to the Capacity of men; becauſe we know that a man ſees and knows that which is done, where he is corporally preſent; ſo he proves, that God knows all things that are done in the moſt ſecret Caverns of the Heart, becauſe he is every where in Heaven and Earth, as light is every where in the air, and air every where in the World. Hence the Schools uſe the term repletivè for the preſence of God.

* Suarez.

2. Nor by filling of Heaven and Earth, is meant his Authority and Power. It would be improperly ſaid of a King, that in regard of the Government of his Kingdom, is every where by his Authority, that he fills all the Cities and Countrys of his Dominions. [I, do not I fill *?] That [I] notes the Eſſence of God, as diſtinguiſht according to our capacity, from the perfections pertaining to his Eſſence; and is in reaſon better referred to the ſubſtance of God, than to thoſe things we conceive as Attributes in him. Beſides, were it meant only of his Authority or Power, the Argument would not run well. I ſee all things, becauſe my Authority and Power fills Heaven and Earth. Power doth not always rightly infer knowledge, no not in a rational Agent. Many things in a Kingdom are done by the Authority of the King, that never arrive to the Knowledge of the King. Many things in us are done by the Power of our Souls, which yet we have not a diſtinct Knowledge of in our underſtandings. There are many motions in ſleep, by the vertue of the Soul informing the body, that we have not ſo much as a ſimple knowledge of in our minds. Knowledge is not rightly inferr'd from power, or power from knowledge.

* Amyrald. de Trinitate. p. 57.

By filling Heaven and Earth is meant therefore, a filling it with his Eſſence. No place can be imagin'd, that is deprived of the preſence of God; and therefore when the Scripture any were ſpeaks of the preſence of God, it joyns Heaven and Earth together: He ſo fills them, that there is no place without him. We do not ſay a veſſel is full, ſo long as there is any ſpace to contain more. Not a part of Heaven, nor a part of Earth, but the whole Heaven, the whole Earth at one and the ſame time. If he were only in one part of Heaven, or one part of Earth; nay, if there were any part of Heaven, or any part of Earth void of him, he could not be ſaid to fill them. I fill Heaven and Earth; not a part of me fills one place, and another part of me fills another; but I, God, fill Heaven and Earth; I am whole God filling the Heaven; and whole God, filling the Earth. I fill Heaven, and yet fill Earth; I fill Earth, and yet fill Heaven, and fill Heaven and Earth at one and the ſame time. God fills his own works, a Heathen Philoſopher ſaith *.

* Seneca de Benefic. lib. 4. cap. 8. Ipſe opus ſuum implet.

Here is then a Deſcription of Gods Preſence.

1. By Power, Am I not a God afar off? a God in the extenſion of his Arm.

2. By Knowledge; Shall I not ſee them?

3. By Eſſence; as an undeniable ground for inferring the two former: I fill Heaven and Earth.

Doct. God is Eſſentially every where preſent in Heaven and Earth.

If God be, he muſt be ſomewhere; that which is no where, is nothing. Since God is, he is in the world; not in one part of it; for then he were circumſcrib'd by it: if in the world, and only there, though it be a great ſpace, he were alſo limited. * Some therefore ſaid, God was every where, and no where. No where, i. e. not bounded bounded by any place, nor receiving from any place any thing for his preservation or sustainment. He is every where, because no creature either Body or Spirit, can exclude the presence of his Essence; for he is not only near, but in every thing; * In him we live, and move, and have our being. Not absent from any thing, but so present with them, that they live and move in him, and move more in God, than in the air or earth wherein they are; nearer to us than our flesh to our bones, than the air to our breath; he cannot be far from them that live, and have every motion in him. The Apostle doth not say, By him, but in him, to shew the inwardness of his Presence. * Acts 17. 28.

* Chryſoſtom.

As Eternity is the perfection whereby he hath neither beginning nor end; Immutability is the perfection whereby he hath neither increase, nor diminution: so Immensity or Omnipresence is that whereby he hath neither bounds nor limitation. As he is in all time, yet so as to be above time; so is he in all places, yet so as to be above limitation by any place. It was a good Expression of a Heathen to illustrate this, that God is a Sphere or Circle, whose Center is every where, and Circumference no where. His meaning was, that the Essence of God was indivisible; i. e. could not be divided. It cannot be said, here and there the lines of it terminate; 'tis like a line drawn out in infinite spaces, that no point can be conceived where its length and breadth ends. The Sea is a vast mass of waters; yet to that it is said, Hitherto shalt thou go, and no further. But it cannot be said of Gods Essence, hitherto it reaches and no further; here it is, and there it is not. Tis plain, that God is thus immense, because he is infinite; we have Reason and Scripture to assent to it, though we cannot conceive it. We know that God is eternal, though Eternity is too great to be measured by the short line of a created understanding. We cannot conceive the Vastness and Glory of the Heavens, much less that which is so great, as to fill Heaven and Earth; yea, * not to be contained in the Heaven of Heavens. * 1 King. 8. 27.

Things are said to be present, or in a place.

1. Circumscriptivè, as circumscribed. This belongs to things that have quantity, as bodies that are encompass'd by that place wherein they are; and a body fills but one particular space wherein it is, and the space is commensurate to every part of it, and every member hath a distinct place. The hand is not in the same particular space, that the foot or head is.

2. Definitivè, which belongs to Angels and Spirits, which are said to be in a point, yet so as that they cannot be said to be in another at the same time.

3. Repletivè, filling all places; this belongs only to God: As he is not measured by time, so he is not limited by place. A body or Spirit, because finite, fills but one space; God, because infinite, fills all, yet so as not to be contained in them, as Wine and Water is in a Vessel. He is from the height of the Heaven, to the bottom of the Deeps, in every point of the World, and in the whole Circle of it, yet not limited by it, but beyond it.

Now this hath been acknowledged by the wisest in the world.

Some indeed had other Notions of God. The more ignorant sort of the Jews confin'd him to the Temple *. And God intimates, that they had such a thought when he asserts his presence in Heaven and Earth, in opposition to the Temple they built as his House, and the place of his Rest *, And the Idolaters among them, thought their Gods might be at a distance from them, which Elias intimates in the scoff he puts upon them *, Cry aloud, for he is a God, meaning Baal; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey; and they follow his advice, and cried louder, v. 28. Whereby it is evident, they looked not on it as a mock, but as a truth. And the Syrians call'd the God of Israel the God of the hills, as though his presence were fixed there, and not in the valleys *; and their own Gods in the Valleys, and not in the Mountains; they phansied every God to have a particular Dominion, and presence in one place, and not in another; and bounded the Territories of their Gods, as they did those of their princes. * And some thought him tied to, and shut up in their Temples and Groves wherein they worshipped him *. Some of them thought God to be confined to Heaven, and therefore sacrificed upon the highest Mountains, that the steam might ascend nearer Heaven; and their Praises be heard better in those places which were nearest to the Habitation of God. But the wiser

* Hierom. on Isa. 66. 1.

* Hammond on Matth. 6. 7.

* 1 King. 18. 17.

* 1 King. 20. 23.

* Med. Diatrib. vol. 1. p. 71, 72.

* Dought Anat. lec. exerc. 61. 113.

Jews acknowledged it; and therefore call'd God place *, whereby they denoted his immenſity; he was not contain'd in any place, every part of the world ſubſiſts by him: He was a place to himſelf, greater than any thing made by him. And the wiſer Heathens acknowledged it alſo.

* מקום Grot. upon Mar. 5. 16. Mareſ. contra Volk. lib. 1. cap. 27. p. 494.

‖ One calls God a mind paſſing through the univerſal nature of things; Another, that he was an infinite and immenſe Air *; Another, That it is as natural to think God is every where, as to think that God is: Hence they call'd God the Soul of the world, that as the Soul is in every part of the body, to quicken it, ſo is God in every part of the World, to ſupport it.

‖ Vide Minut. Fel. p. 20.
* Plotin Enead 6. lib. 5. cap. 4.

And there are ſome reſemblances of this in the world, though no Creature can fully reſemble God in any one perfection: for then it would not be a Creature, but God. But Air and Light are ſome weak reſemblances of it: Air is in all the ſpaces of the World, in the Pores of all bodies, in the Bowels of the Earth, and extends it ſelf from the loweſt Earth to the higheſt Regions; and the Heavens themſelves are probably nothing elſe but a refin'd kind of Air; and light diffuſeth it ſelf through the whole Air, and every part of it is truly Light, as every part of the Air is truly Air; and though they ſeem to be mingled together, yet they are diſtinct things, and not of the ſame Eſſence; ſo is the Eſſence of God in the whole World, not by diffuſion as Air or Light; not mixed with any Creature; but remaining diſtinct from the Eſſence of any Created Being. Now when this hath been own'd by men inſtructed only in the School of Nature, 'tis a greater ſhame to any acquainted with the Scripture to deny it. For the underſtanding of this, there ſhall be ſome Propoſitions premis'd in general.

1. This is negatively to be underſtood. Our knowledge of God is moſt by withdrawing from him, or denying to him, in our conception, any weakneſſes or imperfections in the Cteature. As the infiniteneſs of God is a denial of limitation of Being, ſo Immenſity or Omnipreſence is a denial of limitation of place: And when we ſay, God is totus in every place, we muſt underſtand it thus, that he is not every where by parts, as Bodies are, as Air and Light are; He is every where, i. e. his Nature hath no bounds, he is not tyed to any place, as the Creature is, who when he is preſent in one place, is abſent from another. As no place can be without God, ſo no place can compaſs and contain him.

2. There is an influential Omnipreſence of God.

1. Univerſal with all Creatures. He is preſent with all things by his Authority, becauſe all things are ſubject to him: by his power, becauſe all things are ſuſtained by him: By his Knowledge, becauſe all things are naked before him. He is preſent in the world, as a King is in all parts of his Kingdom Regally preſent: Providentially preſent with all, ſince his care extends to the meaneſt of his Creatures. His Power reacheth all, and his Knowledge pierceth all.

As every thing in the VVorld was Created by God, ſo every thing in the VVorld is preſerved by God; and ſince Preſervation is not wholly diſtinct from Creation, 'tis neceſſary God ſhould be preſent with every thing while he preſerves it, as well as preſent with it when he Created it, Thou preſerveſt man and Beaſt. * He upholds all things by the word of his Power. There is a vertue ſuſtaining every Creature, that it may not fall back into that nothing from whence it was elevated by the Power of God. All thoſe natural Vertues we call the Principles of Operation, are Fountains ſpringing from his Goodneſs and Power, all things are acted and managed by him, as well as preſerved by him; and in this ſenſe God is preſent with all Creatures; for whatſoever acts another, is preſent with that which it acts, by ſending forth ſome vertue and influence, whereby it acts: If free Agents do not only live, but move in him, and by him *, much more are the motions of other natural Agents, by a vertue communicated to them, and upheld in them in the time of their acting: This vertual preſence of God, is evident to our ſenſe, a preſence we feel; his eſſential preſence is evident in our reaſon: This influential preſence may be compar'd to that of the Sun, which though at ſo great a diſtance from the Earth, is preſent in the Air and Earth by its Light, and within the Earth by its influence in concocting thoſe Metals which are in the Bowels of it, without being ſubſtantially either of them. God is thus ſo intimate with every Creature, that there is not the leaſt particle of any Creature, but the marks of his Power and goodneſs are ſeen in it, and his goodneſs

* Pſal. 36. 6.
* Heb. 1. 3.
* Acts 17. 28.

doth

doth attend them, and is more ſwift in its effluxes, then the breaking out of Light from the Sun, which yet are more ſwift than can be declar'd; but to ſay he is in the World only by his Vertue, is to acknowledge only the effects of his Power and Wiſdom in the world, that his eye ſees all, his Arm ſupports all, his Goodneſs nouriſheth all, but himſelf and his Eſſence at a diſtance from them *? and ſo the ſoul of man according to its meaſure would have in ſome kind a more excellent manner of Preſence in the body, than God according to the infiniteneſs of his Being with his Creatures; for that doth not only communicate Life to the Body, but is actually preſent with it, and ſpreads its whole Eſſence through the Body and every Member of it: All grant, that God is efficaciouſly in every Creek of the World; but ſome ſay he is only ſubſtantially in Heaven. * Zanch.

2. Limited to ſuch Subjects that are capacitated for this or that kind of Preſence. Yet it is an Omnipreſence, becauſe it is a Preſence in all the Subjects capacitated for it; thus there is a ſpecial providential Preſence of God with ſome, in aſſiſting them when he ſets them on work as his Inſtruments for ſome ſpecial Service in the World: As with Cyrus *, I will go before thee; and with Nebuchadnezzer, and Alexander, whom he Protected and directed to execute his Couſels in the World; ſuch a preſence Judas and others || that ſhall not enjoy his glorious Preſence, had in the working of Miracles in the world: Beſides* as there is an effective Preſence of God with all Creatures, becauſe he produced them, and preſerves them; ſo there is an objective Preſence of God with rational Creatures, becauſe he offers himſelf to them, to be known and loved by them: He is near to VVicked men in the offers of his Grace, || call ye upon him while he is near; Beſides, there is a gracious preſence of God with his People in whom he dwells, and make his abode, as in a Temple Conſecrated to him by the Graces of the Spirt. We will come*, i. e. the Father and the Son, and make our abode with him. He is preſent with all by the preſence of his Divinity, but only in his Saints by a preſence of a gracious Efficacy; he walks in the midſt of the Golden Candleſticks, and hath Digniſi'd the congregation of his People with the Title of Jehovah Shammah, * The Lord is there: In Salem is his Tabernacle, and his dwelling place in Sion. * As he filled the Tabernacle, ſo he doth the Church with the Signs of his preſence; this is not the preſence wherewith he fills Heaven and Earth. His Spirit is not beſtowed upon all, to reſide in their hearts, enlighten their minds, and bedew them with refreſhing Comforts: When the Apoſtle ſpeaks of Gods being Above all, and through all; * Above all in his Majeſty, Through all in his Providence; he doth not appropriate that, as he doth what follows, and in you all; in you all by a ſpecial Grace; as God was ſpecially preſent with Chriſt by the Grace of Union, ſo he is ſpecially preſent with his People by the the Grace of Regeneration. So there are ſeveral manifeſtations of his preſence; he hath a preſence of Glory in Heaven, whereby he Comforts the Saints; a preſence of wrath in Hell, whereby he Torments the damned; in Heaven he is a God ſpreading his beam of Light; in Hell, a God diſtributing his ſtrokes of Juſtice; by the one he fills Heaven, by the other he fills Hell; by his Providence and Eſſence he fills both Heaven and Earth.

* Isa. 43. 2.

|| Mat. 7. 22. In thy name we have done many wonderful works.

* Cajetan in Aquin Par. 1. Qu. 8. Artic. 3

|| Isa. 55. 6.

* John. 14. 23.

* Ezek. 48. 35.

* Pſal. 76. 2.

* Eph. 4. 6.

3. There is an Eſſential preſence of God in the world. He is not only every where, by his Power upholding the Creatures, by his VViſdom underſtanding them, but by his Eſſence containing them. That any thing is eſſentially preſent any where, it hath from God; God is therefore much more preſent every where, for he cannot give that which he hath not.

1. He is Eſſentially preſent in all places *. Tis as reaſonable to think the Eſſence of God to be every where, as to be always; Immenſity is as rational as Eternity; That indiviſible Eſſence which reaches through all times, may as well reach through all places; Tis more excellent to be always, than to be every where; for to be always in duration is Intrinſical; to be every where is Extrinſick; if the greater belongs to God, why not the leſs? As all times are a moment to his Eternity, ſo all places are as a point to his Eſſence; As he is larger than all time, ſo he is vaſter than all place: The Nations of the World are to him as the Duſt of the Ballance, or Drop of a Bucket *. The Nations are accounted as the ſmall Duſt; The Eſſence of God may well be thought to be preſent every where with that which is no more than a grain of Duſt to him, and in all thoſe Iſles, which if put together, are a very little thing in his hand: Therefore ſaith a learned Jew *, If a man were ſet in the higheſt higheſt Heavens, he would not be nearer to the Eſſence of God than if he were in the Center of the Earth. Why may not the Preſence of God in the World be as noble as that of the Soul in the Body, which is generally granted to be eſſentially in every part of the body of man. Which is but a little World, and animates every Member by its actual preſence, though it exerts not the ſame operation in every part * ? The world is leſs to the Creator, than the body to the Soul; and needs more the preſence of God, than the Body needs the preſence of the Soul. That glorious body of the Sun viſits every part of the Habitable Earth in 24 hours by its beams; which reaches the Troughs of the loweſt Valleys, as well as the Pinacles of the higheſt Mountains; muſt we not acknowledge in the Creator of this Sun an infinite greater proportion of preſence? Is it not as eaſie with the Eſſence of God to over-ſpread the whole body of Heaven and Earth, as it is for the Sun to pierce and diffuſe its ſelf through the whole Air between it and the Earth, and ſend up its light alſo as far to the Regions above? Do we not ſee ſomething like it in Sounds and Voices? Is not the ſame Sound of a Trumpet, or any other Muſical Inſtrument, at the firſt breaking out of a Blaſt, in ſeveral places within ſuch a compaſs, at the ſame time? Doth not every Ear that hears it, receive alike the whole ſound of it? And fragrant Odors ſcented in ſeveral places at the ſame time, in the ſame manner; and the Organ proper for Smelling takes in the ſame in every perſon within the compaſs of it: How far is the noiſe of Thunder heard alike to every Ear, in places ſomething diſtant from one another? and do we daily find ſuch a manner of preſence in thoſe things of ſo low a concern, and not imagine a kind of preſence of God greater than all thoſe? Is the ſound of Thunder, the Voice of God, as it is call'd, every where in ſuch a compaſs, and ſhall not the Eſſence of an Infinite God be much more every where? Thoſe that would confine the Eſſence of God only to Heaven and exclude it from the Earth, run into great inconveniencies. It may be demanded, whether he be in one part of the Heavens, or in the whole vaſt body of them? If in one part of them, his Eſſence is bounded; if he moves from that part, he is mutable, for he changes a place wherein he was, for another wherein he was not. If he be always fixed in one part of the Heavens, ſuch a notion would render him little better than a living Statue *: If he be in the whole Heaven, why cannot his Eſſence poſſeſs a greater ſpace than the whole Heavens which are ſo vaſt? How comes he to be confin'd within the compaſs of that, ſince the whole Heaven compaſſeth the Earth? If he be in the whole Heaven, he is in places farther diſtant one from another, than any part of the Earth can be from the Heavens; ſince the Earth is like a Center in the midſt of a Circle, it muſt be nearer to every part of the Circle, than ſome parts of the Circle can be to one another: If therefore his Eſſence poſſeſſes the whole Heavens, no reaſon can be render'd why he doth not alſo poſſeſs the Earth, ſince alſo the Earth is but a little point in compariſon of the vaſtneſs of the Heavens; If therefore he be in every part of the Heavens, why not in every part of the Earth.

* Ficin.

* Iſa. 40. 15.

* Maimonid.

* Ficin.

* Hornbeck Soun. Part 1. p. 303.

This Scripture is plain *, Whither ſhall I go from thy Spirit? Or whither ſhall I flie from thy Preſence? If I aſcend up to Heaven, thou art there; If I make my Bed in Hell, behold thou art there; if I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermoſt parts of the Sea, even there ſhall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand ſhall uphold me. If he be in heaven, Earth, Hell, Sea, he fills all places with his Preſence; his Preſence is here aſſerted in places the moſt diſtant from one another; all the places then between Heaven and Earth are poſſeſſed by his Preſence: 'Tis not meant of his Knowledge, for that the Pſalmiſt had ſpoken of before, ver. 2, 3. Thou underſtandeth my thoughts afar off, thou art acquainted with all my ways. Beſides, Thou art there, not thy wiſdom or knowledge; but Thou, thy Eſſence, not only thy Vertue. For having before ſpoken of his Omniſcience, he proves that ſuch Knowledge could not be in God, unleſs he were preſent in his Eſſence in all places, ſo as to be excluded from none: He fills the depths of Hell, the Extenſion of the Earth, and the heights of the Heavens. When the Scripture mentions the Power of God only, it expreſſeth it by Hand or Arm; but when it mentions the Spirit of God, and doth not intend the Third Perſon in the Trinity, it ſignifies the Nature and Eſſence of God: and ſo here, when he ſaith Whither ſhall I go from thy Spirit? He adds exegetically, Whither ſhall I flie from thy preſence, or Heb. Face? and the Face of God

* Pſal. 139. 7, 8, 9.

God in Scripture ſignifies the Eſſence of God *; Thou canſt not ſee my face, and my face ſhall not be ſeen; the effects of his Power, Wiſdom, Providence, are ſeen, which are his Back-parts, but not his face: The effects of his Power and Wiſdom are ſeen in the World, but his Eſſence is inviſible; and this the Pſalmiſt elegantly expreſſeth. Had I Wings endued with as much quickneſs as the firſt Dawnings of the morning light, or the firſt darts of any Sun-beam that ſpreads its ſelf through the Hemiſphere, and paſſes many Miles in as ſhort a ſpace as I can think a Thought, I ſhould find thy preſence in all places before me, and could not flie out of the infinite compaſs of thy Eſſence. * Exod. 33. 20, 23.

2. He is Eſſentially preſent with all Creatures. If he be in all places, it follows that he is with all Creatures in thoſe places; as he is in Heaven, ſo he is with all Angels; as he is in Hell, ſo is he with all Devils; as he is in the Earth and Sea, he is with all Creatures inhabiting thoſe Elements: As his Eſſential Preſence was the ground of the firſt Being of things by Creation, ſo it is the ground of the continued Being of things by Conſervation. As his Eſſential Preſence was the Original, ſo it is the ſupport of the exiſtence of all the Creatures. What are all thoſe magnificent expreſſions of his Creative vertue, but Teſtimonies of his Eſſential Preſence at the laying the Foundation of the World *? When he meaſured the Waters in the hollow of his hand, meted out Heaven with the Span, and comprehended the Duſt of the Earth in a Meaſure, and weighed the Mountains in Scales, and the Hills in a Ballance. He ſets forth the Power and Majeſty of God in the Creation and Preſervation of things, and every Expreſſion teſtifies his Preſence with them: The Waters that were upon the face of the Earth at firſt, were no more than a drop in the palm of a mans hand, which in every part is touched by his hand. And thus he is equally preſent with the blackeſt Devils, as well as the brighteſt Angels; with the loweſt Duſt, as well as with the moſt ſparkling Sun. He is equally preſent with the Damned and the Bleſſed, as he is an Infinite Being, but not in regard of his Goodneſs and Grace. He is equally preſent with the Good and the Bad, with the ſcoffing Athenians, as well as the believing Apoſtles, in regard of his Eſſence, but not in regard of the breathing of his Divine Vertues upon them to make them like himſelf *: He is not far from every one of us; for in him we live, and move, and have our Being: The Apoſtle includes all; he tells them they ſhould ſeek the Lord; the Lord that they were to ſeek, is God eſſentially conſidered: We are indeed to ſeek the Perfections of God, that glitter in his works, but to the end that they ſhould direct us to the ſeeking of God himſelf in his own Nature and Eſſence *: And therefore what follows, In him we live, is to be underſtood not of his Power and Goodneſs, Perfections of his Nature, diſtinguiſht according to our manner of conception, from his Eſſence; but of the Eſſential Preſence of God with his Creatures. If he had meant it of his efficacy in preſerving us, it had not been any proof of his nearneſs to us. Who would go about to prove the body or ſubſtance of the Sun to be near us becauſe it doth warm and enlighten us, when our ſenſe evidenceth the diſtance of it? We live in the beams of the Sun, but we cannot be ſaid to live in the Sun, which is ſo far diſtant from us. The Expreſſion ſeems to be more emphatical than to intend any leſs than his Eſſential Preſence: But we live in him not only as the efficient cauſe of our Life, but as the foundation, ſuſtaining our lives and motions, as if he were like Air, diffuſed round about us. And we move in him, as Auſtin ſaith, as a Spunge in the Sea, not containing him, but being contained by him: He compaſſeth all, is incompaſs'd by none; he fills all, is comprehended by none. The Creator contains the World, the World contains not the Creator: As the hallow of the hand contains the water, the water in the hollow of the hand contains not the hand; and therefore ſome have choſe to ſay rather, That the World is in God, it lives and moves in him, than that God is in the World: If all things thus live and move in him, then he is preſent with every thing that hath Life, and Motion; and as long as the Devils and Damned have life, and motion, and being, ſo long is he with them; for whatſoever lives and moves, lives and moves in him. * Iſa. 40. 12. * Act. 17. 28. * Amyrald. de Trinit.

But now this Eſſential Preſence is

1. Without any mixture. I fill Heaven and Earth, not, I am mixed with Heaven and Earth; his Eſſence is not mixed with the Creatures; it remains intire in its ſelf. The Spunge retains the nature of a Spunge, though encompaſs'd by the Sea, and moving ving in it; and the Sea ſtill retains its own nature. God is moſt ſimple; his Eſſence therefore it is not mixed with any thing. The Light of the Sun is preſent with the air, but not mixed with it, it remains light, and the air remains air; the light of the Sun is diffuſed through all the Hemiſphere, it pierceth all tranſparent bodies, it ſeems to mix it ſelf with all things, yet remains unmixed and undivided; the light remains light, and the air remains air; the air is not light though it be enlightened. Or, take this ſimilitude; When many Candles are lighted up in a Room, the light is all together, yet not mixed with one another; every Candle hath a particular light belonging to it, which may be ſeparated in a moment, by removing one Candle from another; but if they were mixed, they could not be ſeparated, at leaſt ſo eaſily. God is not formally one with the World, or with any Creature in the World by his Preſence in it: Nor can any Creature in the World, no, not the Soul of man, or an Angel, come to be Eſſentially one with God, though God be Eſſentially preſent with it.

2. The Eſſential Preſence is without any diviſion of himſelf. I fill Heaven and Earth, not part in Heaven, and part in Earth; I fill one as well as the other: One part of his Eſſence is not in one place, and another part of his Eſſence in another place, he would then be changeable; for that part of his Eſſence which were now in this place, he might alter it to another, and place that part of his Eſſence which were in another place, to this; but he is undivided every where. As his Eternity is one indiviſible point, though in our conception we divide it into paſt, preſent, and to come. So the whole World is as a point to him, in regard of place as before was ſaid; 'tis as a ſmall Duſt, and grain of Duſt: 'Tis impoſſible that one part of his Eſſence can be ſeparated from another, for he is not a Body, to have one part ſeparable from another. The light of the Sun cannot be cut into parts, it cannot be ſhut into any place and kept there, 'tis intire in every place; ſhall not God, who gives the light that power, be much more preſent himſelf? whatſoever hath parts is finite, but God is infinite, therefore hath no parts of his Eſſence. Beſides, if there were ſuch a Diviſion of his Being, he would not be the moſt ſimple and uncompounded Being, but would be made up of various parts; he would not be a Spirit for parts are evidences of compoſition; and it could not be ſaid that God is here or there, but only a part of God here, and a part of God there. But he fills Heaven and Earth, he is as much a God in the Earth beneath as in Heaven above *; intirely in all places, not by ſcrapes and fragments of his Eſſence.

* Dent. 4. 39.

3. This Eſſential Preſence is not by Multiplication. For that which is infinite cannot multiply it ſelf, or make it ſelf more or greater than it was.

4. This Eſſential Preſence is not by extenſion or diffuſion. As a piece of Gold may be beaten out to cover a large compaſs of ground; no, if God ſhould Create Millions of Worlds he would be in them all, not by ſtretching out his Being, but by the Infiniteneſs of his Being; not by a new growth of his Being, but by the ſame Eſſence he had from Eternity: Upon the ſame reaſons mention'd before, his Simplicity and Indiviſibility.

5. But Totally. There is no ſpace, not the leaſt, wherein God is not wholly according to his Eſſence, and wherein his whole Subſtance doth not exiſt; not a part of Heaven can be deſign'd wherein the Creator is not wholly; as he is in one part of Heaven, he is in every part of Heaven. Some kind of reſemblance we may have from the water of the Sea, which fills the great ſpace of the World, and is diffuſed through all; yet the Eſſence of Water is in every drop of Water in the Sea, as much as the whole; and the ſame quality of Water, tho it comes ſhort in quantity; and why ſhall we not allow God a nobler way of Preſence without diffuſion, as is in that? Or take this reſemblance, ſince God likens himſelf to Light in the Scripture *, he covereth himſelf with Light; A Chryſtal Globe hung up in the Air hath Light all about it, all within it, every part is pierced by it, whereever you ſee the Chryſtal you ſee the Light; the Light in one part of the Chryſtal cannot be diſtinguiſht from the Light in the other part; and the whole Eſſence of Light is in every part; and ſhall not God be as much preſent with his Creatures, as one Creature can be with another *? God is totally every where by his own ſimple ſubſtance.

* Pſal. 104. 2. 1 John 1. 5. God is Light, and in him is no darkneſs at all.

* Bernard.

Propoſition 4. God is preſent beyond the World. He is within and above all places

ces, though places ſhould be infinite in number; as he was before and beyond all Time, ſo he is above and beyond all place; being from Eternity before any real time, he muſt alſo be without as well as within any real ſpace; if God were only confin'd to the World, he would be no more infinite in his Eſſence than the World is in quantity; as a moment cannot be conceived from Eternity, wherein God was not in Being, ſo a ſpace cannot be conceived in the mind of man, wherein God is not preſent; he is not contained in the World nor in the Heavens. * But will God indeed dwell on the Earth? Behold the Heaven of Heavens cannot contain Thee. Solomon wonders that God ſhould appoint a Temple to be erected to him upon the Earth, when he is not contained in the vaſt Circuit of the Heavens; his Eſſence is not ſtraitned in the limits of any Created work, he is not contained in the Heavens, i. e. in the manner that he is there; but he is there in his Eſſence, and therefore cannot be contain'd there in his Eſſence. If it ſhould be meant only of his Power and Providence, it would conclude alſo for his Eſſence; if his Power and Providence were infinite, his Eſſence muſt be ſo too; for the infiniteneſs of his Eſſence is the ground of the infiniteneſs of his Power: It can never enter into any thought, that a finite Eſſence can have an infinite Power, and that an infinite Power can be without an infinite Eſſence; it cannot be meant of his Providence, as if Solomon ſhould ſay, the Heaven of Heaven cannot contain thy Providence; for naming the Heaven of Heavens, that which encircles and bounds the other parts of the World, he could not ſuppoſe a Providence to be exercis'd where there was no object to exerciſe it about; as no Creature is mention'd to be beyond the uttermoſt Heaven, which he calls here the Heaven of Heavens: Beſides to underſtand it of his Providence, doth not conſiſt with Solomon's admiration: He wonders that God, that hath ſo immenſe an Eſſence, ſhould dwell in a Temple made with hands; he could not ſo much wonder at his Providence in thoſe things that immediately concern his Worſhip. Solomon plainly aſſerts this of God, That he was ſo far from being bounded within the rich Wall of the Temple, which with ſo much coſt he had fram'd for the Glory of his Name, that the richer Palace of the Heaven of Heavens could not contain him; 'tis true, it could not contain his Power and Wiſdom, becauſe his Wiſdom could contrive other kind of Worlds, and his Power erect them: But doth the meaning of that wiſe King reach no farther than this? Will the Power and Wiſdom of God reſide on the Earth? He was too wiſe to ask ſuch a queſtion, ſince every object that his eyes met with in the World reſolv'd him, That the Wiſdom and Power of God dwelt upon the Earth, and glitter'd in every thing he had Created; and Reaſon would aſſure him, That the Power that had fram'd this World, was able to frame many more: but Solomon conſidering the immenſity of Gods Eſſence, wonders that God ſhould order a Houſe to be built for him, as if he wanted Roofs, and Coverings, and Habitation, as bodily Creatures do. Will God indeed dwell in a Temple, who hath an Eſſence ſo immenſe as not to be contain'd in the Heaven of Heavens? 'tis not the Heaven of Heavens that can contain Him, his Subſtance. Here he aſſerts the immenſity of his Eſſence, and his Preſence not only in the Heaven, but beyond the Heavens; he that is not contain'd in the Heavens, as a man is in a Chamber, is without, and above, and beyond the Heavens; 'tis not ſaid they do not contain him, but it is impoſſible they ſhould contain him; they cannot contain him. 'Tis impoſſible then but that he ſhould be above them; he that is without the compaſs of the World, is not bounded by the limits of the World; as his Power is not limited by the things he hath made, but can Create innumerable Worlds, ſo can his Eſſence be in innumerable ſpaces; for as he hath power enough to make more Worlds, ſo he hath Eſſence enough to fill them, and therefore cannot be confin'd to what he hath already Created; innumerable Worlds cannot be a ſufficient place to contain God, he can only be a ſufficient place to himſelf*; He that was before the World and place, and all things, was to himſelf a World, a Place, and every thing*: He is really out of the World in himſelf, as he was in himſelf before the Creation of the World: As becauſe God was before the Foundation of the World, we conclude his Eternity; ſo becauſe he is without the bounds of the World, we conclude his Immenſity, and from thence his Omnipreſence. The World cannot be ſaid to contain him, ſince it was Created by him; it cannot contain him now, who was contained by nothing before the World was: As there was no place to contain him before the World was, there can be no place to contain him ſince the VVorld was.

* 1 King. 8. 27.

* Peter.

* Maccov. loc. communi. cap. 19. p. 153.

God might create more Worlds circular and round as this, and thoſe could not be ſo contiguous, but ſome ſpaces would be left between; as take three round Balls, lay them as cloſe as you can to one another, there will be ſome ſpaces between; none would ſay but God would be in theſe ſpaces, as well as in the World he had created, tho there were nothing real and poſitive in thoſe ſpaces: Why ſhould we then exclude God from thoſe imaginary ſpaces without the World? God might alſo create many Worlds, and ſeparate them by diſtances, that they might not touch one another, but be at a great diſtance from one another; and would not God fill them as well as he doth this? if ſo, he muſt alſo fill the ſpaces between them: For if he were in all thoſe worlds, and not in the ſpaces between thoſe Worlds, his Eſſence would be divided; there would be gaps in it, his Eſſence would be out into parts, and the diſtance between every part of his Eſſence would be as great as the ſpace between each World: The Eſſence of God may be conceived then well enough to be in all thoſe infinite ſpaces where he can erect new Worlds.

I ſhall give one place more to prove both theſe Propoſitions, viz. That God is Eſſentially in every part of the World, and Eſſentially above ours without the World.

* Iſa. 66. 1. * The Heaven is my Throne and the Earth is my Foot-ſtool. He is Eſſentially in every part of the World; he is in Heaven and Earth at the ſame time; as a Man is upon his Throne and his Foot-ſtool. God deſcribes himſelf in a human ſhape, accommodated to our Capacity; as if he had his Head in Heaven and his Feet on Earth; doth not his Eſſence then fill all intermediate ſpaces between Heaven and Earth? As when the head of a Man is in the upper part of a Room, and his Feet upon the floor, his body fills up the ſpace between the head and his Feet; this is meant of the Eſſence of God, 'tis a Similitude drawn from Kings ſitting upon the Throne, and not their Power and Authority, but the Feet of their perſons are ſupported by the Foot-ſtool; ſo here it is not meant only of the Perfections of God, but the Eſſence of God: Beſides, God ſeems to tax them with an erroneous conceit they had, as tho his Eſſence were in the Temple, and not in any part of the World; therefore God makes an Oppoſition between Heaven and Earth, and the Temple; Where is the Houſe that you built unto me? and where is the place of my Reſt? Had he underſtood it only of his Providence, it had not been any thing againſt their miſtake; for they granted his Providence to be not only in the Temple, but in all parts of the World? Where is the Houſe that you Build to me; to Me, not to my Power or Providence, but think to include Me within thoſe Walls.

Again, It ſhews God to be above the Heavens, if the Heavens be his Throne; he ſits upon them, and is above them as Kings are above the Thrones on which they ſit; ſo it cannot be meant of his Providence, becauſe no Creature being without the Sphere of the Heavens, there is nothing of the Power and the Providence of God viſible there; for there is nothing for him to employ his Providence about. For Providence ſuppoſeth a Creature in actual being; It muſt be therefore meant of his Eſſence, which is above the world, and in the world.

And the like proof you may ſee, Job 11. 7, 8. 'Tis as high as heaven, what canſt thou do? deeper than Hell, what canſt thou know? the meaſure thereof is longer than the Earth, and broader than the Sea. Where he intends the unſearchableneſs of Gods wiſdom, but proves it by the infiniteneſs of his Eſſence, Hebr. He it the height of the Heavens, he is the top of all the Heavens; ſo that when you have begun at the loweſt part, and traced him through all the Creatures, you will find his Eſſence filling all the Creatures to be at the top of the VVorld, and infinitely beyond it.

5. Fifth Propoſition. This is the property of God, incommunicable to any Creature. As no Creature can be eternal and immutable, ſo no Creature can be immenſe, becauſe it cannot be infinite; nothing can be of an infinite nature, and therefore nothing of an immenſe Preſence but God: It cannot be communicated to the human Nature of Chriſt, tho in Union with the Divine; ſome indeed argue, that Chriſt in regard of his humn nature is every where, becauſe he ſits at the right hand of God; and the right hand of God is every where: His ſitting at the right hand of God ſignifies his Exaltation, and cannot with any reaſon be extended to ſuch a kind of arguing; The Hearts of Kings are in the hand of God; are the hearts of Kings every where, becauſe Gods hand is every where? The Souls of the Righteous are in the hand of God, is the Soul therefore of every Righteous man every where in the World? The right hand of God is from Eternity, is the Humanity of Chriſt therefore from Eternity, becauſe it ſits at the right hand of God? The right hand of God made the World, did the Humanity of Chriſt therefore make Heaven and Earth? The Humanity of Chriſt muſt then be confounded with his Divinity; be the ſame with it, not united to it. All Creatures are diſtinct from their Creator, and cannot inherit the Properties Eſſential to his Nature; as Eternity, Immenſity, Immutability, Omnipreſence, Omniſcience; no Angel, no Soul, no Creature can be in all places at once; before they can be ſo, they muſt be Immenſe, and ſo muſt ceaſe to be Creatures, and commence God; this is impoſſible.

* Rivet. 110. Pſal. p. 301. Col 2.

of

II Reaſons to prove Gods Eſſential Preſence.

1*ſt.* Reaſon. Becauſe he is infinite. As he is infinite, he is every where; as he is Simple, his whole Eſſence is every where; for in regard of his infiniteneſs, he hath no bounds; in regard of his Simplicity, he hath no parts: And therefore thoſe that deny Gods Omnipreſence, tho they pretend to own him Infinite, muſt really conceive him Finite.

1. God is Infinite in his Perfections. None can ſet bounds to terminate the greatneſs and excellency of God *. His greatneſs is unſearchable, Sept. οὐκ ἔστι πέρας there is no end, no limitation; what hath no end is infinite; his Power is infinite *, which doth great things and unſearchable, no end of thoſe things he is able to do; His Wiſdom infinite *: He underſtands all things paſt, preſent, and to come; what is already made, what is poſſible to be made; his duration infinite *. The number of his Years cannot be ſearched out. ἀνεξιχνίαστος To make a finite thing of nothing, is an Argument of an infinite Vertue; Infinite power can only extract ſomething out of the Barren Womb of nothing, but all things were drawn forth by the Word of God, the Heavens and all the Hoſt of them; The Sun, Moon, Stars, the rich embelliſhments of the World appear'd in Being, at the Breath of his Mouth *, the Author therefore muſt be infinite: And ſince nothing is the cauſe of God, or of any Perfection in him; ſince he derives not his being, or the leaſt ſpark of his glorious nature from any thing without him, he cannot be limited in any part of his nature by any thing without him; and indeed the infiniteneſs of his power and his other Perfections is aſſerted by the Prophet, when he tells us that the Nations are as a Drop of a Bucket, or the Duſt of the Ballance, and leſs than nothing and Vanity *, they are all ſo in regard of his Power, Wiſdom, &c. Conceive what a little thing a grain of Duſt or Sand is to all the Duſt that may be made by the rubbiſh of a Houſe, what a little thing the heap of the rubbiſh of a Houſe is to the vaſt heap of the rubbiſh of a whole City; ſuch a one as London; how little that alſo would be to the Duſt of a whole Empire; how inconſiderable that alſo to the Duſt of one quarter of the world, Europe or Aſia how much leſs that ſtill to the Duſt of the whole World; the whole World is compos'd of an unconceiveable number of Atoms, and the Sea of an unconceivable number of Drops; Now what a little grain of Duſt is in compariſon of the Duſt of the whole world; a Drop of Water from the Sea, to all the Drops remaining in the Sea, That is the whole world to God. Conceive it ſtill leſs, a meer nothing, yet is it all leſs than this, in compariſon of God; there can be nothing more magnificently expreſſive of the infiniteneſs of God to a human conception, than this expreſſion of God himſelf in the Prophet.

* Pſal. 145. 3.
* Job 5. 9.
* Pſal. 147. 5.
* Job 36. 26.
* Pſal. 33. 6.
* Iſa. 40. 15, 17.

In the Perfection of a Creature, ſomething ſtill may be thought greater to be added to it; But God containing all perfections in himſelf formally, if they be meer perfections; and eminently, if they be but perfections in the Creature mixed with imperfection; nothing can be thought greater, and therefore every one of them is infinite,

2. If his Perfections be infinite, his Eſſence muſt be ſo. How God can have infinite Perfections, and a finite Eſſence is unconceivable by a Humane or Angelical underſtanding; an infinite Power, an infinite Wiſdom, an infinite Duration, muſt needs ſpeak an infinite Eſſence; ſince the infiniteneſs of his Attributes is grounded upon the infiniteneſs of his Eſſence: To own infinite perfections in a finite Subject, is contradictory. The manner of Acting by his Power, and Knowing by his Wiſdom, cannot exceed the manner of being by his Eſſence. His Perfections flow from his Eſſence, and the principle muſt be of the ſame rank with what flows from it; and if we conceive his Eſſence to be the cauſe of his perfections; 'tis utterly impoſſible that an infinite effect ſhould ariſe from a finite Cauſe; but indeed his perfections are his Eſſence, for tho we conceive the Eſſence of God as the ſubject, and the Attributes of God as faculties and qualities in that Subject according to our weak model, who cannot conceive of an infinite God without ſome manner of likeneſs to our ſelves; who find Underſtanding, and Will, and Power in us diſtinct from our Subſtance; yet truly and really there is no diſtinction between his Eſſence and Attributes; one is inſeparable from the other; his Power and Wiſdom are his Eſſence; and therefore to maintain God infinite in the one, and finite in the other, is to make a Monſtrous God, and have an unreaſonable notion of the Deity; for there would be the greateſt diſproportion in his nature, ſince there is no greater diſproportion can poſſibly be between one thing and another, than there is between finite and infinite: God muſt not only then be compounded, but have parts of the greateſt diſtance from one another in nature; but God being the moſt Simple Being without the leaſt compoſition, both muſt be equally infinite: If then his Eſſence be not infinite, his Power and Wiſdom cannot be infinite, which is both againſt Scripture and Reaſon,

Again, how ſhould his Eſſence be finite, and his perfections be infinite; ſince nothing out of himſelf gave them either the one or the other?

* Amyrald de Trinitat. p. 89.

* Again, either the Eſſence can be infinite, or it cannot; if it cannot, there muſt be ſome cauſe of that impoſſibility; that can be nothing without him; becauſe nothing without him can be as powerful as himſelf, much leſs too powerful for him; nothing within him can be an Enemy to his higheſt perfection; ſince he is neceſſarily what he is, he muſt be neceſſarily the moſt perfect Being, and therefore neceſſarily infinite; ſince to be ſomething infinitely, is a greater perfection than to be ſomething finitely *; if he can be infinite, he is infinite; otherwiſe he could be greater than he is, and ſo more Bleſſed and more perfect than he is, which is impoſſible; for being, the moſt perfect Being, to whom nothing can be added, he muſt needs be infinite.

* Deus eſt actus purus & nullam habet potentiam paſſivam.

If therefore God have an infinite Eſſence, he hath an infinite Preſence. An infinite Eſſence cannot be contained in a finite place; as thoſe things which are finite have abounded ſpace, wherein they are; ſo that which is infinite hath an unbounded ſpace; for as finiteneſs ſpeaks limitedneſs; ſo infiniteneſs ſpeaks unboundedneſs; and if we grant to God an infinite duration; there is no difficulty in acknowledging an infinite preſence: Indeed the infiniteneſs of God is a property belonging to him in regard of time and place; he is bounded by no place, and limited to no time.

Again, Infinite Eſſence may as well be every where, as infinite power reach every thing; it may as well be preſent with every Being, as infinite power in its working may be preſent with nothing to bring it into being. Where God works by his power he is preſent in his Eſſence; becauſe his power and his Eſſence cannot be ſeparated; and therefore his power, Wiſdom, Goodneſs, cannot be any where, where his Eſſence is not: His Eſſence cannot be ſever'd from his power, nor his Power from his Eſſence; for the power of God is nothing but God acting, and the wiſdom of God nothing, but God knowing. As the power of God is always, ſo is his Eſſence; as the power of God is every where, ſo is his Eſſence; whatſoever God is, he is alway, and every where: To confine him to a place, is to meaſure his Eſſence; as to confine his actions, is to limit his power; his Eſſence, being no leſs infinite than his power and his Wiſdom, can be no more bounded than his Power and Wiſdom; but they are not ſeparable from his Eſſence, yea they are his Eſſence; if God did not fill the whole World, he would be determin'd to ſome place, and excluded from others; and ſo his ſubſtance would have bounds and limits, and then ſomething might be conceived greater than God; for we may conceive that a Creature may be made by God of ſo vaſt a greatneſs as to fill the whole World; for the power of God is able to make a body that ſhould take up the whole ſpace between Heaven and Earth, and reach to every corner of it; but nothing can be conceived by any Creature greater than God; he exceeds all things, and is exceeded by none; God therefore cannot be included in Heaven, nor included in the Earth; cannot be contained in either of them; for if we ſhould imagine them vaſter than they are; yet ſtill they would be finite; and if his Eſſence were contain'd in them, it could be no more infinite than the world which contains it; As Water is not of a larger compaſs than the Veſſel which contains it. If the Eſſence of God were limited either in the Heavens or Earth, it muſt needs be finite, as the Heavens and Earth are; But there is no proportion between finite and infinite; God therefore cannot be contain'd in them: If there were an infinite body, that muſt be every where; certainly then an infinite Spirit muſt be every where: Unleſs we will account him finite, we can render no reaſon why he ſhould not be in one Creature as well as in another; if he be in Heaven, which is his Creature, why can he not be in the earth, which is as well his Creature as the Heavens.

is

2. Reaſon. Becauſe of the continual operation of God in the World. This was one reaſon made the Heathen believe that there was an infinite Spirit in the vaſt body of the World, acting in every thing, and producing thoſe admirable motions which we ſee every where in Nature: The cauſe which acts in the moſt perfect manner, is alſo in the moſt perfect manner preſent with its effects.

God preſerves all, and therefore is in all, The Apoſtle thought it a good induction* ; He is not far from us: For in him we live. For being as much as becauſe, ſhews that from his operation he concluded his real preſence with all: Tis not his vertue is not far from every one of us; but He, his ſubſtance, himſelf; for none that acknowledge a God, will deny the abſence of the vertue of God from any part of the World. He works in every thing, every thing lives and works in him; therefore he is preſent with all*, Or rather if things live, they are in God, who gives them life. If things live, God is in them, and gives them life: If things move, God is in them, and gives them motion: If things have any Being, God is in them, and gives them Being; if God withdraws himſelf, they preſently loſe their Being; and therefore ſome have compar'd the Creature to the impreſſion of a Seal upon the Wafer, that cannot be preſerved but by the Preſence of the Seal. As his preſence was actual with what he Created, ſo his Preſence is actual with what he preſerves, ſince Creation and Preſervation do ſo little differ; if God Creates things by his eſſential Preſence, by the ſame he ſupports them; If his ſubſtance cannot be disjoyn'd from his preſerving Power, his power and wiſdom cannot be ſeparated from his Eſſence; where there are the marks of the one, there is the preſence of the other; for it is by his Eſſence that he is powerful and wiſe; no man can diſtinguiſh the one from the other in a ſimple Being: God doth not preſerve and act things by a vertue diffus'd from him. It may be demanded whether that vertue be diſtinct from God? If it be not, 'tis then the Eſſence of God; if it be diſtinct, 'tis a Creature, and then it may be ask't how that vertue which preſerves other things, is preſerved it ſelf? it muſt be ultimately reſolv'd into the Eſſence of God, or elſe there muſt be a running in infinitum: or elſe, *is that vertue of God a ſubſtance or not; Is it endued with underſtanding or not? If it hath underſtanding, how doth it differ from God? If it wants underſtanding, can any imagine that the ſupport of the World, the guidance of all Creatures, the wonders of Nature can be wrought, preſerv'd, manag'd by a vertue that hath nothing of underſtanding in it? If it be not a ſubſtance, it can much leſs be able to produce ſuch excellent Operations, as the preſerving all the kinds of things in the World, and ordering them to perform ſuch excellent ends; this vertue is therefore God himſelf, the infinite Power and Wiſdom of God; and therefore whereſoever the effects of theſe are ſeen in the World God is eſſentially preſent; ſome Creatures indeed act at a diſtance by a vertue diffus'd; but ſuch a manner of acting comes from a limitedneſs of nature, that ſuch a nature cannot be every where preſent, and extend its ſubſtance to all parts; To act by a vertue, ſpeaks the Subject finite, and it is a part of indigence: Kings act in their Kingdoms by Miniſters and Meſſengers, becauſe they cannot act otherwiſe; but God being infinitely perfect, works all things in all immediately*; Illumination, Sanctification, Grace, &c.* are the immediate Works of God in the heart, and immediate Agents are preſent with what they do; tis an Argument of the greater Perfection of a Being, to know things immediately, which are done in ſeveral places, than to know them at the ſecond hand by Inſtruments: tis no leſs a

Act. 17. 27.

* Pont.

N. B.

* Amyrald de Trinitat. p. 106, 107.

1 Cor. 12. 6.

Per-

Perfection to be every where, rather than to be tyed to one place of action; and to act in other places by Inſtruments, for want of a Power to act immediately it ſelf: God indeed acts by means and ſecond cauſes in his providential diſpenſations in the World, but this is not out of any Defect of power to Work all immediately himſelf; but he thereby accommodates his way of acting to the Nature of the Creature, and the Order of things which he hath ſettled in the VVorld; And when he works by means, he acts with thoſe means, in thoſe means; ſuſtains their faculties and vertues in them, concurs with them by his power; ſo that Gods acting by means, doth rather ſtrengthen his Eſſential preſence than weaken it; ſince there is a neceſſary dependance of the Creatures upon the Creator in their Being and Acting; and what they are, they are by the power of God; what they act, they act in the power of God, concurring with them; they have their Motion in him as well as their Being; and where the power of God is, his Eſſence is, becauſe they are inſeparable; and ſo this Omnipreſence ariſeth from the Simplicity of the Nature of God; the more vaſt any thing is, the leſs confin'd. All that will acknowledge God ſo great, as to be able to work all things by his VVill, without an Eſſential preſence, cannot imagine him upon the ſame reaſon, ſo little as to be contain'd in, and bounded by any place.

3. Reaſon, Becauſe of his Supream Perfection.

No Perfection is wanting to God; but an unbounded Eſſence is a perfection; a limited one is an Imperfection. Tho it be a Perfection in a man to be Wiſe, yet it is an Imperfection that his Wiſdom cannot rule all the things that concern him; tho it be a perfection to be preſent in a place where his affairs lye, yet is it his Imperfection that he cannot be preſent every where, in the midſt of all his Concerns; if any man could be ſo, it would be univerſally own'd as a prime Perfection in him above others; is that which would be a Perfection in man, to be deny'd to God *? As that which hath life, is more perfect than that which hath not life; and that which hath ſenſe is more perfect than that which hath only life, as the Plants have; and what hath reaſon, is more perfect than that which hath only life and ſenſe, as the Beaſts have; ſo what is every where, is more perfect than that which is bounded in ſome narrow confines; if a power of motion be more excellent than to be Bed-rid; and ſwiftneſs in a Creature, be a more excellent endowment than to be ſlow and Snail like; Then to be every where without motion, is unconceivably a greater excellency than to be every where ſucceſſively by motion. God ſets forth his readineſs to help his People and puniſh his Enemies; or his Omnipreſence, by ſwiftneſs, or flying upon the Wings of the Wind *: The Wind is in every part of the Air, where it blows; it cannot be ſaid that it is in this or that Point of the Air where you feell it, ſo as to exclude it from another part of the Air where you are not; it ſeems to poſſeſs all at once.

* Amyrald de Trinitat. p. 74, 75.

Pſal 18. 10.

If the Divine Eſſence had any bounds of place, it would be imperfect, as well as if it had bounds of time; where any thing hath limitation, it hath ſome defect in Being; and therefore if God were confined or concluded, he would be as good as nothing in regard of infiniteneſs: Whence ſhould this reſtraint ariſe? There is no Power above him to reſtrain him to a certain ſpace; if ſo, then he would not be God, but that power which reſtrained him would be God: Not from his own nature, for the being every where, implies no contradiction to his nature; if his own Nature determin'd him to a certain place, then if he removed from that place, he would act againſt his Nature; to conceive any ſuch thing of God, is highly abſurd. It cannot be thought God ſhould voluntarily impoſe any ſuch reſtraint or confinement upon himſelf; this would be to deny himſelf a perfection he might have; if God have not this perfection, it is either becauſe it is inconſiſtent with his nature; or becauſe he cannot have it; or, becauſe he will not. The former cannot be; for if he hath impreſt upon Air and Light a reſemblance of his excellency, to diffuſe themſelves and fill ſo vaſt a ſpace; Is ſuch an Excellency inconſiſtent with the Creator more than the Creature? Whatſoever perfection the Creature hath, is eminently in God *. Underſtand, O ye brutiſh among the people; and ye fools when will you be wiſe? He that planted the ear, ſhall he not hear? he that formed the eye, ſhall he not ſee? He that teacheth man knowledge, ſhall not he know?

* Pſal. 94. 8, 9.

By

By the ſame reaſon he that hath given ſuch a Power to thoſe Creatures, Air and Light, ſhall not he be much more filling all ſpaces of the World? 'Tis ſo clear a Rule, that the Pſalmiſt fixes a folly and brutiſhneſs upon thoſe that deny it; 'tis not therefore inconſiſtent with his Nature, it were not then a Perfection, but an Imperfection; but whatſoever is an Excellency in Creatures, cannot in a way of eminency be an Imperfection in God; if it be then a Perfection, and God want it, 'tis becauſe he cannot have it; Where then is his Power? How can he be then the Fountain of his own Being? If he will not, where is his love to his own Nature and Glory? ſince no Creature would deny that to it ſelf which it can have, and is an Excellency to it; God therefore hath not only a Power or fitneſs to be every where, but he is actually every where.

4. Reaſon. Becauſe of his Immutability.

If God did not fill all the ſpaces of Heaven and Earth, but only poſſeſs one, yet it muſt be acknowledg'd that God hath a Power to move himſelf to another: It were abſurd to fix God in a part of the Heavens, like a Star in an Orb, without a power of motion to another place. If he be therefore Eſſentially in Heaven, may he not be upon the Earth if he pleaſe, and transfer his Subſtance from one place to another? to ſay he cannot, is to deny him a Perfection which he hath beſtow'd upon his Creatures; the Angels his Meſſengers, are ſometimes in Heaven, ſometimes on the Earth; the Eagles, meaner Creatures, are ſometimes in the Air out of Sight, ſometimes upon the Earth. If he doth move therefore and recede from one place, and ſettle in another, doth he not declare himſelf mutable by changing places? by being where he was not before, and in not being where he was before? He would not fill Heaven and Earth at once, but ſucceſſively; no man can be ſaid to fill a Room, that moves from one part of a Room to another; if therefore any in their imaginations, ſtake God to the Heavens, they render him leſs than his Creatures; If they allow him a power of motion from one place to another, they conceive him changeable; and in either of them they own him no greater than a finite and limited Being; limited to Heaven, if they fix him there; limited to that ſpace to which they imagine him to move.

5. Reaſon. Becauſe of his Omnipotency.

The Almightineſs of God is a Notion ſetled in the minds of all, That God can do whatſoever he pleaſes, every thing that is not againſt the purity of his Nature, and doth not imply a contradiction in its ſelf; he can therefore create Millions of Worlds greater than this; and Millions of Heavens greater than this Heaven he hath already Created; If ſo, he is then in unconceivable ſpaces beyond this World, for his Eſſence is not leſs and narrower than his Power; and his Power is not to be thought of a further extent than his Eſſence; he cannot be excluded therefore from thoſe vaſt ſpaces where his Power may fix thoſe Worlds if he pleaſe; if ſo, 'tis no wonder that he ſhould fill this World; and there is no reaſon to exclude God from the narrow ſpace of this World, that is not contain'd in infinite ſpaces beyond the World. God is whereſoever he hath a Power to act, but he hath a power to act every where in the world, every where out of the World; he is therefore every where in the World, every where out of the VVorld. Before this VVorld was made, he had a Power to make it in the ſpace where now it ſtands, Was he not then unlimitedly where the VVorld now is, before the VVorld received a Being by his powerful VVord? VVhy ſhould he not then be in every part of the World now? Can it be thought that God, who was Immenſe before, ſhould, after he had Created the VVorld, contract himſelf to the limits of one of his Creatures, and tie himſelf to a particular place of his own Creation, and be leſs after his Creation than he was before?

This might alſo be proſecuted by an Argument from his Eternity. VVhat is eternal in duration, is immenſe in Eſſence; the ſame reaſon which renders him Eternal, renders him Immenſe; That which proves him to be always, will prove him to be every where.

The third thing is; Propoſitions for the further clearing this Doctrine from any exceptions.

1. This

1. This truth is not weakned by the expreſſions in Scripture, where God is ſaid to dwell in Heaven, and in the Temple.

* Pſal. 2. 4. * Pſal. 113. 5. 1. He is indeed ſaid to ſit in heaven *, and to dwell on high *; but he is no where ſaid to dwell only in the Heavens, as confin'd to them. 'Tis the Court of his Majeſtical preſence, but not the Priſon of his Eſſence. For when we are told, that the * Iſa. 66. 1. heaven is his Throne, we are told with the ſame breath, that the earth is his footſtool *. He dwells on high in regard of the excellency of his nature; but he is in all places in regard of the diffuſion of his preſence. The Soul is eſſentially in all parts of the body; but it doth not exert the ſame operations in all; the more noble diſcoveries of it are in the Head and Heart: In the Head, where it exerciſeth the chiefeſt ſenſes for the enriching the underſtanding. In the heart, where it vitally reſides, and communicates life and motion to the reſt of the body. It doth not underſtand with the foot or toe, tho it be in all parts of the body it informs. And ſo God may be ſaid to dwell in Heaven, in regard of the more excellent and majeſtick repreſentation of himſelf both to the Creatures that inhabit the place, as Angels and bleſſed Spirits; and alſo in thoſe marks of his greatneſs which he hath planted there, thoſe ſpiritual natures which have a nobler ſtamp of God upon them, and thoſe excellent bodies, as Sun and Stars, which as ſo many Tapers light us to * Pſal. 19. 1. behold his glory *, and aſtoniſh the minds of men when they gaze upon them. 'Tis his Court, where he hath the moſt ſolemn Worſhip from his Creatures, all his Courtiers attending there with a pure love, and glowing zeal. He reigns there in a ſpecial manner, without any oppoſition to his Government; 'tis therefore call'd his * 2 Chron. 3. 27. holy dwelling place *: The Earth hath not that title, ſince ſin caſt a ſtain, and a ruining curſe upon it. The Earth is not his Throne, becauſe his government is oppos'd. But Heaven is none of Satans precinct, and the Rule of God is uncontradicted by the Inhabitants of it. 'Tis from thence alſo he hath given the greateſt diſcoveries of himſelf: Thence he ſends the Angels his Meſſengers, his Son upon Redemption, his Spirit for Sanctification. From Heaven his gifts drop down upon * James 3 17. our heads, and his grace upon our hearts *. From thence the chiefeſt bleſſings of Earth deſcend. The motions of the heavens fatten the earth; and the heavenly bodies are but ſtewards to the earthly comforts for man by their influence. Heaven is the richeſt, vaſteſt, moſt ſtedfaſt and Majeſtick part of the viſible Creation. 'Tis there were he will at laſt manifeſt himſelf to his people in a full conjunction of grace and glory, and be for ever open to his people in uninterrupted expreſſions of goodneſs, and diſcoveries of his preſence, as a reward of their labour and ſervice. And in theſe reſpects it may peculiarly be call'd his Throne. And this doth no more hinder his eſſential preſence in all parts of the earth, than it doth his gracious preſence in all the hearts of his people. God is in heaven in regard of the manifeſtation of his glory: In hell by the expreſſions of his juſtice: In the earth by the diſcoveries of his Wiſdom, Power, Patience and Compaſſion: In his people by the monuments of his grace; and in all in regard of his Subſtance.

2. He is ſaid alſo to dwell in the Ark and Temple. 'Tis called Pſal. 26. 8. The habitation of his houſe, and the place where his honour dwells; and to dwell in Jeruſalem as in * Zec. 8. 3. his holy Mountain; The Mountain of the Lord of Hoſts *, in regard of publiſhing his Oracles, anſwering their prayers, manifeſting more of his goodneſs to the Iſraelites, than to any other Nation in the world, erecting his true Worſhip among them, which was not ſettled in any part of the world beſides; and his worſhip is principally intended in that Pſalm. The Ark is the place where his honour dwells; the worſhip of God is called the glory of God, They changed the glory of God into an image made like to corrup- * Rom. 1. 23. tible men *, i. e. they changed the worſhip of God into idolatry; and to that alſo doth the place in Zechary refer.

Now becauſe he is ſaid to dwell in heaven, is he eſſentially only there? Is he not as eſſentially in the Temple and Ark, as he is in heaven, ſince there are as high expreſſions of his habitations there, as of his dwelling in heaven? If he dwell only in heaven, how came he to dwell in the Temple? both are aſſerted in Scripture, one as much as the other. If his dwelling in heaven did not hinder his dwelling in the Ark, it could as little hinder the preſence of his eſſence on the earth. To dwell in heaven, and in one part of the earth at the ſame time, is all one as to dwell in all parts of heaven, and all parts of earth. If he were in Heaven, and in the Ark and Temple, it was the ſame eſſence in both, tho not the ſame kind of manifeſtation of himſelf. If by his dwelling in heaven be meant his whole eſſence, why is it not alſo to be meant by his dwelling in the Ark? It was not ſure part of his eſſence that was in heaven, and part of his eſſence that was on earth, his eſſence would then be divided; and can it be imagined, that he would be in Heaven and the Ark at the ſame time, and not in the ſpaces between? Could his eſſence be ſplit into fragments, and a gap made in it, that two diſtant ſpaces ſhould be fill'd by him, and all between be empty of him. So that God's being ſaid to dwell in Heaven, and in the Temple, is ſo far from impairing the truth of this doctrine, that it more confirms and evidences it.

and

2. Nor do the Expreſſions of God's coming to us, or departing from us, impair this Doctrine of his Omnipreſence.

God is ſaid to hide his face from his People *; to be far from the Wicked; and the Gentiles are ſaid to be afar off, viz. From God ||; and upon the manifeſtation of Chriſt made near; Theſe muſt not be underſtood of any diſtance or nearneſs of his Eſſence, for that is equally near to all perſons and things; but of ſome other ſpecial way and manifeſtation of his Preſence. Thus God is ſaid to be in believers by Love, as they are in him *; He that abides in love, abides in God, and God in him: He that loves is in the thing beloved; and when two love one another, they are in one another; God is in a Righteous man by a ſpecial grace, and far from the wicked in regard of ſuch ſpecial Works; and God is ſaid to be in a place by a ſpecial manifeſtation, as when he was in the Buſh *; or manifeſting his Glory upon Mount Sinai ||; The Glory of the Lord abode upon Mount Sinai: God is ſaid to hide his face, when he withdraws his comforting Preſence, diſturbs the repoſe of our hearts, flaſheth Terror into our Conſciences, when he puts men under the ſmart of the Croſs, as tho he had ordered his Mercy utterly to depart from them; or when he doth withdraw his ſpecial aſſiſting Providence from us in our affairs; ſo he departed from Saul, when he withdrew his direction and protection from him in the concerns of his Government *; The Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, i. e. the Spirit of Government. God may be far from us in one reſpect, and near to us in another; far from us in regard of Comfort, yet near to us in regard of Support, when his Eſſential preſence continues the ſame; this is a neceſſary conſequent upon the infiniteneſs of God, the other is an act of the Will of God; ſo he was ſaid to forſake Chriſt, in regard of his obſcuring his Glory from his humane Nature, and inflicting his Wrath; tho he was near to him in regard of his Grace, and preſerved him from contracting any ſpot in his Sufferings. We do not ſay the Sun is departed out of the Heavens when it is be-miſted; it remains in the ſame part of the Heavens, paſſes on its courſe, tho its Beams do not reach us by reaſon of the Bar between us and it: The Soul is in every part of the Body, in regard of its Subſtance, and conſtantly in it, tho it doth not act ſo ſpritely and vigorouſly at one time as at another in one and the ſame Member, and diſcover it ſelf ſo ſenſibly in its Operations; ſo all the various effects of God towards the Sons of men, are but divers Operations of one and the ſame Eſſence: He is far from us, or near to us, as he is a Judge or a Benefactor; when he comes to puniſh, it notes not the approach of his Eſſence, but the ſtroak of his Juſtice; when he comes to benefit, 'tis not by a new acceſs of his Eſſence, but an efflux of his Grace; he departs from us when he leaves us to the Frowns of his Juſtice; he comes to us when he encircles us in the Arms of his Mercy; but he was equally preſent with us in both diſpenſations, in regard of his Eſſence: And likewiſe God is ſaid to come down *, And the Lord came down to ſee the City; when he doth ſome ſignal and wonderful Works which attract the minds of men to the acknowledgment of a Supream Power and Providence in the World, who judg'd God abſent and careleſs before.

* Pſal. 10. 1.
|| Prov. 15. 29.
|| Eph. 2. 17.
* 1 Joh. 4. 15.
* Exod. 3.
|| Exod. 24. 16.
* 1 Sam. 16. 14.
* Gen. 11. 5.

3. Nor is the Eſſential Preſence of God with all Creatures any diſparagement to him. Since it was no diſparagement to Create the Heaven and the Earth, 'tis no diſparagement to him to fill them; if he were Eſſentially preſent with them when he created them, 'tis no diſhonour to him to be Eſſentially preſent with them, to ſupport them; if it were his Glory to create them by his Eſſence, when they were nothing; Can it be his diſgrace to be preſent by his Eſſence, ſince they are ſomething, and ſomething good, and very good in his Eye *? God ſaw every thing, and behold it was very good, or mighty good; all ordered to declare his Goodneſs, Wiſdom, Power, and to make him adorable to man, and therefore took complacency in them: There is a Harmony in all things, a Combination in them for thoſe glorious Ends for which God Created them; and is it a diſgrace for God to be preſent with his own Harmonious compoſition? Is it not a Muſicians Glory to touch with his fingers the Trebble, the leaſt and tendereſt ſtring, as well as the ſtrongeſt and greateſt baſe? Hath not every thing ſome Stamp of Gods own Being upon it, ſince he eminently contains in himſelf the perfections of all his Works? Whatſoever hath Being, hath a Foot-ſtep of God upon it, who is all Being; every thing in the Earth is his Foot-Stool, having a mark of his Foot upon it; all declare the Being of God, becauſe they had their Being from God; and will God account it any diſparagement to him to be preſent with that which confirms his Being, and the glorious Perfections of his nature to his intelligent Creatures? the meaneſt things are not without their Vertues, which may boaſt Gods being the Creator of them; and rank them in the midſt of his Works of Wiſdom as well as Power. Doth God debaſe himſelf to be preſent by his Eſſence, with the things he hath made, more than he doth to know them by his Eſſence? Is not the leaſt thing known by him? How? not by a faculty or act diſtinct from his Eſſence; but by his Eſſence it ſelf: How is any thing diſgraceful to the Eſſential Preſence of God, that is not diſgraceful to his Knowledge by his Eſſence? Beſides, would God make any thing that ſhould be an invincible reaſon to him to part with his own infiniteneſs, by a contraction of his own Eſſence into a leſs compaſs than before? it was Immenſe before, it had no bounds; and would God make a World that he would be aſhamed to be preſent with, and continue it to the diminution and leſſening of himſelf, rather than annihilate it to avoid the diſparagement? This were to impeach the Wiſdom of God, and caſt a blemiſh upon his infinite Underſtanding, that he knows not the conſequences of his Work, or is well contented to be impaired in the immenſity of his own Eſſence by it. No man thinks it a diſhonour to Light, a moſt excellent Creature, to be preſent with a Toad or Serpent; and tho there be an infinite diſproportion between Light, a Creature, and the Father of Lights, the Creator: Yet * God being a Spirit, knows how to be with Bodies as if they were not Bodies. And being jealous of his own Honor, would not, could not do any thing that might impair it.

* Gen. 1. 31.

* Gaſſend.

4. Nor will it follow, That becauſe God is Eſſentially every where, that every thing is God. God is not every where by any conjunction, compoſition or mixture with any thing on Earth; when Light is in every part of a Chryſtal Globe, and encircles it cloſe on every ſide, do they become one? No, the Chryſtal remains what it is, and the Light retains its own nature: God is not in us as a part of us, but as an efficient and preſerving Cauſe; 'tis not by his Eſſential Preſence, but his efficacious Preſence that he brings any perſon into a likeneſs to his own Nature: God is ſo in his Eſſence with things, as to be diſtinct from them as a Cauſe from the Effect; as a Creator different from the Creature, preſerving their Nature, not communicating his own; his Eſſence touches all, is in conjunction with none; Finite and Infinite cannot be joyn'd, he is not far from us, therefore near to us; ſo near that we live and move in him *; Nothing is God becauſe it moves in him, any more than a Fiſh in the Sea, is the Sea, or a part of the Sea, becauſe it moves in it; Doth a man that holds a thing in the hollow of his hand, transform it by that action, and make it like his hand? The Soul and Body are more ſtraitly united, than the Eſſence of God is by his Preſence with any Creature: The Soul is in the Body as a form in matter, and from their Union doth ariſe a man; yet in this near conjunction, both Body and Soul remain diſtinct; the Soul is not the Body, nor the Body the Soul; they both have diſtinct natures and eſſences; the Body can never be changed into a Soul, nor the Soul into a Body; no more can God into the Creature, or the Creature into God. Fire is in heated Iron in every part of it, ſo that it ſeems to be nothing but Fire; yet is not Fire and Iron the ſame thing But ſuch a kind of arguing againſt Gods Omnipreſence, that if God were Eſſentially preſent, every thing would be God; would exclude him from Heaven as well as from Earth. By the ſame reaſon, ſince they acknowledge God eſſentially in Heaven, the Heaven where he is, ſhould be chang'd into the nature of God; and

* Acts 17. 28.

Amyrald de Trinit. p. 99. 100.

by

by arguing against his Presence in Earth; upon this ground they run such an inconvenience, that they must own him to be no where, and that which is no where is nothing. Doth the Earth become God, because God is Essentially there, any more than the Heavens, where God is acknowledged by all to be Essentially present?

Again, if where God is Essentially, that must be God, then if they place God in a Point of the Heavens, not only that Point must be God, but all the World; because if that point be God, because God is there, then the point touched by that Point must be God, and so consequently as far as there are any Points touched by one another. We live and move in God, so we live and move in the Air; we are no more God by that, than we are meer Air, because we breath in it, and it enters into all the pores of our body: Nay, where there was a straiter Union of the Divine nature to the Human in our Saviour, yet the Nature of both was distinct, and the Humanity was not chang'd into the Divinity, nor the Divinity into the Humanity.

5. Nor doth it follow, that because God is every where, therefore a Creature may be worshipt without Idolatry. Some of the Heathens who acknowledged Gods Omnipresence, abus'd it to the countenancing Idolatry; because God was resident in every thing, they thought every thing might be worshipped; and some have us'd it as an Argument against this Doctrine; the best Doctrines may by mens corruption be drawn out into unreasonable and pernicious conclusions. Have you not met with any, that from the Doctrin of Gods Free Mercy, and our Saviours satisfactory Death, have drawn Poyson to feed their Lusts, and consume their Souls; a Poyson compos'd by their own corruption, and not offer'd by those Truths. The Apostle intimates to us, that some did, or at least were ready to be more lavish in sinning, because God was abundant in Grace * ; Shall we continue in Sin, that Grace may abound? When he prevents an Objection that he thought might be made by some: But as to this case; since tho God be present in every thing, yet every thing retains its nature, distinct from the nature of God; therefore it is not to have a Worship due to the excellency of God: As long as any thing remains a Creature, 'tis only to have the respect from us, which is due to it in the rank of Creatures. When a Prince is present with his Guard, or if he should go Arm in Arm with a Peasant, is therefore the Veneration and Honour due to the Prince, to be paid to the peasant, or any of his Guard? Would the presence of the Prince excuse it, or would it not rather aggravate it? He acknowledged such a person equal to me, by giving him my rights, even in my Sight. Tho God dwelt in the temple, would not the Israelites have been accounted guilty of Idolatry, had they Worshipped the Images of the Cherubims, or the Ark, or the Altar, as objects of Worship, which were erected only as means for his Service? Is there not as much reason to think God was as Essentially present in the Temple, as in Heaven; since the same Expressions are used of the one and the other? The Sanctuary is called the Glorious high Throne * ; and he is said to dwell between the Cherubims ||, i. e. the two Cherubims that were at the two ends of the Mercy Seat, appointed by God as the two sides of his Throne in the Sanctuary, Exod. 25. 18. Where he was to dwell, ver. 8. and meet and commune with his people, ver. 22. Could this excuse Manasseh's Idolatry in bringing in a Carved Image into the House of God *? Had it been a good Answer to the Charge, God is present here, and therefore every thing may be Worshipped as God? if he be only Essentially in Heaven, would it not be Idolatry to direct a Worship to the Heavens, or any part of it as a due object, because of the presence of God there? Though we look up to the Heavens, where we pray and Worship God, yet Heaven is not the object of Worship, the Soul abstracts God from the Creature.

*Rom. 6. 1, 2, 15. Shall we Sin, because we are not under the Law but under Grace.

* Jer. 17. 12. || Psal. 80. 1, 1 Chron. 33. 7

6. Nor is God defil'd by being present with those Creatures which seems filthy to us. Nothing is filthy in the Eye of God as his Creature; he could never else have pronounced all good; whatsoever is filthy to us, yet as it is a Creature, it ows it self to the power of God: His Essence is no more defil'd by being present with it, than his power by producing it: No Creature is foul in it self, tho it may seem so to us; Doth not an Infant lye in a Womb of filthiness and rottenness? Yet is not the power of God present with it, in working it curiously in the lower parts of the Earth? Are his eyes defil'd by seeing the Substance when it is yet imperfect? Or his his hand defiled by writing every Member in his *Book? Have not the vileſt and moſt noiſom things, excellent Medicinal Vertues? How are they endued with them? How are thoſe qualities preſerved in them? By any thing without God, or no? Every Artificer looks with pleaſure upon the work he hath wrought with Art and Skill; can his Eſſence be defil'd by being preſent with them, any more than it was in giving them ſuch vertues, and preſerving them in them? God meaſures the Heaven and the Earth with his hand, is his hand defil'd by the evil influences of the Planets, or the Corporeal impurities of the Earth? Nothing can be filthy in the Eye of God but Sin, ſince every thing elſe owes its Being to him. What may appear deform'd and unworthy to us, is not ſo to the Creator; he ſees Beauty where we ſee Deformity; finds goodneſs where we behold what is nauſeous to us. All Creatures being the effects of his Power, may be the objects of his preſence; Can any place be more foul than Hell, if you take it either for the Hell of the Damned, or for the Grave where there is rottenneſs? yet there he is*. VWhen Satan appear'd before God, and God ſpake with him*, Could God contract any impurity by being preſent where that filthy Spirit was, more impure than any corporeal, noyſom, and defiling thing can be? No, God is purity to himſelf in the midſt of noyſomneſs; a Heaven to himſelf in the midſt of Hell: VWho ever heard of a Sun-beam ſtain'd by ſhining upon a Quag-mire, any more than ſweetned by breaking into a Perfum'd Room*? Tho the Light ſhines upon pure and impure things, yet it mixes not its ſelf with either of them; ſo tho God be preſent with Devils and Wicked men yet without any mixture; he is preſent with their Eſſence to ſuſtain it and ſupport it; not in their defection, wherein lies their defilement; and wich is not a Phyſical but a moral evil; Bodily filth can never touch an incorporeal ſubſtance. Spirits are not preſent with us in the ſame manner that one body is preſent with another; bodies can by a touch only, defile bodies; Is the glory of an Angel ſtained by being in a Coal-mine? Or could the Angel that came into the Lions Den, to deliver Daniel, be any more diſturb'd by the ſtench of the place, than he could be ſcratcht by the Paws, or torn by the Teeth of the Beaſts? Their ſpiritual nature ſecures them againſt any infection, when they are miniſtring Spirits to Perſecuted Believers in their naſty Priſons*. The Soul is ſtraitly united with the body, but it is not made white or black, by the whiteneſs or blackneſs of its habitation; is it infected by the corporeal impurities of the Body, while it continually dwells in a Sea of filthy Pollution? If the Body be caſt into a Common ſhore, is the Soul defil'd by it? Can a Diſeaſed body derive a Contagion to the Spirit that animates it? Is it not often the purer by Grace, the more the body is infected by nature; Hezekiah's Spirit was ſcarce ever more fervent with God, than when the Sore, which ſome think to be a Plague Sore, was upon him*; How can any Corporeal filth impair the purity of the Divine Eſſence? It may as well be ſaid, that God is not preſent in Battels and Fights for his People, becauſe he would not be diſturbed by the noiſe of Canons and claſhing of Swords, as that he is not preſent in the world, becauſe of the ill ſcents: Let us therefore conclude this with the Expreſſion of a Learned man of our own; To deny the Omnipreſence of God, becauſe of ill ſcented places, is to Meaſure God rather by the nicety of Senſe, than by the ſagacity of Reaſon.

*Pſal. 139. 15, 16.

* Pſal. 139. 8.
* Job 1. 7.

* Shelford of the Attributes p. 170.

* Dan. 6. 22.

* Acts 12. 7.

*Iſa. 38. 3.

Joſhua 23. 10.

* Dr. More.

IV. USE.

I. Of Information.

1. Chriſt hath a divine nature. As Eternity and Immutability, two incommunicable properties of the Divine nature, are aſcrib'd to Chriſt; ſo alſo is this of Omnipreſence or Immenſity*. No man hath aſcended up to Heaven, but he that came Down from Heaven, even the Son of man which is in Heaven. Not which was, but which is; He comes from Heaven by incarnation, and remains in Heaven by his Divinity. He was, while he ſpake to Nicodemus, locally on Earth, in regard of his humanity; but in Heaven according to his Deity, as well as upon earth in the union of his divine and human nature. He deſcended upon earth, but he left not Heaven; He was in the World before he came in the fleſh*. He was in the world, and the world was made by him. He was in the World, as the light that enlightens every man that comes into the world. In the World as God, before he was in the world as man. He was then in the world as man, while he diſcourſed with Nicodemus; yet ſo, that he was alſo in heaven as God. No creature but is bounded in place, either circumſcribed as body, or determin'd as Spirit to be in one ſpace, ſo as not to be in another at the ſame time; to leave a place where they were, and poſſeſs a place where they were not. But Chriſt is ſo on earth, that at the ſame time he is in heaven; he is therefore infinite. To be in Heaven and earth at the ſame moment of time, is a property ſolely belonging to the Deity, wherein no creature can be a partner with him. He was in the world before he came to the world, and the world was made by him *. His coming was not as the coming of Angels, that leave Heaven, and begin to be on earth, where they were not before; but ſuch a preſence as can be aſcribed only to God, who fills Heaven and Earth. Again, If all things were made by him, then he was preſent with all things which were made: For where there is a preſence of power, there is alſo a preſence of Eſſence; and therefore he is ſtill preſent: For the right and power of Conſervation, follows the power of Creation. And according to this divine nature, he promiſeth his preſence with his Church. * There am I in the midſt of them. And ‖ I am with you alway, even to the end of the world, i. e. by his Divinity: For he had before told them, that they were not to have him alway with them, i. e. according to his Humanity; but in his Divine nature he is preſent with, and walks in the midſt of the golden Candleſticks. If we underſtand it of a preſence by his ſpirit in the midſt of the Church, doth it invalidate his Eſſential preſence? No, he is no leſs than the Spirit whom he ſends; and therefore as little confin'd as the Spirit is, who dwells in every believer: And this may alſo be inferr'd from Joh. 10. 30. My Father and I are one; not one by conſent, tho that be included; but one in power: For he ſpeaks not of their conſent, but of their joynt power in keeping his people, Where there is a Unity of Eſſence, there is a Unity of Preſence.

John 3. 13.

John 1. 10.

was

* John. 1. 10.

* Mat. 18. 20. ‖ Mat. 28. 20. * Mat. 26. 11.

2. Here is a confirmation of the ſpiritual nature of God. If he were an infinite body, he could not fill Heaven and Earth, but with the excluſion of all creatures. Two bodies cannot be in the ſame ſpace; they may be near one another, but not in any of the ſame points together. A body bounded he hath not, for that would deſtroy his Immenſity; he could not then fill Heaven and Earth, becauſe a body cannot be at one and the ſame time in two different ſpaces; but God doth not fill Heaven at one time, and the Earth at another, but both at the ſame time. Beſides, a limited body cannot be ſaid to fill the whole earth, but one particular ſpace in the earth at a time. A body may fill the earth with its vertue, as the Sun, but not with its ſubſtance. Nothing can be every where with a corporeal weight and maſs; but God being infinite, is not tied to any part of the World, but penetrates all, and equally acts by his infinite power in all.

3. Here is an argument for Providence. His preſence is mention'd in the Text, in order to his government of the affairs of the world. Is he every where, to be unconcern'd with every thing? Before the World had a being, God was preſent with himſelf; ſince the world hath a being, he is preſent with his Creatures, to exerciſe his Wiſdom in the ordering, as he did his power in the production of them. As the Knowledge of God is not a bare contemplation of a thing, ſo his Preſence is not a bare inſpection into a thing. Were it an idle careleſs Preſence, it were a Preſence to no purpoſe, which cannot be imagin'd of God. Infinite power, Goodneſs, and Wiſdom being every where preſent with his Eſſence, are never without their exerciſe. He never manifeſts any of his perfections, but the manifeſtation is full of ſome indulgence and benefit to his Creatures. It cannot be ſuppoſed God ſhould neglect thoſe things, wherewith he is conſtanly preſent in a way of efficiency and operation. He is not every where, without acting every where. Whereever his Eſſence is, there is a power and vertue worthy of God every where diſpens'd. He governs by his preſence, what he made by his power; and is preſent as an Agent with all his works. His Power and Eſſence are together, to preſerve them while he pleaſes, as his Power and his Eſſence are together to create them when he ſaw good to do it. Every creature hath a ſtamp of God, and his preſence is neceſſary to keep the impreſſion ſtanding upon the creature. As all things are his works, they are the objects of his care; and the wiſdom he employ'd in framing them, will not ſuffer him to be careleſs of them. His preſence with them, engageth him in ho-honour not to be a negligent Governour. His Immenſity fits him for government; and where there is a fitneſs, there is an exerciſe of government, where there are objects for the exerciſe of it. He is worthy to have the Univerſal rule of the World, he can be preſent in all places of his Empire, there is nothing can be done by any of his ſubjects, but in his ſight. As his Eternity renders him King alway, ſo his Immenſity renders him King every where. If he were only preſent in heaven, it might occaſion a ſuſpicion that he minded only the things of heaven, and had no concern for things below that vaſt Body; but if he be preſent here, his preſence hath a tendency to the government of thoſe things with which he is preſent. We are all in him as Fiſh in the Sea; and he bears all Creatures in the womb of his Providence, and the Arms of his Goodneſs. 'Tis moſt certain that his preſence with his people is far from being an idle one; for when he promiſes to be with them, he adds ſome ſpecial Cordial, as, I will be with thee, and bleſs thee. * I am with thee, and I will ſtrengthen thee; I will help thee, I will uphold thee *. Infinite goodneſs will never countenance a negligent preſence.

Cyril.

* Gen. 26. 3. Jer. 15. 20. *Iſa. 41.10,14.

4. The Omniſcience of God is inferr'd from hence. If God be preſent every where, he muſt needs know what is done every where. 'Tis for this end he proclaims himſelf a God filling heaven and earth, in the Text. Can any hide himſelf in ſecret places, that I ſhall not ſee him, ſaith the Lord? I have heard what the prophets ſay, that propheſie lyes in my Name: If I fill heaven and earth, the moſt ſecret thing cannot be hid from my ſight. An Intelligent Being cannot be every where preſent, and more intimate in every thing, than it can be in it ſelf; but he muſt know what is done without, what is thought within. Nothing can be obſcure to him, who is in every part of the World, in every part of his Creatures. Not a thought can ſtart up but in his ſight, who is preſent in the Souls and minds of every thing. How eaſie is it with him, to whoſe Eſſence the world is but a point, to know and obſerve every thing done in this world, as any of us can know what is done in one point of place where we are preſent? If Light were an underſtanding being, it would behold and know every thing done, where it diffuſeth it ſelf. God is light (as light in a Chryſtal Glaſs, all within it, all without it) and is not ignorant of what is done within and without; no ignorance can be faſtned upon him who hath an Univerſal preſence.

Hence by the way we may take notice of the wonderful Patience of God, who bears with ſo many provocations; not from a Principle of Ignorance, for he bears with Sins that are committed near him, in his ſight, Sins that he ſees, and cannot but ſee.

5. Hence may be inferr'd the incomprehenſibility of God. He that fills Heaven and Earth, cannot be contain'd in any thing; he fills the Underſtandings of men, the underſtandings of Angels, but is comprehended by neither; 'tis a raſhneſs to think to find out any bounds of God; there's no meaſuring of an infinite Being, if it were to be meaſur'd it were not infinite; but becauſe it is infinite, it is not to be meaſured. God fits above the Cherubims *, above the fulneſs, above the brightneſs, not only of a humane, but a created underſtanding: Nothing is more preſent than God, yet nothing more hid; he is Light, and yet obſcurity *; his Perfections are viſible, yet unſearchable; we know there is an infinite God, but it ſurpaſſeth the compaſs of our minds; we know there is no number ſo great, but another may be added to it; but no man can put it in practice without loſing himſelf in a maze of Figures. What is the reaſon we comprehend not many, nay moſt things in the World? Partly from the Excellency of the object, and partly from the Imperfection of our underſtanding. How can we then comprehend God who exceeds all, and is exceeded by none; contains all, and is contained by none; is above our underſtanding, as well as above our ſenſe? As conſidered in himſelf infinite; as conſider'd in compariſon with our underſtandings, incomprehenſible; who can with his eye meaſure the breadth, length and depth of the Sea, and at one caſt view every dimenſion of the Heavens: God is greater, and we cannot know him *; he fills the underſtanding as he fills Heaven and Earth; yet is above the underſtanding as he is above Heaven and Earth: He is known by Faith, enjoy'd by love, but comprehended by no mind. God is not contain'd in that one Syllable, God; by it we apprehend an excellent and unlimited nature; himſelf only underſtands himſelf, and can unveil himſelf.

* Ezek. 10. 1.

* Κρυφιότης Dyoniſius called God.

Job 36. 26.

6. How

6. How wonderful is God, and how nothing are Creatures! Aſcribe the Greatneſs to our God *; He is admirable in the conſideration of his Power, in the extent of his underſtanding, and no leſs wonderful in the immenſity of his Eſſence; That as Auſtin ſaith, he is in the World, yet not confin'd to it; he is out of the World, yet not debarr'd from it; he is above the World, yet not elevated by it; he is below the World, yet not depreſt by it; he is above all, equall'd by none; he is in all, not becauſe he needs them, but they ſtand in need of him; this as well as Eternity, makes a vaſt diſproportion between God and the Creature: The Creature is bounded by a little ſpace, and no ſpace is ſo great as to bound the Creator. By this we may take a proſpect of our own nothingneſs; as in the conſideration of Gods Holineſs we are minded of our own impurity; and in the thoughts of his Wiſdom have a view of our own folly; and in the meditation of his power, have a ſenſe of our weakneſs; ſo his Immenſity ſhould make us according to our own nature, appear little in our own eyes. What little, little, little things are we to God? Leſs than an Atome in the Beams of the Sun; poor drops to a God that fills Heaven and earth, and yet dare we to ſtrut againſt him, and daſh our ſelves againſt a Rock? If the conſideration of our ſelves in compariſon with others, be apt to puff us up, the conſideration of our ſelves in compariſon with God, will be ſufficient to pull us down; If we conſider him in the greatneſs of his Eſſence, there is but little more proportion between him and us, than between being and not being, than between a Drop and the Ocean. How ſhould we never think of God without a Holy Admiration of his greatneſs, and a deep ſenſe of our own littleneſs! and as the Angels cover their faces before him; with what awe ſhould creeping Worms come into his Sight! and ſince God fills Heaven and Earth with his Preſence, we ſhould fill Heaven and Earth with his Glory; for this end he Created Angels to praiſe him in Heaven, and men to Worſhip him on Earth, that the Places he fills with his preſence may be filled with his Praiſe: We ſhould be ſwallow'd up in admirations of the Immenſity of God, as men are at the firſt ſight of the Sea, when they behold a maſs of VVaters, without beholding the bounds and immenſe depth of it. * Deut. 33. 3.

7. How much is this Attribute of God forgotten or contemned! VVe pretend to believe him to be preſent every where, and yet many live as if he were preſent no where.

1. Tis commonly forgotten, or not believ'd. All the extravagancies of men may be traced to the forgetfulneſs of this Attribute, as their Spring. The firſt Speech Adam ſpake in Paradice after his fall, teſtified his unbelief of this *; I heard thy Voice in the Garden, and I hid my ſelf; his ear underſtood the voice of God, but his mind did not conclude the preſence of God; he thought the Trees could ſhelter him from him, whoſe eye was preſent in the minuteſt parts of the Earth; he that thought after his Sin, that he could hide himſelf from the preſence of his Juſtice, thought before that he could hide himſelf from the preſence of his knowledge; and being deceived in the one, he would try what would be the fruit of the other: In both he forgets, if not denies this Attribute; either corrupt notions of God, or a ſlight belief of what in general men aſſent unto, gives Birth to every Sin. In all Trangreſſions there is ſomething of Atheiſm; either denying the being of G d, or a daſh upon ſome Perfection of God; a not believing his Holineſs to hate it, his Truth that threatens, his Juſtice to puniſh it, and his preſence to obſerve it. Tho God be not afar off in his Eſſence, he is *afar off in the apprehenſion of the Sinner. There is no wicked man, but if he be an Atheiſt, he is a Heretick; and to gratifie his Luſt, will fancy himſelf to be out of the preſence of his Judge: His reaſon tells him, God is preſent with him, his Luſt preſſeth him to embrace the ſeaſon of a ſenſual Pleaſure; he will forſake his reaſon, and prove a Heretick, that he may be an undiſturbed Sinner; and Sins doubly both in the error of his mind, and the vileneſs of his practice; he will conceit God with thoſe in *Job, Vail'd with thick Clouds, and not able to pierce into the lower World; as if his preſence and Cares were confin'd to Cœleſtial things, and the Earth were too low a Sphere for his Eſſence to reach, at leaſt with any credit. 'Tis forgotten by good men, when they fear too much the deſigns of their Enemies; *Fear not, for I am with thee. If the preſence of * Gen. 3. 10. * Drexel Nicet lib. 2. cap. 10. * Job. 22. 14. * Iſa. 43. 5.

of God be enough to ſtrengthen againſt fear, then the prevailing of fear iſſues from our forgetfulneſs of it.

2. This Attribute of Gods Omnipreſence is for the moſt part contemn'd. VVhen men will commit that in the preſence of God which they would be afraid or aſhamed to do before the eye of Man. Men do not practice that Modeſty before God, as before men. He that would reſtrain his tongue out of fear of mens eye, will not reſtrain either tongue or hands out of fear of Gods; VVhat is the language of this, but that God is not preſent with us, or his preſence ought to be of leſs regard with us, and influence upon us, than that of a Creature? * Ask the Theif why he dares to ſteal? VVill he not anſwer, No eye ſees him? Ask the Adulterer why he ſtrips himſelf of his Chaſtity, and invades the Rights of another? VVill he not anſwer, * No eye ſees me? He diſguiſeth himſelf to be unſeen by man, but ſlights the all-ſeeing eye of God. If only a man know them, they are in terror of the ſhadow of death, they are Planet-ſtruck; but ſtand unſhaken at the preſence of God. || Is not this to account God as limited as man, as ignorant, as abſenting, as if God were ſomething leſs than thoſe things which reſtrains us? 'Tis a debaſing God below a Creature. If we can forbear ſin from any awe of the preſence of man, to whom we are equal in regard of Nature; or from the preſence of a very mean man, to whom we are ſuperior in regard of condition; and not forbear it becauſe we are within the ken of God; VVe reſpect him not only as our inferior, but inferior to the meaneſt man or child of his Creation, in whoſe ſight we would not commit the like action. 'Tis to repreſent him as a ſleepy, negligent, or careleſs God; as tho any thing might be concealed from him, before whom the leaſt fibres of the heart are anatomiz'd and open, who ſees as plainly midnight as noon-day ſins. Now this is a high aggravation of ſin: To break a Kings Law in his ſight, is more bold than to violate them behind his back; as it was Hammon's offence when he lay upon Eſthers bed, to force the Queen before the Kings face. The leaſt iniquity receives a high tincture from this. And no ſin can be little that is an affront in the face of God, and caſting the filth of the Creature before the eyes of his holineſs. As if a Wife ſhould commit Adultery before her Husbands face, or a Slave diſhonour his Maſter, and diſobey his commands in his preſence. And hath it not often been thus with us? Have we not been diſloyal to God in his ſight, before his eyes, thoſe pure eyes that cannot behold iniquity without anger and grief? * Ye did evil before my eyes. Nathan chargeth this home upon David. * Thou haſt deſpiſed the Commandment of the Lord to do evil in his ſight. And David in his repentance, reflects upon himſelf for it, * Againſt thee, thee only have I ſinned, and done this evil in thy ſight. I obſerved not thy preſence, I neglected thee while thy eye was upon me. And this conſideration ſhould ſting our hearts in all our confeſſions of our Crimes. Men will be afraid of the preſence of others, whatſoever they think in their heart. How unworthily do we deal with God, in not giving him ſo much as an eye-ſervice, which we do man?

* Drexel. Nicet. lib. 2. cap. 10.

* Job 24. 15.

|| Job 24. 17.

Heb. 4. 13.

* Iſa. 65. 12.

* 2 Sam. 12. 9.

* Pſal. 51. 4.

8. How terrible ſhould the thoughts of this Attribute be to Sinners! How fooliſh is it, to imagin any hiding-place from the Incomprehenſible God, who fills and contains all things, and is preſent in every point of the World! When men have ſhut the door, and made all darkneſs within, to meditate or commit a Crime, they cannot in the moſt intricate receſſes be ſheltered from the preſence of God. If they could ſeparate themſelves from their own ſhadows, they could not avoid his company, or be obſcured from his ſight. * Hypocrites cannot diſguiſe their ſentiments from him, he is in the moſt ſecret nook of their hearts. No thought is hid, no luſt is ſecret, but the eye of God beholds this, and that, and the other. He is preſent with our heart when we imagine, with our hands when we act. We may exclude the Sun from peeping into our ſolitudes, but not the eyes of God from beholding our actions. The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and good. * He lies in the depths of our Souls, and ſees afar off our deſigns before we have conceived them. He is in the greateſt darkneſs, as well as the cleareſt light; in the cloſeſt thought of the mind, as well as the openeſt expreſſions. Nothing can be hid from him, no not in the darkeſt Cells, or thickeſt Walls. He compaſſeth our path wherever we are, * and is acquainted with all our ways. He is as much preſent with wicked men to obſerve their ſins, as he is to deteſt them. Where he is preſent in his Eſſence, he Quo fugis Encelade quas cunq; acceſſeris oras, ſub Jove ſemper eris.

* Pſal. 139. 12. The darkneſs and light are both alike to him.

* Prov. 15. 3.

* Pſal. 139. 3.

he is preſent in his Attributes: His Holineſs to hate, and his Juſtice to puniſh, if he pleaſe to ſpeak the word. 'Tis ſtrange men ſhould not be mindful of this, when their very ſins themſelves might put them in mind of his preſence. Whence haſt thou the power to act? who preſerves thy being, whereby thou art capable of committing that evil? Is it not his Eſſential preſence that ſuſtains us, and his Arm that ſupports us? And where can any man flye from his preſence? Not the vaſt Regions of Heaven could ſhelter a ſinning Angel from his eye: How was Adam ferreted out of his hiding-places in Paradiſe? Nor can we find the depths of the Sea a ſufficient covering to us. If we were with Jonah cloſeted up in the belly of a Whale; if we had the wings of the morning, as quick a motion as the light at the dawning of the day, that doth in an inſtant ſurpriſe and over-power the regions of darkneſs; and could paſs to the utmoſt parts of the earth or hell, there we ſhould find him, there his eye would be upon us, there would his hand lay hold of us, and lead us as a Conqueror triumphing over a captive *. Nay, if we could leap out of the compaſs of heaven and earth, we ſhould find as little reſerves from him. He is without the World in thoſe infinite ſpaces which the mind of man can imagine. In regard of his Immenſity, nothing in being can be diſtant from him, whereſoever it is.

* Pſal. 139. 8, 9, 10.

2d. Uſe is for Comfort. That God is preſent every where, is as much a Comfort to a good man, as it is a Terror to a wicked one. He is every where for his people, not only by a neceſſary perfection of his nature, but an immence diffuſion of his goodneſs. He is in all creatures as their preſerver, in the damned as their terror, in his people as their Protector. He fills hell with his ſeverity, heaven with his glory, his people with his grace. He is with his people as light in darkneſs, a fountain in a garden, as Manna in the Ark. God is in the World as a ſpring of preſervation, in the Church as his Cabinet, a ſpring of grace and conſolation. A man is preſent ſometimes in his field, but more delightfully in his garden. A Vineyard, as it hath more of coſt, ſo more of care, and a watchful preſence of the Owner. Iſa. 27. 3. I the Lord do keep it, viz. his Vineyard; I will water it every moment: leſt any hurt it, I will keep it night and day. As there is a preſence of Eſſence, which is natural; ſo there is a preſence of Grace, which is fœderal; A preſence by Covenant, I will not leave thee, I will be with thee; this later depends upon the former; for take away the Immenſity of God, and you leave no foundation for his univerſal gracious preſence with his people in all their emergencies, in all their hearts. And therefore where he is preſent in his eſſence, he cannot be abſent in his grace from them that fear him. 'Tis from his filling heaven and earth he proves his knowledg of the deſigns of the falſe prophets; and from the ſame Topick may as well be inferr'd the employment of his power and grace for his people.

1. The Omnipreſence of God is comfort in all violent temptations. No fiery dart can be ſo preſent with us, as God is preſent both with that and the marks-man. The moſt raging Devils cannot be ſo near us, as God is to us and them. He is preſent with his people to relieve them, and preſent with the Devil to manage him to his own holy purpoſes: So he was with Job; defeating his enemies, and bringing him triumphantly out of thoſe preſſing trials. This preſence is ſuch a terror, that whatſoever the Devil can deſpoil us of, he muſt leave this untoucht. He might ſcratch the Apoſtle with a thorn, but he could not rifle him of the preſence of divine grace, which God promiſed him. He muſt prevail ſo far as to make God ceaſe to be God, before he can make him to be diſtant from us: and while this cannot be, the Devils and men can no more hinder the emanations of God to the Soul, than a Child can cut off the Rays of the Sun from imbelliſhing the Earth; 'tis no mean ſupport for a good man, at any time buffeted by a Meſſenger of Satan, to think God ſtands near him and beholds how ill he is us'd. It would be a ſatisfaction to a Kings favourite in the midſt of the Violence ſome Enemies might uſe to him upon a Surpriſe, to underſtand that the King who loves him, ſtands behind a Curtain, and through a hole ſees the injuries he ſuffers; and were the Devil, as conſidering as he is malicious, he could not but be in great fear at Gods being in the Generation of the Righteous, as his Serpentine Seed is*: There were they in great fear, for God is in the generation of the Righteous.

2 Cor. 12. 7, 9

Prov. 3. 6.

2. The Omnipreſence of God is a comfort in ſharp afflictions. Good men have a Comfort in this Preſence in their naſty Priſons, oppreſſing Tribunals; in the overflowing Waters or ſcorching Flames, he is ſtill with them *; and many times by his Preſence keeps the Buſh from Conſuming, when it ſeems to be all in a Flame: In afflictions God ſhews himſelf moſt preſent, when Friends are moſt abſent; When my Father and Mother forſake me, then the Lord ſhall take me up *, then God will ſtoop and gather me into his Protection; Hebr. ſhall gather me: alluding to thoſe Tribes that were to bring up the Rear in the Iſraelites March, to take care that none were left behind, and expos'd to Famine or wild Beaſts, by reaſon of ſome Diſeaſe that diſenabled them to keep pace with their Brethren; He that is the Sanctuary of his People in all Calamities, is more preſent with them to ſupport them, than their Adverſaries can be preſent with them to afflict them*, A preſent help in the time of Trouble; He is preſent with all things for this end; tho' his Preſence be a neceſſary Preſence, in regard of the Immenſity of his Nature; yet the end of this Preſence, in regard that it is for the good of his People, is a voluntary Preſence. 'Tis for the good of man he is preſent in the lower World, and principally for the good of his People, for whoſe ſake he keeps up the World *; His eyes run to and fro throughout the whole Earth, to ſhew himſelf ſtrong in the behalf of them whoſe heart is perfect towards him. If he doth not deliver good men from Afflictions, he will be ſo preſent as to manage them in them, as that his Glory ſhall iſſue from them, and their Grace be brightned by them*.

* Iſa. 43. 2.

*Pſal. 27. 10.

* Pſal. 46. 2.

2 Chron. 16. 9.

*Chryſoſtome.

What a man was Paul when he was lodg'd in a Priſon, or dragged to the Courts of Judicature, when he was torn with Rods, or laden with Chains! then did he ſhew the greateſt Miracles, made the Judg Tremble upon the Bench, and brake the Heart, tho not the Priſon, of the Jaylor; ſo powerful is the Preſence of God in the preſſures of his People. This Preſence outweighs all other Comforts, and is more valuable to a Chriſtian than Barns of Corn, or Cellars of Wine can be to a Covetous man *: It was this preſence was Davids Cordial in the mutinying of his Soldiers*. What a Comfort is this in Exile, or a forced deſertion of our Habitations! Good men may be Baniſh'd from their Country, but never from the Preſence of their Protector; Ye cannot ſay of any corner of the Earth, or of any Dungeon in a Priſon, God is not here; if you were caſt out of your Country 1000 Miles off, you are not out of Gods Precinct; his Arm is there to cheriſh the good as well as to drag out the wicked; 'tis the ſame God, the ſame Preſence in every Country, as well as the ſame Sun, Moon and Stars; and were not God every where, yet he could not be meaner than his Creature, the Sun in the Firmament, which viſits every part of the habitable World in twenty four hours.

* Pſal. 4. 7.

*1 Sam. 30. 6.

2. The Omnipotence of God is a Comfort in all Duties of Worſhip. He is preſent to obſerve, and preſent to accept our Petitions, and anſwer our Suits. Good men have not only the Eſſential Preſence, which is common to all, but his gracious preſence; not only the preſence that flows from his nature, but that which flows from his Promiſe; his Eſſential Preſence makes no difference between this and that man in regard of Spirituals, without this in conjunction with it; his nature is the cauſe of the Preſence of his Eſſence; his Will engag'd by his Truth, is the cauſe of the Preſence of his Grace. He promis'd to meet the Iſraelites in the place where he ſhould ſet his name, and in all places where he doth Record it *. In all places where I Record my Name, I will come unto thee, and I will Bleſs thee; in every place where I ſhall manifeſt the ſpecial Preſence of my Divinity. In all places, hands may be lifted up, without doubting of his ability to hear; he dwells in the contrite Hearts, wherever it is moſt in the exerciſe of contrition; which is uſually in times of ſpecial Worſhip*, and that to revive and refreſh them. Habitation notes a ſpecial Preſence; tho' he dwell in the higheſt Heavens in the ſparklings of his Glory, he dwells alſo in the loweſt Hearts in the beams of his Grace; as none can expel him from his Dwelling in Heaven; ſo none can reject him from his reſidence in the heart. The Tabernacle had his peculiar Preſence fixed to it*; his Soul ſhould not abhor them as they are waſhed by Chriſt, tho' they are loathſom by Sin: In a greater diſpenſation there cannot be a leſs Preſence, ſince the Church under the New Teſtament, is called the Temple of the Lord, wherein he will both *dwell and walk ; Or, I will indwell in them; as if he ſhould ſay, I will dwell

* Exod. 20. 4.

*Iſa. 57. 15.

*Levit. 26. 11.

* 2 Cor. 6. 6.

in

in and in them; I will dwell in them by Grace, and walk in them by exciting their Graces; he will be more intimate with them than their own Souls, and converſe with them as the Living God, i. e. as a God that hath Life in himſelf, and Life to convey to them in their Converſe with him; and ſhew his Spiritual Glory among them in a greater meaſure than in the Temple; ſince that was but a heap of Stones, and the figure of the Chriſtian Church, the myſtical Body of his Son. His preſence is not leſs in the Subſtance than it was in the Shadow; this Preſence of God in his Ordinances, is the Glory of a Church; as the Preſence of a King is the Glory of a Court; the Defence of it too, as a Wall of Fire *; alluding to the Fire Travellers in a Wilderneſs made to fright away wild Beaſts. 'Tis not the meanneſs of the place of Worſhip can exclude him; the ſecond Temple was not ſo magnificent as the firſt of Solomon's Erecting; and the Jews ſeem to deſpond of ſo glorious a Preſence of God in the ſecond, as they had in the firſt; becauſe they thought it not ſo good for the entertainment of him that inhabits Eternity; but God comforts them againſt this conceit again and again *; Be ſtrong, Be ſtrong, Be ſtrong, I am with you; the meanneſs of the place ſhall not hinder the grandeur of my Preſence; no matter what the Room is, ſo it be the Preſence-Chamber of the King, wherein he will favour our Suits; he can every where ſlide into our Souls with a perpetual ſweetneſs, ſince he is every where, and ſo intimate with every one that fears him: If we ſhould ſee God on Earth in his amiableneſs, as Moſes did, ſhould we not be encouraged by his Preſence, to preſent our Requeſts to him, to Eccho out our Praiſes of him? and have we not as great a ground now to do it, ſince he is as really preſent with us, as if he were viſible to us? he is in the ſame room with us, as near to us as our Souls to our Bodies; not a word but he hears, not a motion but he ſees, not a breath but he perceives; he is through all; he is in all.

* Zech. 2. 5.

* Hag. 2. 3, 4.

4. The Omnipreſence of God, is a comfort in all ſpecial Services. God never puts any upon a hard taſk, but he makes Promiſes to encourage them and aſſiſt them; and the matter of the Promiſe is that of his Preſence; ſo he did aſſure the Prophets of Old when he ſet them difficult taſks; and ſtrengthned Moſes againſt the Face of Pharaoh, by aſſuring him he would be with his Mouth *; and when Chriſt put his Apoſtles upon a Conteſt with the whole World, to Preach a Goſpel that would be Fooliſhneſs to the Greeks, and a ſtumbling Block to the Jews; he gives them a Cordial only compos'd of his Preſence *, I will be with you; 'tis this preſence ſcatters by its Light the darkneſs of our Spirits; 'Tis this that is the cauſe of what is done for his Glory in the World; 'tis this that mingles its ſelf with all that is done for his Honour; 'tis this from whence ſprings all the aſſiſtance of his Creatures, markt out for ſpecial propoſes.

* Exod. 4 12.

* Matth. 28. 20.

5. This Preſence is not without the ſpecial Preſence of all his Attributes. Where his Eſſence is, his Perfections are; becauſe they are one with his Eſſence; yea, they are his Eſſence, tho' they have their ſeveral degrees of manifeſtation. As in the Covenant, he makes over himſelf as our God, not a part of himſelf, but his whole Deity; ſo in promiſing of his Preſence, he means not a part of it but the whole, the Preſence of all the Excellencies of his nature to be manifeſted for our good. 'Tis not a piece of God is here, and another parcel there; but God in his whole Eſſence and Perfections; in his Wiſdom to guide us, his Power to protect and ſupport us, his Mercy to pity us, his Fulneſs to refreſh us, and his Goodneſs to relieve us: He is ready to ſparkle out in this or that Perfection, as the neceſſities of his People require, and his own Wiſdom directs for his own Honour: So that being not far from us in any excellency of his nature, we can quickly have recourſe to him upon any emergency; ſo that if we are miſerable, we have the preſence of his Goodneſs; if we want direction, we have the preſence of his Wiſdom; if we are weak, we have the preſence of his power; and ſhould we not rejoyce in it, as a man doth in the Preſence of a powerful, Wealthy and Compaſſionate Friend?

3 USE of Exhortation.

1. Let us be much in the actual Thoughts of his Truth. How ſhould we enrich our underſtandings with the knowledge of the Excellency of God, whereof this is none of the leaſt; nor hath leſs of Honey in its Bowels, tho' it be more Terrible to the Wicked than the Preſence of a Lyon; 'tis this that makes all other excellencies of the Divine Nature ſweet: What would Grace, Wiſdom, Power ſignifie at a diſtance from us? Let us frame in our minds a ſtrong Idea of it; 'tis this makes ſo great a difference between the actions of one man and another; one maintains actual thoughts of it, another doth not; tho' all believe it as a Perfection pertaining to the infiniteneſs of his Eſſence. David, or rather a greater than David, had God always before him; there was no time, no occaſion wherein he did not ſtir up ſome lively thoughts of him*. Let us have right notions of it; imagine not God as a great King, ſitting only in his Majeſty in Heaven; acting all by his Servants and Miniſters. This, ſaith one, * is a Childiſh and unworthy conceit of God, and may in time bring ſuch a conceiver by degrees to deny his Providence; the denyal of this Perfection is an Ax at the Root of Religion; if it be not deeply imprinted in the mind, perſonal Religion grows faint and feeble; who would fear that God that is not imagin'd to be a Witneſs of his actions? Who would worſhip a God at a diſtance both from the Worſhip and Worſhipper*? Let us believe this Truth, but not with an idle Faith, as if we did not believe it; Let us know, that as whereſoever the Fiſh moves, it is in the Water; whereſoever the Bird moves, it is in the Air; ſo whereſoever we move, we are in God: as there is not a moment but we are under his Mercy; ſo there is not a moment that we are out of his Preſence: Let us therefore look upon nothing, without thinking who ſtands by, without reflecting upon him in whom it Lives, Moves, and hath its Being. When you view a man, you fix your eyes upon his Body, but your mind upon that inviſible part that acts every member by life and motion, and makes them fit for your converſe. Let us not bound our thoughts to the Creatures we ſee, but pierce through the Creature to that boundleſs God we do not ſee; we have continual remembrancers of his Preſence, the Light whereby we ſee, and the Air whereby we live, give us perpetual notices of it, and ſome weak reſemblance; why ſhould we forget it? yea, what a ſhame is our unmindfulneſs of it, when every caſt of our Eye, every motion of our Lungs, jogs us to remember it? Light is in every part of the Air, in every part of the World, yet not mixt with any, both remain intire in their own ſubſtance. Let us not be worſe than ſome of the Heathens, who preſſed this notion upon themſelves for the ſpiriting their actions with Vertue, That all places were full of God: This was the means Baſil uſed to preſcribe, upon a Queſtion was aſkt him, How ſhall we do to be ſerious? Mind Gods Preſence. How ſhall we avoid diſtractions in Service? Think of Gods Preſence. How ſhall we reſiſt Temptations? Oppoſe to them the Preſence of God.

* Pſal. 16. 8.

* Muſculus.

* Drexel.

Omnia Diis plena.

1. This will be a Shield againſt all Temptations. God is preſent, is enough to blunt the Weapons of Hell; this will ſecure us from a ready complyance with any baſe and vile attractives, and curb that head-ſtrong Principle in our nature, that would joyn hands with them; the Thoughts of this would, like the powerful Preſence of God with the Iſraelites, take off the Wheels from the Chariots of our ſenſitive Appetites, and make them perhaps, more ſlower, at leaſt towards a Temptation. How did Peter fling off the Temptation which had worſted him, upon a look from Chriſt? the actuated faith of this would ſtifle the Darts of Satan; and fire us with an anger againſt his ſolicitations, as ſtrong as the Fire that inflames the Darts. Moſes his Sight of him that was inviſible, ſtrengthned him againſt the coſtly Pleaſures and Luxuries of a Princes Court*: We are utterly ſenſeleſs of a Deity, if we are not moved with this Item from our Conſciences, God is preſent. Had our firſt Parents actually conſider'd the nearneſs of God to them, when they were Tempted to Eat of the Forbidden Fruit, they had not probably ſo eaſily been overcome by the Temptation: What Soldier would be ſo baſe as to revolt under the Eye of a tender and obliging General? Or what man ſo negligent of himſelf, as to Rob a Houſe in the Sight of a Judg? Let us conſider, That God is as near to obſerve us, as the Devil to ſolicite us, yea nearer; the Devil ſtands by us, but God is in us, we may have a Thought the Devil knows not, but not a Thought but God is actually preſent with, as our Souls are with the Thoughts they think; nor can any Creature attract our heart, if our minds were fixed on that inviſible Preſence that contributes to that exellency, and ſuſtains it, and conſidered that no Creature could be ſo preſent with us as the Creator is.

* Heb. 11. 27.

2. It

2. It will be a Spur to Holy Actions. What man would do an unworthy action, or ſpeak an unhandſom Word in the Preſence of his Prince? the Eye of the General inflames the Spirit of a Soldier. Why did David keep Gods Teſtimonies *? because he conſider'd that all his ways were before him; becauſe he was perſwaded his ways were preſent with God, Gods Precepts ſhould be preſent with him. The ſame was the cauſe of Jobs Integrity * Doth he not ſee my ways? to have God in our Eye is the way to be ſincere *; walk before me as in my Sight, and be thou perfect. Communion with God conſiſts chiefly in an ordering our Ways as in the Preſence of him that is Inviſible. This would make us ſpiritual, rais'd and watchful in all our Paſſions, if we conſider'd that God is preſent with us in our Shops, in our Chambers, in our Walks, and in our Meetings, as preſent with us as with the Angels in Heaven; who tho' they have a Preſence of Glory above us: yet have not a greater meaſure of his Eſſential Preſence than we have: What an awe had Jacob upon him when he conſider'd God was preſent in Bethel *! If God ſhould appear viſibly to us when we were alone, ſhould we not be reverent and ſerious before him? God is every where about us, he doth encompaſs us with his Preſence; ſhould not Gods ſeeing, have the ſame influence upon us, as our ſeeing God? He is not more eſſentially preſent if he ſhould ſo manifeſt himſelf to us, than when he doth not; Who would appear beſmear'd in the preſence of a great perſon? or not be aſham'd to be found in his Chamber in a naſty poſture, by ſome viſitant? Would not a man bluſh to be catched about ſome mean action, tho' it were not an immoral Crime? If this Truth were impreſt upon our Spirits, we ſhould more bluſh to have our Souls daub'd with ſome loathſom Luſt, ſwarms of Sin, like Egyptian Lice and Frogs, creeping about our Heart in his Sight. If the moſt ſenſual man be aſham'd to do a diſhoneſt action in the ſight of a grave and holy man, one of great reputation for Wiſdom and Integrity; how much more ſhould we lift up our ſelves in the ways of God, who is Infinite and Immenſe, is every where, and infinitely ſuperior to man, and more to be regarded! We could not ſeriouſly think of his Preſence, but there would paſs ſome entercourſe between us; we ſhould be putting up ſome Petition upon the ſenſe of our Indigence; or ſending up our Praiſes to him upon the ſenſe of his Bounty. The actual thoughts of the Preſence of God is the Life and Spirit of all Religion; we could not have ſluggiſh Spirits, and a careleſs watch, if we conſider'd that his Eye is upon us all the day,

3. It will quell Diſtractions in Worſhip. The actual thoughts of this would eſtabliſh our thoughts; and pull them back when they begin to rove; The mind could not boldly give God the ſlip, if it had lively thoughts of it; the conſideration of this would blow off all the Froth that lies on the top of our Spirits. An eye taken up with the preſence of one object, is not at leiſure to be fill'd with another: He that looks intently upon the Sun, ſhall have nothing for a while but the Sun in his Eye. Oppoſe to every intruding Thought the Idea of the Divine Omnipreſence, and put it to ſilence by the awe of his Majeſty. When the Maſter is preſent, Scholars mind their Books, keep their Places, and run not over the Forms to play with one another; The Maſters Eye keeps an idle Servant to his Work, that otherwiſe would be gazing at every Straw, and prating to every Paſſenger. How ſoon would the remenbrance of this, daſh all extravagant fancies out of Countenance, juſt as the News of the approach of a Prince would make the Courtiers buſtle up themſelves, huddle up their vain ſports, and prepare themſelves for a Reverent Behaviour in his ſight. We ſhould not dare to give God a piece of our heart, when we apprehend him preſent with the whole; we ſhould not dare to mock one that we knew were more inwards with us than we are with our ſelves, and that beheld every motion of our mind, as well as action of our body.

2. Let us endeavour for the more ſpecial and influential Preſence of God. Let the Eſſential Preſence of God be the ground of our Awe, and his gracious influential Preſence the Object of our Deſire. The Heathen thought themſelves ſecure if they had their little petty Houſhold-Gods with them in their Journeys; ſuch ſeem to be the Images Rachel ſtole from her Father * to accompany her Travel with their Bleſſings; ſhe might not at that time have caſt off all reſpect to thoſe Idols, in the acknowledgment of which ſhe had been Educated from her Infancy; and they ſeem to be kept by her, till God called Jacob to Bethel, after the Rape of *Dinah, when

*Pſal. 119. 168.

* Job 31. 4. * Gen. 17. 1.

* Gen. 28. 16, 17.

* Gen. 31. 19.

* Gen. 35. 4.

when Jacob called for the ſtrange Gods, and hid them under the Oak. The gracious Preſence of God we ſhould look after in our actions; as Travellers that have a Charge of Money or Jewels, deſire to keep themſelves in Company that may protect them from High-way men that would rifle them. Since we have the concerns of the Eternal Happineſs of our Souls upon our hands, we ſhould endeavour to have Gods Merciful and Powerful Preſence with us in all our ways *; In all thy ways acknowledg him, and he ſhall direct thy Paths; acknowledg him before any action, by imploring; acknowledg him after, by rendring him the Glory; acknowledg his Preſence before Worſhip, in Worſhip, after Worſhip: 'Tis this Preſence makes a kind of Heaven upon Earth, cauſeth affliction to put off the nature of miſery. How much will the Preſence of the Sun out-ſhine the Stars of leſſer Comforts, and fully anſwer the want of them! The Ark of God going before us, can only make all things ſucceſsful: It was this led the Iſraelites over Jordan, and ſetled them in Canaan. Without this we ſignifie nothing, tho' we live without this, we cannot be diſtinguiſht for ever from Devils; his Eſſential Preſence they have, and if we have no more we ſhall be no better. 'Tis the enlivening, fructifying preſence of the Sun, that revives the languiſhing Earth; and this only can repair our ruin'd Soul. Let it be therefore our deſire, That as he fills Heaven and Earth by his Eſſence, he may fill our Underſtandings and Wills by his Grace; that we may have another kind of Preſence with us, than Animals have in their brutiſh ſtate, or Devils in their Chains: His Eſſential Preſence maintains our Beings, but his gracious Preſence confers and continues a Happineſs.

* Pſal. 14. 5.

A DISCOURSE UPON God's Knowledg.

Psal. 147. 5.

Great is our Lord, and of great Power: his Understanding is Infinite.

THIS uncertain who was the Author of this Psalm, and when it was Penn'd; some think after the return from the Babyloniſh Captivity: 'Tis a Psalm of Praiſe, and is made up of matter of Praiſe from the beginning to the end; Gods benefits to the Church, his Providence over his Creatures; the Eſſential excellency of his Nature.

The Pſalmiſt doubles his Exhortation to Praiſe God, v. 1. Praiſe ye the Lord, ſing Praiſe to our God; to praiſe him from his Dominion as Lord; from his Grace and Mercy as our God; from the Excellency of the Duty it ſelf, 'tis good, 'tis comely: ſome read it comely, ſome lovely or deſirable, from the various derivation of the Word.

Nothing doth ſo much delight a gracious Soul, as an opportunity of Celebrating the Perfections and Goodneſs of the Creator.

The higheſt Duties a Creature can render to the Creator are pleaſant and delightful in themſelves, 'tis comely. Praiſe is a Duty that affects the whole Soul.

The Praiſe of God is a decent thing; the Excellency of Gods nature deſerves it, and the Benefits of Gods grace requires it.

'Tis comely when done as it ought to be, with the Heart as well as with the Voice: a Sinner Sings ill tho' his Voice be good; the Soul in it is to be elevated above Earthly things.

The firſt matter of Praiſe, is Gods erecting and preſerving his Church, v. 2. The Lord doth build up Jeruſalem, he gathers together the out-caſts of Iſrael: The Walls of demoliſh'd Jeruſalem are now re-edified; God hath brought back the Captivity of Jacob, and reduced his People from their Babyloniſh Exile, and thoſe that were diſperſt into ſtrange Regions, he hath reſtor'd to their Habitations. Or it may be Prophetick of the calling of the Gentiles, and the gathering the out-caſts of the Spiritual Iſrael, that were before as without God in the World, and ſtrangers to the Covenant of Promiſe. Let God be praiſed, but eſpecially for Building up his Church, and gathering the Gentiles, before counted as out-caſts *; he gathers them in this World to the Faith, and hereafter to Glory.

* Iſa. 11. 12.

Obſ. 1. From the two firſt Verſes obſerve.

1. All People are under Gods Care: but he has a particular regard to his Church. This is the Signet on his hand, as a Bracelet upon his arm; this is his Garden which he delights to dreſs; if he prunes it, it is to purge it; if he Digs about his Vine, and wounds the Branches, 'tis to make it more Beautiful with new Cluſters, and reſtore it to a fruitful Vigour.

2. All great deliverances are to be aſcrib'd to God, as the principal Author, whoſoever ver are the Inſtruments. The Lord doth build up Jeruſalem, he gathers together the out-caſts of Iſrael. This great deliverance from Babylon, is not to be aſcrib'd to Cyrus or Darius, or the reſt of our favourers; 'tis the Lord that doth it; we had his Promiſe for it, we have now his Performance. Let us not aſcribe that which is the effect of his Truth, only to the good Will of men; 'tis Gods act, not by Might, nor by Power, nor by Weapons of War, or ſtrength of Horſes, but by the Spirit of the Lord. He ſent Prophets to Comfort us while we were exiles; and now he hath ſtretched out his own Arm to work our deliverance, according to his Word; blind man looks ſo much upon Inſtruments, that he hardly takes notice of God, either in Afflictions or Mercies, and this is the cauſe that robs God of ſo much Prayer and Praiſe in the World.

Verſe 3. He heals the broken in heart, and binds up their Wounds. He hath now reſtored thoſe who had no hope but in his Word; he hath dealt with them as a tender and skilful Chirurgeon; he hath applyed his curing Plaiſters, and dropped in his Soveraign Balſams; he hath now furniſht our fainting hearts with refreſhing Cordials, and comforted our Wounds with ſtrengthning Ligatures.

How gracious is God, that reſtores Liberty to the Captives, and Righteouſneſs to the Penitent? mans miſery is the fitteſt opportunity for God to make his Mercy illuſtrious in it ſelf, and moſt welcome to the Patient.

He proceeds verſe 4. Wonder not that God calls together the out-caſts, and ſingles them out from every corner, for a return; why can he not do this, as well as
Ver. 4. *tell the number of the Stars, and call them all by their Names?

There are none of his People ſo deſpicable in the eye of man, but they are known and regarded by God; tho' they are clouded in the World, yet they are the Stars of the World; and ſhall God number the inanimate Stars in the Heavens, and make no account of his living Stars on the Earth? no, wherever they are diſperſed, he will not forget them, however they are afflicted, he will not deſpiſe them; the Stars are ſo numerous, that they are innumerable by man; ſome are viſible and known by men, others lie more hid and undiſcovered in a confuſed Light, as thoſe in the Milky-way, man cannot ſee one of them diſtinctly.

God knows all his People. As he can do what is above the power of man to perform, ſo he underſtands what is above the skill of man to diſcover; ſhall man meaſure God by his ſcantineſs? Proud man muſt not equal himſelf to God, nor cut God as ſhort as his own Line.

He tells the number of the Stars, and calls them all by their Names. He hath them all in his Liſt; as Generals the Names of their Soldiers in their Muſter-Roll, for they are his Hoſt, which be Marſhals in the Heavens, as Iſa. 40. 26. where you have the like Expreſſion; he knows them more diſtinctly than man can know any thing, and ſo diſtinctly as to call them all by their Names: He knows their Names, that is, their natural offices, influences, the different degrees of heat and light, their order and motion; and all of them, the leaſt glimmering Star as well as the moſt glaring Planet; this man cannot do; Tell the Stars if thou be able to number them, Gen. 15. 5. ſaith God to Abraham (whom Joſephus repreſents as a great Aſtronomer) yea they cannot be numbred, Jer. 33. 22. and the uncertainty of the Opinions of men, evidenceth their ignorance of their number; ſome reckoning 1022, others 1025, others 1098, others 7000, beſides thoſe that by reaſon of their mixture of Light with one another, cannot be diſtinctly diſcern'd, and others perhaps ſo high, as not to be reach'd by the eye of man. To impoſe Names on things, and Names according to their Natures, is both an Argument of Power and Dominion, and of Wiſdom and Underſtanding: from the impoſition of Names upon the Creatures by Adam, the Knowledg of Adam is generally concluded; and it was alſo a fruit of that Dominion God allowed him over the Creatures. Now he that Numbers and Names the Stars that ſeem to lie confus'd among one another, as well as thoſe that appear to us in an unclouded Night, may well be ſuppos'd accurately to know his People, tho' lurking in ſecret Caverns, and know thoſe that are fit to be Inſtruments of their deliverance; the one is as eaſie to him as the other; and the number of the one as diſtinctly known by him, as the Multitude of the other.

Ver. 5. *For great is our Lord, and of great Power, his Underſtanding is Infinite. He wants not Knowledg to know the objects, nor Power to effect his Will concerning them them. *Of great Power. Much power, plenteous in Power; ſo the Word רב is rendred Pſal. 5. 15.*. A multitude of Power, as well as a multitude of Mercy; a Power that exceeds all Created Power and Underſtanding. רבכח רבחסד

His Underſtanding is infinite. You may not imagine how he can call all the Stars by Name; the multitude of viſible being ſo great, and the multitude of the inviſible being greater; but you muſt know, that as God is Almighty, ſo he is Omniſcient; and as there is no end of his Power, ſo no account can exactly be given of his underſtanding; His Underſtandine is infinite. No number or account of it; and ſo the ſame Words are rendred Joel. 1. 6. A Nation ſtrong, and without number: No end of his underſtanding; Syriack, no meaſure, no bounds*. His Eſſence is infinite, and ſo is his Power and underſtanding; and vaſt is his Knowledge, that we can no more comprehend it, than we can meaſure ſpaces that are without limits, or tell the minutes or hours of Eternity. Who then can fathom that whereof there is no number, but which exceeds all, ſo that there is no *ſearching of it out? He knows univerſals, he knows Particulars: We muſt not take underſtanding here, as noting a faculty, but the uſe of the underſtanding in the knowledg of things, and the Judgment in the conſideration of them, and ſo it is often uſed. אוקסכר תבונה

In the Verſe there is a diſcription of God.

1. In his Eſſence, great is our Lord.

2. In his Power, of great Power.

3. In his Knowledg, his Underſtanding is infinite; his Underſtanding is his Eye, and his Power is his Arm. Of his Infinite Underſtanding, I am to Diſcourſe.

Doctrine. God hath an Infinite Knowledg and Underſtanding. All Knowledg. Omnipreſence which before we ſpake of, reſpects his Eſſence; Omniſcience, reſpects his Underſtanding, according to our manner of Conception.

This is clear in Scripture; hence God is is called a God of knowledg, 1 Sam. 2. 3. The Lord is a God of Knowledg, Heb. Knowledges in the Plural Number, of all kind of Knowledg; 'tis ſpoken there to quell mans Pride in his own reaſon and parts; what is the Knowledg of man but a ſpark to the whole Element of Fire, a grain of Duſt, and worſe than nothing, in compariſon of the Knowledg of God, as his Eſſence is in compariſon of the Eſſence of God? All kind of Knowledg. He knows what Angels know, what Man knows, and infinitely more; he knows himſelf, his own operations, all his Creatures, the Notions and thoughts of them; he is underſtanding above underſtanding, mind above mind, the mind of minds, the light of lights; this the Greek word Θεὸς ſignifies in the Etymology of it, of θεᾶσθαι to ſee, to contemplate; and Δαίμων of Δαὼ ſcio. The Names of God ſignifie a nature viewing and piercing all things; and the attribution of our ſenſes to God in Scripture, as Hearing and Seeing, which are the Senſes whereby knowledg enters into us, ſignifies Gods Knowledg.

1. The Notion of Gods knowledg of all things lies above the ruines of Nature; it was not obliterated by the Fall of Man. It was neceſſary offending man was to know that he had a Creator whom he had injured, that he had a Judg to Try and Puniſh him; ſince God thought fit to keep up the World, it had been kept up to no purpoſe, had not this notion been continued alive in the minds of men; there would not have been any practice of his Lavvs, no bar to the vvorſt of Crimes. If men had thought they had to deal vvith an Ignorant Deity, there could be no practice of Religion. Who vvould lift up his eyes, or ſpread his hand tovvards heaven, if he imagin'd his Devotion vvere directed to a God as blind as the Heathens imagin'd Fortune? To vvhat boot vvould it be for them to make Heaven and Earth reſound vvith their Cries, if they had not thought God had an Eye to ſee them, and an Ear to hear them? And indeed the very notion of a God at the firſt bluſh, ſpeaks him a being endued vvith Underſtanding; no man can imagine a Creator void of one of the nobleſt perfections belonging to thoſe Creatures that are the Flovver and Cream of his Works.

2. Therefore all Nations acknowledg this, as vvell as the Exiſtence and being of God. No Nation but had their Temples, particular Ceremonies of Worſhip, and preſented their Sacrifices, vvhich they could not have been ſo vain as to do, without an acknovvledgment of this Attribute. This notion of Gods knovvledg ovved not its riſe to Tradition, but to natural implantation; it was born and grew up with every rational Creature. Though the ſeveral Nations and men of the World agreed not in one kind of Deity, or in their Sentiments of his Nature or other Perfections, ſome judging him Clothed with a fine and pure Body; others judging him an uncompounded Spirit; ſome fixing him to a ſeat in the Heavens; others owning his Univerſal Preſence in all parts of the World; yet they all agreed in the Univerſality of his knowledg; and their own Conſciences reflecting their Crimes, unknown to any but themſelves, would keep this notion in ſome vigor whether they would or no. Now this being implanted in the minds of all men by nature, cannot be falſe; for nature imprints not in the minds of all men an aſſent to a falſity. Nature would not pervert the reaſon and minds of men: Univerſal notions of God are from Original, not lapſed Nature, and preſerved in mankind in order to a reſtoration from a lapſed ſtate. The Heathens did acknowledg this: in all the ſolemn Covenants, ſolemniz'd with Oaths and the invocation of the Name of God, this Attribute was ſuppos'd. They confeſt knowledg to be peculiar to the Deity; Scientia Deorum vita, ſaith Cicero. Some called him Νοῦν, Mens, Mind, pure underſtanding, without any mote Ἐπίσκοπον, the inſpector of all. As they called him Life, becauſe he was the Author of life? ſo they called him Intellectus, becauſe he was the Author of all Knowledg and Underſtanding in his Creatures? And one being askt, Whether any man could be hid from God? No ſaith he, not ſo much as thinking: Some call him the Eye of the World* 5 and the Egyptians repreſented God by an Eye on the top of a Scepter, becauſe God is all Eye, and can be ignorant of nothing.

Agamemnon, Homer Il. 3. v 8. making a Covenant with Priam invocates the Sun Ἥλιός θ' ὃς πάντ' ἐφορᾷς καὶ πάντ' ἐπακούεις.

* Gamach in 1 Pa. Aqui. L. 14. cap. 1. p. 119. Clem. Alexandrom. lib. 6.

And the ſame Nation made Eyes and Ears of the moſt excellent Metals, Conſecrating them to God, and hanging them up in the midſt of their Temples, in ſignification of Gods ſeeing and hearing all things; hence they called God Light, as well as the Scripture, becauſe all things are viſible to him.

For the better underſtanding of this, we will inquire,

1. What kind of Knowledge or Underſtanding there is in God.
2. What God knows.
3. How God knows things.
4. The proof, that God knows all things.
5. The Uſe of all to our ſelves.

1. What kind of Underſtanding or Knowledg there is in God?

The Knowledge of God in Scripture hath various Names, according to the various relations or objects of it: In reſpect of preſent things, 'tis called Knowledg or Sight; in reſpect of things paſt, Remembrance; in reſpect of things future, or to come, 'tis called Fore-Knowledg or Preſcience. 1 Pet. 1. 2. In regard of the Univerſality of the Objects, it is called Omniſcience; in regard of the ſimple Underſtanding of things 'tis called Knowledg; in regard of acting and modelling the ways of acting, 'tis called Wiſdom and Prudence, Eph. 1. 8. He muſt have Knowledg, otherwiſe he could not be Wiſe; Wiſdom is the Flower of Knowledg, and Knowledg is the Root of Wiſdom.

As to what this Knowledg is; if we know what Knowledg is in man, we may apprehend what it is in God, removing all Imperfection from it, and aſcribing to him the moſt eminent way of underſtanding; becauſe we cannot comprehend God, but as he is pleaſed to condeſcend to us in his own ways of diſcovery; that is, under ſome way of ſimilitude to his perfecteſt Creatures; therefore we have a notion of God by his Underſtanding and Will; Underſtanding, whereby he conceives and apprehends things; Will, whereby he extends himſelf in acting according to his Wiſdom, and whereby he doth approve or diſapprove: Yet we muſt not meaſure his Underſtanding by our own, or think it to be of ſo groſs a Temper as a Created mind; that he hath Eyes of fleſh, or ſees or knows as man ſees *. We can no more meaſure his Knowledg by ours, than we can meaſure his Eſſence by our Eſſence: As he hath an incomprehenſible Eſſence, to which ours is but as a Drop of a Bucket; ſo he hath an incomprehenſible Knowledg, to which ours is but as a grain of Duſt, or meer Darkneſs: His thoughts are above our thoughts, as the Heavens are above the Earth.

* Job 10. 4.

The

The Knowledg of God is variouſly divided by the Schools, and acknowledg'd by all Divines.

1. A Knowledge viſionis & ſimplicis intelligentiæ; the one we may call a Sight, the other an Underſtanding; the one refers to ſenſe, the other to the mind.

1. A Knowledge of Viſion or Sight; Thus God knows himſelf and all things that really were, are, or ſhall be in time; all thoſe things which he hath Decreed to be, tho they are not yet actually ſprung up in the World, but lie couchant in their Cauſes.

2. A Knowledg of Intelligence, or ſimple Underſtanding; the object of this is not things that are in being, or that ſhall by any Decree of God ever be exiſtent in the World; but ſuch things as are poſſible to be wrought by the Power of God, tho they ſhall never in the leaſt peep up into Being, but lye for ever wrapt up in Darkneſs and nothing*. This alſo is a neceſſary knowledg to be allowed to God, becauſe the object of this Knowledg is neceſſary. The poſſibility of more Creatures than ever were or ſhall be, is a concluſion that hath a neceſſary Truth in it; as it is neceſſary that the power of God can produce more Creatures, tho it be not neceſſary that it ſhould produce more Creatures; ſo it is neceſſary that whatſoever the power of God can work, is poſſible to be. And as God knows this poſſibility ſo he knows all the objects that are thus poſſible; and herein doth much conſiſt the Infiniteneſs of his knowledg, as ſhall be ſhewn preſently.

* Suarez de Deo lib. 3. cap. 4. p. 230.

Theſe two kinds of Knowledg differ: That of Viſion, is of things which God hath Decreed to be, tho they are not yet. That of Intelligence, is of things which never ſhall be; yet they may be, or are poſſible to be, if God pleaſe to Will and Order their Being; one reſpects things that ſhall be; the other, things that may be, and are not repugnant to the nature of God to be: The Knowledg of Viſion follows the Act of Gods Will, and ſuppoſeth an act of Gods Will before, Decreeing things to be. (If we could ſuppoſe any firſt or ſecond in Gods Decree, we might ſay God knew them as poſſible before he decreed them; he knew them as future becauſe he Decreed them.) For without the Will of God Decreeing a thing to come to paſs, God cannot know that it will infallibly come to paſs. But the Knowledg of Intelligence ſtands without any Act of his will, in order to the being of thoſe things he knows; he knows poſſible things only in his Power; he knows other things both in his Power, as able to effect them; and in his Will, as determining the Being of them; ſuch knowledg we muſt grant to be in God, for there is ſuch a kind of knowledg in man; for man doth not only know and ſee what is before his eyes in this World, but he may have a conception of many more Worlds, and many more Creatures, which he knows are poſſible to the Power of God.

2. Secondly, There is a ſpeculative and practical knowledge in God.

1. A ſpeculative knowledg is, when the truth of a thing is known without a reſpect to any working or practical operation. The knowledg of things poſſible is in God only ſpeculative, * and ſome ſay Gods knowledge of himſelf, is only ſpeculative, becauſe there is nothing for God to work in himſelf: And tho he knows himſelf, yet this knowledg of himſelf doth not terminate there, but flowers into a love of himſelf, and delight in himſelf; yet this love of himſelf, and delight in himſelf, is not enough to make it a practical knowledg, becauſe it is natural, and naturally and neceſſarily flows from the knowledg of himſelf and his own Goodneſs: He cannot but love himſelf, and delight in himſelf, upon the knowledg of himſelf. But that which is properly practice, is where there is a dominion over the action, and it is wrought not naturally and neceſſarily, but in a way of freedom and counſel. As when we ſee a beautiful Flower or other thing, there ariſeth a delight in the mind; this no man will call Practice, becauſe it is a natural affection of the Will, ariſing from the vertue of the object, without any conſideration of the Underſtanding in a practical manner by counſelling, commanding, &c.

* Suarez de deo lib. 3. cap. 4. p. 138.

2. A Practical knowledg, which tends to operation and practice, and is the principle of working about things that are known; as the knowledg an Artificer hath in an Art or Myſtery. This knowledg is in God: The knowledg he hath of the things he hath decreed, is ſuch a kind of knowledg; for it terminates in the act of Creation, which is not a natural and neceſſary act, as the loving himſelf, and delightning in himſelf is, but wholly free: For it was at his liberty whether he would create them or no; this is called diſcretion, Jer. 10. 12. He hath ſtretched out the heavens by his diſcretion. Such alſo is his knowledg of the things he hath created, and which are in being, for it terminates in the government of them for his own glorious ends. 'Tis by this knowledg *the depths are broken up, and the clouds drop down their dew. This is a knowledg whereby he knows the eſſence, qualities, and properties of what he creates and governs in order to his own glory, and the common good of the world over which he reſides; ſo that ſpeculative knowledg is Gods knowledg of himſelf and things poſſible, practical knowledg is his knowledg of his creatures and things governable; yet in ſome ſort this practical knowledg is not only of things that are made, but of things which are poſſible, which God might make, tho he will not: For as he knows that they can be created, ſo he knows how they are to be created, and how to be governed, tho he never will create them. This is a practical knowledg: For it is not requiſite to conſtitute a knowledge practically, actually to act, but that the knowledg in it ſelf be referrible to action*.

* Prov. 3. 20.

Suarez de Deo l. 3. c. 4. p. 140.

3. There is a knowledge of approbation, as well as apprehenſion. This the Scripture often mentions: Words of underſtanding are uſed to ſignifie the acts of affection. This knowledg adds to the ſimple act of the underſtanding, the complacency and pleaſure of the will; and is improperly knowledg, becauſe it belongs to the Will, and not to the Underſtanding; only it is radically in the underſtanding, becauſe affection implies knowledg; men cannot approve of that which they are ignorant of. Thus knowledg is taken, Amos 3. 2. You only have I known of all the families of the earth. And 2 Tim. 2. 19. The Lord knows who are his, that is, he loves them, he doth not only know them, but acknowledg them for his own: It notes not only an exact underſtanding, but a ſpecial care of them; and ſo is that to be underſtood, Gen. 1. God ſaw every thing that he had made, and behold it was very good: That is, he ſaw it with an eye of approbation, as well as apprehenſion. This is grounded upon Gods knowledg of Viſion, his ſight of his Creatures; for God doth not love or delight in any thing but what is actually in being, or what he hath decreed to bring into being, On the contrary alſo, when God doth not approve, he is ſaid not to know, Mat. 25. 12. I know you not: And Mat. 7. 23. I never knew you: He doth not approve of their Works: 'tis not an ignorance of Underſtanding, but an ignorance of Will; for whiles he ſaith he never knew them, he teſtifies that he did know them, in rendring the reaſon of his diſapproving them, becauſe he knows all their works: So he knows them, and doth not know them, in a different manner: he knows them ſo as to underſtand them; but he doth not know them ſo as to love them.

We muſt then aſcribe an univerſal knowledg to God. If we deny him a ſpeculative knowledg, or knowledg of intelligence, we deſtroy his Deity, we make him ignorant of his own Power: If we deny him practical knowledg, we deny our ſelves to be his Creatures: For as his creatures, we are the fruits of this his diſcretion diſcovered in Creation: If we deny his knowledge of Viſion, we deny his governing Dominion. How can he exerciſe a Soveraign and uncontroulable Dominion, that is ignorant of the nature and qualities of the things he is to govern? If he had not knowledg he could make no Revelation; he that knows not, cannot dictate; we could then have no Scripture. To deny God knowledg, is to daſh out the Scripture, and demoliſh the Deity.

God is deſcrib'd in Zech. 3. 9. With ſeven eyes, to ſhew his perfect Knowledg of all things, all occurrences in the World; and the Cherubims, or whatſoever is meant by the Wings, are deſcribed to be full of eyes, both before and *behind, round about them; much more is God all Eye, all Ear, all Underſtanding. The Sun is a natural Image of God, if the Sun had an Eye, it would ſee; if it had an Underſtanding, it would know all viſible things; it would ſee what it ſhines upon, and underſtand what it influenceth in the moſt obſcure Bowels of the Earth. Doth God excell his Creature the Sun in Excellency and Beauty, and not in Light and Underſtanding? Certainly more than the Sun excels an Atome or grain of Duſt.

* Ezek. 1. 18.

We may yet make ſome repreſentation of this Knowledg of God by a lower thing, a Picture, which ſeems to look upon every one, tho there be never ſo great a multitude in the Room where it hangs; no man can caſt his eye upon it, but it ſeems ſeems to behold him in particular, and ſo exactly as if there were none but him, upon whom the eye of it were fixt; and every man finds the ſame caſt of it; ſhall Art frame a thing of that nature, and ſhall not the God of Art and all Knowledg be much more in reality than that is in imagination? Shall not God have a far greater capacity to behold every thing in the World, which is infinitely leſs to him than a wide Room to a Picture?

II. The ſecond thing, what God knows? How far his underſtanding reaches?

1. God knows himſelf, and only knows himſelf. This is the firſt and original knowledge, wherein he excells all Creatures: No man doth exactly know himſelf; much leſs doth he underſtand the full nature of a Spirit; much leſs ſtill the Nature and Perfections of God; for what proportion can there be between a finite faculty and an infinite object? Herein conſiſts the infiniteneſs of Gods Knowledg, that he knows his own Eſſence, that he knows that which is unknowable to any elſe. It doth not ſo much conſiſt in knowing the Creature which he hath made, as in knowing himſelf who was never made. 'Tis not ſo much infinite, becauſe he knows all things which are in the World, or that ſhall be; or things that he can make, becauſe the number of them is finite; but becauſe he hath a perfect and comprehenſive knowledge of his own infinite Perfections*. Tho it be ſaid that Angels ſee his Face, Matth. 18. 10. that ſight notes rather their immediate Attendance, than their exact Knowledge; they ſee ſome ſigns of his Preſence and Majeſty, more illuſtrious and expreſs than ever appear'd to man in this Life; but the Eſſence of God is inviſible to them, hid from them in the ſecret place of Eternity; none knows God but himſelf, 1 Cor. 2. 11. what man knows the things of a man ſave the ſpirit of a man? So the things of God knows no man but the ſpirit of God; the ſpirit of God ſearches the deep things of God; ſearcheth, that is, exactly knows, throughly underſtands, as thoſe who have their eyes in every Chink and Crevis, to ſee what lies hid there; the word ſearch, notes not an Enquiry, but an exact Knowledge, ſuch as men have of things upon a diligent ſcrutiny; as when God is ſaid to ſearch the Heart and the Reigns, it doth not ſignifie a precedent ignorance, but an exact Knowledge of the moſt intimate corners of the hearts of men. As the Conceptions of men are unknown to any but themſelves; ſo the depths of the Divine Eſſence, Perfections and Decrees, are unknown to any but to God himſelf; he only knows what he is, and what he knows, what he can do, and what he hath Decreed to do.

* Moulin.

1. For firſt, If God did not know himſelf, he would not be perfect. 'Tis the Perfection of a Creature to know it ſelf, much more a Perfection belonging to God. If God did not comprehend himſelf, he would want an Infinite Perfection, and ſo would ceaſe to be God, in being defective in that which intellectual Creatures in ſome meaſure poſſeſs. As God is the moſt perfect Being, ſo he muſt have the moſt perfect Underſtanding: If he did not underſtand himſelf, he would be under the greateſt Ignorance, becauſe he would be ignorant of the moſt excellent object. Ignorance is the Imperfection of the Underſtanding; and ignorance of ones ſelf is a greater Imperfection than ignorance of things without. If God ſhould know all things without himſelf, and not know himſelf, he would not have the moſt perfect Knowledg, becauſe he would not have the knowledg of the beſt of objects.

2. Without the Knowledg of himſelf, he could not be bleſſed. Nothing can have any complacency in it ſelf, without the Knowledg of it ſelf. Nothing can in a rational manner enjoy it ſelf, without underſtanding it ſelf. The Bleſſedneſs of God conſiſts not in the knowledg of any thing without him, but in the knowledg of himſelf and his own excellency, as the princip le of all things; If therefore he did not perfectly know himſelf and his own happineſs, he could not enjoy a happineſs; for to be, and not to know to be, is as if a thing were not. He is God bleſſed for ever Rom. 9. 5. And therefore for ever had a Knowledg of himſelf.

3. Without the Knowledg of himſelf he could Create nothing. For he would be ignorant of his own Power, and his own Ability; and he that doth not know how far his Power extends, could not act: If he did not know himſelf, he could know nothing; and he that knows nothing; can do nothing? he could not know an Effect to be poſſible to him, unleſs he knew his own Power as a cauſe.

4. Without the Knowledg of himſelf, he could govern nothing. He could not without without the knowledg of his own Holineſs and Righteouſneſs, preſcribe Laws to men, nor without a knowledg of his own nature, order himſelf a manner of Worſhip ſutable to it.

All Worſhip muſt be congruous to the dignity and nature of the Object worſhipped; he muſt therefore know his own Authority whereby Worſhip was to be enacted, his own excellency to which Worſhip was to be ſuited, his own Glory to which Worſhip was to be directed. If he did not know himſelf, he did not know what to puniſh, becauſe he would not know what was contrary to himſelf: Not knowing himſelf; he would not know what was a contempt of him, and what an adoration of him; what was worthy of God, and what was unworthy of him. In fine, he could not know other things, unleſs he knew himſelf: Unleſs he knew his own Power, he could not know how he created things: Unleſs he knew his own Wiſdom, he could not know the beauty of his Works: Unleſs he knew his own Glory, he could not know the end of his Works: Unleſs he knew his own Holineſs, he could not know what was evil: And unleſs he knew his own Juſtice, he could not know how to puniſh the Crimes of his offending creatures. And therefore,

1. God knows himſelf, becauſe his Knowledg with his Will is the cauſe of all other things that can fall under his cognizance: He knows himſelf firſt, before he can know any other thing; that is, firſt according to our conceptions; for indeed God knows himſelf and all other things at once; He is the firſt Truth, and therefore is the firſt object of his own underſtanding. There is nothing more excellent than himſelf, and therefore nothing more known to him than himſelf. As he is all Knowledg, ſo he hath in himſelf the moſt excellent object of Knowledg. To underſtand is properly to know one's ſelf. No object is ſo intelligible to God as God is to himſelf; nor ſo intimately and immediately joined with his Underſtanding as himſelf: For his Underſtanding is his Eſſence, himſelf.

2. He knows himſelf by his own Eſſence. He knows not himſelf and his own Power, by the effect, becauſe he knows himſelf from Eternity, before there was a World, or any effect of his power extant. 'Tis not a knowledg by the Cauſe, for God hath no cauſe; nor a knowledge of himſelf by any ſpecies or any thing from without: If it were any thing from without himſelf, that muſt be created or uncreated; if uncreated, it would be God; and ſo we muſt either own many Gods, or own it to be his Eſſence, and ſo not diſtinct from himſelf: If created, then his knowledg of himſelf would depend upon a creature; he could not then know himſelf from Eternity, but in time, becauſe nothing can be created from eternity, but in time. God knows not himſelf by any faculty, for there is no compoſition in God, he is not made up of parts, but is a ſimple being; ſome therefore have called God, not intellectus, underſtanding, becauſe that ſavours of a faculty; but intellectio, intellection. God is all act in the knowledg of himſelf, and his knowledg of other things.

3. God therefore knows himſelf perfectly, comprehenſively. Nothing in his own nature is concealed from him, he reflects upon every thing that he is*. There is a poſitive comprehenſion, ſo God doth not comprehend himſelf; for what is comprehended, hath bounds; and what is is comprehended by it ſelf, is finite to it ſelf: And there is a negative comprehenſion, God ſo comprehends himſelf; nothing in his own nature is obſcure to him, unknown by him. For there is as great a perfection in the underſtanding of God to know, as there is in the Divine nature to be known. The underſtanding of God, and the Nature of God, are both infinite, and ſo equal to one another; his Underſtanding is equal to himſelf; he knows himſelf ſo well, that nothing can be known by him more perfectly, than himſelf is known to himſelf. He knows himſelf in the higheſt manner, becauſe nothing is ſo proportion'd to the Underſtanding of God as himſelf: He knows his own Eſſence, Goodneſs, Power, all his Perfections, Decrees, Intentions, Acts, the infinite capacity of his own Underſtanding, ſo that nothing of himſelf is in the dark to himſelf. And in this reſpect ſome uſe this expreſſion, that the Infiniteneſs of God is in a manner finite to himſelf, becauſe it is comprehended by himſelf.

* Magalaneus.

Thus

Thus God tranſcends all Creatures; thus his Underſtanding is truly Infinite, becauſe nothing but himſelf is an infinite Object for it: What Angels may underſtand of themſelves perfectly, I know not; but no Creature in the World underſtands himſelf: Man underſtands not fully the excellency and parts of his own nature; upon Gods knowledg of himſelf depends the Comfort of his People, and the Terror of the Wicked; this is alſo a clear Argument for his knowledg of all other things, without himſelf; he that knows himſelf, muſt needs know all other things leſs than himſelf, and which were made by himſelf: When the knowledg of his own Immenſity and Infiniteneſs is not an object too difficult for him; the knowledg of a finite and limited Creature in all his actions, thoughts, circumſtances, cannot be too hard for him. Since he knows himſelf who is Infinite, he cannot but know whatſoever is Finite; this is the Foundation of all his other Knowledg; the knowledg of every thing preſent, paſt, and to come, is far leſs than the knowledge of himſelf. He is more incomprehenſible in his own nature, than all things Created, or that can be Created, put together can be: If he then have a perfect comprehenſive knowledg of his own nature, any knowledg of all other things is leſs than the Knowledg of himſelf; this ought to be well conſidered by us, as the Fountain whence all his other knowledg flows.

2. Therefore God knows all other things, whether they be poſſible, paſt, preſent, or future.

Whether they be things that he can do, but will never do; or Whether they be things that he hath done, but are not now; things that are now in Being, or things that are not now exiſting, that lie in the Womb of their proper and immediate Cauſes*; If his underſtanding be Infinite, he then knows all things whatſoever that can be known, elſe his underſtanding would have bounds, and what hath limits is not infinite, but finite; if he be ignorant of any one thing that is knowable, that is a bound to him, it comes with an exception, a but, God knows all things but this, a bar is then ſet to his Knowledg. If there were any thing, any particular circumſtance in the whole Creation, or Non-Creation, and poſſible to be known by him, and yet were unknown to him, he could not be ſaid to be Omniſcient. As he would not be Almighty, if any one thing that implyed not a repugnancy to his Nature, did tranſcend his Power.

* Petav. Theol. Dogm. lib. 9. 257.

1. Firſt, all things poſſible. No Queſtion but God knows what he could create, as well as what he hath created: What he would not Create, as well as what he reſolved to Create; he knew what he would not do, before he willed to do it; this is the next thing which declares the Infiniteneſs of his underſtanding: For as his Power is infinite, and can create innumerable Worlds and Creatures; ſo is his Knowledg infinite, in knowing innumerable things poſſible to his Power. Poſſibles are infinite; that is, there is no end of what God can do, and therefore no end of what God doth know; otherwiſe his Power would be more Infinite than his knowledge: If he knew only what is created, there would be an end of his underſtanding, becauſe all Creatures may be numbered, but poſſible things cannot be reckoned up by any Creature: There is the ſame reaſon of this in Eternity; when never ſo many numbers of years are run out, there is ſtill more to come, there ſtill wants an end; and when Millions of Worlds are Created, there is no more an end of Gods Power, than of Eternity: Thus there is no end of his underſtanding; that is, his Knowledg is not terminated by any thing.

This the Scripture gives us ſome accompt of; God knovvs things that are not, for he calls things that are not, as if they were, Rom. 4. 17. He calls things that are not, as if they vvere in Being; vvhat he calls is not unknovvn to him: If he knovvs things that are not, he knovvs things that may never be; as he knovvs things that ſhall be, becauſe he Wills them; ſo he knovvs things that might be, becauſe he is able to effect them: He knevv that the Inhabitants of Kelah vvould betray David to Saul, if he remained in that place, 1 Sam. 23. 11. He knevv vvhat they vvould do upon that occaſion, tho it vvas never done; as he knevv vvhat vvas in their Povver and in their Wills, ſo he muſt needs knovv vvhat is vvithin the compaſs of his ovvn Povver: As he can permit more than he doth permit; ſo he knovvs vvhat he can permit, and vvhat upon that permiſſion vvould be done by his Creatures; ſo God knevv the poſſibility of the Tyrians Repentance, if they had the ſame means, heard the

ſame

ſame Truths, and beheld the ſame Miracles which were offer'd to the Ears, and preſented to the Eyes of the Jews, Matth. 11. 21.

This muſt needs be ſo, becauſe.

1. Man knows things that are poſſible to him, tho he will never effect them. A Carpenter knows a Houſe in the model he hath of it in his head, tho he never build a Houſe according to that model: A Watch-maker hath the frame of a Watch in his mind, which he will never work with his Inſtruments: Man knows what he could do, tho he never intends to do it* As the Underſtanding of man hath a vertue, that where it ſees one man, it may imagine Thouſands of men of the ſame ſhape, ſtature, form, parts; yea taller, more vigorous, ſpritely, intelligent than the man he ſees; becauſe it is poſſible ſuch a number may be. Shall not the underſtanding of God much more know what he is able to effect, ſince the underſtanding of man can know what he is never able to produce, yet may be produced by God, viz. That he who produced this man which I ſee, can produce a Thouſand exactly like him? If the Divine Underſtanding did not know infinite things, but were confin'd to a certain number; it may be demanded whether God can underſtand any thing farther than that number, or whether he cannot? If he can, then he doth actually underſtand all thoſe things which he hath a Power to underſtand: otherwiſe there would be an increaſe of Gods knowledg, if it were actually now, and not before, and ſo he would be more perfect than he was before; if he cannot underſtand them, then he cannot underſtand what a human mind can underſtand; for our underſtandings can multiply Numbers in infinitum; and there is no number ſo great, but a man can ſtill add to it; We muſt ſuppoſe the Divine Underſtanding more excellent in Knowledg. Gods knows all that a man can imagine, tho it never were, nor never ſhall be; he muſt needs know whatſoever is in the Power of man to imagine or think, becauſe God concurs to the ſupport of the faculty in that imagination, and tho it may be replied, an Atheiſt may imagine that there is no God; a man may imagine that God can Lie, or that he can be deſtroy'd; doth God know therefore that he is not? Or that he can Lie, or ceaſe to be? No, he knows he cannot; his Knowledg extends to things poſſible, not to things impoſſible to himſelf; he knows it as imaginable by man, not as poſſible in it ſelf; becauſe 'tis utterly impoſſible, and repugnant to the nature of God, ſince he eminently contains in himſelf all things poſſible, paſt, preſent and to come; he cannot know himſelf without knowing them.

* Ficin de immort lib. 2. cap. 10.

Gamach.

2. God knowing his own power, knows whatſoever is in his power to effect. If he knows not all things poſſible; he could not know the extent of his own power, and ſo would not know himſelf, as a cauſe ſufficient for more things than he hath Created: How can he comprehend himſelf, who comprehends not all effluxes of things poſſible that may come from him and be wrought by him? How can he know himſelf as a cauſe, if he know not the Objects and Works which he is able to produce*? Since the power of God extends to numberleſs things, his Knowledg alſo extends to numberleſs objects; as if a Unite could ſee the numbers it could produce, it would ſee Infinite numbers; for a Unite is, as it were, all number. God knowing the fruitfulneſs of his own Vertue, knows a numberleſs multitude of things which he can do, more than have been done, or ſhall be done by him; he therefore knows innumerable Worlds, innumerable Angels, with higher Perfections than any of them which he hath Created, have: So that if the World ſhould laſt many Millions of Years, God knows that he can every day Create another World more capacious than this; and having Created an unconceivable number, he knows he could ſtill Greate more: So that he beholds infinite Worlds, infinite numbers of Men and other Creatures in himſelf, infinite kinds of things, infinite ſpecies and individuals, under thoſe kinds, even as many as he can Create, if his Will did order and determine it*; for not being ignorant of his own Power, he cannot be ignorant of the effects wherein it may diſplay and diſcover it ſelf. A comprehenſive knowledg of his own Power doth neceſſarily include the objects of that power; ſo he knows whatſoever he could effect, and whatſoever the could permit, if he pleaſed to do it.

* Ficin de im. mort. lib. 2. cap. 10.

If God could not underſtand more than he hath created, he could not create more than he hath created: For it cannot be conceived how he can create any thing thing that he is ignorant of; what he doth not know, he cannot do: he muſt know alſo the extent of his own goodneſs, and how far any thing is capable to partake of it: ſo much therefore as any detract from the Knowledg of God, they detract from his Power.

3. 'Tis further evident that God knows all poſſible things, becauſe he knew thoſe things which he has created, before they were created, when they were yet in a poſſibility. If God knew things before they were created, he knew them when they were in a poſſibility, and not in actual reality. 'Tis abſurd to imagine that his Underſtanding did lacquey after the creatures, and draw knowledg from them after they were created. 'Tis abſurd to think that God did create, before he knew what he could or would create. If he knew thoſe things he did create when they were poſſible, he muſt know all things which he can create, and therefore all things that are poſſible.

To conclude this, We muſt conſider that this Knowledg is of another kind than his knowledg of things that are or ſhall be. He ſees poſſible things as poſſible, not as things that ever are or ſhall be. If he ſaw them as exiſting or future, and they ſhall never be, this knowledg would be falſe, there would be a deceit in it, which cannot be. He knows thoſe things not in themſelves, becauſe they are not, nor in their cauſes becauſe they ſhall never be: he knows them in his own Power, not in his Will: He underſtands them as able to produce them, not as willing to effect them. Things poſſible he knows only in his Power, things future he knows both in his Power and his Will, as he is both able and determin'd in his own good pleaſure to give being to them. Thoſe that ſhall never come to paſs, he knows only in himſelf, as a ſufficient cauſe; thoſe things that ſhall come into being, he knows in himſelf as the efficient cauſe, and alſo in their immediate ſecond cauſes.

This ſhould teach us to ſpend our thoughts in the admirations of the excellency of God, and the divine Knowledg; his Underſtanding is infinite.

2. God knows all things paſt. This is an argument uſed by God himſelf to elevate his Excellency above all the commonly adored Idols, Iſa. 41. 22. Let them ſhew the former things, what they be, that we may conſider them, and know the later end of them. He knows them as if they were now preſent, and not paſt: for indeed in his Eternity there is nothing paſt or future to his knowledg. This is called remembrance in Scripture, as when God remembred Rachels prayer for a child, Gen. 30. 22. and he is ſaid to put tears into his bottle, and write them in his Book of Accompts, which ſignifies the exact and unerring knowledg in God of the minute circumſtances paſt in the World; and this knowledg is called a book of remembrance Mal. 3. 16. ſignifying the perpetual preſence of things paſt, before him. There are two elegant expreſſions ſignifying the certainty and perpetuity of Gods knowledg of ſins paſt, Job 14. 17. My tranſgreſſion is ſealed up in a bag, and thou ſoweſt up my iniquity. A Metaphor taken from men that put up in a bag the money they would charily keep, tye the bag, ſow up the holes, and bind it hard that nothing may fall out; or a veſſel wherein they reſerve liquors, and daub it with pitch and glutinous ſtuff, that nothing may leak out, but be ſafely kept till the time of uſe. Or elſe, as ſome think, from the bags Attorneys carry with them, full of Writings, when they are to manage a Cauſe againſt a perſon. Thus we find God often in Scripture calling to mens minds their paſt actions, upbraiding them with their ingratitude, wherein he teſtifies his remembrance of his own paſt benefits, and their Crimes. His knowledg in this regard hath ſomething of infinity in it, ſince tho' the ſins of all men that have been in the World are finite in regard of number, yet when the ſins of one man in thoughts, words, and deeds, are numberleſs in his own account, and perhaps in the account of any creature, the ſins of all the vaſt numbers of men that have been, or ſhall be, are much more numberleſs, it cannot be leſs than infinite knowledg that can make a collection of them, and take a ſurvey of them all at once.

If paſt things had not been known by God, how could Moſes have been acquainted with the Original of things? How could he have declared the former tranſactions, wherein all Hiſtories are ſilent but the Scripture? How could he know the cauſe of mans preſent miſery ſo many ages after, wherewith all Philoſophy was unacquainted? How could he have writ the order of the Creation, the particulars of the ſin of Adam, the circumſtances of Cains murder, the private ſpeech of Lamech to his Wives, if God had not revealed them? And how could a Revelation be made, if things paſt were forgotten by him? Do we not remember many things done among men, as well as by our ſelves, and reſerve the forms of divers things in our minds, which riſe as occaſions are preſented to draw them forth? And ſhall not God much more, who hath no cloud of darkneſs upon his underſtanding? A man that makes a curious Picture, hath the form of it in his mind before he made it; and if the fire burn it; the form of it in his mind is not deſtroyed by the fire, but retained in it. Gods memory is no leſs perfect than his underſtanding: If he did not know things paſt, he could not be a righteous Governour, or exerciſe any judicial act in a righteous manner; he could not diſpenſe Rewards and Puniſhments according to his promiſes and threatnings, if things that were paſt could be forgotten by him; he could not require that which is paſt *, if he did not remember that which is paſt.

*Eccleſ. 3 15.

And tho' God be ſaid to forget in Scripture, and not to know his People, and his People pray to him to remember them, as if he bad forgotten them *: This is improperly aſcrib'd to God *. As God is ſaid to repent, when he changes things according to his Counſel beyond the expectation of men; ſo he is ſaid to forget, when he defers the making good his Promiſe to the Godly, or his Threatnings to the Wicked; this is not a defect of Memory belonging to his mind, but an act of his Will: When he is ſaid to remember his Covenant, 'tis to Will Grace according to his Covenant; when he is ſaid to forget his Covenant, 'tis to intercept the influences of it, whereby to puniſh the Sin of his People; and when he is ſaid not to know his People, 'tis not an abſolute forgetfulneſs of them, but withdrawing from them the Teſtimonies of his Kindneſs, and clouding the Signs of his favour; ſo God in Pardoning is ſaid to forget Sin, not that he ceaſeth to know it, but ceaſeth to puniſh it: 'Tis not to be meant of a ſimple forgetfulneſs, or a lapſe of his Memory, but of a Judicial Forgetfulneſs; ſo when his People in Scripture Pray, Lord Remember thy Word unto thy Servant; no more is to be underſtood, but Lord fulfil thy Word and Promiſe to thy Servant.

* Pſal. 119. 49.
* Bradward.

3. He knows things Preſent. Heb. 4. 13. All things are naked and opened unto the Eyes of him with whom we have to do; This is grounded upon the Knowledg of himſelf; 'tis not ſo difficult to know all Creatures exactly, as to know himſelf, becauſe they are finite, but himſelf is infinite; he knows his own Power, and therefore every thing through which his Omnipotence is diffus'd, all the acts and objects of it; not the leaſt thing that is the Birth of his Power, can be conceal'd from him; he knows his own Goodneſs, and therefore every object upon which the warm beams of his Goodneſs ſtrike; he therefore knows diſtinctly the properties of every Creature, becauſe every Property in them is a Ray of his Goodneſs; he is not only the efficient, but the exemplary cauſe; therefore as he knows all that his Power hath wrought, as he is the efficient, ſo he knows them in himſelf as the pattern: As a Carpenter can give an account of every part and paſſage in a Houſe he hath built, by conſulting the Model in his own mind, whereby he built it. He looked upon all things after he had made them, and pronounc'd them good, Gen. 1. 3. full of a natural goodneſs he had endowed them with; he did not ignorantly pronounce them ſo, and call them good, whether he knew them or not; and therefore he knows them in particular, as he knew them all in their firſt Preſence. Is there any reaſon he ſhould be ignorant of every thing now preſent in the World, or that any thing that derives an exiſtence from him as a free cauſe, ſhould be concealed from him? If he did not know things preſent in their particularities, many things would be known by man, yea by Beaſts, which the infinite God were ignorant of; and if he did not know all things preſent, but only ſome; 'tis poſſible for the moſt Bleſſed God to be deceived and be miſerable: Ignorance is a Calamity to the Underſtanding: He could not preſcribe Laws to his Creatures, unleſs he knew their Natures, to wich thoſe Laws were to be ſuted; no, not natural Ordinances to the Sun, Moon, and Heavenly Bodies, and inanimate Creatures, unleſs he knew the vigour and vertue in them, to execute thoſe Ordinances; for to preſcribe Laws above the nature of things, is inconſiſtent with the VViſdom of Government; he muſt know how far they were able to obey; whether the Laws were ſuted to their

their ability: And for his rational Creatures, Whether the Punishements annext to the Law, were proper, and suted to the Transgression of the Creature.

1. First, He knows all Creatures from the highest to the lowest, the least as well as the greatest. He knows the Ravens and their young ones *; the Drops of Rain and Dew which he hath begotten *, every Bird in the Air, as well as any man doth what he hath in a Cage at home, Psal. 50. 11. I know all the Fowls in the Mountains, and the wild Beasts in the Field; which some read creeping things. The Clouds are numbred in his Wisdom, Job 38. 37. every Worm in the Earth, every drop of Rain that falls upon the ground, the flakes of Snow, and the knots of Hail, the Sands upon the Sea-shore, the Hairs upon the Head; 'tis no more absurd to imagine that God knows them, than that God made them; they are all the effects of his Power, as well as the Stars, which he calls by their Names, as well as the most glorious Angel and blessed Spirit; he knows them as well, as if there were none but them in particular for him to know; the least things were framed by his Art as well as the greatest; the least things partake of his goodness as well as the greatest; he knows his own Arts, and his own Goodness, and therefore all the Stamps and Impressions of them upon all his Creatures; he knows the immediate causes of the least, and therefore the effects of those causes. Since his knowledg is infinite, it must extend to those things which are at the greatest distance from him, to those which approach nearest to not Being; since he did not want Power to Create, he cannot want Understanding to know every thing he hath Created, the dispositions, qualities, and vertues of the minutest Creature.

* Job 38. 41
* Job 38. 29.

Nor is the Understanding of God embas'd, and suffers a diminution by the Knowledg of the vilest and most inconsiderable things: Is it not an imperfection to be ignorant of the nature of any thing? and can God have such a defect in his most perfect Understanding? Is the Understanding of man of an impurer Alloy by knowing the nature of the rankest Poysons? by understanding a Fly? or a small Insect? or by considering the deformity of a Toad? Is it not generally counted a note of a Dignified mind, to be able to Discourse of the Nature of them? Was Solomon, who knew all from the Cedar to the Hyssop, debas'd by so Rich a Present of Wisdom from his Creator? Is any Glass defil'd by presenting a Deformed Image? Is there any thing more vile than the imaginations, which are only evil, and continually? doth not the mind of man descend to the mud of the Earth, play the Adulterer or Idolater with mean objects, suck in the most unclean things? yet God knows these in all their circumstances, in every appearence, inside and outside. Is there any thing viler than some thoughts of men? than some actions of men? their unclean Beds, and Gluttonous Vomiting, and Luciferian Pride? yet do not these fall under the Eye of God, in all their Nakedness? The Second Person's taking Human Nature, tho' it obscur'd, yet it did not disparage the Deity; or bring any disgrace to it: Is Gold the worse for being formed into the Image of a Fly? doth it not still retain the nobleness of the Metal? When men are despis'd for descending to the knowledg of mean and vile things, 'tis because they neglect the knowledg of the greater; and Sin in their enquiries after lesser things, with a neglect of that which concerns more the Honour of God and the Happiness of themselves; to be ambitious of such a Knowledg, and careless of that of more concern, is criminal and contemptible. But God knows the greatest as well as the least: mean things are not known by him to exclude the knowledg of the greater; nor are vile things govern'd by him to exclude the order of the better. The Deformity of Objects known by God doth not deform him, nor defile him; he doth not view them without himself, but within himself, wherein all things in their Ideas are Beautiful and Comely: Our knowledg of a Deformed thing, is not a Deforming of our Understanding, but is beautiful in the Knowledg, tho' it be not in the object; nor is there any fear that the Understanding of God should become material by knowing material things, any more than our Understandings lose their Spirituality by knowing the nature of bodies; 'tis to be observed therefore that only those senses of men, as seeing, hearing, smelling, which have those qualities for their objects that come nearest the nature of spiritual things, as Light, Sounds, fragrant Odours, are ascrib'd to God in Scripture; not Touching or Tasting, which are senses that are not exercis'd without a more immediate commerce with groſs matter; and the reaſon may be, becauſe we ſhould have no groſs thoughts of God, as if he were a body, and made of matter, like the things he knows.

2. As he knows all Creatures, ſo God knows all the actions of Creatures. He counts in particular all the ways of men. Doth he not ſee all my ways, and count all my ſteps? Job 31. 4. He tells their wandrings, as if one by one, Pſal. 56. 8. His eyes are upon all the ways of man, and he ſees all his goings, Job 34. 21. a Metaphor taken from men, when they look wiſtly, with fixed Eyes upon a thing, to view it in every circumſtance, whence it comes, whether it goes, to obſerve every little motion of it. Gods Eye is not a wandring, but a fixed Eye; and the ways of man are not only before his eyes, but he doth exactly *ponder them; as one that will not be ignorant of the leaſt Mite in them, but weigh and examine them by the Standard of his Law; he may as well know the motions of our Members, as the Hairs of our Heads; the ſmalleſt actions before they be, whether Civil, Natural or Religious, fall under his Cognizance; what meaner than a man carrying a Pitcher, yet our Saviour foretels it? Luke 22. 10. God knows not only what men do, but what they would have done, had he not reſtrained them; what Abimelech would have done to Sarah, had not God put a Bar in his way, Gen. 20. 6. What a man, that is taken away in his Youth, would have done, had he lived to a riper Age; yea he knows the moſt ſecret words as well as actions; the words ſpoken by the King of Iſrael in his Bed-Chamber, were revealed to Eliſha, 2 Kings 6. 12. and indeed how can any action of man be conceal'd from God? Can we view the various actions of a heap of Ants or a Hive of Bees in a glaſs, without turning our Eyes; and ſhall not God behold the actions of all men in the World, which are leſs than Bees or Ants in his Sight, and more viſible to him than an Ant-Hill or Bee-Hive can be to the acuteſt eye of man?

* Prov. 5. 21.

3. As God knows all the actions of Creatures, ſo he knows all the Thoughts of Creatures. The thoughts are the moſt cloſeted acts of man, hid from men and Angels, unleſs diſclos'd by ſome outward Expreſſions; but God deſcends into the depths and abyſſes of the Soul, diſcerns the moſt inward contrivances; nothing is impenetrable to him; the Sun doth not ſo much enlighten the Earth, as God underſtands the Heart; all thoughts are as viſible to him, as Flies and motes enclos'd in a body of tranſparent Chryſtal; this man naturally allows to God. Men often ſpeak to God by the motions of their minds and ſecret Ejaculations; which they would not do, if it were not naturally implanted in them, that God knows all their inward motions; the Scripture is plain and poſitive in this, He tries the Heart and the Reins, Pſal. 7. 9. as men by the uſe of Fire diſcern the droſſie and purer parts of Metals: The ſecret intentions and aims, the moſt lurking affections ſeated in the Reins; he knows that which no man, no Angel is able to know; which a man himſelf knows not, nor makes any particular reflection upon; yea he weighs the Spirit, Prov. 16. 2. he exactly numbers all the devices and inclinations of men, as men do every piece of Coyn they tell out of a heap. He diſcerns the Thoughts and intents of the heart, Heb. 4. 12. all that is in the mind, all that is in the affections, every ſtirring and purpoſe; ſo that not one thought can be withheld from him, Job 42. 2. yea Hell and Deſtruction are before him, much more then the Hearts of the Children of men? Prov. 15. 11. he works all things in the Bowels of the Earth, and brings forth all things out of that Treaſure, ſay ſome: but more naturally, God knows the whole ſtate of the dead, all the receptacles and Graves of their bodies, all the bodies of men conſumed by the Earth, or devoured by living Creatures; things that ſeem to be out of all Being; he knows the Thoughts of the Devils and Damned Creatures, whom he hath caſt out of his care for ever, into the arms of his Juſtice, never more to caſt a delightful glance towards them; not a ſecret in any Soul in Hell, (which he hath no need to know, becauſe he ſhall not judg them by any of the Thoughts they now have, ſince they were condemned to punishment) is hid from him; much more is he acquainted with the thoughts of living men, the counſels of whoſe hearts are yet to be manifeſted, in order to their Tryal and Cenſure; yea, he knows them before they ſpring up into actual being, Pſal. 139. 2. thou underſtandeſt my Thoughts afar off; my Thoughts, that is, every Thought; tho' innumerable Thoughts paſs through me in a day, and that in the Sourſe and Fountain

when-

when it is yet in the Womb, before it is our Thought; if he knows them before their Exiſtence, before they can be properly called ours; much more doth he know them when they actually ſpring up in us; he knows the tendency of them, where the Bird will light when it is in flight; he knows them exactly, he is therefore called a diſcerner or criticizer of the Heart, Heb. 4. 12. As a Critick deſcerns every Letter, Point, and Stop; he is more intimate with us than our Souls with our Bodies, and hath more the Poſſeſſion of us than we have of our ſelves; he knows them by an inſpection into the heart, not by the Mediation of ſecond cauſes, by the looks or geſtures of men, as men may diſcern the Thoughts of one another.

1. God diſcerns all good motions of the Mind and Will. Theſe he puts into men, and needs muſt God know his own act; he knew the Son of Jeroboam to have ſome good thing in him towards the Lord God of Iſrael, 1 Kings 14. 13. and the integrity of David and Hezekiah; the freeſt motions of the Will and Affections to him. Lord, thou knoweſt that I love thee, ſaith Peter, John 21. 17. Love can be no more reſtrain'd, than the Will it ſelf can. A man may make another to grieve and deſire, but none can force another to Love.

2. God diſcerns all the evil motions of the Mind and Will. Every imagination of the Heart, Gen. 6. 5. the vanity of mens thoughts, Pſal. 94. 11. their inward darkneſs and deceitful diſguiſes: No wonder that God who faſhion'd the heart, ſhould underſtand the motions of it, Pſal. 33. 13, 15. He looks from Heaven and beholds all the Children of men: he faſhioneth their hearts alike, and conſiders all their Works. Doth any man make a Watch, and yet be ignorant of its motion? Did God fling away the Key to this ſecret Cabinet, when he framed it, and put off the power of unlocking it when he pleaſed? He did not ſurely frame it in ſuch a poſture as that any thing in it ſhould be hid from his Eye; he did not faſhion it to be Priviledged from his Government; which would follow, if he were ignorant of what was Minted and Coined in it.

He could not be a Judg to puniſh men, if the inward frames and principles of mens actions were concealed from him; an outward action may glitter to an outward eye, yet the ſecret ſpring be a deſire of applauſe, and not the Fear and Love of God. If the inward frames of the heart did lye covered from him in the ſecret receſſes of the heart; thoſe plauſible acts, which in regard of their Principles would merit a Puniſhment, would meet with a Reward; and God ſhould beſtow Happineſs where he had denounced Miſery. As without the knowledg of what is juſt, he could not be a Wiſe Law-giver; ſo without the knowledg of what is inwardly committed, he conld not be a Righteous Judg; acts that are rotten in the ſpring, might he judged good by the fair colour and appearance.

This is the glory of God at the laſt day, to manifeſt the ſecrets of all hearts, 1 Cor. 4. 5. and the Prophet Jeremiah links the power of Judging, and the Prerogative of trying the Hearts together, Jer. 11. 20. but thou, O Lord of Hoſts, that Judgeſt Righteouſly, that trieſt the Reins and the Heart: and Jer. 17. 10. I the Lord ſearch the Heart, I try the Reins; to what end? even to give every man according to his way, and according to the fruit of his doings. And indeed his binding up the whole Law with that command of not coveting, evidenceth that he will Judg men by the inward affections and frames of their hearts. Again, God ſuſtains the mind of man in every act of thinking; In him we have not only the Principle of Life, but every motion, the motion of our minds as well as of our members: In him we live and move, &c. Acts 17. 28. Since he ſupports the vigor of the faculty in every act, can he be ignorant of thoſe acts which ſpring from the faculty, to which he doth at that inſtant communicate power and ability?

Now this knowledg of the Thoughts of men is,

1. An incommunicable Property, belonging only to the Divine Underſtanding. Creatures indeed may know the thoughts of others by Divine Revelation, but not by themſelves; no Creature hath a Key immediately to open the minds of men, and ſee all that lodgeth there; no Creature can Fathom the heart by the Line of Created Knowledge *. Devils may have a conjectural Knowledg, and may gueſs at them, by the acquaintance they have with the Diſpoſition and Conſtitution of men, and the Images they behold in their Fancies; and by ſome marks which an inward inward imagination may ſtamp upon the Brain, Blood, Animal Spirits, Face, &c. But the knowing the Thoughts meerly as Thought, without any Impreſſion by it, is a Royalty God appropriates to himſelf, as the main ſecret of his Government, and a Perfection declarative of his Deity, as much as any elſe, Jer. 17. 9, 10. the heart of man is deſperately wicked, who can know it yes, there is one, and but one, I the Lord ſearch the Heart, I try the Reins. Man looks on the outward appearance, but the Lord looks upon the Heart, 1 Sam. 16. 7. where God is diſtinguiſht by this Perfection from all men whatſoever; others may know by Revelation, as Eliſha did, what was in Gehazi's heart, 2 Kings 5. 26. But God knows a man more than any man knows himſelf; What perſon upon earth underſtands the windings and turnings of his own heart, what reſerves it will have, what contrivances, what inclinations? all which God knows exactly.

* Daille ſerm. Part. 1. p. 230.

2. God acquires no new Knowledg of the thoughts and heart, by the Diſcovery of them in the actions. He would then be but equal in this part of Knowledg to his Creature; no man or Angel but may thus arrive to the Knowledg of them; God were then excluded from an abſolute Dominion over the prime work of his lower Creation; he would have made a Creature ſuperior in this reſpect to himſelf, upon whoſe Will to diſcover, his knowledg of their inward intentions ſhould depend; and therefore when God is ſaid to ſearch the heart, we muſt not underſtand it as if God were ignorant before, and was fain to make an exact ſcrutiny and enquiry, before he attained what he deſired to know; but God condeſcends to our capacity in the expreſſion of his own Knowledg, ſignifying that his Knowledg is as compleat as any mans Knowledg can be, of the deſigns of others, after he hath ſifted them by a ſtrict and through examination, and wrung out a diſcovery of their intentions; that he knows them as perfectly as if he had put them upon the rack, and forced them to make a diſcovery of their ſecret Plottings. Nor muſt we underſtand that in Gen. 22. 12. where God ſaith, after Abraham had ſtretched out his hand to Sacrifice his Son, Now I know that thou feareſt God, as though God was ignorant of Abrahams gracious diſpoſition to him; did Abrahams drawing his Knife, furniſh God with a new Knowledg? no, God knew Abrahams pious inclinations before, Gen. 18. 19. I know him that he will command his Children after him, &c. Knowledg is ſometimes taken for approbation; then the ſenſe will be, now I approve this Fact as a Teſtimony of thy fear of me; ſince thy affection to thy Iſaac is extinguiſh'd by the more powerful flame of affection to my Will and Command; I now accept thee, and count thee a meet ſubject of my choiceſt Benefits; or now I know, that is, I have made known and manifeſted the Faith of Abraham to himſelf and to the World. Thus Paul uſes the word know, 1 Cor. 2. 2. I have determined to know nothing; that is to declare and teach nothing, to make known nothing but Chriſt Crucified; or elſe, now I know, that is, I have an evidence and experiment in this noble fact, that thou feareſt me. God often condeſcends to our capacity in ſpeaking of himſelf after the manner of men, as if he had (as men do) known the inward affections of others by their outward actions.

4. God knows all the Evils and Sins of Creatures.

1. God knows all Sin. This follows upon the other. If he knows all the actions and thoughts of Creatures, he knows alſo all the Sinfulneſs in thoſe acts and thoughts: This Zophar infers from Gods puniſhing men, Job 11. 11. for he knows vain man, he ſees his wickedneſs alſo; he knows every man, and ſees the wickedneſs of every man: He looks down from Heaven, and beholds not only the filthy perſons, but what is filthy in them *, all Nations in the World, and every man of every Nation, none of their iniquity is hid from his eyes; He ſearches Jeruſalem with Candles, Jer. 16. 17. God follows Sinners ſtep by ſtep, with his eye; and will not leave ſearching out till he hath taken them; a Metaphor taken from one that ſearches all Chinks with a Candle, that nothing can be hid from him. He knows it diſtinctly in all the parts of it, how an Adulterer riſes out of his Bed to commit Uncleanneſs, what contrivances he had, what ſteps he took, every circumſtance in the whole progreſs; not only evil in the bulk, but every one of the blacker ſpots upon it, which may moſt aggravate it. If he did not know Evil, how could he permit it, order it, puniſh it or pardon it? Doth he permit he knows not what? Order to his own holy ends what he is ignorant of? Puniſh or pardon that which he

* Pſal. 14. 2, 3.

he is uncertain whether it be a Crime or no? Cleanſe me, ſaith David, from my ſecret faults, Pſ. 19. 12. ſecret in regard of others, ſecret in regard of himſelf; how could God cleanſe him from that whereof he was ignorant? He knows Sins before they are committed, much more when they are in act; he foreknew the Idolatry and Apoſtacy of the Jews; what Gods they would ſerve, in what meaſure they would provoke him, and violate his Covenant *; he knew Judas his Sin long before Judas his actual exiſtence, foretelling it in the Pſalms; and Chriſt predicts it before he acted it. He ſees Sins future in his own permitting Will; he ſees Sins preſent in his own ſupporting act. As he knows things poſſible to himſelf, becauſe he knows his own power; ſo he knows thing practicable by the Creature, becauſe he knows the Power and Principles of the Creature *, This Sentiment of God is naturally writ in the fears of Sinners, upon Lightning, Thunder, or ſome Prodigious operation of God in the World; what is the Language of them, but that he ſees their Deeds, hears their words, knows the inward ſinfulneſs of their hearts; that he doth not only behold them as a meer Spectator, but conſiders them as as a juſt Judg. And the Poets ſay, that the Sins of men leapt into Heaven and were writ in Parchments of *Jupiter, ſcelus in terram geritur, in cœlo ſcribitur: Sin is acted on Earth, and recorded in Heaven. God indeed doth not behold Evil with the approving eye; he knows it not with a practical knowledg to be the Author of it, but with a ſpeculative Knowledg, ſo as to underſtand the ſinfulneſs of it; or a knowledg ſimplicis intelligentiæ, of ſimple intelligence, as he permits them, not poſitively wills them; he knows them not with a knowledg of aſſent to them, but diſſent from them. Evil pertains to a diſſenting act of the mind, and an averſive act of the Will; and what tho' evil formally taken, hath no diſtinct Conception, becauſe it is a privation; a Defect hath no Being, and all knowledg is by the apprehenſion of ſome Being; would not this lye as ſtrongly againſt our own knowledg of Sin? Sin is a privation of the rectitude due to an act; and who doubts mans knowledg of Sin? by his knowing the act, he knows the deficiency of the act; the ſubject of evil hath a Being, and ſo hath a conception in the mind; that which hath no Being cannot be known by it ſelf, or in it ſelf, but will it follow that it cannot be known by its contrary? as we know darkneſs to be a privation of light, and folly to be a privation of wiſdom. God knows all good by himſelf, becauſe he is the Soveraign good; Is it ſtrange then, that he ſhould know all evil, ſince all evil is in ſome natural good?

* Deut. 31. 20, 21.

* Fotherby Atheoma p. 132.

* Ἐν Διὸς ἰατ Croſſ. Anthol. dec. 1. cap. 355. p. 101.

2. The manner of Gods knowing Evil, is not ſo eaſily known. And indeed, as we cannot comprehend the Eſſence of God, tho it is eaſily intelligible that there is ſuch a Being; ſo we can as little comprehend the manner of Gods Knowledg, tho' we cannot but conclude him to be an intelligent Being, a pure Underſtanding, knowing all things: As God hath a higher manner of Being than his Creatures, ſo he hath another and higher manner of knowing; and we can as little comprehend the manner of his knowing, as we can the manner of his Being. But as to the manner.

Doth not God know his own Law, and ſhall he not know how much any action comes ſhort of his Rule? he cannot know his own Rule without knowing all the deviations from it. He knows his own Holineſs, and ſhall he not ſee how any action is contrary to the Holineſs of his own nature? Doth not God know every thing that is true? and is it not true that this or that is evil? and ſhall God be ignorant of any Truth? How doth God know that he cannot lye, but by knowing his own Veracity? How doth God know that he cannot Dye, but by knowing his own Immutability? and by knowing thoſe, he knows what a Lye is, he knows what Death is; ſo if Sin never had been, if no Creature had ever been, God would have known what Sin was, becauſe he knows his own Holineſs; becauſe he knew what Law was fit to be appointed to his Creatures if he ſhould Create them, and that that Law might be tranſgreſt by them. God knows all good, all goodneſs in himſelf; he therefore hath a foundation in himſelf to know all that comes ſhort of that goodneſs, that is oppoſite to that Holineſs: As if Light were capable of Underſtanding, it would know Darkneſs only by knowing it ſelf; by knowing it ſelf, it would know what is contrary to it ſelf. God knows all Created goodneſs which he hath planted in the Creature; he knows

then

then all defects from this goodneſs, what Perfection an act is deprived of; what is oppoſite to that goodneſs, and that is evil. As we know Sickneſs by Health, Diſcord by Harmony, Blindneſs by Sight, becauſe it is a privation of Sight; whoſoever knows one contrary knows the other; God knows unrighteouſneſs by the Idea which he hath of Righteouſneſs, and ſees an act deprived of that rectitude and goodneſs which ought to be in it; he knows evil becauſe he knows the cauſes whence evil proceeds *. A Painter knows a Picture of his own framing, and if any one daſhes any baſe colour upon it, ſhall not he alſo know that? God by his hand Painted all Creatures, impreſt upon man the fair ſtamp and colour of his own Image; the Devil defiles it, man daubs it; Doth not God, that knows his own Work, know how this Piece is become different from his Work? Doth not God, that knows his Creatures goodneſs, which himſelf was the Fountain of, know the change of this goodneſs? Yea, he knew before, that the Devil would ſow Tares where he had ſown Wheat; and therefore that Controverſie of ſome in the Schools, Whether God knew evil by its oppoſition to Created or Uncreated goodneſs, is needleſs. We may ſay God knows Sin as it is oppoſite to Created goodneſs, yet he knows it radically by his own goodneſs, becauſe he knows the goodneſs he hath communicated to the Creature by his own Eſſential goodneſs in himſelf. To conclude this head:

*Cuſan p. 245.

The knowledg of Sin doth not beſpot the Holineſs of Gods nature; for the bare knowledg of a Crime doth not infect the mind of man with the Filth and Pollution of that Crime; for then every man that knows an act of Murder committed by another, would by that bare knowledg be tainted with his Sin; yea and a Judg that condemns a Malefactor, may as well Condemn himſelf, if this were ſo: The Knowledg of Sins infects not the underſtanding that knows them, but only the Will that approves them. 'Tis no diſcredit to us to know evil, in order to paſs a right Judgment upon it; ſo neither can it be to God.

4. God knows all future things, all things to come. The differences of time cannot hinder a knowledg of all things by him, who is before time, above time, that is not meaſured by hours, or days, or years; If God did not know them, the hindrance muſt be in himſelf, or in the things themſelves, becauſe they are things to come: Not in himſelf; If it did, it muſt ariſe from ſome impotency in his own nature, and ſo we render him weak; or from an unwillingneſs to know, and ſo we render him lazy, and an Enemy to his own Perfection; for ſimply conſidered, the knowledg of more things is a greater Perfection than the knowledg of a few; and if the knowledg of a thing includes ſomething of Perfection, the ignorance of a thing includes ſomething of Imperfection: The knowledge of future things is a greater Perfection than not to know them, and is accounted amoung men a great part of Wiſdom, which they call fore-ſight; 'tis then ſurely a greater Perfection in God to know future things than to be ignorant of them. And would God rather have ſomething of imperfection than be poſſeſſor of all Perfection? Nor doth the hindrance lye in the things themſelves, becauſe their futurition depends upon his Will; for as nothing can actually be without his Will, giving it exiſtence; ſo nothing can future without his Will, deſigning the futurity of it. Certainly if God knows all things poſſible, which he will not do, he muſt know all things future, which he is not only able, but reſolved to do, or reſolved to permit. Gods perfect knowledg of himſelf, that is, of his own infinite Power and concluding Will, neceſſarily includes a foreknowledg of what he is able to do, and what he will do.

Again, if God doth not know future things, there was a time when God was ignorant of moſt things in the World; for before the Deluge he was more ignorant than after; the more things were done in the World, the more Knowledg did accrue to God, and ſo the more Perfection; then the Underſtanding of God was not perfect from Eternity, but in Time; nay, is not perfect yet, if he be ignorant of thoſe things which are ſtill to come to paſs; he muſt tarry for a Perfection, he wants till thoſe futurities come to be in act, till thoſe things which are to come, ceaſe to be future, and begin to be preſent. Either God knows them or deſires to know them; if he deſires to know them and doth not, there is ſomething wanting to him; all deſire ſpeaks an abſence of the object deſired, and a ſentiment of want in the perſon deſiring: If he doth not deſire to know them, nay, if he doth not actually know them, it destroys all Providence, all his Government of Affairs; for his Providence hath a concatenation of means with a prospect of something that is future: As in Joseph's Case, who was put into the Pit, and sold to the Egyptians in order to his future advancement, and the preservation both of his Father and his envious Brethren. If God did not know all the future inclinations and actions of men, something might have been done by the will of Potiphar, or by the Free-will of Pharaoh, whereby Joseph might have been cut short of his advancement, and so God have been interrupted in the track and method of his designed Providences. He that hath decreed to govern man for that end he hath design'd him, knows all the means before, whereby he will govern him; and therefore hath a distinct and certain knowledg of all things; for a confused knowledg is an imperfection in Government; 'tis in this the Infiniteness of his Understandiug is more seen than in knowing things past or present; his eyes are as a Flame of fire, Revel. 1. 14. in regard of the penetrating vertue of them into things impenetrable by any else.

if

To make it further appear, That God knows all things future, Consider,

1. First, Every thing which is the object of Gods Knowledg without himself, was once only future. There was a moment when nothing was in Being but himself; he knew nothing actually past, because nothing was past; nothing actually present, because nothing had any existence but himself; therefore only what was future; and why not every thing that is future now, as well as only what was future and to come to pass just at the beginning of the Creation? God indeed knows every thing as present, but the things themselves known by him were not present but future; the whole Creation was once future, or else it was from Eternity; if it begun in time, it was once future in it self, else it could never have begun to be; Did not God know what would be created by him, before it was created by him ? Did he create he knew not what, and knew not before, what he should create? Was he ignorant before he acted, and in his acting, what his operation would tend to? Or did he not know the nature of things, and the ends of them, till he had produced them, and saw them in being? Creatures then did not arise from his Knowledg, but his Knowledg from them; he did not then Will that his Creatures should be, or he had then Willed what he knew not, and knew not what he Willed; they therefore must be known before they were made, and not known because they were made; he knew them to make them, and he did not make them to know them. By the same reason he knew what Creatures should be before they were, he knows still what Creatures shall be before they are; for all things that are, were in God, not really in their own nature, but in him as a cause; so the Earth and Heavens were in him, as a Model is in the Mind of a Work-man, which is in his Mind and Soul, before it be brought forth into out-vvard act.

* Petavius changed.

Bradward. lib. 3. cap. 14.

2. The Predictions of future things evidence this. There is not a Prophecy of any thing to come, but is a spark of his fore-knovvledg, and bears Witness to the Truth of this assertion, in the punctual accomplishment of it; this is a thing challenged by God, as his ovvn peculiar, vvherein he surmounts all the Idols that mans Inventions have Goded in the World, Isa. 41. 21, 22. Let them bring forth (speaking of the Idols) and shew us what shall happen, or declare us things to come: shew the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that you are Gods. Such a fore-knovvledg of things to come, is here ascribed to God by God himself, as a distinction of him from all false Gods; such a Knovvledg, that if any could prove that they vvere possessers of, he vvould acknovvledg them Gods as vvell as himself; that we may know that you are Gods: He puts his Deity to stand or fall upon this account, and this should be the point, vvhich should decide the controversie, vvhether he or the Heathen Idols vvere the true God; the dispute is managed by this medium. He that knovvs things to come, is God; I knovv things to come, ergo, I am God; the Idols knovv not things to come, therefore they are not Gods; God submits the Being of his Deity to this Tryal. If God knovv things to come no more than the Heathen Idols, vvhich were either Devils or men, he vvould be in his ovvn account, no more a God than Devils or men; no more a God than the Pagan Idols he doth scoff at for this defect. If the Heathen Idols vvere to be stript of their Deity for vvant of this foreknowledg of things to come, would not the true God alſo fall from the ſame excellency, if he were defective in Knowledg? He would in his own judgment no more deſerve the Title and Character of a God than they. How could he reproach them for that, if it were wanting in himſelf? It cannot be underſtood of future things in their cauſes, when the effects neceſſarily ariſe from ſuch cauſes, as Light from the Sun, and Heat from the Fire; many of theſe men know; more of them, Angels and Devils know; if God therefore had not a higher and farther Knowledg than this, he would not by this be proved to be God, any more than Angels and Devils, who know neceſſary effects in their cauſes. The Devils indeed did predict ſome things in the Heathen Oracles; but God is differenced from them here by the infiniteneſs of his Knowledg, in being able to predict things to come that they knew not, or things in their particularities, things that depended on the liberty of mans Will, which the Devils could lay no claim to a certain knowledg of. Were it only a conjectural knowledg that is here meant, the Devils might anſwer, they can conjecture, and ſo their Deity were as good as Gods; for tho God might know more things, and conjecture nearer to what would be, yet ſtill it would be but conjectural, and therefore not a higher kind of Knowledg than what the Devils might challenge. How much then is God beholden to the Socinians for denying the knowledg of all future things to him, upon which here he puts the trial of his Deity? God aſſerts his knowledg of things to come, as a manifeſt evidence of his Godhead; thoſe that deny therefore the Argument that proves it, deny the concluſion too; for this will neceſſarily follow, that if he be God becauſe he knows future things, then he that doth not know future things is not God; and if God knows not future things but only by conjecture, then there is no God; becauſe a certain knowledg, ſo as infallibly to predict things to come, is an inſeparable Perfection of the Deity: It was therefore well ſaid of Auſtin, that it was as high a madneſs to deny God to be, as to deny him the foreknowledg of things to come.

The whole Prophetick part of Scripture declares this Perfection of God; every Prophets Candle was lighted at this Torch, they could not have this foreknowledg of themſelves; Why might not many other men have the ſame inſight, if it were by nature? it muſt be from ſome ſuperior Agent; and all Nations owned Prophecy as a Beam from God, a fruit of Divine Illumination: Prophecy muſt be totally expunged if this be denyed; for the ſubjects of prophecy are things future; and no man is properly a Prophet, but in Prediction; now prediction is nothing but foretelling, and things fore-told are not yet come; and the foretelling of them, ſuppoſeth them not to be yet, but that they ſhall be in time; ſeveral ſuch Predictions we have in Scripture, the event whereof hath been certain. The years of Famine in Egypt foretold that he would order ſecond cauſes for bringing that Judgment upon them; the Captivity of his People in Babylon, the calling of the Gentiles, the rejection of the Jews. Daniels Revelation of Nebuchadnezzars Dream, that Prince refers to God as the revealer of Secrets, Dan. 2. 47. By the ſame reaſon that he knows one thing future by himſelf, and by the infiniteneſs of his Knowledg before any cauſes of them appear, he doth know all things future.

Pacuvius ſaid, Siqui quæ eventura ſunt provident, æqui pari.

3. Some future things are known by men, and we muſt allow God a greater Knowledg than any Creature. Future things in their Cauſes may be known by Angels and men, (as I ſaid before;) whoſoever knows neceſſary cauſes and the efficacy of them, may foretell the effects; and when he ſees the meeting and concurrence of ſeveral cauſes together, he may preſage what the conſequent effect will be of ſuch a concurrence: So Phyſitians foretel the Progreſs of a Diſeaſe, the increaſe or diminution of it by natural Signs; and Aſtronomers foretel Eclipſes by their obſervation of the motion of Heavenly Bodies, many years before they happen*, can they be hid from God, with whom are the reaſons of all things *? An expert Gardener by knowing the Root in the depth of Winter, can tell what Flowers and what Fruit it will bear, and the Month when they will peep out their heads; and ſhall not God much more, that knows the Principles of all his Creatures, and is exactly privy to all their natures and qualities, know what they will be, and what operations ſhall be from thoſe Principles? Now if God did know things only in their cauſes, his his Knowledg would not be more excellent than the knowledg of Angels and men, tho he might know more than they of the things that will come to paſs, from every cauſe ſingly, and from the concurrence of many. Now as God is more excellent in Being than his Creature; ſo he is more excellent in the objects of his Knowledg and the manner of his Knowledg; well then, ſhall a certain knowledg of ſomething future, and a conjectural knowledg of many things, be found among men; and ſhall a determinate and infallible knowledg of things to come, be found no where, in no Being? If the conjecture of future things ſavours of ignorance, and God knows them only by conjecture, there is then no ſuch thing in Being as a perfect intelligent Being, and ſo no God.

* Cuſanus.

* Fuller's Piſgab l. 2. p. 281.

4. God knows his own Decree and Will, and therefore muſt needs know all future things. If any thing be future, or to come to paſs, it muſt be from it ſelf, or from God; not from it ſelf, then it would be independent and abſolute; if it hath its futurity from God, then God muſt know what he hath decreed to come to paſs; thoſe things that are future in neceſſary cauſes, God muſt know, becauſe he willed them to be cauſes of ſuch effects; he therefore knows them, becauſe he knows what he willed: The knowledg of God cannot ariſe from the things themſelves, for then the knowledg of God would have a cauſe without him; and Knowledg, which is an eminent perfection, would be conferred upon him by his Creatures. But as God ſees things poſſible in the glaſs of his own power, ſo he ſees things future in the Glaſs of his own Will; in his effecting Will, if he hath Decreed to produce them; in his permitting Will, as he hath Decreed to ſuffer them and diſpoſe of them: Nothing can paſs out of the rank of things meerly poſſible into the order of things future, before ſome Act of Gods Will hath paſſed for its futurition*.

* Chequell.

'Tis not from the infiniteneſs of his own Nature ſimply conſidered, that God knows things to be future; for as things are not future becauſe God is infinite (for then all poſſible things ſhould be future) ſo neither is any thing known to be future only becauſe God is infinite, but becauſe God hath Decreed it; his declaration of things to come, is founded upon his appointment of things to come*. In Iſa. 44.7. it is ſaid, and who, as I, ſhall call and declare it, ſince I appointed the ancient people and the things that are coming? Nothing is created or ordered in the World, but what God Decreed to be Created and ordered. God knows his own Decree, and therefore all things which he hath decreed to exiſt in time; not the minuteſt part of the World could have exiſted without his Will, not an action can be done without his Will; as Life the Principle, ſo Motion the fruit of that Life, is by and from God; as he decreed Life to this or that thing, ſo he decreed motion as the effect of Life, and Decreed to exert his Power in concurring with them, for producing effects natural from ſuch cauſes; for without ſuch a concourſe they could not have acted any thing, or produced any thing; and therefore as for natural things, which we call neceſſary cauſes, God fore-ſeeing them all particularly in his own Decree, foreſaw alſo all effects which muſt neceſſarily flow from them, becauſe ſuch cauſes cannot but act when they are furniſht with all things neceſſary for action: He knows his own Decrees, and therefore neceſſarily knows what he hath Decreed, or elſe we muſt ſay things come to paſs whether God will or no; or, that he Wills he knows not what; put this cannot be, for known unto God are all his Works from the beginning of the World, Acts 15.18. Now this neceſſarily flows from that Principle firſt laid down, That God knows himſelf, ſince nothing is future without Gods Will; if God did not know future things, he would not know his own Will; for as things poſſible could not be known by him, unleſs he knew the fulneſs of his own power; ſo things future could not be known by his Underſtanding, unleſs he knew the reſolves of his own Will.

* Coccei ſum. Theol. p. 50.

* Coccei ſum. Theol. p. 50.

* Gamaul in Aquin. Part 1. q. 24. cap. 3. p. 124.

Thus the Knowledg of God differs from the Knowledg of men; Gods knowledg of his Works precedes his Works, mans knowledg of Gods works follows his works; juſt as an Artificers knowledg of a Watch, Inſtrument or Engine, which he would make, is before his making of it; he knows the motions of it, and the reaſon of thoſe motions before it is made, becauſe he knows what he hath determin'd to Work; he knows not thoſe motions from the conſideration of them after they were made, as the Spectator doth, who by viewing the Inſtrument after it is made, gains a knowledge from the ſight and conſideration of it, till he underſtands the reaſon of the whole; ſo we know things from the conſideration of them after we ſee them in being, and therefore we know not future things: But Gods Knowledg doth not ariſe from things becauſe they are, but becauſe he wills them to be, and therefore he knows every thing that ſhall be, becauſe it cannot be without his Will, as the Creator and Maintainer of all things; knowing his own ſubſtance he knows all his Works.

Maimonid. More Nevoch. Part 3. Cap. 21. p. 393, 394.

5. If God did not know all future things, he would be mutable in his Knowledg.

If he did not know all things that ever were or are to be, there would be upon the appearance of every new object, an addition of Light to his Underſtanding, and therefore ſuch a Change in him, as every new knowledg cauſes in the mind of a man, or as the Sun works in the VVorld upon its riſing every morning, ſcattering the darkneſs that was upon the face of the Earth; if he did not know them before they came, he would gain a knowledg by them when they came to paſs, which he had not before they were effected; his Knowledg would be new according to the newneſs of the objects, and multiplyed according to the multitude of the objects. If God did not know things to come as perfectly as he knew things preſent and paſt, but knew thoſe certainly, and the others doubtfully and conjecturally, he would ſuffer ſome Change, and acquire ſome perfection in his Knowledge, when thoſe future things ſhould ceaſe to be future, and become preſent; for he would know it more perfectly when it were preſent, than he did when it was future, and ſo there would be a Change from Imperfection to a Perfection; but God is every way immutable.

Beſides, that Perfection would not ariſe from the Nature of God, but from the Exiſtence and Preſence of the thing; but who will affirm that God acquires any Perfection of Knowledg from his Creatures, any more than he doth of Being? He would not then have had that Knowledg, and conſequently that Perfection from Eternity, as he had when he created the VVorld, and will not have a full Perfection of the Knowledg of his Creature till the end of the VVorld, nor of Immortal Souls, which will certainly act as well as live to Eternity; and ſo God never was, nor ever will be perfect in Knowledg; for when you have conceived millions of years, wherein Angels and Souls live and act, there is ſtill more coming than you can conceive, wherein they will act. And if God be alwayes changing to Eternity, from Ignorance to Knowledg, as thoſe acts come to be exerted by his Creatures, he vvill not be perfect in Knovvledg, no not to Eternity, but will always be changing from one degree of Knowledg to another; a very unworthy Conceit to entertain of the moſt Bleſſed, Perfect, and Infinite God!

Hence then it follows that,

1. God foreknows all his Creatures. All kinds which he determin'd to make, all particulars that ſhould ſpring out of every ſpecies, the time when they ſhould come forth of the VVomb, the manner how, In thy Book all Members were written, Pſal. 139. 16. Members is not in the Hebr. whence ſome refer all, to all living Creatures whatſoever, and all the parts of them which God did foreſee; he knew the numbers of Creatures vvith all their parts, they vvere vvritten in the Book of his fore-knovvledg; the duration of them, hovv long they ſhall remain in Being, and act upon the Stage; he knovvs their ſtrength, the links of one cauſe vvith another, and vvhat vvill follovv in all their Circumſtances, and the ſeries, and combination of effects vvith their cauſes.

The duration of every thing is fore-knovvn, becauſe determin'd, Job 14. 5. Seeing his dayes are determin'd the number of his months are with thee, thou haſt appointed his bounds that that he cannot paſs; bounds are fixed, beyond vvhich none ſhall reach; he ſpeaks of dayes and months, not of years, to give us notice of Gods particular fore-knovvledg of every thing, of every day, month, year, hour of a mans life.

2. All the acts of his Creatures are foreknown by him. All natural acts becauſe he knovvs their cauſes; voluntary acts I ſhall ſpeak of aftervvards.

3. This foreknowledge was certain. For it is an unvvorthy notion of God to aſcribe to him a conjectural Knovvledg; if there vvere only a conjectural Knovvledg, he could but conjecturally foretel any thing; and then it is poſſible the events of things things might be contrary to his Predictions. It would appear then that God were deceived and mistaken, and then there could be no rule of trying things whether they were from God or no; for the Rule God sets down to discern his Words from the Words of false Prophets, is the event and certain accomplishment of what is Predicted. Deut. 18. 21. To that question, How shall we know whether God hath spoken or no? He answers, that if the thing doth not come to pass, the Lord hath not spoken. If his Knowledg of future things were not certain, there were no stability in this Rule, it would fall to the ground: We never yet find God deceiv'd in any Prediction, but the event did answer his fore-Revelation; his fore-knowledg therefore is certain and infallible. We cannot make God uncertain in his Kuowledg, but we must conceive him fluctuating and wavering in his Will; but if his Will be not Yea and Nay, but Yea, his Knowledg is certain, because he doth certainly Will and Resolve.

4. This foreknowledg was from Eternity. Seeing he knows things possible in his Power, and things future in his Will; if his Power and Resolves were from Eternity, his Knowledg must be so too; or else we must make him ignorant of his own Power, and ignorant of his own Will from Eternity; and consequently not from Eternity Blessed and Perfect. His knowledg of possible things must run Parallel with his Power, and his Knowledg of future things run Parallel with his Will. If he Willed from Eternity, he knew from Eternity what he Willed; but that he did Will from Eternity, we must grant, unless we would render him changeable, and conceive him to be made in time of not Willing, Willing. The Knowledg God hath in time, was alway one and the same, because his Understanding is his proper Essence, as perfect as his Essence, and of an immutable nature.

* And indeed the actual existence of a thing is not simply necessary to its being perfectly known; we may see a thing that is past out of Being, when it doth not actually exist; and a Carpenter may know the House he is to Build, before it be built, by the model of it in his own mind; much more we may conceive the same of God whose Decrees were before the Foundation of the World*; and to be before time was, and to be from Eternity, hath no difference. As God in his Being exceeds all beginning of time, so doth his Knowledg all motions of time.

* Gamach in Aquin. Part. 1. q. 14. c. 3. p. 124.

* Eph. 1. 5. and in other places.

5. God foreknows all things as present with him from Eternity. * As he knows mutable things with an immutable and firm Kuowledg, so he knows future things with a present Knowledg; not that the things which are produced in time, were actually and really present with him in their own Beings from Eternity; for then they could not be produced in time; had they a real existence, then they would not be Creatures, but God; and had they actual Being, then they could not be future, for future speaks a thing to come that is not yet: If things had been actually present with him, and yet future, they had been made before they were made, and had a being before they had a Being; but they were all present to his Knowledg as if they were in actual being, because the reason of all things that were to be made, was present with him.

* Gerhard Exeges ch. 8. de Deo sect. 13. p. 303.

* The reason of the Will of God that they shall be, was equally Eternal with him, wherein he saw what, and when, and how he would Create things, how he would govern them, to what ends he would direct them. Thus all things are present to Gods Knowledg, tho in their own nature they may be past or future, not in esse reali, but in esse intelligibili, objectively; not actually present *; for as the unchangableness and infiniteness of Gods knowledg of changeable and finite things, doth not make the things he knows immutable and infinite, so neither doth the Eternity of his Knowledg, make them actually present with him from Eternity; but all things are present to his Understanding, because he hath at once a view of all successions of times; and his knowledg of future things is as perfect as of present things, or what is past; 'tis not a certain knowledg of present things, and an uncertain knowledg of future; but his knowledg of one is as certain and unerring as his knowledg of the other; * as a man that beholds a Circle with several lines from the Center, beholds the lines as they are joyned in the Center, beholds them also as they are distant and sever'd from one another, beholds them in their extent and in their point all at once, tho they may have a great distance from one another ther: He ſaw from the beginning of time to the laſt minute of it, all things coming out of their cauſes, marching in their order according to his own appointment; as a man may ſee a multitude of Ants, ſome creeping one way, ſome another, employ'd in ſeveral buſineſſes for their Winter proviſion. The Eye of God at once runs through the whole Circle of Time; as the eye of man upon a Tower ſees all the Paſſengers at once, tho ſome be paſt, ſome under the Tower, ſome coming at a farther diſtance: God ſaith Job, looks to the end of the earth, and ſees, under the whole Heaven, Job 28. 24. The Knowledg of God is expreſt by ſight in Scripture, and futurity to God is the ſame thing as diſtance to us; we can with a Perſpective-glaſs make things that are a far off, appear as if they were near; and the Sun, ſo many Thouſand miles diſtant from us, to appear as if it were at the end of the Glaſs; Why ſhould then future things be at ſo great a diſtance from Gods Knowledg, when things ſo far from us may be made to approach ſo near to us?

* Bradward l. 3. c. 14.

* Hornbeck.

* Pugio Fidei part I. ch. 19.

God conſiders all things in his own ſimple Knowledg, as if they were now acted; and therefore ſome have choſen to call the knowledg of things to come, not preſcience or foreknowledg, but Knowledg, becauſe God ſees all things in one inſtant, *ſcientiâ nunquam deficientis inſtantiæ. Upon this account things that are to come, are ſet down in Scripture as preſent, and ſometimes as paſt, Iſa. 9. 6. Unto us a Child is Born, tho not yet Born; ſo of the Sufferings of Chriſt, Iſa. 53. 4. &c. He hath born our griefs, he was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, he was taken from Priſon, &c. not ſhall be; and Pſal. 22. 18. They part my Garments among them, as if it were preſent; all to expreſs the certainty of Gods fore-knowledg, as if things were actually preſent before him.

* Boet. conſolat. lib. 5. prof. 6.

6. This is proper to God, and incommunicable to any Creature. Nothing but what is Eternal can know all things that are to come: Suppoſe a Creature might know things that are to come, after he is in being; he cannot know things ſimply as future, becauſe there were things future before he was in Being. The Devils know not mens hearts, therefore cannot foretel their actions with any certainty; they may indeed have a knowledg of ſome things to come, but it is only conjectural, and often miſtaken; as the Devil was in his Predictions among the Heathen, and in his preſage of Job's Curſing God to his face upon his preſſing Calamities, Job 1. 11. Sometimes indeed they have a certain knowledg of ſomething future by the Revelation of God, when he uſes them as Inſtruments of his Vengeance, or for the Trial of his People, as in the Caſe of Job, when he gave him a Commiſſion to ſtrip him of his Goods; or as the Angels have, when he uſes them as Inſtruments of the deliverance of his People.

7. Tho this be certain, that God foreknows all things and actions; yet the manner of his knowing all things before they come, is not ſo eaſily reſolved. We muſt not therefore deny this Perfection in God, becauſe we underſtand not the manner how he hath the knowledg of all things: It were unworthy for us to own no more of God than we can perfectly conceive of him; we ſhould then own no more of him than that he doth exiſt. Canſt thou, ſaith Job, by ſearching, find out God? Canſt thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? Job 11. 7. Do we not ſee things unknown to inferior Creatures, to be known to our ſelves? Irrational Creatures do not apprehend the nature of a man, nor what we conceive of them when we look upon them; nor do we know what they fancy of us when they look wiſtly upon us; for ought as I know, we underſtand as little the manner of their imaginations, as they do of ours; and ſhall we aſcribe a darkneſs in God as to future things, becauſe we are ignorant of them, and of the manner how he ſhould know them*? Shall we doubt whether God doth certainly know thoſe things vvhich vve only conjecture? As our Povver is not the meaſure of the Povver of God, ſo neither is our Knovvledg the Judg of the Knovvledg of God, no better nor ſo vvell as an irrational nature can be the Judg of our Reaſon: Do vve prrfectly knovv the manner hovv vve knovv? Shall vve therefore deny that vve knovv any thing? vve knovv vve have ſuch a faculty vvhich vve call Underſtanding, but doth any man certainly knovv vvhat it is? And becauſe he doth not, ſhall he deny that vvhich is plain and evident to him? Becauſe vve cannot aſcertain our ſelves of the cauſes of the ebbing and flovving of the Sea, of the manner how Minerals are ingendred in the Earth, ſhall we therefore deny that which our eyes convince us of?

* Ficinus in Procl. cap. 19.

ner

And this will be a preparation to the laſt thing.

5. God knows all future contingencies, that is, God knows all things that ſhall accidentally happen, or as we ſay, by Chance; and he knows all the free motions of mens Wills that ſhall be to the end of the World.

If all things be open to him, Heb. 4. 13. Then all contingencies are, for they are in the number of things; and as, according to Chriſts ſpeech, thoſe things that are impoſſible to man, are poſſible to God; ſo thoſe things which are unknown to man, are known to God; becauſe of the infinite fulneſs and perfection of the Divine Underſtanding.

Let us ſee what a Contingent is.

That is contingent which we commonly call accidental, as when a Tile falls ſuddenly upon a mans head as he is walking in the Street; or when one letting off a Musket at random, ſhoots another he did not intend to hit; ſuch was that Arrow whereby Ahab was killed, ſhot by a Soldier at a venture *, this ſome call a mixt contingent, made up partly of neceſſity, and partly of accident; 'tis neceſſary the Bullet, when ſent out of the Gun, or Arrow out of the Bovv, ſhould fly and light ſomevvhere, but it is an accident that it hits this or that man, that vvas never intended by the Archer. Other things, as voluntary actions, are purely contingents, and have nothing of neceſſity in them; all free actions that depend upon the Will of man, whether to do, or not to do, are of this nature, becauſe they depend not upon a neceſſary cauſe, as burning doth upon the Fire, moiſtning upon Water, or as deſcent or falling down is neceſſary to a heavy body; for thoſe cannot in their own nature do otherwiſe; but the other actions depend upon a free Agent, able to turn to this or that point, and determine himſelf as he pleaſes. 1 Kings 22. 39.

Now we muſt know, that what is accidental in regard of the Creature, is not ſo in regard of God, the manner of Ahab's Death was accidental, in regard of the hand by which he was ſlain, but not in regard of God who foretold his Death, and foreknew the Shot, and directed the Arrow; God was not uncertain before of the manner of his fall, nor hovered over the Battel to watch for an opportunity to accompliſh his own Prediction; what may be or not be, in regard of us, is certain in regard of God; to imagine that what is accidental to us, is ſo to God, is to meaſure God by our ſhort line. How many events following upon the reſults of Princes in their Counſels, ſeem to perſons ignorant of thoſe Counſels to be a hap-hazard, yet were not contingencies to the Prince and his aſſiſtants, but foreſeen by him as certainly to iſſue ſo as they do, which they knew before would be the fruit of ſuch cauſes and inſtruments they would knit together? That may be neceſſary in regard of Gods foreknowledg, which is meerly accidental in regard of the natural diſpoſition of the immediate cauſes which do actually produce it; Contingent in its own nature, and in regard of us; but fixed in the Knowledg of God: * One illuſtrates it by this ſimilitude: A Maſter ſends two Servants to one and the ſame place, two ſeveral ways, unknown to one another, they meet at the place which their Maſter had appointed them; their meeting is accidental to them, one knows not of the other, but it was foreſeen by the Maſter that they ſhould ſo meet, and that in regard of them it would ſeem a meer accident, till they came to explain the buſineſs to one another: Both the neceſſity of their meeting in regard of their Maſters Order, and the accidentalneſs of it in regard of themſelves, were in both their circumſtances foreknown by the Maſter that employ'd them. * Zanch.

For the clearing of this, take it in this method.

1. 'Tis an unworthy conceit of God in any to exclude him from the knowledg of theſe things.

1. It will be a ſtrange contracting of him, to allow him no greater a Knowledg than we have our ſelves.

Contingencies are known to us when they come into act, and paſs from futurity to reality; and when they are preſent to us, we can order our affairs accordingly; ſhall we allow God no greater a meaſure of knowledg than we have, and make him as blind as our ſelves, not to ſee things of that nature before they come to paſs? Shall God know them no more; Shall we imagin God knows no otherwiſe than we know? and that he doth, like us ſtand gazing with admiration at events? Man can conjecture many things; is it fit to aſcribe the ſame uncertainty to God; as tho he as well as we, could have no aſſurance till the iſſue appear in the view of all? If God doth not certainly foreknow them, he doth but conjecture them; but a conjectural knowledge is by no means to be faſtened on God; for that is not knowledg but gueſs, and deſtroys a Deity by making him ſubject to miſtake; for he that only gueſſeth, may gueſs wrong; ſo that this is to make God like our ſelves, and ſtrip him of an univerſally acknowledged Perfection of Omniſcience. A conjectural Knowledg, ſaith one *, is as unworthy of God, as the Creature is unworthy of Omniſcience? 'Tis certain Man hath a liberty to act many things this or that way as he pleaſes; to walk to this or that quarter, to ſpeak or not to ſpeak, to do this or that thing, or not to do it; which way a man will certainly determine himſelf, is ununknown before to any Creature, yea often at the preſent to himſelf, for he may be in ſuſpenſe; but ſhall we imagin this future determination of himſelf is conceal'd from God? Thoſe that deny Gods foreknowledg in ſuch caſes, muſt either ſay, that God hath an opinion that a Man will reſolve rather this way than that; but then if a man by his liberty determin himſelf contrary to the opinion of God, is not God then deceived? and what rational Creature can own him for a God that can be deceived in any thing? or elſe they muſt ſay that God is at uncertainty, and ſuſpends his Opinion without determining it any way; then he cannot know free acts till they are done; he would then depend upon the Creature for his information; his knowledg would be every inſtant increaſed, as things, he knew not before, came into act; and ſince there are every minute an innumerable multitude of various imaginations in the minds of men, there would be every minute an acceſſion of new Knovvledg to God, which he had not before; beſides this Knowledg would be mutable according to the Wavering and Weather-cock reſolutions of men, one while ſtanding to this point, another while to that, if he depended upon the Creatures determination for his knowledg.

to

* Scrivener.

2. If the free acts of men were unknown before to God, no man can ſee how there can be any Government of the World by him. Such contingencies may happen, and ſuch reſolves of mens Free-Wills unknown to God, as may perplex his affairs, and put him upon new Counſels and methods for attaining thoſe ends which he ſettled at the firſt Creation of things; if things happen, which God knows not of before, this muſt be the conſequence; where there is no Fore-ſight, there is no Providence; things may happen ſo ſudden, if God be ignorant of them, that they may give a check to his intentions and Scheme of Government, and put him upon changing the model of it. Hovv often doth a ſmall intervening circumſtance, unforeſeen by man, daſh in pieces a long meditated and vvell-formed Deſign? To govern neceſſary cauſes, as Sun and Stars, vvhoſe effects are natural and conſtant in themſelves, is eaſie to be imagin'd; but hovv to govern the World, that conſiſts of ſo many men of Free-vvill, able to determin themſelves to this or that, and vvhich have no conſtancy in themſelves, as the Sun and Stars have, cannot be imagin'd, unleſs vve vvill allovv in God as great a certainty of Fore-knovvledge of the deſigns and actions of men, as there is inconſtancy in their reſolves: God muſt be altering the methods of his Government every day, every hour, every minute, according to the determinations of men, vvhich are ſo various and changable in the vvhole compaſs of the vvorld in the ſpace of one minute; he muſt vvait to ſee vvhat the counſels of men vvill be, before he could ſettle his ovvn methods of Government; and ſo muſt govern the World according to their mutability, and not according to any certainty in himſelf. But his counſel is ſtable in the midſt of multitudes of free devices in the heart of man, Prov. 19. 21. and knovving them all before, orders them to be ſubſervient to his ovvn ſtable counſel. If he cannot knovv vvhat to morrovv vvill bring forth in the mind of a man, hovv can he certainly ſettle his ovvn determination of Governing him? his Decrees and Reſolves muſt be Temporal, and ariſe pro re natâ, and he muſt alvvay be in counſel vvhat he ſhould do upon every change of mens minds. This is an unvvorthy conceit of the Infinite Majeſty of Heaven to make his Government depend upon the reſolves of men, rather than their reſolves upon the deſign of God.

2 'Tis therefore certain, that God doth foreknow the free and voluntary acts of man. Hovv could he elſe order his People to aſk of him things to come, in order to their deliverance, ſuch things as depended upon the Will of man, if he foreknevv not the motions of their Will? Iſa. 45. 11,

1. Actions good or indifferent depending upon the liberty of mans Will as much as any whatſoever. Several of theſe he hath foretold; Not only a Perſon to build up Jeruſalem vvas Predicted by him, but the Name of that perſon, Cyrus, Iſa. 44. 28. What is more contingent, or is more the effect of the liberty of mans Will than the Names of their Children? Was not the Deſtruction of the Babyloniſh Empire foretold, vvhich Cyrus undertook, not by any compulſion, but by a free inclination and reſolve of his own Will? And vvas not the diſmiſſion of the Jews into their ovvn Country, a voluntary act in that Conqueror? if you conſider the liberty of mans Will, might not Cyrus as vvell have continued their Yoke, as have ſtruck off their Chains, and kept them Captive as vvell as diſmiſt them? Had it not been for his ovvn intereſt, rather to have ſtrengthned the Fetters of ſo turbulent a People, vvho being tenacious of their Religion and Lavvs, different from that profeſt by the vvhole World, vvere like to make diſturbances more vvhen they vvere linkt in a body in their ovvn Country, than vvhen they vvere tranſplanted and ſcatter'd into the ſeveral parts of his Empire? It vvas in the povver of Cyrus, (take him as a man) to chuſe one or the other; his intereſt invited him to continue their Captivity, rather than grant their Deliverance; yet God knevv that he vvould vvillingly do this rather than the other; he knevv this vvhich depended upon the Will of Cyrus; and vvhy may not an infinite God foreknovv the free acts of all men, as vvell as of one? If the liberty of Cyrus's Will vvas no hinderance to Gods certain and infallible foreknovvledg of it, hovv can the contingency of any other thing be a hinderance to him? for there is the ſame reaſon of one and all; and his Government extends to every Village, every Family, every Perſon, as vvell as to Kingdoms and Nations.

So God foretold by his Prophet, not only the deſtruction of Jeroboams Altar, but the Name of the Perſon that ſhould be the Inſtrument of it, 1 Kings 13. 2. and this about 300. years before Joſiah's Birth. 'Tis a vvonder that none of the Pious Kings of Judah in deteſtation of Idolatry, and hopes to recover again the Kingdom of Iſrael, had in all that ſpace Named one of their Sons by that Name of Joſiah, in hopes that that Prophecy ſhould be accompliſht by him: That Manaſſeh only ſhould do this, who vvas the greateſt imitator of Jeroboams Idolatry among all the Jewiſh Kings, and indeed vvent beyond them; and had no mind to deſtroy in another Kingdom vvhat he propagated in his ovvn. What is freer than the impoſition of a Name, yet this he foreknew, and this Joſiah was Manaſſes's Son, 2 Kings 21. 26. Was there any thing more voluntary than for Pharaoh to Honour the Butler by reſtoring him to his place, and puniſh the Baker by hanging him on a Gibbet? yet this was foretold, Gen. 40. 8. And were not all the voluntary acts of men, which were the means of Joſephs advancement, foreknown by God, as well as his exaltation, which was the end he aimed at by thoſe means? Many of theſe may be reckon'd up.

Can all the free acts of man ſurmount the infinite capacity of the Divine Underſtanding? If God ſingles out one voluntary action in man as contingent as any, and lying among a vaſt number of other deſigns and reſolutions, both antecedent and ſubſequent; Why ſhould he not know the whole maſs of mens thoughts and actions, and pierce into all that the liberty of mans VVill can effect? VVhy ſhould he not know every grain, as well as one that lies in the midſt of many of the ſame kind?

And ſince the Scripture gives ſo large and account of contingents, predicted by God; no man can certainly prove that any thing is un-foreknown to him. 'Tis as reaſonable to think he knows every contingent; as that he knows ſome that lye as much hid from the eye of any Creature, ſince there is no more difficulty to an infinite underſtanding to know all, than to know ſome *. Indeed if we deny Gods foreknowledg of the voluntary actions of men, we muſt ſtrike our ſelves off from the belief of Scripture Predictions, that yet remain unaccompliſht, and will be brought about by the voluntary engagements of men, as the ruin of Antichriſt, &c. If God foreknows not the ſecret motions of mans Will, how can he foretel them? If we ſtrip him of this Perfection of Preſcience, why ſhould we believe a word of Scripture-Predictions? all the Credit of the Word of God is torn up by the Roots. If God were uncertain of ſuch events, how can we reconcile Gods declaration of them to his Truth; and his demanding our Belief of them, to his Goodneſs? Were it good and righteous in God to urge us to the Belief of that he were uncertain of himſelf? how could he be True in Predicting things he were not ſure of? or good in requiring credit to be given to that which might be falſe? This would neceſſarily follow, if God did not foreknow the motions of mens Wills, whereby many of his Predictions were fulfilled, and ſome remain yet to be accompliſht.

* The Stoicks that thought their Souls to be ſome particle of God Ἀποσπάσματα, pieces pull'd off from him, did conclude from thence that he knew all the motions of their Souls as his own mover, as things coherent with him. Arrian Epictet. lib. 1. chap. 14. p. 60.

2. God foreknows the voluntary ſinful motions of mens Wills.

1. God hath foretold ſeveral of them, Were not all the minute ſinful circumſtances about the death of our Bleſſed Redeemer, as the piercing him, giving him gall to Drink, foretold, as well as the not breaking his Bones, and parting his Garments? What were thoſe but the free actions of men, which they did willingly without any conſtraint? And thoſe foretold by David, Iſaiah, and other Prophets, ſome above a thouſand, ſome eight hundred, and ſome more, ſome fewer years, before they came to paſs; and events punctually anſwered the Prophecies. Many ſinful acts of men, which depended upon their Free-Will, have been foretold: The Egyptians voluntary oppreſſing Iſrael, Gen. 15. 13. Pharaoh's hardening his heart againſt the Voice of Moſes, Exod 3. 19. That Iſaiah's Meſſage would be in vain to the People, Iſa. 6. 9. that the Iſraelites would be rebellious after Moſes his Death, and turn Idolaters, Deut. 31. 16. Judas his betraying of our Saviour, a voluntary action, John 6. ult. he was not forced to do what he did, for he had ſome kind of Repentance for it; and not violence, but voluntarineſs falls under repentance.

2. His Truth hath depended upon this fore-ſight. Let us conſider that in Gen. 5. 16. but the fourth Generation they ſhall come hither again; that is, the Poſterity of Abraham ſhall come into Canaan; for the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full *. God makes a Promiſe to Abraham, of giving his Poſterity the Land of Canaan, not preſently, but in the fourth Generation; if the Truth of God be infallible in the performance of his Promiſe, his Underſtanding is as infallible in the foreſight of the Amorites ſin; the fulneſs of their iniquity was to precede the Iſraelites Poſſeſſion. Did the Truth of God depend upon an uncertainty? did he make the Promiſe hand over head (as we ſay)? How could he with any VViſdom and Truth aſſure Iſrael of the Poſſeſſion of the Land in the fourth Generation, if he had not been ſure that the Amorites would fill up the meaſure of their Iniquities by that time? If Abraham had been a Socinian, to deny Gods Knowledg of the free acts of men, had he not had a fine excuſe for unbelief? VVhat would his reply have been to God? Alas, Lord, this is not a Promiſe to be relied upon, the Amorites iniquity depends upon the acts of their Free-VVill, and ſuch thou canſt have no Knowledg of; thou canſt ſee no more than a likelihood of their iniquity being full, and therefore there is but a likelihood of thy performing thy Promiſe, and not a certainty: VVould not this be judged not only a ſawcy, but a Blaſphemous Anſwer? And upon theſe Principles the Truth of the moſt faithful God had been daſht to uncertainty and a peradventure.

Vid. Rivet. in loc. exerci. 86. p. 329.

3. God provided a remedy for mans Sin, and therefore foreſaw the entrance if it into the World by the fall of Adam. He had a Decree before the Foundation of the World, to manifeſt his Wiſdom in the Goſpel by Jeſus Chriſt, an Eternal purpoſe in Jeſus Chriſt, Eph. 3. 11. And a Decree of Election paſt before the foundation of the World; a ſeparation of ſome to redemption, and forgiveneſs of Sin in the Blood of Chriſt, in whom they were from Eternity choſen, as well as in time accepted in Chriſt, Eph. 1. 4, 6, 7. which is called a purpoſe in himſelf, v. 9. had not Sin entred, there had been no occaſion for the Death of the Son of God, it being every where in Scripture laid upon that ſcore; a Decree for the ſhedding of Blood, ſuppoſed a Decree for the Permiſſion of Sin, and acertain foreknowledg of God, that it would be committed by man. An uncertainty of foreknowledg, and a fixedneſs of purpoſe, are not conſiſtent in a wiſe man, much leſs in the only Wiſe God. Gods purpoſe to manifeſt his Wiſdom to men and Angels in this way, might have been defeated, had God had only a conjectural foreknowledg of the fall of man; and all thoſe ſolemn purpoſes of diſplaying his Perfections in thoſe methods had been to no purpoſe*; the Proviſion of a remedy ſuppos'd a certainty of the Diſeaſe: If a Sparrow fall not to the ground without the Will of God, how much leſs could ſuch a Deplorable ruin fall upon mankind, without Gods Will permitting it, and his knowledg foreſeeing it?

of

* Maref. cont. Volkel. lib. 1. cap. 24. p. 343.

'Tis not hard to conceive how God might foreknow it; * he indeed decreed to Create man in an excellent State; the goodneſs of God could not but furniſh him with a Power to ſtand; yet in his Wiſdom he might foreſee, that the Devil would be envious to mans happineſs, and would out of Envy attempt his ſubverſion. As God knew of what temper the faculties were he had endued man with, and how far they were able to endure the aſſaults of a Temptation; ſo he alſo foreknew the grand ſubtility of Satan, how he would lay his Mine, and to what Point he would drive his Temptation; how he would propoſe and manage it, and direct his Battery againſt the ſenſitive appetite, and aſſault the weakeſt part of the Fort; might he not foreſee that the efficacy of the Temptation would exceed the meaſure of the reſiſtance? cannot God know how far the malice of Satan would extend, what Shots he would according to his nature uſe, how high he would charge his Temptation without his powerful reſtraint, as well as an Engineer judg how many ſhots of a Cannot will make a breach in a Town, and how many Caſks of Powder will blow up a Fortreſs, who never yet built the one nor founded the other? We may eaſily conclude God could not be deceived in the Judgment of the iſſue and event, ſince he knew how far he would let Satan looſe, how far he would permit man to act; and ſince he dives to the bottom of the nature of all things, he foreſaw that Adam was endued with an ability to ſtand; as he foreſaw that Benhadad might naturally recover of his Diſeaſe; but he foreſaw alſo that Adam would ſink under the allurements of the Temptation, as he foreſaw that Hazael would not let Benhadad live, 2 Kings 8. 10.

* Amyrald. de Prædeſtin. cap. 6.

Now ſince the whole race of mankind lies in Corruption, and is ſubject to the power of the Devil, 1 John 3. 18. may not God that knows that corruption in every mans nature, and the force of every mans ſpirit, and what every particular nature will encline him to upon ſuch objects propoſed to him, and what the reaſons of the Temptation will be, know alſo the iſſues? is there any difficulty in Gods foreknowing this, ſince man knowing the nature of one he is well acquainted with, can conclude what ſentiments he will have, and how he will behave himſelf upon preſenting this or that object to him.

If a man that underſtands the diſpoſition of his Child or Servant, knows before what he will do upon ſuch an occaſion; may not God much more, who knows the inclinations of all his Creatures, and from Eternity run with his eyes over all the works he intended? Our Wills are in the number of cauſes; and ſince God knows our Wills, as cauſes, better than we do our ſelves, why ſhould he be ignorant of the effects.

God determines to give Grace to ſuch a man; not to give it to another, but leave him to himſelf, and ſuffer ſuch temptations to aſſault him; now God knowing the corruption of man in the whole maſs, and in every part of it; is it not eaſie for him to foreknovv vvhat the future actions of the VVill vvill be, vvhen the Tinder and Fire meet together, and hovv ſuch a man vvill determine himſelf both as to the ſubſtance and manner of the action? Is it not eaſie for him to knovv, hovv a corrupted Temper and a Temptation vvill ſuit? God is exactly privy to all the gall in the hearts of men, and vvhat Principles they vvill have, before they have a Being. He knows their thoughts afar off, Pſal. 139. 2. as far off as Eternity, as ſome explain the vvords; and thoughts are as voluntary as any thing; he knovvs the povver and inclinations of men in the order of ſecond cauſes; he underſtands the corruption of men, as vvell as the Poyſon of Dragons, and the Venom of Aſps; this is laid up in ſtore with him and ſealed among his Treaſures, Deut. 32. 33, 34. Among the Treaſures of his foreknovvledg, ſay ſome.

What was the cruelty of Hazael, but a free act? yet God knew the frame of his heart, and what acts of murder and oppreſſion would ſpring from that bitter fountain, before Hazael had conceived them in himſelf, 2 Kings 8. 12. as a man that knows the Mineral through which Waters paſs, may know what relliſh they will have before they appear above the earth; ſo our Saviour knew how Peter would deny him; he knew what quantity of Powder would ſerve for ſuch a Battery; in what meaſure he would let looſe Satan, how far he would leave the Reins in Peters hands, and then the iſſue might eaſily be known; and ſo in every act of man, God knows in his own Will what meaſure of Grace he will give, to determine the Will to good, and what meaſure of Grace he will withdraw from ſuch a perſon, or not give to him, and conſequently, how far ſuch a perſon will fall or not. God knows the inclinations of the Creature; he knows his own Permiſſions, what degrees of Grace he will either allow him or, keep from him, according to which will be the degree of his Sin. This may in ſome meaſure help our conceptions in this, tho', as was ſaid before, the manner of Gods foreknowledg is not ſo eaſily explicable.

3. Gods foreknowledg of mans voluntary actions doth not neceſſitate the Will of man. The foreknowledg of God is not deceived, nor the liberty of mans Will diminiſht. I ſhall not trouble you with any School diſtinctions, but be as plain as I can, laying down ſeveral Propoſitions in this caſe.

Propoſition I. 'Tis certain all neceſſity doth not take away liberty. Indeed a compulſive neceſſity takes away liberty; but a neceſſity of immutability removes not liberty from God; why ſhould then a neceſſity of Infallibility in God remove liberty from the Creature? God did neceſſarily create the World, becauſe he Decreed it; yet freely, becauſe his Will from Eternity ſtood to it; he freely Decreed it, and freely created it; as the Apoſtle ſaith in regard of God Decrees, who hath been his Counſellor? Rom. 11. 34. ſo in regard of his actions I may ſay, who hath been his compeller? he freely decreed, and he freely created. Jeſus Chriſt neceſſarily took our fleſh, becauſe he had covenanted with God ſo to do, yet he acted freely and voluntary according to that Covenant, otherwiſe his Death had not been efficacious for us. A good man doth naturally, neceſſarily love his Children, yet voluntary: 'Tis part of the happineſs of the Bleſſed, to love God unchangeably, yet freely, for it would not be their happineſs if it were done by compulſion. What is done by force, cannot be called felicity, becauſe there is no delight or complacency in it; and tho' the Bleſſed love God freely, yet if there were a poſſibility of change, it would not be their Happineſs, their Bleſſedneſs would be dampt by their fear of falling from this Love, and conſequently from their nearneſs to God, in whom their happineſs conſiſts: God foreknows that they will Love him for ever; but are they therefore compell'd for ever to love him? If there were ſuch a kind of conſtraint, Heaven would be rendered burdenſome to them, and ſo no Heaven.

Again; Gods foreknowledg of what he will do, doth not neceſſitate him to do: he foreknew that he would create a World, yet he freely created a World. Gods foreknowledg doth not neceſſitate himſelf, why ſhould it neceſſitate us more than himſelf? We may inſtance in our ſelves: When we Will a thing, we neceſſary uſe our faculty of Will; and when we freely Will any thing, 'tis neceſſary that we freely Will; but this neceſſity doth not exclude but include liberty; or more plainly when a man writes or ſpeaks, whilſt he writes or ſpeaks, thoſe actions are neceſſary, becauſe to ſpeak and be ſilent, to write and not to write at the ſame time, are impoſſible; yet our writing or ſpeaking doth not take away the power, not to write or to be ſilent at that time if a man would be ſo; for he might have choſe whether he would have ſpoke or writ. So there is a neceſſity of ſuch actions of man which God foreſees; that is, a neceſſity of infallibility, becauſe God cannot be deceived; but not a coactive neceſſity, as if they were compelled by God to act thus or thus.

2. No man can ſay in any of his voluntary actions that he ever found any force upon him. When any of us have done any thing according to our Wills, can we ſay we could not have done the contrary to it? were we determin'd to it in our

our own intrinſick nature, or did we not determine our ſelves? Did we not act either according to our reaſon, or according to outward allurements; did we find any thing without us or within us, that did force our Wills to the embracing this or that? Whatever action you do, you do it becauſe you judg it fit to be done; or becauſe you will do it. What tho' God foreſaw that you would do ſo, and that you would do this or that, did you feel any force upon you? did you not act according to your nature? God foreſees that you will Eat or Walk at ſuch a time; do you find any thing that moves you to Eat, but your own appetite? or to Walk, but your own Reaſon and Will? If Preſcience had impos'd any neceſſity upon man, ſhould we not probably have found ſome kind of Plea from it in the mouth of Adam? he knew as much as any man ever ſince knew of the nature of God, as diſcoverable in Creation; he could not in Innocence fancy an ignorant God, a God that knew nothing of future things; he could not be ſo ignorant of his own action, but he muſt have perceived a force upon his Will, had there been any; had he thought that Gods Preſcience impos'd any neceſſity upon him, he would not have omitted the Plea, eſpecially when he was ſo daring as to charge the Providence of God in the Gift of the Woman to him, to be the cauſe of his Crime, Gen. 3. 12. How came his Poſterity to invent new charges againſt God, which their Father Adam never thought of, who had more knowledg than all of them? He could find no cauſe of his Sin but the liberty of his own Will; he charges it not upon any neceſſity from the Devil or any neceſſity from God; nor doth he alledg the gift of the Woman as a neceſſary cauſe of his Sin, but an occaſion of it, by giving the Fruit to him. Judas knew that our Saviour did foreknow his Treachery, for he had told him of it in the hearing of his Diſciples, John 13. 21, 26. yet he never charg'd the neceſſity of his Crime upon the foreknowledg of his Maſter; if Judas had not done it freely; he had had no reaſon to repent of it; his Repentance juſtifies Chriſt from impoſing any neceſſity upon him by that foreknowledg. No man acts any thing, but he can give an account of the motives of his action; he cannot father it upon a blind neceſſity; the Will cannot be compelled, for then it would ceaſe to be Will: God doth not root up the foundations of Nature, or change the order of it, and make men unable to act like men, that is, as free Agents. God foreknows the actions of irrational Creatures, this concludes no violence upon their nature; for we find their actions to be according to their nature, and ſpontaneous.

3. Gods foreknowledg is not (ſimply conſidered) the cauſe of any thing. It puts nothing into things, but only beholds them as preſent, and ariſing from their proper cauſes, The knowledg of God is not the Principle of things, or the cauſe of their exiſtence, but directive of the action; nothing is becauſe God knows it, but becauſe God Wills it, either poſitively or permiſſively; God knows all things poſſible, yet becauſe God knows them, they are not brought into actual exiſtence, but remain ſtill only as things poſſible; Knowledg only apprehends a thing, but acts nothing; 'tis the rule of acting, but not the cauſe of acting; the Will is the immediate Principle, and the Power the immediate cauſe; to know a thing, is not to do a thing, for then we may be ſaid to do every thing that we know; but every man knows thoſe things which he never did, nor never will do; Knowledg in it ſelf is an apprehenſion of a thing, and is not the cauſe of it. A Spectator of a thing is not the cauſe of that thing which he ſees, that is, he is not the cauſe of it as he beholds it: We ſee a man Write, we know before that he will Write at ſuch a time; but this foreknowledg is not the cauſe of his Writing. We ſee a man Walk, but our viſion of him brings no neceſſity of Walking upon him; he was free to Walk, or not to Walk *. We foreknow that Death will ſeize upon all men, we foreknow that the Seaſons of the Year will ſucceed one another; yet is not our foreknowledg the cauſe of this ſucceſſion of Spring after Winter, or of the Death of all men, or any man: We ſee one man fighting with another, our ſight is not the cauſe of that conteſt, but ſome Quarrel among themſelves exciting their own Paſſions. As the knowledg of preſent things impoſeth no neceſſity upon them while they are acting and preſent; ſo the know-

* Rawley of the World, lib. 1. cap. 1. ſect. 12.

Knovvledg of future things impoſeth no neceſſity upon them vvhile they are coming. VVe are certain there vvill be men in the VVorld to morrovv, and that the Sea vvill Ebb and Flovv; but is this knovvledg of ours the cauſe that thoſe things vvill be ſo? I knovv that the Sun vvill riſe to morrovv, 'tis true that it ſhall riſe; but 'tis not true, that my foreknovvledg makes it to riſe. If a Phyſician Prognoſticates upon ſeeing the Intemperances and Debaucheries of men, that they vvill fall into ſuch a diſtemper, is his Prognoſtication any cauſe of their Diſeaſe, or of the ſharpneſs of any Symptoms attending it? The Prophet foretold the cruelty of Hazael, before he committed it; but vvho vvill ſay, that the Prophet vvas the cauſe of his Commiſſion of that evil? And thus the foreknowledg of God takes not away the liberty of mans VVill, no more than a foreknowledg that we have of any mans actions, takes avvay his liberty: VVe may upon our knovvledg of the temper of a man, certainly foreknovv, that if he falls into ſuch Company, and get among his Cups, he will be Drunk; but is this foreknowledg the cauſe that he is Drunk? no, the cauſe is the liberty of his own Will, and not reſiſting the Temptation. God purpoſes to leave ſuch a man to himſelf and his own ways; and man being ſo left, God foreknows what will be done by him according to that corrupt nature which is in him; tho' the Decree of God of leaving a man to the liberty of his own VVill be certain, yet the liberty of mans VVill as thus left, is the cauſe of all the extravagancies he doth commit. Suppoſe Adam had ſtood, would not God certainly have foreſeen that he would have ſtood? yet it would have been concluded that Adam had ſtood, not by any neceſſity of Gods foreknowledg, but by the liberty of his own VVill: VVhy ſhould then the foreknowledg of God add more neceſſity to his falling than to his ſtanding? * And though it be ſaid ſometimes in Scripture, that ſuch a thing was done that the Scripture might be fulfilled, as John 12. 38. that the ſaying of Eſaias might be fulfilled, Lord who hath believed our report? the word That, doth not infer that the Prediction of the Prophet was the cauſe of the Jews unbelief, but infers this, that the Prediction was manifeſted to be true by their unbelief, and the event anſwered the Prediction; this Prediction was not the cauſe of their Sin, but their foreſeen Sin was the cauſe of this Prediction; and ſo the Particle That, is taken, Pſal. 51. 6. againſt thee, thee only have I ſinned, that thou mighteſt be juſtified, &c. the juſtifying God, was not the end and intent of the Sin, but the event of it upon his acknowledgment.

* Rivet. in Iſa. 53. 1. p. 16.

4. God foreknows things, becauſe they will come to paſs; but things are not future, becauſe God knows them. Foreknowledg preſuppoſeth the object which is foreknown; a thing that is to come to paſs, is the object of the Divine Knowledg, but not the cauſe of the act of Divine Knowledg; and though the foreknowledg of God doth in Eternity precede the actual preſence of a thing which is foreſeen as future; yet the future thing in regard of its futurity, is as Eternal as the foreknowledg of God: As the Voice is uttered before it be heard, and a thing is viſible before it be ſeen, and a thing knowable before it be known. But how comes it to be knowable to God? it muſt be anſwered, either in the Power of God as a thing poſſible, or in the VVill of God as a thing future, he firſt VVilled, and then knew what he VVilled; he knew what he VVilled to effect, and he knew what he VVilled to permit; as he VVilled the Death of Chriſt by a determinate Counſel, and VVilled the Permiſſion of the Jews Sin, and the ordering of the malice of their nature to that end, Acts 2. 22. God decrees to make a rational Creature, and to govern him by a Lavv; God Decrees not to hinder this rational Creature from tranſgreſſing his Law; and God foreſees that what he would not hinder, would come to paſs. (Man did not Sin becauſe God foreſaw him; but God foreſaw him to Sin, becauſe man would Sin.) If Adam and other men would have acted otherwiſe, God would have foreknown that they would have acted well; God foreſaw our actions becauſe they would ſo come to paſs by the motion of our Free-VVill, which he would permit, which he would concur with, vvhich he vvould order to his ovvn holy and glorious ends, for the mamanifeſtation of the Perfection of his nature. If I ſee a man lye in a Sink, no neceſſity is inferred upon him from my ſight to lye in that filthy place, but there is a neceſſity inferr'd by him that lies there, that I ſhould ſee him in that condition if I paſs by, and caſt my eye that way.

5. God did not only foreknow our actions, but the manner of our actions. That is, he did not only know that we would do ſuch actions, but that we would do them freely; he foreſaw that the Will would freely determine it ſelf to this or that; the Knowledg of God takes not away the nature of things; though God knows poſſible things, yet they remain in the nature of poſſibility; and tho' God knows contingent things, yet they remain in the nature of contingencies: and tho' God knovvs free Agents, yet they remain in the nature of liberty. God did not foreknow the actions of man, as neceſſary, but as free; ſo that liberty is rather eſtabliſhed by this foreknowledg, than removed: God did not foreknow that Adam had not a power to ſtand, or that any man hath not a power to omit ſuch a ſinful action, but that he would not omit it. Man hath a power to do otherwiſe than that which God foreknows he will do: Adam was not determin'd by any inward neceſſity to Fall, nor any man by any inward neceſſity to commit this or that particular Sin; but God foreſaw that he would Fall, and Fall freely; for he ſaw the whole Circle of means and cauſes whereby ſuch and ſuch actions ſhould be produced; and can be no more ignorant of the motions of our Wills, and the manner of them, than an Artificer can be ignorant of motions, of his Watch, and how far the Spring will let down the String in the ſpace of an hour; he ſees all cauſes leading to ſuch events in their whole order, and how the Free-Will of man will comply with this, or refuſe that; he changes not the manner of the Creatures operation, whatſoever it be.

6. But what if the foreknowledg of God, and the liberty of the Will, cannot be fully reconciled by man? ſhall we therefore deny a Perfection in God to ſupport a liberty in our ſelves? Shall we rather faſten ignorance upon God, and accuſe him of blindneſs, to maintain our liberty? That God doth foreknow every thing, and yet that there is liberty in the rational Creature, are both certain; but how fully to reconcile them, may ſurmount the Underſtanding of man. Some Truths the Diſciples were not capable of bearing in the days of Chriſt; and ſeveral Truths our underſtandings cannot reach as long as the World doth laſt; yet in the mean time we muſt on the one hand take heed of conceiving God ignorant, and on the other hand of imagining the Creature neceſſitated; the one will render God imperfect, and the other will ſeem to render him unjuſt, in puniſhing man for that Sin which he could not avoid, but was brought into by a fatal neceſſity. God is ſufficient to render a reaſon of his own Proceedings, and clear up all at the day of Judgment; 'tis a part of mans curioſity, ſince the Fall, to be prying into Gods Secrets, things too high for him; whereby he ſinges his own Wings, and confounds his own Underſtanding. 'Tis a curſed affectation that runs in the Blood of Adams Poſterity, to know as God, tho' our firſt Father ſmarted and ruin'd his Poſterity in that attempt; the ways and knowledg of God are as much above our thoughts and conceptions, as the heavens are above the earth, Iſa. 55. 9. * and ſo ſublime, that we cannot comprehend them in their true and juſt greatneſs; his deſigns are ſo myſterious, and the ways of his conduct ſo profound, that it is not poſſible to dive into them: The force of our underſtandings is below his infinite Wiſdom, and therefore we ſhould adore him with an humble aſtoniſhment, and cry out with the Apoſtle, Rom. 11. 33. Oh the depth of the Riches of the Wiſdom and Knowledg of God! how unſearchable are his Judgments! and his ways paſt finding out! When ever we meet with depths that we connot fathom, let us remember that he is God, and we his Creatures; and not be guilty of ſo great extravagance, as to think that a Subject can pierce into all the ſecrets of a Prince, or a Work underſtand all the operations of the Artificer. Let us only reſolve not to faſten any thing on God that is unworthy of the Perfection of his nature, and diſhonourable to the Glory of his Majeſty; nor imagine that we can ever ſtep out of the rank of Creatures to the glory of the Deity, to underſtand fully every thing in his nature.

* Daillé Melang. part. 1. p. 712. 725.

So much for the ſecond general, What God knows.

III. The third is, How God knows all things? As it is neceſſary we ſhould conceive ceive God to be an Underſtanding Being, elſe he could not be God; ſo we muſt conceive his underſtanding to be infinitely more pure and perfect than ours in the act of it, elſe we liken him to our ſelves, and debaſe him as low as his Foot-ſtool.

Maxim. Tyrius Diſſert. 1. p. 9, 10.

* As among Creatures there are degrees of Being and Perfection; Plants above Earth and Sand, becauſe they have a Power of growth; Beaſts above Plants, becauſe to their Power of growth, there is an addition of excellency of ſence; rational Creatures above Beaſts, becauſe to Senſe there is added the Dignity of Reaſon: The Underſtanding of man is more noble than all the vegitative power of Plants, or the ſenſitive Power of Beaſts: God therefore muſt be infinitely more excellent in his Underſtanding, and therefore in the manner of it. As man differs from a Beaſt in regard of his knowledg; ſo doth God alſo from man, in regard of his Knowledg. As God therefore is in Being and Perfection, infinitely more above a man than a man is above a Beaſt, the manner of his Knowledg muſt be infinitely more above a mans knowledg, than the knowledg of a man is above that of a Beaſt; our underſtandings can claſp an object in a moment, that is at a great diſtance from our ſenſe; our eye by one elevated motion can view the Heavens; the manner of Gods Underſtanding muſt be unconceivably above our glimmerings; as the manner of his Being is infinitely more perfect than all Beings, ſo muſt the manner of his Underſtanding be infinitely more perfect than all Created underſtandings. * Indeed the manner of Gods Knowledg can no more be known by us, than his Eſſence can be known by us; and the ſame incapacity in man, which renders him unable to comprehend the Being of God, renders him as unable to comprehend the manner of Gods Underſtanding: As there is a vaſt diſtance between the Eſſence of God, and our Beings, ſo there is between the Thoughts of God and our Thoughts; the Heavens are not ſo much higher than the Earth, as the Thoughts of God are above the thoughts of men, yea, and of the higheſt Angel, Iſa. 55. 8, 9. yet tho' we know not the manner of Gods Knowledg, we know that he knows; as tho' we know not the infiniteneſs of God, yet we know that he is infinite. 'Tis Gods ſole Prerogative to know himſelf, what he is; and it is equally his Prerogative to know how he knows; the manner of Gods knovvledg therefore muſt be conſidered by us, as free from thoſe Imperfections our knovvledg is encumbred vvith.

* Maimonides More Nevochin. part. 3. c. 20. p. 391, 392, 393.

In general, God doth neceſſarily knovv all things; he is neceſſarily Omnipreſent, becauſe of the immenſity of his Eſſence; ſo he is neceſſarily Omniſcient, becauſe of the infiniteneſs of his Underſtanding. 'Tis no more at the liberty of his Will, whether he will know all things, than whether he will be able to create all things; 'tis no more at the liberty of his Will, whether he will be Omniſcient, than whether he will be Holy; he can as little be ignorant, as he can be impure; he knows not all things, becauſe he will know them, but becauſe it is Eſſential to his nature to know them.

In particular.

Propoſition I. God knows by his own Eſſence; that is, He ſees the nature of things in the Ideas of his own mind, and the events of things in the Decrees of his own Will; he knows them not by viewing the things, but by viewing himſelf; his own Eſſence is the Mirrour and Book, wherein he beholds all things that he doth ordain, diſpoſe and execute; and ſo he knows all things in the firſt and original cauſe; which is no other than his own Eſſence Willing, and his own Eſſence executing what he Wills; he knows them in his Power, as the Phyſical Principle; in his Will, as the moral Principle of things, as ſome ſpeak.

He borrows not the knowledg of Creatures from the Creatures, nor depends upon them for means of Underſtanding, as we poor Worms do, who are beholden to the objects abroad to aſſiſt us with Images of things, and to our ſenſes to convey them into our minds; God would then acquire a Perfection from thoſe things which are below himſelf, and an excellency from thoſe things that are vile; his Knowledg would not precede the Being of the Creatures, but the Creatures would be before the act of his Knowledg. If he underſtood by Images drawn from the Creatures, as we do, there would be ſomething in God which is not God, viz. the Images of things drawn from outward objects: God would then depend upon Creatures for that which is more noble than a bare Being; for to be Underſtanding, is more more excellent than barely to be. Besides, if Gods knowledg of his Creatures were derived from the Creatures by the impression of any thing upon him, as there is upon us, he could not know from Eternity, because from Eternity there was no actual existence of any thing but himself; and therefore there could not be any Images shot out from any thing, because there was not any thing in being but God; as there is no principle of being to any thing but by his Essence; so there is no Principle of the Knowledg of any thing by himself but his Essence: If the knowledg of God were distinct from his Essence, his Knowledg were not Eternal, because there is nothing Eternal but his Essence.

His understanding is not a faculty in him as it is in us, but the same with his Essence, because of the simplicity of his nature; God is not made up of various parts, one distinct from another as we are, and therefore doth not understand by a part of himself, but by himself; so that to be, and to understand is the same with God; his Essence is not one thing, and the power whereby he understands, another; he would then be compounded, and not be the most simple Being. This also is necessary for the Perfection of God; for the more perfect and noble the way and manner of knowing is, the more perfect and noble is the knowledg. The perfection of knowledg depends upon the excellency of the medium whereby we know. As a knowledg by reason, is a more noble way of knowing than knowledg by sense; so 'tis more excellent for God to know by his Essence, than by any thing without him, any thing mixt with him; the first would render him dependant, and the other would demolish his simplicity.

Again, the natures of all things are contained in God; not formally; for then the nature of the Creatures would be God: But eminently; he that planted the ear, shall he not hear, he that formed the eye, shall he not see? Psal. 94. 9. He hath in himself eminently the Beauty, Perfection, Life and Vigor of all Creatures; he created nothing contrary to himself, but every thing with some foot-steps of himself in them; he could not have pronounced them good, as he did, had there been any thing in them contrary to his own goodness; and therefore as his Essence primarily represents it self, so it represents the Creatures, and makes them known to him. As the Essence of God is eminently all things, so by understanding his Essence, he eminently understands all things. And therefore he hath not one knowledg of himself, and another knowledg of the Creatures; but by knowing himself, as the original and exemplary cause of all things, he cannot be ignorant of any Creature which he is the cause of; so that he knows all things, not by an understanding of them, but by an understanding of himself; by understanding his own Power as the efficient of them, his own VVill as the order of them, his own Goodness as the adorner and beautifier of them, his own wisdom as the disposer of them, and his own Holiness, to which many of their actions are contrary. * Dionys.

* As he sees all things possible in his own Power, because he is able to produce them; so he sees all things future in his own VVill; decreeing to effect them, if they be good; or Decreeing to permit them, if they be evil. In this Glass he sees what he will give Being to, and what he will suffer to fall into a deficiency, without looking out of himself, or borrowing Knowledg from his Creatures; he knows all things in himself. And thus his Knowledg is more noble, and of a higher elevation than ours, or the knowledg of any Creature can be; he knows all things by one comprehension of the causes in himself. * Kendal against Goodwin of Foreknowledg.

Proposition, II. God knows all things by one act of intuition. This the Schools call an intuitive knowledg. This follows upon the other; for if he know by his own Essence, he knows all things by one act, there would be otherwise a division in his Essence, a first and a last, a nearness and a distance. As what he made, he made by one word; so what he sees, he pierceth into by one glance from Eternity to Eternity: As he wills all things by one act of his Will, so he knows all things by one act of his understanding: He knows not some things discursively from other things, nor knows one thing successively after another. As by one act he imparts Essence to things; so by one act he knows the nature of things.

1. He doth not know by Discourse, as we do. That is, By deducing one thing from another, and from common notions drawing out other rational conclusions and arguing guing one thing from another, and ſpringing up various conſequences from ſome Principle aſſented to; but God ſtands in no need of reaſonings; the making inferences and abſtracting things, would be ſtains in the infinite Perfection of God; here would be a mixture of knowledg and ignorance; while he knew the Principle, he would not know the conſequence and concluſion, till he had actually deduc'd it; one thing would be known after another, and ſo he would have an ignorance, and then a knowledg; and there would be different conceptions in God, and knowledg would be multiplyed according to the multitude of objects; as it is in humane underſtandings. But God knows all things before they did exiſt, and never was ignorant of them, Acts 15. 18. Known unto God are all his Works from the beginning of the World. He therefore knows them all at once; the knowledg of one thing was not before another, nor depended upon another, as it doth in the way of humane reaſoning. * Tho indeed ſome make a vertual Diſcourſe in God; that is, tho God hath a ſimple knowledg, yet it doth vertually contain a Diſcourſe by the flowing of one knowledg from another; as from the knowledg of his own power, he knows what things are poſſible to be made by him; and from the knowledg of himſelf, he paſſes to the knowledg of the Creatures; but this is only according to our conception, and becauſe of our weakneſs they are apprehended as two diſtinct acts in God, one of which is the reaſon of another: As we ſay that one Attribute is the reaſon of another; as his Mercy, may be ſaid to be the reaſon of his patience; and his Omnipreſence, to be the reaſon of the Knowledg of preſent things done in the World. God indeed by one ſimple act, knows himſelf and the Creatures; but when that Act whereby he knows himſelf, is conceived by us to paſs to the knowledg of the Creatures, we muſt not underſtand it to be a new Act, diſtinct from the other; but the ſame act upon different terms or objects; ſuch an order is in our underſtandings and conceptions, not in God's.

* Suarez. vol. 1. de Deo, lib. 3. cap. 2. p. 133, 134.

2. Nor doth he know ſucceſſively, as we do. That is, not by drops, one thing after another. This follows from the former; a knowledg of all things without Diſcourſe, is a knowledg without Succeſſion. * The knowledg of one thing is not in God before another, one act of Knowledg doth not forget another; in regard of the objects, one thing is before another, one year before another, one Generation of men before another, one is the cauſe, the other is the effect: In the Creatures there is ſuch a Succeſſion, and God knows there will be ſuch a Succeſſion; but there is no ſuch order in Gods knowledg; for he knows all thoſe Succeſſions by one glance, without any Succeſſion of knowledg in himſelf.

* Gamach in Aquin. q. 14. cap. 1. p. 119.

Man in his view of things, muſt turn ſometimes his body, ſometimes only his Eyes; he cannot ſee all the Contents of a Letter at once, and tho he beholds all the lines in the page of a Book at once, and a whole Country in a Map, yet to know what is contain'd in them, he muſt turn his eye from word to word, and line to line, and ſo ſpin out one thing after another by ſeveral acts and motions. We behold a great part of the Sea at once *, but not all the dimenſions of it; for to know the length of the Sea we move our eyes one way; to ſee the breadth of it, we turn our eyes another way; to behold the depth of it, we have another motion of them. And when we caſt our eyes up to heaven, we ſeem to receive in at an inſtant the whole extent of the Hemiſphere; yet there is but one object the eye can attentively pitch upon, and we cannot diſtinctly view what we ſee in a lump, without various motions of our eyes, which is not done without ſucceſſion of Time *. And certainly the Underſtanding of Angels is bounded, according to the meaſure of their beings; ſo that it cannot extend it ſelf at one time, to a quantity of objects, to make a diſtinct application of them, but the objects muſt preſent themſelves one by one: But God is all Eye, all underſtanding; as there is no ſucceſſion in his Eſſence, ſo there is none in his knowledg; his underſtanding in the nature, and in the act, is infinite, as it is in the Text. He therefore ſees Eternally and univerſally, all things, by one act, without any motion, much leſs various motions; the various changes of things, in their ſubſtance, qualities, places and relations, withdraw not any thing from his Eye, nor bring any new thing to his knowledg; he doth not upon conſideration of preſent things turn his mind from paſt; or when he beholds future things, turn his mind from preſent; but he ſees them not one after another, but all at once and all together; the whole Circle of his own Counſels, and all the various lines drawn forth

* ſaith Epiphanius.

* Amyrant morale chreſti. Tom. 3. p. 137.

forth from the Center of his Will, to the circumference of his Creatures; Juſt as if a man were able in one moment to read a whole Library; or, as if you ſhould imagine a tranſparent Chryſtal Globe, hung up in the midſt of a Room, and ſo framed as to take in the images of all things in the Room, the Fret-Work in the Cieling, the in-laid parts of the Floor, and the particular parts of the Tapeſtry about it, the eye of a man would behold all the Beauty of the Room at once in it. As the Sun by one light and heat frames ſenſible things; ſo God by one ſimple act knows all things: As he knows mutable things by an immutable knowledg, bodily things by a ſpiritual knowledg; ſo he knows many things by one knowledg, Heb. 4. 13. All things are open and naked to him, more than any thing can be to us; and therefore he views all things at once, as well as we can behold and contemplate one thing alone. As he is the Father of Lights, a God of infinite Underſtanding, there is no variableneſs in his mind, nor any ſhadow of turning of his eye, as there is of ours, to behold various things James 1. 17. His knowledg being Eternal, includes all times; there is nothing paſt or future with him, our [illegible] therefore he beholds all things by one and the ſame manner of knowledg and comprehends all knowable things by one act, and in one moment.

This muſt needs be ſo,

1. Becauſe of the eminency of God. God is above all, and therefore cannot but ſee the motions of all. He that ſits in a Theater, or at the top of a place, ſees all things, all perſons, by one aſpect he comprehends the whole Circle of the place; whereas he that ſits below, when he looks before, he cannot ſee things behind; God being above all, about all, in all, ſees at once the motions of all. The whole World in the eye of God, is leſs than a Point that divides one Sentence from another in a Book; as a Cypher, a grain of Duſt, Iſa. 40. 15. So little a thing can be ſeen by man at once; and all things being as little in the eye of God, are ſeen at once by him. As all time is but a moment to his Eternity; ſo all things are but as a point to the immenſity of his Knowledg, which he can behold with more eaſe than we can move or turn our eye.

2. Becauſe all the Perfections of Knowing, are united in God. * As particular ſenſes are divided in man, by one he Sees, by another he hears, by another he Smells, yet all thoſe are united in one common ſenſe, and this common ſenſe apprehends all; ſo the various and diſtinct ways of knowledg in the Creatures, are all eminently united in God. A man when he ſees a grain of Wheat, underſtands at once all things that can in time proceed from that Seed; ſo God by beholding his own vertue and power, beholds all things which ſhall in time be unfolded by him. We have a ſhadow of this way of knowledg in our own Underſtanding; the ſenſe only perceives a thing preſent, and one object only proper and ſutable to it; as the eye ſees colour, the ear hears ſounds; we ſee this and that man, one time this, another minute that; but the underſtanding abſtracts a notion of the common nature of man, and frames a conception of that nature wherein all men agree; and ſo in a manner beholds and underſtands all men at once, by underſtanding the common nature of man, which is a degree of knowledg above the ſenſe and fancy; we may then conceive an infinite vaſter Perfection in the Underſtanding of God. As to know, is ſimply better than not to know at all; ſo to know by one act comprehenſive, is a greater Perfection than to know by divided acts, by ſucceſſion to receive information, and to have an increaſe or decreaſe of knowledg, to be like a Bucket, alway deſcending into the Well, and fetching Water from thence. 'Tis a mans weakneſs that he is fixed on one object only at a time; 'Tis Gods Perfection that he can behold all at once, and is fixed upon one no more than upon another.

* Cuſan. p. 646

Propoſition, III. God knows all things independently. This is Eſſential to an infinite Underſtanding. He receives not his knowledg from any thing without him, he hath no Tutor to inſtruct him, or Book to inform him; who hath been his Counſellor? ſaith the Prophet, Iſa. 40. 13. He hath no need of the Counſels of others, nor of the inſtructions of others. This follows upon the firſt and ſecond Propoſitions; if he knows things by his Eſſence, then as his Eſſence is independent from the Creatures, ſo is his knowledg; he borrows not any images from the Creature, hath no ſpecies or pictures of things in his underſtanding, as we have; no Beams from the Creature ſtrike upon him, to enlighten him, but beams from him upon the World; the Earth ſends not light to the Sun, but the Sun to the Earth.

Our knowledg indeed depends upon the object; but all created objects depend upon Gods knowledg and Will: We could not know Creatures, unleſs they were; but Creatures could not be, unleſs God knew them. As nothing that he Wills is the cauſe of his Will; ſo nothing that he knows is the cauſe of his Knowledg; he did not make things to know them, but he knows them to make them; Who will imagine that the mark of the foot in the Duſt, is the cauſe that the foot ſtands in this or that particular place?

If his knowledg did depend upon the things, then the exiſtence of things did precede Gods knowledg of them; to ſay that they are the cauſe of Gods Knowledg, is to ſay, that God was not the cauſe of their Being; and if he did Create them, it was effected by a knowledg and ignorant power, he created he knew not what, till he had produced it: he be beholden for his Knowledg to the Creatures he hath made, he had the perfect knowledg of them before he made them. If his knowledg were dependant upon them, it could not be Eternal, but muſt have a beginning when the Creatures had a beginning, and be of no longer a date than ſince the nature of things was in actual exiſtence; for whatſoever is a cauſe of knowledg, doth precede the knowledg it cauſes, either in order of time, or order of nature; Temporal things therefore cannot be the cauſe of that knowledg which is Eternal. His Works could not be foreknown to him, if his Knowledg commenc'd with the exiſtence of his works, if he knew them before he made them, he could not derive a Knowledg from them after they were made. He made all things in Wiſdom, Pſal. 104. 24. How can this be imagin'd, if the things known were the cauſe of his Knowledg, and ſo before his knowledg, and therefore before his action *? God would not then be the firſt in the order of knowing Agents, becauſe he would not act by Knowledg, but act before he knew, and know after he had acted, and ſo the Creature which he made, would be before the act of his Underſtanding, whereby he knew what he made.

Acts 15. 18.

Bradward* lib. 1. cap. 15.

Again, ſince Knowledg is a Perfection, if Gods knowledg of the Creatures depended upon the Creatures, he would derive an excellency from them, they would derive no excellency from any Idea in the Divine mind; he would not be infinitely perfect in himſelf; if his Perfection in knowledg were gained from any thing without himſelf and below himſelf, he would not be ſufficient of himſelf, but be under an indigence, which wanted a ſupply from the things he had made; and could not be eternally perfect till he had created, and ſeen the effects of his own Power, Goodneſs, and Wiſdom, to render him more wiſe and knowing in Time than he was from Eternity; Who can fancy ſuch a God as this, without deſtroying the Deity he pretends to adore? For if his Underſtanding be perfected by ſomething without him, why may not his Eſſence be perfected by ſomething without him; that as he was made knowing by ſomething without him, he might be made God by ſomething without him?

How could his Underſtanding be infinite, if it depended upon a finite object, as upon a cauſe? Is the Majeſty of God to be debas'd to a Mendicant condition, to ſeek for a ſupply from things inferior to himſelf? Is it to be imagin'd that a Fool, a Toad, a Fly ſhould be aſſiſtant to the Knowledg of God? that the moſt noble Being ſhould be perfected by things ſo vile, that the ſupream cauſe of all things ſhould receive any addition of Knowledg, and be determin'd in his Underſtanding by the notion of things ſo mean? To conclude this particular, all things depend upon his knowledg, his knowledg depends upon nothing, but is as independent as himſelf, and his own Eſſence.

Propoſition, IV. God knows all things diſtinctly. His underſtanding is infinite in regard of clearneſs; God is light, and in him is no darkneſs at all, John 1. 5. He ſees not through a Miſt or Cloud; there's no blemiſh in his underſtanding, no mote or beam in his eye, to render any thing obſcure to him. Man diſcerns the ſurface and outſide of things, little or nothing of the Eſſence of things; we ſee the nobleſt things, but as in a glaſs darkly, 1 Cor. 13. 12. The too great nearneſs, as well as the too great diſtance of a thing, hinders our ſight; the ſmallneſs of a mote eſcapes our eye.

and

and ſo our knowledg; alſo the weakneſs of our underſtanding is troubled with the multitude of things, and cannot know many things but confuſedly. But God knows the forms and eſſence of things, every circumſtance; nothing is ſo deep, but he ſees to the bottom; he ſees the maſs, and ſees the motes of Beings; his Underſtanding being infinite, is not offended with a multitude of things, or diſtracted with the variety of them; he diſcerns every thing infinitely more clearly and perfectly than Adam or Solomon could any one thing in the Circle of their knowledg: What knowledg they had, was from him; he hath therefore infinitely a more perfect knowledg than they were capable in their natures to receive a communication of. All things are open to him, Heb. 4. 13. The leaſt fibre in its nakedneſs and diſtinct frame, is transparent to him; as by the help of Glaſſes, the mouth, feet, hands of a ſmall Inſect, are viſible to a man, which ſeem to the eye, without that aſſiſtance, one intire piece, not diverſified into parts. All the cauſes, qualities, natures, properties of things are open to him, he brings out the Hoſt of Heaven by number, and calleth them by Names, Iſa. 40. 26. He numbers the Hairs of our heads; what more diſtinct than number? Thus God beholds things in every unity, which makes up the heap: He knows, and none elſe can, every thing in its true and intimate cauſes, in its original and intermediate cauſes; in himſelf, as the cauſe of every particular of their being, every Property in their Being.

Knowledg by the cauſes is the moſt noble and perfect Knowledg, and moſt ſuited to the infinite excellency of the Divine being; he created all things, and ordered them to a univerſal and particular end; he therefore knows the eſſential Properties of every thing, every activity of their nature, all their fitneſs for thoſe diſtinct ends, to which he orders them, and for which he governs and diſpoſeth them; and underſtands their darkeſt and moſt hidden qualities, infinitely clearer than any eye can behold the clear Beams of the Sun. He knows all things as he made them; he made them diſtinctly, and therefore knows them diſtinctly, and that every individual; therefore God is ſaid, Gen. 1. 31. To ſee every thing that he hath made; he took a review of every particular Creature he had made, and upon his view pronounced it good: To pronounce that good, which was not exactly known in every Creek, in every Mite of its nature, had not conſiſted with his veracity; for every one that ſpeaks truth ignorantly, that knows not that he ſpeaks Truth, is a Liar in ſpeaking that which is true. God knows every act of his own Will, whether it be poſitive or permiſſive, and therefore every effect of his Will. We muſt needs aſcribe to God a perfect Knowledg; but a confus'd Knowledg cannot challenge that Title. To know things only in a heap, is unworthy of the Divine Perfection; for if God knows his own ends in the Creation of things, he knows diſtinctly the means whereby he will bring them to thoſe ends for which he hath appointed them: No Wiſe man intends an end, without a knowledg of the means conducing to that end; an ignorance then of any thing in the World, which falls under the nature of a means to a Divine end (and there is nothing in the world but doth.) would be inconſiſtent with the Perfection of God; it would aſcribe to him a blind Providence in the World. As there can be nothing imperfect in his Being and Eſſence, ſo there can be nothing imperfect in his Underſtanding and Knowledg; and therefore not a confus'd Knowledg, which is an Imperfection. Darkneſs and Light are both alike to him, Pſal. 139. 12. He ſees diſtinctly into the one, as well as the other; what is Darkneſs to us, is not ſo to him.

Propoſition, V. God knows all things infallibly. His Underſtanding is infinite, in regard of certainty; every Title of what he knows, is as far from failing, as what he ſpeaks; our Saviour affirms the one, Matth. 5. 18. And there is the ſame reaſon of the certainty of one as well as the other; his eſſence is the meaſure of his Knowledg; whence it is as impoſſible that God ſhould be miſtaken in the knowledg of the leaſt thing in the World, as it is that he ſhould be miſtaken in his own Eſſence; for knowing himſelf comprehenſively, he muſt know all other things infallibly, Since he is eſſentially Omniſcient, he is no more capable of error in his Underſtanding, than of imperfection in his Eſſence; his Counſels are as unerring as his Eſſence is perfect, and his knowledg as infallible as his Eſſence is free from defect.

Again, ſince God knows all things with a knowledg of Viſion, becauſe he Wills them; them; his Knowledg muſt be as infallible as his purpoſe; now his purpoſe will certainly be effected; what he hath thought ſhall come to paſs, and what he hath purpoſed ſhall ſtand, Iſa. 14. 24. His Counſel ſhall ſtand, and he will do all his pleaſure, Iſa. 46. 10. There may be interruptions of nature, the foundations of it may be out of courſe, but there can be no bar upon the Author of nature; he hath an infinite power to carry on and perfect the reſolves of his own Will; he can effect what he pleaſes by a Word. Speech is one of the leaſt motions; yet when God ſaid, let there be Light, there was Light, ariſing from Darkneſs. No reaſon can be given why God knows a thing to be, but becauſe he infallibly Wills it to be.

* Suarez. Vol. 2. p. 228.

Again, * The Schools make this difference between the knowledg of the good and bad Angels, that the good are never deceived; for that is repugnant to their Bleſſed State; for deceit is an evil and an imperfection, inconſiſtent with that perfect Bleſſedneſs the good Angels are poſſeſſed of; and would it not much more be a ſtain upon the Bleſſedneſs of that God that is bleſſed for ever, to be ſubject to deceit? His knowledg therefore is not an Opinion, for an Opinion is uncertain; a man knows not what to think, but leans to one part of the Queſtion propos'd, rather than to the other. If things did not come to paſs therefore as God knows them, his knowledg would be imperfect; and ſince he knows by his Eſſence, his Eſſence alſo would be imperfect, if God were expos'd to any Deceit in his knowledg; he knows by himſelf, who is the higheſt Truth; and therefore it is impoſſible he ſhould err in his underſtanding.

* Tileni Syntagma Part 1. Diſp. 13. Theſ. 13.

Propoſition, VI. God knows immutably. His Underſtanding elſe could not be infinite; every thing and every act that is mutable, is finite, it hath its bounds; for there is a term from which it changeth, and a term to which it changes. * There is a change in the Underſtanding when we gain the knowledg of a thing, which was unknown to us before; or when we actually conſider a thing which we did not know before, tho we had the Principles of the Knowledg of it; or, when we know that diſtinctly, which we before knew confuſedly. None of theſe can be aſcribed to God, without a manifeſt diſparagement of his infiniteneſs: Our knowledg indeed is alway arriving to us or flowing from us; we paſs from one degree to another, from worſe to beter, or from better to worſe; but God loſes nothing by the Ages that are run, nor will gain any thing by the Ages that are to come. If there were a variation in the knowledg of God, by the daily and hourly Changes in the World, he would grow wiſer than he was, he was not then perfectly wiſe before. A Change in the objects known, infers not any change in the underſtanding exerciſed about them; the Wheel moves round, the Spokes that are loweſt, are preſently higheſt, and preſently return to be low again; but the eye that beholds them, changes not with the motion of the Wheels. Gods knowledg admits no more of increaſe or decreaſe, than his Eſſence doth; Since God knows by his Eſſence, and the Eſſence of God is God himſelf, his knowledg muſt be void of any Change. The knowledg of poſſible things ariſing from the knowledg of his own power cannot be changed, unleſs his power be chang'd, and God become weak and impotent; the knowledg of future things cannot be chang'd, becauſe that knowledg ariſeth from his Will, which is irreverſible, the Counſel of the Lord that ſhall ſtand, Prov. 19. 21. So that if God can never decay into weakneſs, and never turn to inconſtancy, there can be no variation of his Knowledg. He knows what he can do, and he knows what he will do, and both theſe being immutable, his Knowledg muſt conſequently be ſo too. It was not neceſſary that this or that Creature ſhould be, and therefore it was not neceſſary that God ſhould know this or that Creature with a knowledg of Viſion; but after the Will of God had determin'd the exiſtence of this or that Creature, his knowledg being then determin'd to this or that object, did neceſſarily continue unchangeable. God therefore knows no more now; than he did before; and at the end of the World he ſhall know no more than he doth now; and from Eternity he knows no leſs than he doth now, and ſhall do to Eternity. Tho things paſs into being and out of Being, the knowledg of God doth not vary with them, for he knows them as well before they were, as when they are; and knows them as well when they are paſt, as when they are preſent.

Propo-

Propoſition, VII. God knows all things perpetually, i. e. in act. Since he knows by his Eſſence, he always knows, becauſe his Eſſence never ceaſeth, but is a pure act; ſo that he doth not know only in habit, but in act. Men that have the knowledg of ſome Art or Science, have it always in habit, tho when they are a ſleep they have it not in act: A Muſitian hath the habit of Muſick, but doth not ſo much as think of it when his Senſes are bound up. But God is an unſleepy eye *, he never ſlumbers nor ſleeps; he never ſlumbers, in regard of his providence, and therefore never ſlumbers in regard of his knowledg. He knows not himſelf, nor any other Creature more perfectly at one time than at another; he is perpetually in the act of knowing, as the Sun is in the act of ſhining; the Sun never ceas'd to ſhine in one or other part of the World, ſince it was firſt fixed in the Heavens; nor God to be in the act of knowledg, ſince he was God; and therefore ſince he always was, and always will be God, he always was, and always will be in the act of knowledg; always knowing his own Eſſence, he muſt alway actually know what hath been gone and ceaſ'd from Being, and what ſhall come and ariſe into Being. As a Watch-maker knows what Watch he intends to make; and after he hath made it, tho it be broken to pieces or conſumed by the Fire, he ſtill knows it, becauſe he knows the Copy of it in his own mind. Some therefore in regard of this perpetual act of the Divine Knowledg, have called God not Intellectus, but the intellection of intellections; we have no proper Engliſh Word to expreſs the act of the Underſtanding; as his power is co-eternal with him, ſo his knowledg; all times paſt, preſent and to come, are embrac'd in the boſom of his Underſtanding; he fixed all things in their Seaſons, that nothing new comes to him, nothing old paſſes from him *. What is done in a Thouſand years, is as actually preſent with his Knowledg, as what is done in one day, or in one Watch in the night, is with ours; Since a Thouſand years are no more to God than a day, or a Watch in the Night is to us, Pſal. 90. 4. God is in the higheſt degree of Being, and therefore in the higheſt degree of Underſtanding. Knowledg is one of the moſt perfect acts in any Creature. God therefore hath all Actual, as well as Eſſential and Habitual knowledg, his Underſtanding is infinite.

Plato, ἀκοίμητος Θεοῦ ὀφθαλμός

* Damianus.

IV. The fourth general, is Reaſons to prove this.

Reaſ. 1. God muſt know what any Creature knows, and more than any Creature knows. There is nothing done in the World, but is known by ſome Creature or other; every action is at leaſt known by the perſon that acts, and therefore known by the Creator, who cannot be exceeded by any of the Creatures, or all of them together; and every Creature is known by him, ſince every Creature is made by him. * And as God works all things by an infinite Power, ſo he knows all things by an Infinite Underſtanding.

* Gerhard.

1. The Perfection of God requires this. * All Perfections that include no Eſſential Defect, are formally in God; but knowledg includes no Eſſential Defect in it ſelf, therefore it is in God. Knowledg in it ſelf, is deſirable, and an excellency; ignorance is a defect; 'tis impoſſible that the leaſt grain of defect can be found in the moſt perfect Being. Since God is Wiſe, he muſt be Knowing; for Wiſdom muſt have knowledg for the Baſis of it, A Creature can no more be wiſe without knowledg, than he can be active without Strength. Now God is only Wiſe, Rom. 16. 27. And therefore only knowing in the higheſt degree of knowledg, incomprehenſibly beyond all degrees of Knowledg, becauſe infinite.

* Gamach in 1. part. Aquin. q. 14. cap. 1. p. 118, 119.

Again, the more Spiritual any thing is, the more Underſtanding it is. The dull Body underſtands nothing; Senſe perceives, but the Underſtanding faculty is ſeated in the Soul, which is of a ſpiritual nature, which knows things that are preſent, remembers things that are paſt, foreſees many things to come. What is the property of a ſpiritual nature, muſt be in a moſt eminent manner, in the ſupream Spirit of the World, that is, in the higheſt degree of Spirituality, and moſt remote from any matter.

Again, nothing can enjoy other things, but by ſome kind of underſtanding them; God hath the higheſt enjoyment of himſelf, of all things he hath created, of all the Glory that accrues to him by them; nothing of perfection and Bleſſedneſs can be wanting to him. Felicity doth not conſiſt with ignorance, and all imperfect knowledg is a degree of ignorance: God therefore doth perfectly know himſelf, and all things from whence he deſigns any glory to himſelf. The moſt noble manner of acting acting muſt be aſcribed to God, as being the moſt noble and excellent Being; to act by Knowledg, is the moſt excellent manner of acting; God hath therefore, not only Knowledg, but the moſt excellent manner of Knowledg; for as it is better to know than to be ignorant, ſo it is better to know in the moſt excellent manner, than to have a mean and low kind of Knowledg; His Knowledg therefore muh be every way as perfect as his Eſſence, infinite as well as that. An infinite nature muſt have an infinite knowledg: A God ignorant of any thing, cannot be counted infinite, for he is not infinite to whom any degree of Perfection is wanting.

2. All the knowledg in any Creature is from God. And you muſt allow God a greater and more perfect knowledg than any Creature hath, yea, than all creatures have. All the drops of knowledg any Creature hath, come from God; and all the knowledg in every Creature, that ever was, is, or ſhall be in the whole Maſs, was derived from him. If all thoſe ſeveral Drops in particular Creatures, were collected into one Spirit; into one Creature, it would be an unconceivable knowledg, yet ſtill lower than what the Author of all that knowledg hath; for God cannot give more knowledg than he hath himſelf; nor is the Creature capable of receiving ſo much knowledg as God hath. As the Creature is uncapable of receiving ſo much power as God hath, for then it would be Almighty; ſo it is uncapable of receiving ſo much knowledg as God hath, for then it would be God. Nothing can be made by God equal to him in any thing; if any thing could be made as knowing as God, it would be eternal as God, it would be the cauſe of all things as God. The Knowledg that we poor Worms have, is an Argument God uſes for the aſſerting the greatneſs of his own knowledg, Pſal. 94. 10. He that teaches man knowledg, ſhall not he know? Man hath here Knowledg aſcribed to him, the Author of this knowledg is God, he furniſht him with it, and therefore doth in a higher manner poſſeſs it; and much more than can fall under the comprehenſion of any Creature; as the Sun enlightens all things, but hath more Light in it ſelf than it darts upon the Earth or the Heavens; and ſhall not God eminently contain all that knowledg he imparts to the Creatures, and infinitely more exact and comprehenſive?

3. The accuſations of Conſcience, evidence Gods knowledg of all actions of all his Creatures. Doth not Conſcience check for the moſt ſecret Sins, to which none are privy but a mans ſelf; the whole World beſide being ignorant of his Crime? Do not the fears of another Judg gall the heart? If a Judgment above him be fear'd, an Underſtanding above him diſcerning their Secrets is confeſt by thoſe fears; whence can thoſe horrors ariſe, if there be not a Superior that underſtands and records the Crime? What perfection of the Divine Being can this relate unto, but Omniſcience? What other Attribute is to be feared, if God were defective in this?

The condemnation of us by our own Hearts, when none in the World can condemn us, renders it legible, that there is one greater than our hearts, in reſpect of Knowledg, who knows all things. 1 John 3. 20 Conſcience would be a vain Principle, and ſtingleſs without this; it would be an eaſie matter to ſilence all its accuſations, and mockingly laugh in the face of its ſevereſt frowns. What need any trouble themſelves, if none knows their Crimes but themſelves? Conceal'd Sins, knawing the Conſcience, are Arguments of Gods Omniſcience of all preſent and paſt actions.

4. God is the firſt cauſe of every thing, every Creature is his Production. Since all Creatures, from the higheſt Angel to the loweſt Worm, exiſt by the power of God; if God underſtands his own Power and Excellency, nothing can be hid from him, that was brought forth by that power, as well as nothing can be unknown to him, that that power is able to produce. * If God knows nothing beſides himſelf, he may then believe there is nothing beſides himſelf; we ſhall then fancy a God miſerably miſtaken: if he knows nothing beſides himſelf, then things were not Created by him, or not underſtandingly and voluntarily Created, but drop'd from him before he was aware. To think that the firſt cauſe of all ſhould be ignorant of thoſe things he is the cauſe of, is to make him not a voluntary, but natural Agent, and therefore neceſſary; and then that the Creature came from him as Light from the Sun, and moiſture from the Water; this would be an abſurd opinion of the Worlds

* Bradwardin. p. 6.

Cre-

Creation; if God be a voluntary Agent, as he is, he muſt be an intelligent Agent. The Faculty of Will is not in any Creature, without that of Underſtanding alſo: If God be an intelligent Agent, his knowledg muſt extend as far as his operation, and every object of his operation, unleſs we imagine God hath loſt his Memory, in that long Tract of time ſince the firſt Creation of them. An Artificer cannot be ignorant of his own Work; If God knows himſelf, he knows himſelf to be a Cauſe; how can he know himſelf to be a Cauſe, unleſs he know the Effects he is the Cauſe of? One relation implies another; a man cannot know himſelf to be a Father, unleſs he hath a Child, becauſe it is a name of relation, and in the notion of it refers to another. The name of cauſe is a name of relation, and implies an effect; If God therefore know himſelf in all his Perfections, as the Cauſe of things, he muſt know all his acts, what his Wiſdom contrived, what his Counſel determin'd, and what his Power effected. The knowledg of God is to be ſuppos'd in a free determination of himſelf; and that knowledg muſt be perfect, both of the object, act, and all the circumſtances of it. How can his Will freely produce any thing that was not firſt known in his Underſtanding? From this the Prophet argues the underſtanding of God, and the unſearchableneſs of it, becauſe he is the Creator of the ends of the earth, Iſa. 40. 28. and the ſame reaſon David gives of Gods Knowledg of him, and of every thing he did, and that afar off, becauſe he was formed by him, Pſal. 139. 2, 15, 16. As the perfect making of things only belongs to God; ſo doth the perfect knowledg of things; 'tis abſurd to think, that God ſhould be ignorant of what he hath given Being to; that he ſhould not know all the Creatures and their qualities, the Plants and their vertues; as that a man ſhould not know the Letters that are formed by him in Writing. Every thing bears in it ſelf the mark of Gods Perfections; and ſhall not God know the repreſentation of his own vertue?

5. Without this Knowledg, God could no more be the Governour, than he could be the Creator of the World. Knowledg is the Baſis of Providence; to Know things, is before the Government of things; a practical knowledg cannot be without a theoretical knowledg. Nothing could be directed to its proper end, without the knowledg of the nature of it, and its ſuitableneſs to anſwer that end for which it is intended. As every thing, even the minuteſt, falls under the conduct of God, ſo every thing falls under the knowledg of God. A blind Coach-man is not able to hold the Reins of his Horſes, and direct them in right Paths: Since the Providence of God is about particulars, his Knowledg muſt be about particulars; he could not elſe govern them in particular; nor could all things be ſaid to depend upon him in their Being and Operations. Providence depends upon the knowledg of God, and the exerciſe of it upon the Goodneſs of God; it cannot be Without Underſtanding and Will; Underſtanding to know what is convenient, and Will to perform it. When our Saviour therefore ſpeaks of Providence, he intimates theſe two, in a ſpecial manner, Your Heavenly Father knows that you have need of theſe things, Mat. 6. 32. and goodneſs, in Luke. 11. 13. The reaſon of Providence is ſo joyned with Omniſcience, that they cannot be ſeparated: What a kind of God would he be that were ignorant of thoſe things that were governed by him? The aſcribing this Perfection to him, aſſerts his Providence; for it is as eaſie for one that knows all things, to look over the whole World, if writ with Monoſyllables, in every little particular of it; as it is with a man to take a view of one Letter in an Alphabet.

* Again if God were not Omniſcient, how could he reward the Good, and puniſh the Evil? the works of men are either rewardable or puniſhable; not only according to their outward circumſtances, but inward Principles and Ends, and the degrees of Venom lurking in the heart. The exact diſcerning of theſe, without a poſſibility to be deceived, is neceſſary to paſs a right and infallible Judgment upon them, and proportion the cenſure and puniſhment to the Crime: Without ſuch a Knowledg and diſcerning, men would not have their due; nay, a Judgment juſt for the matter, would be unjuſt in the manner, becauſe unjuſtly paſt, without an underſtanding of the merit of the Cauſe. 'Tis neceſſary therefore that the Supream Judg of the World ſhould not be thought to be blindfold, when he diſtributes his Rewards and Puniſhments, and muffle his face when he paſſes his Sentence. 'Tis neceſſary to aſcribe to him the knowledg of mens thoughts and intentions; the ſecret wills and aims; the hidden works of darkneſs in every mans Conſcience, becauſe every mans work is to be meaſured by the Will and inward frame. 'Tis neceſſary that he ſhould perpetually retain all thoſe things in the indelible and plain records of his Memory, that there may not be any work without a juſt proportion of what is due to it. This is the glory of God to diſcover the ſecrets of all hearts at laſt, as 1 Cor. 4. 5. the Lord ſhall bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and will make manifeſt the Counſels of all hearts, and then ſhall every man have praiſe of God. This knowledg fits him to be a Judg; the reaſon why the ungodly ſhall not ſtand in Judgment, is becauſe God knows their ways, which is implyed in his *knowing the way of the righteous. * Pſal. 1. 5, 6.

Sabund Tit. 84. much changed.

I now proceed to the Uſe.

USE the firſt, is of information or inſtruction. If God hath all knowledg; then

I. Jeſus Chriſt is not a meer Creature. The two Titles of Wonderful Counſellor and Mighty God, are given him in conjunction, Iſa. 9. 6. not only the Angel of the Covenant, as he is called, Malach. 3. 1. or the Executor of his Counſels, but a Counſellor, in conjunction with him in Counſel as well as Power: This Title is ſuperior to any Title given to any of the Prophets in regard of their Predictions; and therefore I ſhould take it rather as the note of his perfect underſtanding, than of his perfect teaching and diſcovering; as Calvin doth: He is not only the Revealer of what he knows, ſo were the Prophets according to their meaſures; but the Counſellor of what he revealed, having a perfect underſtanding of all the Counſels of God, as being intereſted in them, as the Mighty God. He calls himſelf by the peculiar Title of God, and declares that he will manifeſt himſelf by this Prerogative to all the Churches, Rev. 2. 23. And all the Churches ſhall know that I am he, which ſearches the Reins and Hearts, the moſt hidden operations of the minds of men that lye locked up from the view of all the World beſides. And this was no new thing to him, after his Aſcenſion; for the ſame Perfection he had in the time of his earthly fleſh, Luke 6. 8. he knew their Thoughts; his eyes are therefore compar'd, Cant. 5. 12. to Doves eyes, which are clear and quick; and to a flame of fire, Rev. 1. 14. not only heat to conſume his Enemies, but Light to diſcern their contrivances againſt the Church; he pierceth, by his knowledg, into all parts, as fire pierceth into the cloſeſt particle of Iron, and ſeparates between the moſt united parts of Metals; and ſome tell us, he is called a Roe, from the perſpicacity of his Sight, as well as from the ſwiftneſs of his motion.

1. He hath a perfect Knowledg of the Father; he knows the Father, and none elſe knows the Father; Angels know God, men know God, but Chriſt in a peculiar manner knows the Father; no man knows the Son but the Father; neither knows any man the Father, ſave the Son, Mat. 11. 27. he knows ſo, as that he learns not from any other; he doth perfectly comprehend him, which is beyond the reach of any Creature, with the addition of all the Divine Vertue; not becauſe of any incapacity in God to reveal, but the incapacity of the Creature to receive; finite is uncapable of being made infinite, and therefore incapable of comprehending infinite; ſo that Chriſt cannot be Deus factus, made of a Creature a God, to comprehend God; for then of finite he would become infinite, which is a contradiction. As the Spirit is God, becauſe he ſearches the deep things of God, 1 Cor. 2. 10. that is, comprehends them *, as the Spirit of a man doth the things of a man (now the Spirit of man underſtands what it Thinks, and what it Wills) ſo the Spirit of God underſtands what is in the Underſtanding of God, and what is in the Will of God. He hath an abſolute knowledg aſcrib'd to him, and ſuch as could not be aſcrib'd to any thing but a Divinity: Now if the Spirit knows the deep things of God, and takes from Chriſt what he ſhews to us of him, John 16. 15. he cannot be ignorant of thoſe things himſelf; he muſt know the depths of God that affords us that Spirit, that is not ignorant of any of the Counſels of the Fathers Will; ſince he comprehends the Father, and the Father him, he is in himſelf infinite; for God whoſe Eſſence is infinite, is infinitely knowable; but no Created underſtanding can infinitely know God. The infiniteneſs of the object hinders it from being underſtood by any thing that is not infinite. Though a Creature ſhould underſtand all the works of God, yet it cannot be therefore ſaid to underſtand God him- * Petav. Theo. dogmat. Tom. 1. p. 467. &c.

himself: As tho' I may understand all the volitions and motions of my Soul, yet it doth not follow that therefore I understand the whole nature and substance of my Soul; or if a man understood all the effects of the Sun, that therefore he understands fully the nature of the Sun. But Christ knows the Father, he lay in the Bosom of the Father, was in the greatest intimacy with him, John 1. 18. and from this intimacy with him, he saw him and knew him; so he knows God as much as he is knowable; and therefore knows him perfectly as the Father knows himself by a comprehensive Vision; this is the knowledg of God wherein properly the infiniteness of his understanding appears: And our Saviour uses such expressions which manifest his Knowledg to be above all Created Knowledg, and such a manner of knowledg of the Father, as the Father hath of him.

2. Christ knows all Creatures. That knowledg which comprehends God, comprehends all Created things as they are in God; 'tis a knowledg that sinks to the depths of his Will, and therefore extenbs to all the acts of his Will in Creation and Providence; by knowing the Father he knows all things that are contained in the Vertue, Power and Will of God; whatsoever the Father doth, that the Son doth, John 5. 19. As the Father therefore knows all things he is the cause of, so doth the Son know all things he is the worker of; as the perfect making of all things belongs to both, so doth the perfect knowledg of all things belong to both; where the action is the same, the knowledge is the same. Now the Father did not Create one thing, and Christ another; but all things were Created by him, and for him: all things both in Heaven and Earth, Col. 1. 16. As he knows himself the cause of all things, and the end of all things, he cannot be ignorant of all things that were effected by him, and are referred to him; he knows all Creatures in God, as he knows the Essence of God, and knows all Creatures in themselves, as he Knows his own acts and the fruits of his Power; those things must be in his Knowledg that were in his Power, all the Treasures of the Wisdom and Knowledg of God are hid in him, Col. 2. 3. Now it is not the Wisdom of God to know in part, and be in part ignorant. He cannot be ignorant of any thing, since there is nothing but what was made by him, John 1. 3. and since it is less to know than Create; for we know many things which we cannot make. If he be the Creator, he cannot but be the discerner of what he made; this is a part of Wisdom belonging to an Artificer to know the nature and quality of what he makes. Since he cannot be ignorant of what he furnisht with Being, and with various endowments, he must know them not only universally, but particularly.

Petav. Theolo: Dogmat. Tom. 1. P. 467.

3. Christ knows the hearts and affections of men. Peter scruples not to ascribe to him this knowledg, among the knowledg of all other things, John 21. 17. Lord thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love thee. From Christs knowledg of all things, he concludes his knowledg of the inward frames and dispositions of men. To search the heart, is the sole Prerogative of God, 1 Kings 8. 39. For thou, even thou only knowest the hearts of all the Children of men: Shall we take (only) here with a limitation, as some that are no Friends to the Deity of Christ would, and say, God only knows the hearts of men from himself, and by his own infinite vertue? Why may we not take (only) in other places with a limitation, and make nonsence of it, as Psal. 86. 10. Thou art God alone. Is it to be understood, that God is God alone from himself, but other Gods may be made by him, and so there may be numberless infinites? As God is God alone, so that none can be God but himself; so he alone knows all the hearts of all the Children of men, and none but he can know them; this knowledg is from his nature. * The reason why God knows the hearts of men, is rendred in the Scripture double, because he created them, and because he is present every where, Psal. 33. 13, 15. these two are by the Confession of Christians and Pagans universally received as the proper Characters of Divinity, whereby the Deity is distinguish'd from all Creatures. Now when Christ ascribes this to himself, and that with such an Emphasis, that nothing greater than that could be urg'd, as he doth, Rev. 2. 23. we must conclude that he is of the same Essence with God, one with him in his Nature, as well as one with him in his Attributes. God only knows the hearts of the Children of men; there is the unity of God: Christ searches the Hearts and Reins; there is a distinction of persons in an oneness of Essence; he knows the hearts of all men, not only of those that were with him in the time of the Fleſh, that have been and ſhall be, ſince his Aſcenſion; but of thoſe that lived and died before his coming, becauſe he is to be the Judg of all that lived before his humiliation on earth, as well as after his exaltation in Heaven. It pertains to him as a Judg, to know diſtinctly the merits of the Cauſe of which he is to judg; and this excellency of ſearching the hearts is mention'd by himſelf with relation to his judicial Proceeding, I will give to every one of you according to your Works. And tho' a Creature may know what is in a mans heart, if it be revealed to him, yet ſuch a knowledg is a knowledg only by report, not by inſpection; yet this latter is aſcrib'd to Chriſt, John 2. 24, 25. he knew all men, and needed not that any ſhould teſtify of man, for he knew what was in man; he looked into their hearts. The Evangeliſt to allay the amazement of men at his relation of our Saviours knowledg of the inward falſity of thoſe that made a ſplendid Profeſſion of him; doth not ſay, the Father revealed it to him; but intimates it to be an unſeparable Property of his nature. No covering was ſo thick as to bound his eye; no pretence ſo glittering as to impoſe upon his underſtanding. Thoſe that made a Profeſſion of him, and could not be diſcerned by the eye of man from his faithfulleſt Attendants, were in their inſide known to him plainer than their outſide was to others; and therefore he committed not himſelf to them, tho' they ſeemed to be perſwaded to a real belief in his name, becauſe of the Power of his Miracles; and were touched with an admiration of him, as ſome great Prophet, and perhaps declared him to be the Meſſiah, ver. 23.

* Placeus de deitate Christi.

4. He had a foreknowledg of the particular inclinations of men, before thoſe diſtinct inclinations were in actual Being in them. This is plainly aſſerted, John 6. 64. but there are ſome of you that believe not, for Jeſus knew from the beginning who they were that believed not, and who ſhould betray him. When Chriſt aſſured them from the knowledg of the hearts of his followers, that ſome of them were void of that Faith they profeſt; The Evangeliſt to ſtop their amazement, that Chriſt ſhould have ſuch a power and vertue; adds, that he knew from the beginning, that he had not only a preſent knowledg, but a foreknowledg of every ones inclination; he knew not only now and then what was in the Hearts of his Diſciples, but from the beginning of any ones giving up their Names to him; he knew whether it were a pretence or ſincere, he knew who ſhould betray him, and there was no mans inward affection but was foreſeen by him. * From the beginning, whether we underſtand it from the beginning of the World, as when Chriſt ſaith concerning Divorces, from the beginning it was not ſo, that is, from the beginning of the World, from the beginning of the Law of Nature; or from the beginning of their attending him; as it is taken, Luke 1. 2. he had a certain preſcience of the inward diſpoſitions of mens hearts, and their ſucceeding ſentiments; he foreknew the treacherous heart of Judas in the midſt of his ſplendid Profeſſion; and diſcern'd his reſolution in the root, and his thought in the confus'd Chaos of his natural corruption; he knew how it would ſpring up, before it did ſpring up, before Judas had any diſtinct and formal conception of it himſelf, or before there was any actual preparation to a reſolve. Peters denyal was not unknown to him, when Peter had a preſent reſolution, and no queſtion ſpake it in the preſent ſincerity of his Soul, never to forſake him; he foreknew what would be the reſult of that Poyſon which lurkt in Peters nature, before Peter himſelf imagin'd any thing of it; he diſcern'd Peters Apoſtatizing heart, when Peter reſolved the contrary; our Saviours Prediction was accompliſht, and Peters valiant reſolution languiſht into Cowardice.

'Ἐξ ἀρχῆς.

Shall we then conclude our Bleſſed Saviour a Creature, who perfectly and only knew the Father, who knew all Creatures, who had all the Treaſures of Wiſdom and Knowledg, who knew the inward motions of mens hearts by his own Vertue, and had not only a preſent Knowledg, but a Preſcience of them.

Inform. II. The ſecond Inſtruction from this poſition, That God hath an infinite Knowledg and Underſtanding. Then there is a Providence exercis'd by God in the World, and that about every thing. As Providence infers Omniſcience as the guide of it; ſo Omniſcience infers Providence as the end of it. What Exerciſe would there be of this Attribute, but in the Government of the World? To this infinite Perfection refers, Jer. 17. 10. I the Lord ſearch the heart, I try the Reins, to give

give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings. He ſearches the heart to reward, he rewards every man according to the rewardableneſs of his actions; his Government therefore extends to every man in the World; there is no heart but he ſearches, therefore no heart but he governs; to what purpoſe elſe would be this Knowledg of all his Creatures? for a meer Contemplation of them? no, What pleaſure can that be to God, who knows himſelf, who is infinitely more excellent than all his Creatures? Doth he know them, to neglect all care of them? this muſt be either out of Sloth; but how incompatible is lazineſs to a pure and infinite activity? or out of Majeſty, but 'tis no leſs for the glory of his Majeſty to conduct them, than it was for the glory of his Power to erect them into Being; he that counts nothing unworthy of his Arms to make, nothing unworthy of his Underſtanding to know; why ſhould he count any thing unworthy of his Wiſdom to govern? If he knows them, to neglect them, it muſt be becauſe he hath no Will to it, or no Goodneſs for it; either of theſe would be a ſtain upon God; to want Goodneſs is to be Evil, and to want Will is to be negligent and ſcornful, which are inconſiſtent with an Infinite, Active Goodneſs. Doth a Father neglect providing for the wants of the Family which he knows? or a Phyſician the cure of that Diſeaſe he underſtands? God is Omniſcient, he therefore ſees all things; he is good, he doth not therefore neglect any thing, but conducts it to the end he appointed it. There is nothing ſo little that can eſcape his Knowledg, and therefore nothing ſo little but falls under his Providence; nothing ſo ſublime, as to be above his Underſtanding; and therefore nothing can be without the compaſs of his Conduct; nothing can eſcape his Eye, and therefore nothing can eſcape his Care; nothing is known by him in vain, as nothing was made by him in vain; there muſt be acknowledg'd therefore ſome end of this knowledg of all his Creatures.

Inſtruct. III. Hence them will follow the certainty of a day of Judgment. To what purpoſe can we imagine this attribute of Omniſcience ſo often declared and urg'd in Scripture to our conſideration, but in order to a government of our practice, and a future Tryal? Every Perfection of the Divine Nature hath ſent out brighter Rays in the World, than this of his Infinite Knowledg; his Power hath been ſeen in the Being of the World, and his Wiſdom in the Order and Harmony of the Creatures; his Grace and Mercy hath been plentifully poured out in the miſſion of a Redeemer; and his Juſtice hath been elevated by the Dying-Groans of the Son of God upon the Croſs. But hath his Omniſcience yet met with a Glory proportionable to that of his other Perfections? all the Attributes of God that have appeared in ſome beautiful glimmerings in the World, wait for a more full manifeſtation in Glory as the Creatures do for the manifeſtation of the Sons of God, Rom. 8. 19. But eſpecially this, ſince it hath been leſs evidenced than others, and as much or more abuſed than any; it expects therefore a publick righting in the eye of the World. There have been indeed ſome few ſparks of this Perfection ſenſibly ſtruck out now and then in the World, in ſome horrors of Conſcience, which have made men become their own Accuſers of unknown Crimes, in bringing out hidden Wickedneſs to a publick view, by various Providences. This hath alſo been the deſign of ſprinklings of Judgments upon ſeveral Generations, as Pſal. 90. 8. We are conſumed by thy Anger, and by thy Wrath we are troubled, thou haſt ſet our Iniquities before thee, and our ſecret Sins in the light of thy Countenance. The word עלומנו ſignifies Youth, as well as ſecret, i. e. Sins committed long ago, and that with ſecrecy. By this he hath manifeſted, that ſecret Sins are not hid from his eye: Tho' inward Terrors and outward Judgments have been let looſe to worry men into a belief of this, yet the corruptions of men would ſtill keep a contrary notion in their minds, that God hath forgotten, that he hides his face from Tranſgreſſion, and will not regard their Impiety, Pſal. 10. 11. There muſt therefore be a time of Tryal for the publick demonſtration of this Excellency, that it may receive its due Honour by a full Teſtimony, that no ſecrecy can be a ſhelter from it. As his Juſtice, which conſiſts in giving every one his due, could not be Glorified, unleſs men were called to an account for their actions; ſo neither would his Omniſcience appear in its illuſtrious colours, without ſuch a manifeſtation of the ſecret motions of mens hearts, and of Villanies done under Lock and Key, when none were conſcious ſcious to them, but the committers of them. Now the laſt Judgment is the time appointed for the opening of the Books, Dan. 7. 10. The Book of Gods Records, and Conſcience the counter-part, were never fully opened and read before, only now and then ſome pages turn'd to, in particular Judgments; and out of thoſe Books ſhall men be judged according to their Works, Rev. 20. 12. Then ſhall the defaced Sins be brought with all their circumſtances to every mans memory; the Counſels of mens hearts fled far from their preſent remembrance; all the habitual knowledg they had of their own actions, ſhall by Gods knowledg of them be excited to an actual review; and their works not only made manifeſt to themſelves, but notorious to the World: All the Words, Thoughts, Deeds of men ſhall be brought forth into the light of their own minds, by the infinite Light of Gods underſtanding reflecting on them. His Knowledg renders him an unerring Witneſs, as well as his Juſtice a ſwift Witneſs, Mal. 3. 5. a ſwift Witneſs, becauſe he ſhall without any circuit, or length of Speech, convince their Conſciences by an inward illumination of them, to take notice of the blackneſs and deformity of their hearts and works. In all Judgments God is ſomewhat known to be the ſearcher of hearts; the time of Judgment is the time of his remembrance, Hoſ. 8. 13. Now will he remember their iniquity, and viſit their ſins; but the great inſtant, or now, of the full glorifying it, is the grand day of account. This Attribute muſt have a time for its full Diſcovery; and no time can be fit for it, but a time of a general reckoning. Juſtice cannot be exercis'd without Omniſcience; for as Juſtice is a giving to every one his due, ſo there muſt be knowledg to diſcern what is due to every man; the ſearching the heart is in order to the rewarding the works.

4. This Perfection in God, gives us ground to believe a Reſurrection. Who can think this too hard for his Power, ſince not the leaſt Atome of the Duſt of our Bodies can eſcape his Knowledg? An infinite Underſtanding comprehends every mite of a departed Carkaſs; this will not appear impoſſible nor irrational to any upon a ſerious conſideration of this excellency in God: The body is periſhed, the matter of it hath been ſince clothed with different forms and figures; part of it hath been made the body of a Worm, part of it returned to the Duſt that hath been blown away by the Wind, part of it hath been concocted in the Bodies of Cannibals, Fiſh, ravenous Beaſts; the Spirits have evaporated into Air, part of the Blood melted into Water; what then, is the matter of the body annihilated? is that wholly periſhed? no, the foundation remains, tho' it hath put on variety of forms; the Body of Abel, the firſt man that died, nor the body of Adam, are not to this day reduc'd to nothing; Indeed the quantity and the quality of thoſe bodies, have been loſt by various changes they have paſt though ſince their diſſolution; but the matter or ſubſtance of them remains intire, and is not capable to be deſtroy'd by all thoſe transforming alterations, in ſo long a revolution of Time.

The body of a man in his infancy and his old Age, if it were Methuſelah's, is the ſame in the foundation in thoſe multitude of years; tho' the quantity of it be alter'd; the quality different, tho' the colour and other things be changed in it; the matter of this body remains the ſame among all the alterations after Death. And can it be ſo mixed with other Natures and Creatures, as that it is paſt finding out by an Infinite Underſtanding? Can any particle of this matter eſcape the eye of him that makes and beholds all thoſe various alterations, and where every mite of the ſubſtance of thoſe bodies is particulary lodged; ſo as that he cannot compact it together again for a habitation of that Soul, that many a year before fled from it? * Since the Knowledg of God is infinite, and his Providence extenſive over the leaſt as well as the greateſt parts of the World; he muſt needs know the leaſt as well as the greateſt of his Creatures in their Beginning, Progreſs and Diſſolution; all the forms through which the Bodies of all Creatures roul, the particular inſtants of time, and the particular place when and where thoſe changes are made, they are all preſent with him; and therefore when the Revolution of time allotted by him for the reunion of Souls and Deceaſed Bodies is come, it cannot be doubted but out of the Treaſures of his Knowledg he can call forth every part of the matter of the Bodies of men, from the firſt to the laſt man that expired, and ſtrip it of all all those forms and figures, which it shall then have, to compact it to be a lodging for that Soul which before it entertain'd; and tho' the Bodies of men have been devour'd by Wild Beasts in the Earth, and Fish in the Sea, and been lodg'd in the Stomachs of Barbarous Men-eaters, the matter is not lost. There is but little of the Food we take, that is turned into the substance of our own bodies; that which is not proper for nourishment, which is the greatest part, is separated, and concocted, and rejected; whatsoever objections are made, are answered by this Attribute. Nothing hinders a God of Infinite Knowledg from discerning every particle of the matter, wheresoever it is dispos'd; and since he hath an eye to discern, and a hand to recollect and unite, what difficulty is there in believing this Article of the Christian Faith? he that questions this reveal'd Truth of the Resurrection of the Body, must question Gods Omniscience as well as his Omnipotence and Power.

* Daillé Serm. 15. p. 21, 22, 23, 24.

5. What semblance of reason is there to expect a justification in the sight of God by any thing in our selves. Is there any action done by any of us, but upon a scrutiny we may find flaws and deficiency in it? What then? shall not this Perfection of God discern them? the motes that escape our eyes cannot escape his, 1 John 3. 20. God is greater than our hearts, and knows all things; so that it is in vain for any man to flatter himself with the rectitude of any work; or enter into any debate with him who can bring a Thousand Articles against us, out of his own Infinite Records unknown to us, and unanswerable by us. If Conscience, a Representative or Counterpart of Gods Omniscience in our own Bosoms, find nothing done by us, but in a Copy short of the Original, and beholds, if not blurs, yet Imperfections in the best actions, God must much more discern them; we never knew a Copy equally exact with the Original; If our own Conscience be as a Thousand Witnesses, the Knowledg of God is as Millions of Witnesses against us: If our Corruption be so great, and our Holiness so low in our own eyes, how much greater must the one, and how much meaner must the other appear in the eyes of God? God hath an unerring Eye to see, as well as an unspotted Holiness to hate, and an unbribable Justice to punish; he wants no more Understanding to know the shortness of our actions, than he doth Holiness to enact, and Power to execute his Laws: Nay, suppose we could recollect many actions, wherein there were no spot visible to us; the consideration of this Attribute should scare us from resting upon any or all of them; since it is the Lord that by a piercing eye sees and judges according to the heart, and not according to appearance. The least crookedness of a Stick, not sensible to an acute eye, yet will appear when laid to the Line; and the impurity of a Counterfeit Metal be manifest when applyed to the Touchstone; so will the best action of any meer man in the World, when it comes to be measur'd in Gods Knowledg by the strait Line of his Law.

Let every man therefore, as Paul, though he should know nothing by himself, think not himself therefore justified; Since it is the Lord, who is of an infinite Understanding, that Judgeth, 1 Cor. 4. 4. A man may be justified in his own sight, but not any living man can be justified in the sight of God, Psal. 143. 2. in his Sight, whose eye pierceth into our unknown secrets and frames: It was therefore well answered of a good man upon his Death-bed, being ask't What he was afraid of? I have laboured (saith he) with all my strength to observe the commands of God; but since I am a man, I am ignorant whether my works are acceptable to God, since God Judges in one manner, and I in another manner. Let the consideration therefore of this Attribute, make us joyn with Job in his Resolution, Job 9. 21. tho' we were perfect, yet would we not know our own Souls. I would not stand up to Plead any of my vertues before God. Let us therefore look after another Righteousness, wherein the exact eye of the Divine Omniscience, we are sure, can discern no stain or crookedness.

6. What honourable and adoring Thoughts ought we to have of God for this Perfection? Do we not honour a man that is able to Predict; Do we not think it a great part of Wisdom? Have not all Nations regarded such a faculty, as a character and a mark of Divinity? There is something more ravishing in the knowknowledg of future things, both to the perſon that knows them, and the perſon that hears them, than there is in any other kind of knowledg; whence the greateſt Prophets have been accounted in the greateſt veneration, and men have thought it a way to glory to Divine and Predict: Hence it was that the Devils and Pagan Oracles gained ſo much Credit; upon this Foundation were they eſtabliſhed, and the Enemies of Mankind owned for a true God; I ſay, from the Prediction of future things, tho their Oracles were often ambiguous, many times falſe; yet thoſe poor Heathens framed many ingenious excuſes, to free their Adored Gods from the charge of falſity and impoſture: And ſhall we not adore the true God, the God of Iſrael, the God bleſſed for ever, for this incommunicable Property, whereby he flies above the Wings of the Wind, the underſtandings of men and Cherubims?

Sabund Theol. natural. Tit. 84. ſomewhat changed.

* Conſider how great it is to know the Thoughts, and Intentions, and Works of one man, from the beginning to the end of his life; to foreknow all theſe before the Being of this man, when he was lodged afar off in the Loyns of his Anceſtors, yea of Adam; how much greate is it to foreknow and know the Thoughts and Works of three or four men, of a whole Village or Neighbourhood? 'Tis greater ſtill to know the imaginations and actions of ſuch a multitude of men as are contained in London, Paris, or Conſtantinople; how much greater ſtill to know the intentions and practices, the clandeſtine contrivances of ſo many Millions, that have, do, or ſhall ſwarm in all quarters of the World, every perſon of them having Millions of Thoughts, Deſires, Deſigns, Affections and Actions!

Let this Attribute then make the bleſſed God honourable in our eyes, and adorable in all our affections; ſpecially ſince it is an Excellency which hath ſo lately diſcovered it ſelf, in bringing to Light the hidden things of darkneſs, in opening, and in part confounding the wicked Devices of Bloody men. Eſpecially let us adore God for it, and admire it in God, ſince it is ſo neceſſary a Perfection, that without it the goodneſs of God had been impotent, and could not have relieved us; for what help can a diſtreſſed perſon expect from a man of the ſweeteſt diſpoſition, and the ſtrongeſt arm, if the eyes which ſhould diſcover the danger, and direct the defence and reſcue, were cloſed up by blindneſs and darkneſs? Adore God for this wonderful Perfection.

7. In the conſideration of this excellent Attribute, what low thoughts ſhould we have of our own knowledg, and how humble ought we to be before God? There's nothing man is more apt to be proud of then his Knowledg; 'tis a Perfection he glories in; but if our own Knowledg of the little outſide and barks of things, puffs us up, the conſideration of the infiniteneſs of Gods Knowledg ſhould abate the Tumour: As our Beings are nothing in regard to the infiniteneſs of his Eſſence, ſo our Knowledg is nothing in regard of the vaſtneſs of his underſtanding: We have a ſpark of Being, but nothing to the heat of the Sun: We have a drop of Knowledg: but nothing to the Divine Ocean. What a vain thing is it for a ſhallow Brook to boaſt of its Streams before a Sea, whoſe depths are unfathomable? As it is a vanity to brag of our Strength when we remenber the Power of God; and of our Prudence, when we glance upon the Wiſdom of God; ſo 'tis no leſs a vanity to boaſt of our Knowledg, when we think of the Underſtanding and Knowledg of God.

Paſcall p. 170.

How hard is it for us to know *any thing? too much noiſe deafs us, and too much light dazels us, too much diſtance alienates the object from us, and too much nearneſs bars up our ſight from beholding it: When we think our ſelves to be near the knowledg of a thing, as a Ship to the Haven, a puff of Wind blows us away, and the object which we deſired to know, eternally flies from us; we burn with a deſire of knowledg, and yet are oppreſt with the darkneſs of ignorance; we ſpend our days more in dark Egypt, than in enlightened Goſhen. In what narrow bounds is all the knowledg of the moſt intelligent perſons included? * How few underſtand the exact Harmony of their own bodies, the nature of the life they have in common with other Animals? who underſtands the nature of his own faculties, how he Knows, and how he Wills, how the Underſtanding Propoſeth, and how the Will embraceth, how his ſpiritual Soul is united to his material Body, what the nature is of the operation of our Spirits? nay, who underſtands the nature of his own body,

* Amyrant. de Prædeſt. p. 116, 117. ſomewhat changed.

dy, the offices of his ſenſes, the motion of his Members, how they come to obey the command of the Will, and a Thouſand other things? What a vain, weak, and ignorant thing is man, when compar'd with God? Yet there is not a greater pride to be found among Devils, than among ignorant men with a little, very little flaſhy knowledg, ignorant man is as proud, as if he knew as God!

As the conſideration of Gods Omniſcience ſhould render him honourable in our eyes, ſo it ſhould render us vile in our own. God, becauſe of his knowledg, is ſo far from diſdaining his Creatures, that his Omniſcience is a Miniſter to his Goodneſs: No knowledg that we are poſſeſs'd of, ſhould make us ſwell with too high a conceit of our ſelves, and a diſdain of others. We have infinitely more of ignorance than knowledg. Let us therefore remember in all our thoughts of God, that he is God, and we are men; and therefore ought to be humble, as becomes men, and ignorant and fooliſh men to be; as weak Creatures ſhould lie low before an Almighty God, and impure Creatures before a Holy God, falſe Creatures before a Faithful God, finite Creatures before an infinite God; ſo ſhould ignorant Creatures before an All-Knowing God. All Gods Attributes teach admiring thoughts of God, and low thoughts of our ſelves.

8. It may inform us, how much this Attribute is injured in the World. The firſt error after Adams eating the forbidden Fruit, was the denyal of this, as well as the Omnipreſence of God, Gen. 3. 10. I heard thy voice in the Garden, and I hid my ſelf; as if the thickneſs of the Trees could ſcreen him from the eye of his Creator. And after Cains Murder; this is the firſt Perfection he affronts, Gen. 4. 9. Where is Abel thy Brother, ſaith God? how roundly doth he anſwer, I know not? As if God were as weak as man, to be put off with a Lye: Man doth as naturally hate this Perfection, as much as he cannot naturally but acknowledg it; he wiſhes God ſtript of this eminency, that he might be incapable to be an inſpector of his Crimes, and a ſearcher of the Cloſets of his heart: In wiſhing him deprived of this, there is a hatred of God himſelf; for it is a loathing an Eſſential Property of God, without which he would be a pitiful governour of the World. What a kind of God ſhould that be, of a Sinners wiſhing, that had wanted Eyes to ſee a Crime, and Righteouſneſs to puniſh it? The want of the conſideration of this Attribute, is the cauſe of all Sin in the World, Hoſ. 7. 2. They conſider not in their hearts that I remember all their Wickedneſs? they ſpeak not to their hearts, nor make any reflection upon the infiniteneſs of my Knowledg; 'tis a high contempt of God, as if he were an Idol, a ſenſeleſs Stock or Stone; in all evil practices this is denied: We know God ſees all things, yet we live and walk as if he knew nothing: We call him Omniſcient, and live as if he were ignorant; we ſay he is all eye, yet act as if he were wholly blind.

In particular, this Attribute is injured, By invading the peculiar rights of it, by preſuming on it, and by a practical denyal of it.

1. By invading the peculiar rights of it.

1. By invocation of Creatures. Praying to Saints, by the Romaniſts, is a diſparagement to this Divine Excellency; he that knows all things, is only fit to have the Petitions of men preſented to him; Prayer ſuppoſeth an Omniſcient Being, as the object of it; no other Being but God ought to have that honour acknowledged to it; no Underſtanding but his, is infinite; no other Preſence but his, is every where; to implore any deceaſed Creature for a ſupply of our wants, is to own in them a Property of the Deity; and make them Deities that were but men; and increaſe their glory by a diminution of Gods Honour, in aſcribing that Perfection to Creatures which belongs only to God. Alas! they are ſo far from underſtanding the deſires of our Souls, that they know not the words of our Lips: 'Tis againſt reaſon to addreſs our ſupplications to them that neither underſtand us, nor diſcern us, Iſa. 63. 16. Abraham is ignorant of us, and Iſrael acknowledges us not. The Jews never called upon Abraham, tho the Covenant was made with him for the whole Seed; not one departed Saint for the whole Four Thouſand years between the Creation of the World, and the coming of Chriſt, was ever prayed to by the Iſraelites; or ever imagin'd to have a ſhare in Gods Omniſcience; ſo that to pray to St. Peter, St. Paul, much leſs to St. Roch, St. Swithin, St. Martin, St. Francis, &c. is ſuch a Superſtition that hath no footing in the Scripture.

*Daille Melang. part 2. p. 560. 561.

* To deſire the Prayers of the Living, with whom we have a Communion, who can underſtand and grant our deſires, is founded upon a mutual Charity; but to implore perſons that are abſent, at a great diſtance from us, with whom we have not, nor know how to have any Commerce, ſuppoſeth them in their departure to have put off Humanity, and commenc'd Gods, and endued with ſome part of the Divinity to underſtand our Petitions; we are indeed to cheriſh their Memories, conſider their Examples, imitate their Graces, and obſerve their Doctrines; we are to follow them as Saints, but not elevate them as Gods, in aſcribing to them ſuch a knowledg which is only the neceſſary right of their and our common Creator: As the invocation of Saints mingles them with Chriſt in the exerciſe of his Office, ſo it ſets them equal with God in the Throne of his Omniſcience. As if they had as much credit with God, as Chriſt, in a way of Mediation; and as much knowledg of mens affairs, as God himſelf. Omniſcience is peculiar to God, and incommunicable to any Creature; 'tis the foundation of all Religion, and therefore one of the choiceſt acts of it, viz. Prayer and Invocation. To direct our Vows and Petitions to any elſe, is to invade the peculiarity of this Perfection in God, and to rank ſome Creatures in a Partnerſhip with him in it.

2. This Attribute is injured by curioſity of Knowledg. Eſpecially of future things which God hath not diſcovered in natural cauſes, or ſupernatural Revelation. 'Tis a common error of mens Spirits to aſpire to know what God would have hidden, and to pry into Divine Secrets; and many men are more willing to remain without the knowledg of thoſe things which may with a little induſtry be attained, than be diveſted of the curioſity of enquiring into thoſe things which are above their reach; 'tis hence that ſome have laid aſide the Study of the common remedies of Nature, to find out the Philoſophers Stone; which ſcarce any ever yet attempted, but ſunk in the Enterpriſe. * From this inclination to know the moſt abſtruce and difficult things it is, that the horrors of Magick, and the vanities of Aſtrology have ſprung, whereby men have thought to find in a commerce with Devils and the Juriſdiction of the Stars, the events of their Lives, and the diſpoſal of States and Kingdoms. Hence alſo aroſe thoſe Multitudes of ways of Divination invented among the Heathen, and practiſed too commonly in theſe Ages of the World. This is an invaſion of Gods Prerogative, to whom ſecret things belong, Deut. 29. 29. Secret things belong unto the Lord our God, but revealed things belong to us and our Children. 'Tis an intollerable boldneſs to attempt to fathom thoſe, the Knowledg whereof God hath reſerved to himſelf; and to ſearch that which God will have to ſurpaſs our Underſtandings; whereby we more truly envy God a knowledg ſuperior to our own, than we in Adam imagin'd that he envyed us. Ambition is the greateſt cauſe of this, Ambition to be accounted ſome great thing among men, By reaſon of a Knowledg eſtrang'd from the common maſs of mankind; but more eſpecially that ſoaring Pride to be equal with God, which lurks in our nature ever ſince the Fall of our firſt Parents: This is not yet laid aſide by man, though it was the firſt thing that embroyl'd the World with the Wrath of God. Some think a curioſity of Knowledg was the Cauſe of the fall of the Devils; I am ſure it was the foyl of Adam, and is yet the Crime of his Poſterity; had he been contented to know what God had furniſht him with, neither he nor his Poſterity had ſmarted under the Venom of the Serpents Breath.

* Amyraut. Moral. Tom. 3. p. 75. &c.

All curions and bold enquiries into things not revealed, are an attempt upod the Throne of God; and are both ſinful and pernicious, like to glaring upon the Sun; where inſtead of a greater acuteneſs, we meet with blindneſs, and too dearly by our ignorance in attempting a ſuperfluous knowledg. As Gods Knowledg is deſtin'd to the government of the World, ſo ſhould ours be to the advantage of the World, and not degenerate into vain ſpeculations.

3. This Attribute is injur'd by ſwearing by Creatures: To ſwear by the Name of God in a Righteous Cauſe, * when we are lawfully call'd to it by a Superior Power, *Cajetan. Sum. p. 190.

Power, or for the neceſſary deciſion of ſome Controverſie, for the ends, of Charity and Juſtice, is an act of Religion, and a part of Worſhip, founded upon, and directed to the honour of this Attribute; by it we acknowledg the glory of his infallible Knowledg of all things; but to Swear by falſe Gods, or by any Creature, is Blaſphemous; it ſets the Creature in the place of God, and inveſts it in that which is the peculiar honour of the Divinity; for when any ſwear truly, they intend the invocation of an infallible VVitneſs, and the bringing an undoubted Teſtimony for what they do aſſert; VVhile any therefore ſwear by a Creature, or a falſe God, they profeſs that that Creature, or that which they eſteem to be a God, is an infallible VVitneſs, which to be, is only the right of God; they Attribute to the Creature that which is the Property of God alone, to know the Heart, and to be a VVitneſs whether they ſpeak true or no; and this was accounted by all Nations the true Deſign of an Oath. As to Swear falſely, is a plain denial of the All-Knowledg of God; ſo to ſwear by any Creature, is to ſet the Creature upon the Throne of God, in aſcribing that Perfection to the Creature, which Soveraignly belongs to the Creator; for it is not in the Power of any to VVitneſs to the truth of the heart, but of him that is the ſearcher of hearts.

4. VVe Sin againſt this Attribute by cenſuring the hearts of others. An open Crime indeed falls under our Cognizance, and therefore under our Judgment; for whatſoever falls under the Authority of man to be puniſhed, falls under the Judgment of man to be cenſured, as an act contrary to the Law of God; yet when a cenſure is built upon the evil of the act which is obvious to the view, if we take a ſtep farther to judg the heart and ſtate, we leave the revealed rule of the Law, and ambitiouſly erect a Tribunal equal with Gods; and uſurp a Judicial Power, pertaining only to the Supream Governour of the VVorld; and conſequently pretend to be poſſeſt of this Perfection of Omniſcience, which is neceſſary to render him capable of the exerciſe of that Soveraign Authority. For it is in reſpect of his Dominion, that God hath the ſupream right to Judg; and in reſpect of his Knowledg that he hath an incommunicable capacity to judg.

In an action that is doubtful, the good or evil whereof depends only upon Gods determination, and wherein much of the Judgment depends upon the diſcerning the intention of the Agent, we cannot Judge any man without a manifeſt invaſion of Gods peculiar right; ſuch actions are to be Tryed by Gods Knowledg, not by our ſurmiſes; God only is the Maſter in ſuch caſes, to whom a perſon ſtands or falls, Rom. 14. 4. Till the true Principle and ends of an action be known by the confeſſion of the party acting it, a true Judgment of it is not in our Power. Principles and Ends lie deep and hid from us; and it is intollerable Pride to pretend to have a joynt Key with God to open that Cabinet which he hath reſerved to himſelf.

Beſides the violation of the Rule of Charity in miſconſtruing actions which may be great and generous in their root and principle, we invade Gods Right, as if our ungrounded imaginations and conjectures were in joynt Commiſſion with this Soveraign Perfection; and thereby we become Uſurping Judges of evil thoughts, James 2.4. 'Tis therefore a boldneſs worthy to be puniſhed by the Judg, to aſſume to our ſelves the Capacity and Authority of him, who is the only Judg. For as the Execution of the Divine Law, for the inward violation of it, belongs only to God, ſo is the right of Judging a Perogative belonging only to his Omniſcience; his Right is therefore invaded, if we pretend to a knowledg of it. This Humour of Men the Apoſtle checks, when he ſaith, 1 Cor. 4. 5. He that judgeth me is the Lord, therefore judg nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who will manifeſt the Counſels of all hearts. 'Tis not the time yet for God to erect the Tribunal for the tryal of mens hearts, and the Principles of their Actions; He hath reſerv'd the glorious diſcovery of this Attribute for another ſeaſon; We muſt not therefore preſume to Judge of the Counſels of mens hearts, till God hath reveal'd them by opening the Treaſuries of his own Knowledg.

much leſs are we to judg any Mans final Condition. Manaſſeh may Sacrifice to Devils, and unconverted Paul tear the Church in pieces; but God had Mercy on them and called them. The Action may be Cenſur'd, not the State, for we know not whom God may call. In Cenſuring Men, we may doubly imitate the Devil, in a falſe accuſation of the Brethren, as well as in an ambitious uſurpation of the Rights of God.

2. This Perfection is injured, by preſuming upon it, or making an ill uſe of it. As in the neglect of Prayer for the ſupply of Men's wants, becauſe God knows them already, ſo that that which is an encouragement to Prayer; they make the reaſon of reſtraining it before God. Prayer is not to adminiſter Knowledg to God, but to acknowledg this admirable Perfection of the Divine Nature. If God did not know, there were indeed no uſe of Prayer, it would be as vain a thing to ſend up our Prayers to Heaven, as to implore the ſenſeleſs Statue or Picture of a Prince for a Protection. We Pray becauſe God knows, for though he know our wants with a knowledg of Viſion, yet he will not know them with a knowledg of ſupply, till he be ſought unto. All the Excellencies of God are ground of Adoration; and this Excellency is the ground of that part of Worſhip we call Prayer. If God be to be Worſhipped, he is to be called upon; Invocations of his name in our neceſſities is a chief act of Worſhip; whence the Temple, the place of ſolemn Worſhip, was not called the Houſe of Sacrifice, but the Houſe of Prayer.

* Mat. 6. 32, 33. * Matth. 7. 11.

Prayer was not appointed for Gods information, as if he were ignorant, but for the expreſſion of our deſires; not to furniſh him with a knowledg of what we want, but to manifeſt to him by ſome Rational Sign convenient to our Nature, our ſenſe of that want, which he knows by himſelf. So that Prayer is not deſign'd to acquaint God with our wants, but to expreſs the deſire of a Remedy of our wants. God knows our wants, but hath not made promiſes barely to our wants, but to our asking: That his Omniſcience in hearing as well as his ſufficiency in ſupplying, may have a ſenſible honour in our acknowledgments and receipts. 'Tis therefore an ill uſe of this Excellency of God to neglect Prayer to him as needleſs, becauſe he knows already.

4. This Perfection of God is wrong'd, by a practical denial of it. 'Tis the language of every Sin, and ſo God takes it when he comes to reckon with Men for their Impieties. Upon this he charges the greatneſs of the iniquity of Iſrael, the overflowing of Blood in the Land, and the perverſneſs of the City; They ſay the Lord hath forſaken the Earth, and the Lord ſees not *: They deny his Eyes to ſee, and his Reſolution to puniſh.

* Ezek. 9. 9.

1. It will appear, in forbearing Sin from a ſenſe of Mans knowledg, not of Gods. Open Impieties are refrain'd becauſe of the Eye of Man; but ſecret Sins are not checked becauſe of the Eye of God. Wickedneſs is committed in darkneſs, that is reſtrained in Light; as if darkneſs were as great a clog to Gods Eyes as it is to ours; as though his Eyes were muſled with the Curtains of the Night *. This it is likely was at the root of Jonah's flight, he might have ſome ſecret thought, that his Maſters Eye could not follow him, as though the cloſe Hatches of a Ship could ſecure him from the Knowledg of God, as well as the ſides of the Ship could from the daſhing of the waves. What lies moſt upon the Conſcience when it is graciouſly wounded, is leaſt regarded, or contemned when it is baſely inclin'd. David's heart ſmote him not only for his Sin in the groſs, but as particularly circumſtantiated by the commiſſion of it in the ſight of God; Pſal. 51. 4. Againſt thee, thee only have I ſinned, and done this evil in thy ſight. None knew the reaſon of Uriah's Death but my ſelf, and becauſe others knew it not, I neglected any regard to this Divine Eye. When Jacob's Sons uſed their Brother Joſeph ſo barba-

* Job 22. 14.

rouſly

rouſly, they took care to hide it from their Father; but caſt away all thoughts of God, from whom it could not be conceal'd.

Doth not the preſence of a Child bridle a Man, from the act of a long'd for Sin, when the Eye of God is of no force to reſtrain him? As if Gods Knowledg were of leſs value than the ſight of a little Boy or Girle, as if a Child only could ſee, and God were blind. He that will forbear an unworthy action for fear of an Informer, will not forbear it for God; as if Gods Omniſcience, were not as full an Intelligencer to him, as Man can be an Informer to a Magiſtrate. As we acknowledg the power of Men ſeeing us, when we are aſhamed to commit a filthy action in their view; ſo we diſcover the power of God ſeeing us, when we regard not what we do before the light of his Eyes. Secret Sins are more againſt God than open: Open Sins are againſt the Law, ſecret Sins are againſt the Law, and this prime Perfection of his Nature. The Majeſty of God is not only violated, but the Omniſcience of God diſown'd, who is the only Witneſs; We muſt in all of them, either imagine him to be without Eyes to behold us, or without an Arm of Juſtice to puniſh us. And often it is, I believe, in ſuch caſes, that if any thoughts of Gods knowledg ſtrike upon Men, they quickly damp them, leſt they ſhould begin to know what they fear, and fear that they might not eat their pleaſant ſinful Morſels.

2. It appears, in partial Confeſſions of Sin before God. As by a free, full, and ingenuous Confeſſion, we offer a due Glory to this Attribute, ſo by a feigned and curtail'd Confeſſion we deny him the honour of it: For though by any Confeſſion we in part own him to be a Soveraign and Judg, yet by a half and pared acknowledgment, we own him to be no more than a Humane and ignorant one. Achans full Confeſſion gave God the glory of his Omniſcience, manifeſted in the diſcovery of his ſecret Crime. And Joſhuah ſaid to Achan, My Son give glory to the Lord God of Iſrael, and make Confeſſion unto him. And ſo, Pſal. 50. 23. Who ſo offereth praiſe glorifieth me, or confeſſion, as the word ſignifieth, in which ſenſe I would rather take it, referring to this Attribute, which God ſeems to tax Sinners with the denial of, Verſ. 21. telling them that he would open the Records of their Sins before them, and indict them particularly for every one. If therefore you would glorifie this Attribute, which ſhall one day break open your Conſciences, offer to me a ſincere Confeſſion. When David ſpeaks of the happineſs of a pardon'd Man, * he adds, in whoſe Spirit there is no guile, not meaning a ſincerity in general, but that ingenuity in Confeſſing. To excuſe or extenuate Sin, is to deny God the knowledg of the depths of our deceitful hearts: When we will mince it rather than aggravate it? lay it upon the inducements of others, when it was the free act of our own wills, ſtudy ſhifts to deceive our Judge, this is to ſpeak lies of him, as the expreſſion is, Hoſ. 7. 13. As though he were a God eaſie to be cheated, and knew no more than we are willing to declare. What did Sauls transferring his Sin from himſelf to the people, *but charge God with a defect in this Attribute? When Man could not be like God in his Knowledg, he would fancy a God like to him in his ignorance; and imagine a poſſibility of hiding himſelf from his knowledg, and all Men tread more or leſs in their Fathers ſteps, and are fruitful to deviſe diſtinctions to diſguiſe Errors in Doctrin, and excuſes to palliate Errors in Practice: This Crime Job removes from himſelf, when he ſpeaks of ſeveral acts of his ſincerity; If I cover'd my tranſgreſſion as Adam, by hiding my iniquity in my boſom, I hid not any of my Sins in my own Conſcience, but acknowledg'd God a Witneſs to them, and gave him the glory of his knowledg by a free Confeſſion. I did not conceal it from God as Adam did, or as men ordinarily do; as if God could underſtand no more of their ſecret Crimes, than they will let him, and had no more ſenſe of their faults, than they would furniſh him with. As the firſt riſe of Confeſſion is the owning of this Attribute (for the Juſtice of God would

* Joſh. 7. 19.

* Pſal. 2. 1, 2. Camero. p. 89. col. 1.

* 1 Sam. 15. 15.

* Job 31. 33.

would not ſcare Men, nor the Holineſs of God awe them without a ſenſe of his knowledg of their iniquities) ſo to drop out ſome fragments of Confeſſion, diſcover ſome Sins, and conceal others, is a plain denial of the extenſiveneſs of the Divine Knowledg.

3. It is diſcover'd, by putting God off with an outſide Worſhip. Men are often flatterers of God, and think to bend him by formal glavering Devotions, without the concurrence of their hearts, as though he could not pierce into the darkneſs of the Mind, but did as little know us as one Man knows another. There are ſuch things as *feigned Lips, a contradiction between the Heart and the Tongue, a clamour in the Voice, and ſcoffing in the Soul; a crying, to God, thou art my Father, the Guide of my youth, and yet ſpeaking and doing evil to the utmoſt of our Power*. As if God could be impos'd upon by fawning pretences; and like old Iſaac, take Jacob for Eſau, and be couzen'd by the ſmell of his Garments: As if he could not diſcern the Negro heart under an Angels Garb. Thus Ephraim, the Ten Tribes, apoſtatized from the true Religion, would go with their Flocks and their Herds to *ſeek the Lord, would Sacrifice multitudes of Sheep and Heifers, which was the main outſide of the Jewiſh Religion; only with their Flocks and their Herds, not with their Hearts, with thoſe inward qualifications of deep Humiliation and Repentance for Sin: As though outſide appearances limited Gods obſervation, whereas God had told them before, That he knew Ephraim and Iſrael was not hid from him. Thus to do is to put a cheat upon God, and think to blind his All-ſeeing Eye; and therefore it is called deceit, Pſal. 78. 36. They did flatter him with their Mouths; The word פתה ſignifies to deceive as well as to flatter; not that they or any elſe can deceive God, but it implies an endeavour to deceive him, by a few diſſembling words and geſtures, or an imagination that God was ſatisfied with bare profeſſions, and would not concern himſelf in a further inquiſition: This is an unworthy conceit of God, to fancy that we can ſatisfie for inward Sins, and avert approaching Judgments, by External Offerings, by a loud Voice with a falſe Heart, as if God, (like Children) would be pleaſ'd, with the glittering of an empty Shell, or the ratling of Stones, the chinking of Money, a meer Voice, and crying without inward frames and intentions of ſervice.

* Pſal. 17. 1.

* Jer. 3 4, 5.

* Hoſ. 5. 6.

Verſe 3.

4. In cheriſhing multitudes of evil thoughts. No Man but would bluſh for ſhame, if the baſe, impure, ſlovenly thoughts, either in or out of Duties of Worſhip were viſible to the underſtanding of Man; how diligent would he be to curb his luxuriant and unworthy fancies, as well as bite in his words; but when we give the Rains to the Motions of our Hearts, and ſuffer them to run at random without a Curb, 'tis an evidence we are not concern'd for their falling under the notice of the Eye of God; and it argues a very weak belief of this Perfection, or ſcarce any belief at all. Who can think any Mans heart poſſeſſed with a ſenſe of this Infinite Excellency, that ſuffers his Mind, in his Meditation on God, to wander into every Sty, and be picking up Stones upon a Dunghill? What doth it intimate, but that thoſe thoughts are as inviſible, or unaudible to God, as they are to Men without the Garments of Words? * When a Man thinks of obſcene things, his own natural Notions, if reviv'd, would tell him, that God diſcerns what he thinks, that the depths of his heart are open to him: And the voice of thoſe Notions are, Deface thoſe vain imaginations out of your Minds. But what is done? Men caſt away Rational Light, muſter up Conceits, that God ſees them not, knows them not, and ſo ſink into the Puddle of their ſordid Imaginations, as though they remained in darkneſs to God.

* Drexel Nicetas. lib. 2. cap. 10. p. 357.

I might further inſtance.

In omiſſion of Prayer, vvhich ariſe ſometime from a flat Atheiſm: Who vvill call upon a God, that believes no ſuch being? Or from partial Atheiſm, either a denial of Gods ſufficiency to help, or of his Omniſcience to knovv, as if God vvere like the Statue of Jupiter in Crete framed vvithout Ears.

In the Hypocrital pretences of Men, to exempt them from the ſervice God calls them to. When Men pretend one thing, and intend another; this lurks in the the Veins ſometimes of the beſt men; ſometimes it ariſeth from the fear of Man; when Men are more afraid of the power of Man, than of diſſembling with the Almighty: It will pretend a vertue to cover a ſecret wile: And Chooſe the Tongue of the Crafty, as the Expreſſion in Job *. * Job 15. 5.

The caſe is plain in Moſes, who when ordered to undertake an eminent Service, pretends a want of Eloquence, and an ungrateful ſlowneſs of ſpeech *. This generous Soul, that before was not afraid to diſcover himſelf in the midſt of Egypt for his Country-men, anſwers ſneakingly to God, and would vail his carnal fear, with a pretence of inſufficiency and humility; Who am I, that I ſhould go unto Pharaoh *? He could not well alledge an inability to go to Pharaoh, ſince he had had an Education in the Egyptian Learning, which render'd him capable to appear at Court. God at laſt uncaſeth him, and ſhews it all to be a diſſimulation, and whatſoever was the pretence, fear lay at the bottom, He was afraid of his Life upon his appearance before Pharaoh, from whoſe face he had fled upon the ſlaying the Egyptian, which God intimates to him, Exod. 4. 19. Go, and return into Egypt for all the Men are dead which ſought thy life. What doth this Carriage ſpeak, but as if Gods Eye were not upon our inward parts, as though we could lock him out of our hearts, that cannot be ſhut out from any creek of the hearts of Men and Angels. * Exod. 4. 10. * Exod. 3. 11.

II. The ſecond Uſe is of Comfort. 'Tis a ground of great Comfort under the preſent diſpenſation wherein we are; * We have heard the Doctrinal part, and God hath given us the Experimental part of it in his ſpecial Providence this day, upon the Stage of World. And bleſſed be God that he hath given us a ground of Comfort, without going out of our ordinary courſe to fetch it, whereby it ſeems to be peculiarly of Gods ordering for us. * Nov. 1678. When the popiſh plot was diſcover'd.

1. 'Tis a Comfort in all the clandeſtine contrivances of Men againſt the Church. His Eyes pierce as far as the depths of Hell: Not one of his Churches Adverſaries lies in a miſt, all are as plain as the Stars which he numbers; Mine Adverſaries are all before thee *, More exactly known to thee, than I can recount them. 'Tis a Propheſie of Chriſt, wherein Chriſt is brought in ſpeaking to God, of his own and the Churches Enemies: He comforts himſelf with this, that God hath his Eye upon every particular Perſon among his Adverſaries: He knows where they repoſe themſelves, when they go out to Conſult, and when they come in with their Reſolves: He diſcerns all the Rage that Spirits their Hearts, in what corner it lurks, how it acts; all the diſorders, motions of it, and every Object of that Rage; He cannot be deceived by the cloſeſt and ſubtileſt Perſon. Thus God ſpeaks concerning Zenacharib and his Hoſt againſt Jeruſalem *. After he had ſpoke of the forming of his Church, and the weakneſs of it, he adds, But I know thy abode, and thy going out, and thy coming in, and thy Rage againſt me; becauſe thy Rage againſt me, and thy Tumult is come up into mine Ears, therefore will I put my Hook in thy Noſe, and my Bridle in thy Lips, and I will turn thee back, &c. He knows all the methods of the Counſels, the Stages they had laid, the manner of Execution of their Deſigns, all the ways whether they turned themſelves, and would uſe them no better than Men do devouring Fiſh and untam'd Beaſts, with a Hook in the Noſe and a Bridle in the Mouth. Thoſe States-men in Iſa. 29. 15. thought their Contrivances too deep for God to fathom, and too cloſe for God to fruſtrate; They ſeek deep to hide their Counſels from the Lord; ſurely your turning of things upſide down, ſhall be eſteemed as the Potters Clay, of no more force and underſtanding, than a Potters Veſſel, which underſtands not its own form wrought by the Artificer, nor the uſe it is put to by the Buyer and Poſſeſſor; or ſhall be eſteemed as a Potters Veſſel, that can be as eaſily flung back into the Maſs from whence it was taken, as preſerved in the Figure it is now endued with. No ſecret Deſigner is ſhrowded from Gods ſight, or can be ſhelter'd from Gods Arm; He underſtands the Venom of their Hearts, better than we can feel it, and diſcovers their inward fury more plainly, than we can ſee the Sting or Teeth of a Viper when they are opened for miſchief; and to what purpoſe doth God know and ſee them, but in order to deliver his People from them in his * Pſal 69. 19. * Iſai. 37. 28, 29.

own

*Ex. 3. 7, 8. own due time; I know their ſorrow, and am come down to deliver them *: The Walls of Jeruſalem are continually before him, he knows therefore all that would undermine and demoliſh them; None can hurt Zion by any ignorance or inadvertency in God.

'Tis obſervable, that our Saviour aſſuming to himſelf a different Title in every Epiſtle to the Seven Churches, doth particularly aſcribe to himſelf this of Knowledg and Wrath in that to Thyatira, an Emblem or Deſcription of the Romiſh State: * And unto the Angel of the Church of Thyatira write, Theſe things ſaith the Son of God, who hath his Eyes like to a flame of fire, and his Feet like fine Braſs. His Eyes, like a flame of Fire are of a piercing nature, inſinuating themſelves into all the Pores and parts of the Body they encounter with, and his Feet like braſs to cruſh them with, is explained, Verſe 23. I will kill her Children with Death, and all the Churches ſhall know that I am he which ſearches the Reigns and the Heart, and I Will give to every one of you according to your works. He knows every deſign of the Romiſh Party, deſign'd by that Church of Thyatira *. Jezabel, there, ſignifies a whoriſh Church, ſuch a Church as ſhall act as Jezabel, Ahab's Wife, who was not only a Worſhipper of Idols, but propagated Idolatry in Iſrael, ſlew the Prophets, perſecuted Elijah, murdered Naboth, the Name whereof ſignifies Propheſie, ſeiz'd upon his Poſſeſſion. And if it be ſaid that Verſe 19. This Church was commended for her Works, Faith, Patience; 'tis true Rome did at firſt ſtrongly profeſs Chriſtianity, maintain'd the intereſt of it, but afterwards fell into the practice of Jezabel, and committed Spiritual Adultery: And is ſhe to be owned for a Wife, that now plays the Harlot, becauſe ſhe was honeſt and modeſt at her firſt Marriage; * And though ſhe ſhall be deſtroy'd yet not ſpeedily, Verſe 22. I will caſt her into a Bed, ſeems to intimate the deſtruction of Jezabel, not to be at once and ſpeedily, but in a lingring way, and by degrees, as Sickneſs conſumes a Body.

* Rev. 2, 15.

* For the Evidence of it I refer you to Dr. More's Expoſition of the ſeven Churches, worthy every Learned and Underſtanding Mans reading, and of every ſober Romaniſt.

* Coc. in loc.

2. This Perfection of God fits him to be a ſpecial Object of Truſt. If he were forgetful, what comfort could we have in any promiſe? How could we depend upon him, if he were ignorant of our State? His Compaſſions to pity us, his Readineſs to relieve us, his power to protect and aſſiſt us, would be inſignificant, without his Omniſcience to inform his Goodneſs, and direct the Arm of his power. This perfection is as it were Gods Office of Intelligence. As you Go to your Memorandum Book to know what you are to do; ſo doth God to his Omniſcience: This perfection is Gods Eye, to acquaint him with the neceſſities of his Church, and directs all his other Attributes in their exerciſe for and about his people. You may depend upon his Mercy that hath promiſed, and upon his Truth to perform, upon his ſufficiency to ſupply you, and his Goodneſs to relieve you, and his Righteouſneſs to reward you, becauſe he hath an infinite Underſtanding to know you and your wants, you and your ſervices. And without this knowledg of his, no comfort could be drawn from any other perfection; none of them could be a ſure Nail to hang our hopes and confidence upon. This is that, the Church alvvays Celebrated, Pſal. 105. 7. He hath remembred his Covenant for ever, and the Word which he hath commanded to a thouſand generations; And Verſe 42. He remembred his holy promiſe; and he remembred for them his Covenant *. He remembers and underſtands his Covenant, therefore his promiſe to perform it, and therefore our Wants to ſupply them.

* Pſal. 105. 45.

3. And the rather, becauſe God knows the Perſons of all his own. He hath in his infinite Underſtanding, the exact number of all the individual perſons that belong to him; 2 Tim. 2. 19. The Lord knows them that are his. He knows all things, becauſe he hath Created them; and he knovvs his people becauſe he hath not only made them, but alſo choſe them: He could no more chooſe he knew not what, than he could Create he knew not what: he knows them under a double Title; of Creation as Creatures, in the common Maſs of Creation; as new Creatures by a particular act of Seperation. He cannot be ignorant of them in time, whom he fore-knevv from Eternity: His knowledg in time is the ſame he had from Eternity; He foreknevv them that had intended to give the Grace of Faith unto; and he knows them after they believe, because he knows his own act, in bestowing Grace upon them, and his own Mark and Seal wherewith he hath stampt them: No doubt but he that calls the Stars of Heaven by their names *, knows the number of those living Stars that sparkle in the Firmament of his Church. He cannot be ignorant of their Persons, when he numbers the Hairs of their Heads, and hath Registred their Names in the Book of Life. As he only had an infinite Mercy to make the choice; so he only hath an infinite Understanding to comprehend their Persons. We only know the Elect of God by a Moral assurance in the Judgment of Charity, when the Conversation of Men is according to the Doctrine of God: We have not an infallible knowledg of them, we may be often mistaken; Judas, a Devil, may be judged by Man for a Saint, till he be stript of his disguise. God only hath an infallible knowledg of them, he knows his own Records, and the Counterparts in the hearts of his People; None can counterfeit his Seal, nor can any raze it out. * When the Church is either scatter'd, like Dust, by Persecution, or over-grown with Superstition and Idolatry, that there is scarce any grain of true Religion appearing, as in the time of Elijah, who complain'd that he was left alone, as if the Church had been rooted out of that corner of the World, * yet God knew that he had a number fed in a Cave, and had reserved seven thousand Men that had preserved the purety of his Worship, and not bow'd their knee to Baal. Christ knew his Sheep, as well as he is known of them; yea, better than they can know him *. History acquaints us, that Cyrus had so vast a memory, that he knew the name of every particular Souldier in his Army, which consisted of diverse Nations; Shall it be too hard for an infinite Understanding to know every one of that Host that march under his Banners? may he not as well know them, as know the number, qualities, influences of those Stars which lie conceal'd from our Eye, as well as those that are visible to our Sense? Yes, he knows them, as a General to employ them, as a Shepherd to preserve them: He knows them in the World to guard them, and he knows them when they are out of the World to gather them, and cull out their Bodies, though wrapped up in a Cloud of the putrified Carcases of the Wicked: As he knew them from all Eternity to elect them, so he knows them in time to cloth their Persons with Righteousness, to protect their Persons in Calamity according to his good pleasure, and at last to raise and reward them according to his Promise.

ed

* Psal. 147. 4.

* Turretin's Sermons, p. 362.

* 1 Kings 19. 14. 18.

* John 10. 14.

4. We may take Comfort from hence, That our sincerity cannot be unknown, to an infinite Understanding. Not a way of the Righteous is conceal'd from him, and therefore they shall stand in Judgment before him; * The Lord knows the way of the Righteous: He knows them to observe them, and he knows them to Reward them. How comfortable is it to appeal to this Attribute of God for our integrity, with Hezekiah, 2 Kings 20. 3. Remember Lord, how I have walked before thee in truth and with a perfect heart. Christ himself is brought in this Prophetical Psalm drawing out the Comfort of this Attribute, Psal. 40. 9. I have not restrain'd my Lips, Oh Lord, thou knowest, meaning his faithfulness in declaring the Righteousness of God. Job follows the same steps, Also now, behold, my Record is in Heaven, and my Witness is on high *: My Innocence hath the Testimony of Men, but my greatest support is in the Records of God. Also now; or besides the Testimony of my own Heart, I have another Witness in Heaven that knows the Heart, and can only judg of the principles of my actions, and clear me from the scorns of my Friends, and the accusations of Men, with a justification of my Innocence: He repeats it twice to take the greater comfort in it. God knows, that we do that in the simplicity of our Hearts, which may be judged by Men to be done for unworthy and sordid ends: He knows not only the outward action, but the inward affection; and praises that which Men often dispraise; and writes down that with and Euge, Well done good and faithful Servant, which Men daub with their severest Censures *. How refreshing is it to consider, that God never mistakes the appearance for reality, nor is lead by the judgment of

* Psal. 1. 6.

* Job 16. 19.

* Rom. 2. 29.

Man? He ſits in Heaven and laughs at their follies and Cenſures. If God had no ſounder and no more piercing a Judgment than Man, wo be to the ſincereſt Souls that are often judged Hypocrites by ſome. What a happineſs is it for Integrity to have a Judg of infinite Underſtanding, who will one day wipe off the durt of Worldly Reproaches?

Again, God knows the leaſt dram of Grace and Righteouſneſs in the Hearts of his People, though but as a ſmoking Flax, or as the leaſt bruiſe of a ſaving
* Mat. 12. 20. conviction *; and knows it ſo as to cheriſh it; he knows that work he hath begun, and never hath his Eye off from it to abandon it.

5. The conſideration of this excellent Perfection in God may comfort us in our ſecret Prayers, ſighs and works. If God were not of infinite Underſtanding, to pierce into the Heart, what comfort hath a poor Creature that hath a ſcantineſs of Expreſſions, but a Heart in a flame? If God did not underſtand the Heart, Faith and Prayer, which are internal works, would be in vain: How could he give that Mercy our Hearts plead for, if he were ignorant of our inward Affections? Hypocrites might ſcale Heaven by lofty Expreſſions, and a Sincere Soul come ſhort of the happineſs he is prepared for, for want of flouriſhing Gifts. Prayer is an internal work, words are but the Garment of Prayer; Meditation is the Body, and Affections the Soul and Life
* Pſal. 5. 1. of Prayer; Give Ear to my words, Oh Lord, conſider my Meditation *, Prayer is a Rational act, an act of the mind, not the act of a Parrot: Prayer is an act of the Heart, though the ſpeaking Prayer is the work of the Tongue; Now God gives Ear to the words, but he conſiders the Meditation, the frame of the Heart. Conſideration is a more exact notice than hearing, the act only of the Ear. Were not God of an infinite Underſtanding, and Omniſcient, he might take fine Clothes, a heap of Garments for the Man himſelf; and be put off by glittering words, without a Spiritual Frame. What matter of rejoycing is it, that we call not upon a deaf and ignorant Idol; but on one that liſtens to our ſecret Petitions to give them a diſpatch, that knows our deſires afar off, and from the infiniteneſs of his Mercy, joyn'd with his Omniſcience ſtands ready to give us a return? Hath he not a Book of Remembrance for them that fear him, and for their ſighs and ejaculations to him as
* Mal. 3. 16. well as their diſcourſes of him *; and not only what Prayers they utter, but what gracious and holy thoughts they have of him? That thought upon his Name. Though millions of ſupplications be put up at the ſame time, yet they have all a diſtinct File (as I may ſay) in an infinite Underſtanding, which perceives and comprehends them all. As he obſerves millions of Sins committed at the ſame time by a vaſt number of Perſons to Record them in order to Puniſhment; ſo he diſtinctly diſcerns an infinite number of Cries at the ſame moment to Regiſter them in order to an Anſwer.

A ſigh cannot ſcape an infinite Underſtanding, though crowded among a mighty multitude of Cries from others, or cover'd with many unwelcome diſtractions in our ſelves, no more than a believing touch from the Woman that had the Bloudy Iſſue, could be conceal'd from Chriſt, and be undiſcern'd from the preſs of the thronging multitudes: Our groans are as audible and intelligible to him as our words, and he knows what is the mind of his own
* Rom. 8. 27. Spirit, though expreſt in no plainer language than ſobs and heavings *. Thus David cheers up himſelf under the neglects of his Friends, Pſal. 38. 9. Lord my deſire is before thee, and my groaning is not hid from thee. Not a groan of a panting Spirit ſhall be loſt, till God hath loſt his knowledg; Not a Petition forgotten while God hath a Record, nor a Tear dried while God hath a
* Pſal. 56. 8. Bottle to reſerve it in *.

Our ſecret works are alſo known and obſerved by him; not only our outward labour, but our inward love in it, Heb. 6. 10. If with Iſaac we go privately into the Field to meditate, or ſecretly caſt our Bread upon the Waters, he keeps his Eye upon us to Reward us, and returns the Fruit into our own
* Mat. 6. 4, 6. Boſoms *; Yea, though it be but a Cup of cold Water, from an inward Spring of love given to a Diſciple: He ſees your works and your labours, and
* Rev. 2. 2. faith and patience in working them *, all the marks of your induſtry, and ſtrength

ſtrength of your intentions, and Will, be as exact at laſt in order to a due Praiſe, as to open Sins in order to a juſt Recompence *

6. The Conſideration of this excellent Attribute, affords Comfort in the Afflictions of good Men. He knows their Preſſures, as well as hears their Cries *: His knowledg comes not by information from us; but his Compaſſionate liſtening to our Cries ſprings from his own Inſpection into our Sorrows; He is affected with them, before we make any diſcovery of them: He is not ignorant of the beſt Seaſon, when they may be uſefully inflicted, and when they may be profitably removed: The Tribulation and Poverty of his Church is not unknown to him, Rev. 2. 8, 9. I know thy Works and Tribulation, &c. He knows their Works, and what Tribulation they meet with for him; He ſees their extremities, when they are toiling againſt the Wind and Tide of the World *: Yea, the natural exigences of the multitude are not neglected by him, he diſcerns to take care of them: Our Saviour conſidered the three days faſting of his Followers, and miraculouſly provides a Diſh for them in the Wilderneſs. No good Man is ever out of Gods Mind, and therefore never out of his Compaſſionate Care: His eye pierceth into their Dungeons and pities their Miſeries. Joſeph may forget his Brethren, and the Diſciples not know Chriſt, when he walks upon the Midnight Waves and Turbulent Sea; * but a Lyons Den cannot obſcure a Daniel from his Sight, nor the depths of the Whales Belly bury Jonah from the Divine Underſtanding: He diſcerns Peter in his Chains, and Stephen under the Stones of Martyrdom: He knows Lazarus under his tatter'd Rags, and Abel wallowing in his Blood: His Eye and Knowledg goes along with his People, when they are tranſplanted into Foreign Countries, and ſold for Slaves into the Iſlands of the Grecians, for he will raiſe them out of the place, Joel 3. 6, 7. He would defeat the hopes of the Perſecutors, and applaud the Patience of his people: He knows his People in the Tabernacle of Life, and in the Valley of the Shadow of Death, Pſal. 23. He knows all penal Evils becauſe he commiſſions and directs them: He knows the Inſtruments becauſe they are his Sword *, and he knows his gracious Sufferer becauſe he hath his Mark: He diſcerns Job in his Anguiſh, and the Devil in his Malice: By the direction of this Attribute he ordes Calamities, and reſcues from them. Thou haſt ſeen it, for thou beholdeſt miſchief and ſpight *: That is the Comfort of the Pſalmiſt, and the Comfort of every Believer, and the Ground of committing themſelves to God under all the injuſtice of Men.

7. 'Tis a Comfort in all our infirmites. As he knows our Sins to charge them; ſo he knows the weakneſs of our Nature to pity us. As his infinite Underſtanding may ſcare us, becauſe he knows our Tranſgreſſions; ſo it may relieve us, becauſe he knows our natural mutability in our firſt Creation: He knows our frame, he remembers that we are duſt *. 'Tis the reaſon of the precedent Verſes, why he removes our Tranſgreſſion from us, why he is ſo backward in puniſhing; ſo patient in waiting, ſo forward in pitying; Why? He doth not only remember our Sins, but remember our frame or forming, what brittle, though clear glaſſes we were by Creation, how eaſie to be crackt: He remembers our impotent and weak Condition by Corruption; what a ſink we have of vain imaginations that remain in us after Regeneration; he doth not only conſider that we were made according to his image, and therefore able to ſtand, but that we were made of Duſt and weak Matter, and had a ſenſitive Soul, like that of Beaſts, as well as an intellectual Nature, like that of Angels, and therefore liable to follow the dictates of it, without exact care and watchfulneſs. If he remembred only the firſt, there would be no iſſue but Indignation; but the Conſideration of the latter moves his Compaſſion. How miſerable ſhould we be for want of this perfection in the Divine Nature, whereby God remembers and reflects upon his paſt act in our firſt frame, and the mindfulneſs of our Condition excites the motion of his Bowels to us? Had he loſt the knowledg, how he firſt framed us; did he not ſtill remember the mutability of our Nature, as we were form'd and ſtampt in his Mint; how much more wretched would our condition be

* 1 Cor. 4. 5.

* Exod. 3. 7.

* Mark 6. 48.

* Barlow's Mans Refuge, p. 29, 30.

* Pſal. 17. 13.

* Pſal. 10. 14.

* Pſal. 103. 14.

than it is? If his remembrance of our Original, be one ground of his Pity, the ſenſe of his Omniſcience ſhould be a ground of our Comfort, in the ſtirring of our infirmities: He remembers we were but Duſt, when he made us; and yet remembers we are but Duſt, while he preſerves and forbears us.

8. 'Tis ſome Comfort in the fears of ſome lurking Corruption in our Hearts. We know by this whither to addreſs our ſelves for the ſearch and diſcovery of it: Perhaps ſome Bleſſings we want are retarded, ſome Calamities we underſtand not the particular cauſe of, are inflicted, ſome Petitions we have put up, hang too long for an Anſwer; and the Chariot Wheels of Divine Goodneſs move ſlow and are long in coming: Let us beg the Aid of this Attribute to upon to us the Remora's, to diſcover what baſe Affection there is that retards the Mercies we want, or attracts the Affliction we feel, or bars the Door againſt the return of our ſupplications. What our dim ſight cannot diſcover, the clear Eye of God can make viſible to us. Job 10. 2. Shew me wherefore thou contendeſt with me. As in want of Pardon, we particularly plead his Mercy, and in our deſires for the performance of his Promiſe, we argue with him from his faithfulneſs; ſo in the fear of any inſincerity or hidden Corruption we ſhould implore his Omniſcience: For as God is a God in Covenant, our God, our God in the whole of his Nature; ſo the Perfections of his Nature, are employed in their ſeveral Stations, as aſſiſtances of his Creatures. This was David's Practice and Comfort, after that large Meditation on the Omniſcience and Omnipreſence of God, he turns his thoughts of it into Petitions for the employment of it in the concerns of his Soul, and begs a Mercy ſuitable to the glory of this Perfection, Pſal. 139. 23. Search me, Oh God, and try my heart, try me and know my thoughts; Dive to the bottom, Verſe 24. And ſee if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way Everlaſting. His deſire is not barely that God ſhould know him, for it would be ſenſeleſs to beg of God that he ſhould have Mercy, or faithfulneſs, or power, or knowledge in his Nature; but he deſires the exerciſe of this Attribute, in the diſcovery of himſelf to himſelf, in order to his ſight of any wicked way, and Humiliation for it, and Reformation of it in order to his Conduct to Everlaſting Life. As we may appeal to this Perfection to Judg us, when the ſincerity of our Actions is Cenſured by others; ſo we may implore it to ſearch us, when our ſincerity is queſtion'd by our ſelves: That our Minds may be enlightned by a Beam from his Knowledg, and the little Thieves may be pull'd out of their Dens in our Hearts by the hand of his Power. In particular, it is our Comfort that we can, and our neceſſity that we muſt Addreſs particularly to this, when we engage ſolemnly in a work of ſelf-examination; that we may have a clearer Eye to direct us than our own, that we may not miſtake Braſs for Gold, or counterfeit Graces for true; that nothing that is filthy and fit to be caſt out, may eſcape our Sight, and preſerve its Stations. And we need not queſtion the laying at the Door of this neglect, (viz. not calling in this Attribute to our Aid, whoſe proper Office it is, (as I may ſo ſay) to ſearch and enquire) all the miſtakes, ill ſucceſs, and fruitleſsneſs of our endeavours in ſelf-examination, becauſe we would engage in it, in the pitiful ſtrength of our own dimneſs, and not in the light of Gods Countenance and the aſſiſtance of his Eye, which can diſcern what we cannot ſee, and diſcover that to us, which we cannot manifeſt to our ſelves. 'Tis a Comfort to a learner of an Art, to have a ſkilful Eye to overlook his work, and inform him of the defects. Beg the help of the Eye of God in all your ſearches and ſelf-examinations.

9. The Conſideration of this Attribute is Comfortable in our aſſurances of, and reflections upon the pardon of Sin, or ſeeking of it. As God puniſhes Men for Sin according to his knowledg of them, which is greater than the knowledge their own Conſciences have of them; ſo he pardons according to his knowledg: He pardons not only according to our knowledg, but according to his own: He is greater than any Mans Heart, to condemn for that, which a Man is at preſent ignorant of; and greater than our Hearts, to pardon that which is not at preſent viſible to us; He knows that which the moſt watchful Conſcience cannot take a ſurvey of: If God had not an infinite Underſtanding of us, how could we have a perfect and full pardon from him? It would not ſtand with his Honour to pardon he knew not what. He knows what Crimes we have to be pardon'd, when we know not all of them our ſelves, that ſtand in need of a gracious Remiſſion; His Omniſcence beholds every Sin to charge it upon our Saviour. If he knows our Sins that are black, he knows every mite of Chriſts Righteouſneſs which is pure, and the utmoſt extent of his Merits, as well as the demerit of our iniquities. As he knows the filth of our Sin, he alſo knows the covering of our Saviour: He knows the value of the Redeemers Sufferings, and exactly underſtands every Plea in the intereeſſion of our Advocate. Though God knows our Sins oculo indice, yet he doth not ſee them oculo judice, with a Judicial Eye: His Omniſcience ſtirs not up his juſtice to Revenge, but his Mercy to Pity. His infinite Underſtanding of what Chriſt hath done, directs him to diſarm his Juſtice, and ſound an Alarm to his Bowels. As he underſtands better than we what we have committed; ſo he underſtands better than we what our Saviour hath merited; and his Eye directs his Hand in the blotting out Guilt, and applying the Remedy.

which

3. The third Uſe ſhall be to Sinners to humble them, and put them upon ſerious Conſideration. This Attribute ſpeaks terrible things to a Profligate Sinner. Baſil thinks that the ripping open the Sins of the Damned to their faces by this Perfection of God, is more terrible than their other Torments in Hell. God knows the Perſons of Wicked Men, not one is exempted from his Eye, he ſees all the actions of Men as well as he knows their Perſons; Job 11. 11. He knows vain Men, he ſees wickedneſs alſo. Job 34. 21. His Eye is upon all their goings. He hears the moſt private Whiſpers, Pſal. 139. 4. the ſcope, manner, circumſtance of ſpeaking he knows it altogether: He underſtands all our thoughts, the firſt bubblings of that bitter Spring, Pſal. 139. 2. The quickeſt glances of the Fancy, the cloſeſt muſings of the Mind, and the abortive wouldings or wiſhes of the Will, the language of the Heart, as well as the language of the Tongue; Not a fooliſh thought, or an idle word, not a wanton glace, or a diſhoneſt action; Not a negligent ſervice, or a diſtracting fancy, but is more viſible to him, than the filth of a Dunghill can be to any Man by the help of a Sun Beam. How much better would it be for deſperate Sinners, to have their Crimes known to all the Angels in Heaven, and Men upon Earth, and Devils in Hell, than that they ſhould be known to their Soveraign, whoſe Laws they have violated, and to their Judg, whoſe Righteouſneſs obligeth him to revenge the injury?

1. Conſider, What a poor Refuge is ſecrecy to a Sinner? Not the Myſts of a foggy Day, nor the obſcurity of the darkeſt Night, not the cloſeſt Curtains, nor the deepeſt Dungeon, can hide any Sin from the Eye of God. Adam is known in his Thickets, and Jonah in his Cabin. Achan's Wedge of Gold is diſcern'd by him, though buried in the Earth, and hooded with a Tent. Shall Sarah be unſeen by him, when ſhe mockingly laughs behind the Door? Shall Gehazi tell a Lye, and comfort himſelf with an imagination of his Maſters ignorance, as long as God knows it? Whatſoever works Men do, are not hid from God, whether done in the darkneſs or Day-light, in the Midnight darkneſs, or the Noon-day Sun: He is all Eye to ſee, and he hath a great Wrath to Puniſh. The Wheels in Ezekiel are full of Eyes: A piercing Eye to behold the Sinner, and a ſwift Wheel of Wrath to overtake him. God is Light, and of all things Light is moſt difficultly kept out. The ſecreteſt Sins are ſet in the light of his Countenance *, as legible to him, as if writ with a Sun Beam; More viſible to him than the greateſt Print to the ſharpeſt Eye. The Fornications of the Samaritan Woman, perhaps known only to her own Conſcience, were manifeſt to Chriſt *. There is nothing ſo ſecretly done, but there is an infallible Witneſs to prepare a Charge. Though God be inviſible to us, we muſt not imagine we are ſo to him; 'tis a vanity therefore to think, we can conceal our ſelves from God, by concealing the

* Pſal 90. 8.

* John 4. 16.

Notions

Notions of God from our ſenſe and practice. If Men be as cloſe from the Eyes of all Men, as from thoſe of the Sun: yea, if they could ſeparate themſelves from their own Shadow, they could not draw themſelves from Gods Underſtanding: How then can darkneſs ſhelter us, or Crafty Artifices defend us? With what ſhame will Sinners be filled, when God, who hath trac'd their Steps, and writ their Sins in a Book, ſhall make a Repetition of their ways, and unvail the Web of their Wickedneſs.

2. What a dreadful Conſideration is this to the juggling Hypocrite, that maſks himſelf with an appearance of Piety? An infinite Underſtanding judges not according to the Vails and Shadows, but according to Truth; He judges not according to appearance *. The outward Comelineſs of a work impoſeth not on him, his Knowledg, and therefore his Eſtimations are quite of another Nature than thoſe of Men. By this Perfection God looks through the Vail, and beholds the litter of Abominations in the ſecrets of the Soul: the true Quality and Principle of every Work, and judges of them as they are, and not as they appear. Diſguiſed Pretexts cannot deceive him; the Diſguiſes are known afar off before they are weav'd, he pierceth into the depths of the moſt abſtruſe Wills; all ſecret Ends are diſſected before him: Every action is naked in its outſide, and open in its inſide, all are as clear to him as if their Bodies were of Chryſtal, ſo that if there be any ſecret reſerves, he will certainly reprove us *. We are often deceiv'd, we may take Wolves for Sheep, and Hypocrites for Believers; for the Eyes of Men are no better than Fleſh, and dive no further than appearance; but an infinite Underſtanding, that fathoms the ſecret depths of the Heart, is too knowing to let a Dream paſs for a Truth, or miſtake a Shadow for a Body. Though we call God Father all our days, ſpeak the language of Angels, or be endowed with the Gift of Miracles, he can diſcern whether we have his Mark upon us; He can eſpy the Treaſon of Judas in a Kiſs; Herod's intent of Murdering under a ſpecious pretence of Worſhip: A Phariſees fraud under a broad Philactery: A Ravenous Wolf under the ſoftneſs of a Sheeps Skin; And the Devil in Samuels Mantle, or when he would ſhrowd himſelf among the Sons of God *. All the Rooms of the Heart, and every atome of Duſt in the leaſt chink of it is clear to his Eye: He can ſtrip Sin from the faireſt Excuſes, pierce into the Heart with more eaſe than the Sun can through the thinneſt Cloud or Vapour; and look through all Ephraims ingenuous Inventions to excuſe his Idolatry *. Hypocriſie then is a ſenſeleſs thing, ſince it cannot eſcape unmaſking, by an infinite Underſtanding. As all our force cannot ſtop his Arm, when he is reſolved to puniſh; ſo all our ſophiſtry cannot blind his Underſtanding, when he comes to Judge. Woe to the Hypocrite, for God ſees him; all his juggling is open and naked to infinite Underſtanding.

* 1 Sam. 16. 7.

* Job 13. 10.

* Job 1. 6, 7.

* Hoſ. 5. 3.

3. Is it not alſo a ſenſeleſs thing to be careleſs of Sins committed long ago? The old Sins forgotten by Men, ſtick faſt in an infinite Underſtanding: Time cannot raze out that which hath been known from Eternity. Why ſhould they be forgotten many years after they were acted, ſince they were foreknown in an Eternity before they were committed, or the Criminal capable to practice them? Amalek muſt pay their Arrears of their ancient Unkindneſs to Iſrael in the time of Saul, though the Generation that committed them were rotten in their Graves *. Old Sins are written in a Book, which lies always before God; and not only our own Sins, but the Sins of our Fathers, to be requited upon their Poſterity *. What a vanity is it then to be regardleſs of the Sins of an Age that went before us; becauſe they are in ſome meaſure out of our knowledge, are they therefore blotted out of Gods remembrance? Sins are bound up with him, as Men do Bonds, till they reſolve to ſue for the Debt; The iniquity of Ephraim is bound up *. As his fore-knowledg extends to all acts that ſhall be done, ſo his remembrance extends to all acts that have been done. We may as well ſay, God fore-knows nothing that ſhall be done to the end of the World, as that he forgets any things that hath been done from the beginning of the World. The former Ages of the World are no further diſtant from him than the latter. God hath a Calendar, (as it were)

* 1 Sam. 15. 2.

* Iſai. 65. 6. Behold it is written.

* Hoſ. 13. 12.

or

or an Account Book of Mens Sins ever since the beginning of the World, what they did in their Childhood, what in their Youth, what in their Manhood, and what in their Old Age: He hath them in store among his Treasure *: He hath neither lost his Understanding to know them, nor his Resolution to revenge them: As it follows, * To me Vengeance belongs. He intends to enrich his Justice with a glorious manifestation, by rendring a due Recompence. And it is to be observed, that God doth not only necessarily remember them; but sometimes binds himself by an Oath to do it; Amos 8. 7. The Lord hath sworn by the Excellency of Jacob, surely I will never forget any of their works. Or in the Hebrew, If I ever forget any of their works; That is, Let me not be accounted a God for ever, if I do forget; Let me lose my Godhead, if I lose my remembrance. 'Tis not less a Misery to the Wicked, than it is a Comfort to the Godly, that their Record is in Heaven.

* Deut. 32. 34.

* Verse 35.

4. Let it be observed, That this infinite Understanding doth exactly know the sins of Men, he knows so as to consider. He doth not only know them, but intently behold them; * His Eye-lids trie the Children of Men, a Metaphor taken from Men, that contract the Eye-lids, when they would wistly and accurately behold a thing; 'tis not a transient and careless look, Psal. 10. 14. Thou hast seen it; Thou hast intently beheld it, as the word properly signifies: He beholds and knows the actions of every particular Man, as if there were none but he in the World. And doth not only know, but ponder *, and consider their works *, He is not a bare Spectator, but a diligent Observer, * By him actions are weighed; To see what degree of good or evil there is in them, what there is to blemish them, what to advantage them, what the quality and quantity of every action is. Consideration takes in every Circumstance of the Considered Object: Notice is taken of the place where, the minute when, the Mercy against which it is committed; the number of them is exact in Gods Book; They have tempted me now these ten times *, against the demonstrations of my Glory in Egypt and the Wilderness. The whole Guilt in every Circumstance is spread before him: His knowledg of Mens Sins is not confused, such an Imperfection an infinite Understanding cannot be subject to, 'Tis exact, for iniquity is markt before him *.

* Jer. 11. 4.

* Prov. 5. 21.

* Psal. 33. 15.

* 1 Sam. 2. 3.

* Numb. 14. 22.

* Jer. 2. 22.

5. God knows Mens miscarriage so as to judge. This use his Omniscience is put to, to maintain his Soveraign Authority in the exercise of his Justice: His notice of the Sins of Men is in order to a just Retribution, Psal. 10. 14. Thou hast seen mischief to requite it with thy hand. The Eye of his Knowledg directs the Hand of his Justice; and no sinful action that falls under his Cognizance, but will fall under his Revenge; they can as little escape his Censure as they can his Knowledg: He is a Witness in his Omniscience, that he may be a Judge in his Righteousness: He knows the hearts of the Wicked, so as to hate their Works, and testifie his abhorrency of that which is of high value with Men *. Sin is not preserved in his Understanding, or written down in his Book to be moth-eaten as an old Manuscript, but to be open'd one day, and Copied out in the Consciences of Men: He writes them to publish them, and sets them in the light of his Countenance, to bring them to the light of their Consciences. What a terrible consideration is it, to think that the Sins of a day are upon Record in an Infallible Understanding, much more the Sins of a week; What a number then do the Sins of a Month, a Year, ten or forty Years arise to? How many actions against Charity, against Sincerity; what an infinite number is there of them, all bound up in the Court Rolls of Gods Omniscience, in order to a Tryal, to be brought out before the Eyes of Men? Who can seriously consider all those Bonds, reserv'd in the Cabinet of Gods Knowledg to be sued out against the Sinner in due time, without an unexpressible horror?

* Luke 16. 15.

4. The fourth Use is of Exhortation. Let us have a sense of Gods Knowledg upon our hearts. All Wickedness hath a spring from a want of due Consideration and sense of it. David concludes it so, * The proud rose against him, and violent Men sought after his Soul, because they did not set God before them. They think think God doth not know, and therefore care not what, nor how they act. When the fear of this Attribute is remov'd a Door is open'd to all Impiety: What is there ſo villanous, but the minds of Men will attempt to act? What Reverence of a Deity can be left, when the ſence of his infinite Underſtanding is extinguiſht? What Faith could there be in Judgments in Witneſſes? How would the Foundations of Humane Society be overturn'd? The Pillars upon which Commerce ſtands, be utterly broken and diſſolved? What Society can be preſerved, if this be not truly believed and faithfully ſtuck to? But how eaſily would Oaths be ſwallowed and quickly violated, if the ſence of this Perfection were rooted out of the minds of Men? What fear could they have of calling to Witneſs a Being they imagine blind and ignorant? Men ſecretly imagine, that God knows not, or ſoon forgets, and then make bold to Sin againſt him *, How much does it therefore concern us to cheriſh and keep alive the ſenſe of this? If God writes us upon the Palms of his Hands, as the Expreſſion is, to remember us, let us engrave him upon the Tables of our Hearts to remember him. It would be a good Motto to write upon our Minds, God knows all, he is of infinite Underſtanding.

* Psal. 86. 14.

* Ezek. 8. 12.

1. This would give check to much iniquity. Can a Mans Conſcience eaſily and delightfully ſwallow that, which he is ſenſible falls under the Cognizance of God, when it is hateful to the Eye of his Holineſs, and renders the Actor odious to him? Doth he not ſee my ways, and count all my ſteps, ſaith *Job. To what end doth he fix this Conſideration? To keep him from wanton glances, Temptations have no encouragement to come near him, that is conſtantly arm'd with the thoughts that his Sin is Book't in Gods Omniſcience. If any impudent Devil hath the face to tempt us, we ſhould not have the impudence to joyn iſſue which him under the ſenſe of an infinite Underſtanding. How fruitleſs would his Wiles be againſt this Conſideration? How eaſily would his Snares be crackt, by one ſenſible thought of this? This doth Solomon preſcribe to allay the heat of *Carnal imaginations. It were a uſeful Queſtion to ask, at the appearance of every Temptation, at the entrance upon every Action, as the Church did in Temptations to Idolatry; * Shall not God ſearch this out, for he knows the ſecrets of the heart? His Underſtanding comprehends us more than our Conſciences can our acts, or our Underſtanding our thoughts: Who durſt ſpeak Treaſon againſt a Prince, if he were ſure he heard him, or that it would come to his knowledg? A ſenſe of Gods knowledg of Wickedneſs in the firſt motion, and inward contrivance would bar the accompliſhment and execution. The Conſideration of Gods infinite Underſtanding, would cry ſtand to the firſt glances of the heart to Sin.

* Job 41. 4.

* Prov. 5. 20. 21.

* Pſal 44. 21.

2. It would make us watchful over our hearts and thoughts. Should we harbour any unworthy thoughts in our Cabinet, if our heads and hearts were poſſeſs'd with this uſeful truth, That *God knows every thing which comes into our minds? We ſhould as much bluſh at the riſing of impure thoughts before the Underſtanding of God, as at the diſcovery of unworthy actions to the knowledg of Men: If we lived under a ſenſe, that not a thought of all thoſe millions, which flutter about our Minds, can be conceal'd from him; how watchful and careful ſhould we be of our hearts and thoughts?

* Ezek. 11. 5.

3. It would be a good preparation to every Duty. This Conſideration ſhould be the Preface to every ſervice; The Divine Underſtanding knows how I now act. This would engage us to ſerious Intention, and quell wandring and diſtracting fancies: Who would come before God, with a careleſs and ignorant Soul, under a ſenſe of his infinite Underſtanding, and Prerogative of ſearching the heart? Oh thou that ſitteſt in Heaven, was a Conſideration the Pſalmiſt had at the beginning of his Prayer *: Whereby he teſtifies not only an apprehenſion of the Majeſty and Power of God, but of his Omniſcience; as one ſitting above, beholds all that is below; Would we offer to God ſuch raw and undigeſted Petitions; would there be ſo much flatneſs in our ſervices; ſhould our hearts ſo often give us the ſlip: Would any hang down their Heads like a Bulruſh, by an affected or counterfeit Humility, while the Heart is filled with Pride, if we did actuate Faith in this Attribute? No, our Prayers would be more ſound, our Devotions more vigorous, our Hearts more cloſe, our Spirits like the Chariots of Aminadab, more ſwift in their motions: Every thing would be done by us with all our might, which would be very feeble and faint, if we conceived God to be of a Finite Underſtanding like our ſelves. Let us therefore before every duty, not draw, but open the Curtains between God and our Souls, and think that we are going before him that ſees us, before him that knows us *. And the ſtronger Impreſſions of the Divine Knowledg are upon our Minds, the better would our preparation be for, and he more active our frames in every ſervice: And certainly we may judg of the ſuitableneſs of our preparations, by the ſtrength of ſuch Impreſſions upon us.

* Pſal. 123. 1.

be

* Gen. 16. 13.

4. This would tend to make us ſincere in our whole Courſe. This preſcription David gave to Solomon, to maintain a ſoundneſs and health of Spirit in his walk before God; 1 Chron. 28. 9. And thou Solomon my Son, know the God of thy Fathers, and ſerve him with a perfect heart, for the Lord underſtands all the imaginations of the thoughts. Joſephus gives this reaſon for Abels Holineſs, that he believed God was ignorant of nothing. As the Doctrine of Omniſcience is the foundation of all Religion; ſo the Impreſſion of it, would promote the practice of all Religion. When all our ways are imagin'd by us to be before the Lord, we ſhall then keep his precepts *. And we can never be perfect or ſincere, till we walk before God, Gen. 17. 1. as under the Eye of Gods knowledg. What we ſpeak, what we think, what we act is in his ſight: He knows every place where we are, every thing that we do, as well as Chriſt knew Nathaniel under the Fig-tree. As he is too powerful to be vanquiſht, ſo he is too Underſtanding to be deceived: The ſenſe of this would make us walk with as much care, as if the Underſtanding of all Men did comprehend us and our actions.

* Antiquit. lib. 1. cap. 3.

* Pſal. 119. 168.

5. The Conſideration of this Attribute would make us humble. How dejected would a Perſon be, if he were ſure all the Angels in Heaven and Men upon Earth, did perfectly know his Crimes, with all their aggravations? But what is Created Knowledg to an infinite and juſt Cenſuring Underſtanding? When we conſider that he knows our actions, whereof there are multitudes, and our thoughts whereof there are millions: That he views all the Bleſſings beſtow'd upon us; all the injuries we have return'd to him; That he exactly knows his own Bounty, and our ingratitude; all the Idolatry, Blaſphemy, and ſecret enmity in every Mans heart againſt him; all Tyrannical Oppreſſions, hidden Luſts, omiſſions of neceſſary Duties, violation of plain Precepts, every fooliſh Imagination, with all the Circumſtances of them, and that perfectly in their full Anatomy, every mite of unworthineſs and wickedneſs in every Circumſtance; and add to this his Knowledg, the wonders of his Patience, which are miraculous upon the ſcore of his Omniſcience, that he is not as quick in his revenge, as he is in his Underſtanding; but is ſo far from inflicting Puniſhment, that he continues his former Benefits, arms not his Juſtice againſt us, but ſollicites our Repentance, and waits to be Gracious with all this knowledg of our Crimes; ſhould not the Conſideration of this, melt our hearts into Humiliation before him, and make us earneſt in begging pardon and forgiveneſs of him?

Again, Do we not all find a Worm in our beſt Fruit, a Flaw in our ſoundeſt Duties? Shall any of us vaunt, as if God beheld only the Gold, and not any Droſs; as if he knew one thing only, and not another: If we knew ſomething by our ſelves to chear us, do we not alſo know ſomething, yea, many things to condemn us, and therefore to humble us? Let the ſenſe of Gods infinite knowledg therefore be an Incentive and Argument for more Humiliation in us. If we know enough to render our ſelves vile in our own Eyes, how much more doth God know to render us vile in his!

6. The Conſideration of this Excellent Perfection, ſhould make us to acquieſce in God, and rely upon him in every ſtrait. In publick, in private: He knows all Caſes, and he knows all Remedies; He knows the Seaſons of bringing them, and he knows the Seaſons of removing them, for his own Glory.

What is contingent in reſpect of us, and of our fore-knowledg, and in reſpect of ſecond cauſes, is it not ſo in regard of Gods, who hath the knowledg of the futurition of all things: He knows all Cauſes in themſelves, and therefore knows what every Cauſe will produce, what will be the event of every Counſel and of every Action? How ſhould we commit our ſelves to this God of infinite Underſtanding, who knows all things, and fore-knows every thing, that cannot be forced through ignorance to take new Counſel, or be ſurpriz'd with any thing, that can happen to us? This uſe the Pſalmiſt makes of it, Pſal. 10. 14. Thou haſt ſeen it, the poor committeth himſelf unto thee. Though ſome truſt in Chariots and Horſes *, ſome in Counſels and Counſellors, ſome in their Arms and Courage, and ſome in meer vanity and nothing, yet let us remember the Name and Nature of the Lord our God, his Divine Perfections, of which this of his infinite Underſtanding and Omniſcience is none of the leaſt, but ſo neceſſary, that without it he could not be God, and the whole World would be a mear Chaos and Confuſion.

* Pſal. 10. 7.

A DISCOURSE UPON THE WISDOM OF GOD.

Rom. XVI. 27.

To God only Wise be Glory through Jesus Christ, for ever, Amen.

THis Chapter being the last of this Epistle, is chiefly made up of charitable and friendly Salutations and Commendations of particular Persons, according to the earlyness and strength of their several Graces, and their labour of Love for the Interest of God and his People.

In verse 17. he warns them not to be drawn aside from the Gospel Doctrine, hch had been taught them, by the plausible Pretences and Insinuations, which the Corrupters of the Doctrine and Rule of Christ never want from the suggestions of their Carnal Wisdom. The Brats of Soul-destroying Errors, may walk about the world in a garb and disguise of good words, and fair speeches, as it is in the 18*th Verse*, by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple. And for their encouragement to a constancy in the Gospel Doctrine, he assures them, that all those that would dispossess them of Truth, to possess them with Vanity, are but Satans Instruments, and will fall under the same Captivity and Yoke with their principal; Verse 18. The God of Peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly.

Whence observe,

1. All Corrupters of Divine Truth, and Troublers of the Churches Peace, are no better than Devils. Our Saviour thought the Name Satan, a Title merited by Peter, when he breathed out an Advice, as an Ax at the Root of the Gospel, the Death of Christ, the foundation of all Gospel Truth; and the Apostle concludes them under the same Character, which hinder the superstructure, and would mix their Chaff with his Wheat; Mat. 16. 23. Get thee behind me Satan. 'Tis not, Get thee behind me Simon, or, Get thee behind me Peter; but, Get thee behind me Satan: thou art an offence to me: Thou dost oppose thy self to the Wisdom, and Grace, and Authority of God, to the Redemption of Man, and to the good of the World.

As the Holy Ghost is the Spirit of Truth, so is Satan the Spirit of Falshood: As the Holy Ghost inspires Believers with Truth, so doth the Devil corrupt Unbelievers with Error. Let us cleave to the Truth of the Goſpel, that we may not be counted by God as part of the Corporation of Fallen Angels, and not be barely reckon'd as Enemies of God, but in league with the greateſt Enemy to his Glory in the World.

2. The Reconciler of the World will be the ſubduer of Satan. The God of peace ſent the Prince of Peace to be the Reſtorer of his Rights, and the Hammer to beat in pieces the Uſurper of them. As a God of Truth he will make good his promiſe, as a God of peace he will perfect the deſign his Wiſdom hath laid, and begun to act. In the ſubduing Satan, he will be the Conqueror of his Inſtruments: He ſaith not, God ſhall bruiſe your Troublers, and Hereticks; but Satan: The fall of a General proves the rout of the Army. Since God, as a God of Peace hath delivered his own, he will perfect the Victory, and make them ceaſe from bruiſing the heel of his Spritual ſeed.

3. Divine Evangelical Truth ſhall be Victorious. No Weapon formed againſt it ſhall proſper: The Head of the Wicked ſhall fall as low as the feet of the Godly. The Devil never yet bluſter'd in the World, but he met at laſt with a diſappointment: His fall hath been like Lightning, ſudden, certain, vaniſhing

4. Faith muſt look back as far as the foundation promiſe. The God of peace, ſhall bruiſe, &c, The Apoſtle ſeems to allude to the firſt promiſe, Gen. 2. 15. A Promiſe that hath vigor to nouriſh the Church in all Ages of the VVorld: 'Tis the ſtanding Cordial; out of the Womb of this promiſe all the reſt have taken their birth. The promiſes of the Old Teſtament were deſigned for thoſe under the New, and full performance of them, is to be expected, and will be enjoyed by them. 'Tis a mighty ſtrengthening to Faith, to trace the footſteps of Gods Truth and VViſdom, from the Threatning againſt the Serpent in Eden, to the bruiſe he received in Calvary, and the Triumph over him upon Mount Olivet.

5. We are to conſide in the promiſe of God but leave the ſeaſon of its accompliſhment to his Wiſdom. He will bruiſe Satan under your feet, therefore do not doubt it; and ſhortly, therefore wait for it: Shortly it will be done, that is, quickly when you think it may be a great way off; or ſhortly, that is, ſeaſonably, when Satans Rage is hotteſt. God is the beſt Judg of the ſeaſons of diſtributing his own mercies, and darting out his own Glory: 'Tis enough to encourage our waiting, that it will be, and that it will be ſhortly; but we muſt not meaſure God's ſhortly by our Minutes,

The Apoſtle after this concludes with a comfortable Prayer, That ſince they were liable to many Temptations, to turn their backs upon the Doctrin which they had learned; yet he deſires God, who had brought them to the knowledg of his Truth, would confirm them in the belief of it, ſince it was the Goſpel of Chriſt, his dear Son, and a myſtery he had been chary of and kept in his own Cabinet, and now brought forth to the world in purſuance of the ancient Propheſies, and now had publiſh'd to all Nations for that end that it might be obeyed; and concludes with a Doxology, a voice of Praiſe, to him who was only Wiſe to effect his own purpoſes; Verſes 25, 26, 27. Now to him that is of power to eſtabliſh you, according to my Goſpel and the preaching of Jeſus Chriſt, according to the revelation of the Myſtery, which was kept ſecret ſince the World began; but now is made manifeſt, and by the Scriptures of the Prophets, according to the commandment of the Everlaſting God, made known to all Nations for the obedience of Faith. This Doxology is interlac'd with many Comforts for the Romans, He explains the cauſes of this glory to God, Power and Wiſdom; Power to eſtabliſh the Romans in Grace, which includes his will. This he proves from a Divine Teſtimony, viz. the Goſpel; the Goſpel committed to him, and preach'd by him, which he commends by calling it the preaching of Chriſt; and deſcribes it, for the inſtruction and comfort of the Church, from the Adjuncts, the obſcurity of it under the Old Teſtament, and the clearneſs of it under the New: It was hid from the former Ages, and kept in ſilence; not ſimply and abſolutely, but comparatively and in part; becauſe in the Old Teſtament, the Doctrine of Salvation by Chriſt was confin'd to the limits of Judea, preach'd only to the Inhabitants of that Country: To them he gave his Statutes and his judgments and dealt not ſo magnificently with any Nation *; but now he cauſes it to

* Pſal. 147. 19. 20.

ſpring

ſpring with greater Majeſty out of thoſe narrow bounds, and ſpread its Wings about the world. This manifeſtation of the Goſpel he declares firſt from the ſubject, All Nations: 2. From the principal efficient cauſe of it, The Commandment and Order of God: 3. The Inſtrumental cauſe, The Prophetick Scriptures: 4. From the End of it, The obedience of Faith. Gomarus in loc.

1. Obſerve, The glorious Attributes of God bear a comfortable reſpect to Believers. Power and Wiſdom are here mention'd as two props of their Faith; his Power here includes his Goodneſs. Power to help, without will to aſſiſt, is a dry Chip. The Apoſtle mentions not Gods power ſimply and abſolutely conſidered, for that of it ſelf is no more comfort to men, than it is to Devils; but as conſidered in the Goſpel Covenant, his power, as well as his other perfections, are ingredients in that Cordial of Gods being our God. VVe ſhould never think of the Excellency of the Divine Nature, without conſidering the Duties they demand, and gathering the Honey they preſent.

2. Obſ. The ſtability of a gracious Soul depends upon the Wiſdom, as well as the Power of God. It would be a diſrepute to the Almightyneſs of God, if that ſhould be totally vanquiſh'd which was introduc'd by his mighty Arm, and rooted in the Soul by an irreſiſtible Grace. It would ſpeak a want of ſtrength to maintain it, or a change of reſolution, and ſo would be no honour to the wiſdom of his firſt deſign. 'Tis no part of the wiſdom of an Artificer, to leta work wherein he determin'd to ſhew the greatneſs of his Skill, to be daſh'd in pieces, when he hath power to preſerve it. God deſign'd every gracious Soul for a piece of his workmanſhip *: What, to have the Skill of his Grace defeated; If any Soul which he hath graciouſly conquer'd ſhould be wreſted from him, what could be thought, but that his power is enfeebled? If deſerted by him, what could be imagin'd, but that he repented of his labour, and alter'd his Counſel, as if raſhly undertaken? Theſe Romans were rugged Pieces, and lay in a filthy quarry, when God came firſt to ſmooth them; for ſo the Apoſtle repreſents them with the reſt of the Heathen, Rom. 1. 19. and would he throw them away, or leave them to the power of his Enemy, after all his pains he had taken with them, to fit them for his Building? Did he not foreſee the deſigns of Satan againſt them; what ſtratagems he would uſe to defeat his purpoſes and ſtrip him of the honour of his work; and would God ſo gratifie his Enemy, and diſgrace his own Wiſdom? The deſerting of what hath been acted is a real, Repentance, and argues an Imprudence in the firſt reſolve and attempt. The Goſpel is called, the Manifold Wiſdom of God, Eph. 3. 10. the fruit of it in the heart of any Perſon, which is a main deſign of it, hath a title to the ſame Character; and ſhall this Grace, which is the product of this Goſpel, and therefore the birth of Manifold Wiſdom, be ſuppreſt? 'Tis at Gods hand we muſt ſeek our fixedneſs and eſtabliſhment, and act Faith upon theſe two Attributes of God. Power is no ground to expect ſtability, without Wiſdom intereſting the Agent in it, and finding out and applying the means for it. Wiſdom is naked without Power to act, and Power is uſeleſs without VViſdom to direct: They are theſe two excellencies of the Deity, the Apoſtle here pitches the Hope and Faith of the converted Romans upon for their ſtability. * Eph. 2. 10.

3. Obſ. Perſeverance of Believers in Grace, is a Goſpel Doctrine. According to my Goſpel: My Goſpel miniſterially, according to that Goſpel Doctrine I have taught you in this Epiſtle; (for, as the Prophets were Comments upon the Law, ſo are the Epiſtles upon the Goſpel:) This very Doctrine he had diſcours'd of Rom. 8. 38, 39. where he tells them, that neither death nor life, the Terrors of a cruel death, or the Allurements of an honourable and pleaſant life, nor principalities and powers, with all their ſubtility and ſtrength; not the things we have before us, nor the promiſes of a future felicity, by either Angels in Heaven, or Devils in Hell; not the higheſt Angel, nor the deepeſt Devil, is able to ſeparate us, us Romans, from the love of God which is in Chriſt Jeſus. So that, According to my Goſpel, may be according to that Declaration of the Goſpel, which I have made in this Epiſtle, which doth not only promiſe the firſt creating Grace, but the Perfecting and crowning Grace; for not only the being of Grace, but the health, livelineſs, and perpetuity of Grace is the fruit of the New Covenant, Jer. 32. 40.

4. Obſerve, That the Goſpel is the ſole Means of a Chriſtians Eſtabliſhment.

According

According to my Goſpel, that is, by my Goſpel. The Goſpel is the Inſtrumental cauſe of our ſpiritual life, 'tis the cauſe alſo of the continuance of it; 'tis the Seed whereby we were born, and the Milk whereby we are nouriſh'd *; 'tis the *Power of God to ſalvation, and therefore to all the degrees of it. John 17. 17. Sanctifie them by thy Truth, or through thy Truth; by or through his Truth he Sanctifies us, and by the ſame Truth he eſtabliſheth us: The firſt Sanctification, and the progreſs of it, the firſt lineaments and the laſt colours, are wrought by the Goſpel. The Goſpel therefore ought to be known, ſtudied, and conſidered by us: 'Tis the Charter of our inheritance, and the ſecurity for our ſtanding. The Law acquaints us with our Duty, but contributes nothing to our ſtrength and ſettlement.

* 1 Pet. 1. 23.
* 1 Pet. 2. 2.

5. Obſerve, The Goſpel is nothing elſe but the Revelation of Chriſt. Verſe 25. According to my Goſpel, and the preaching of Jeſus Chriſt: The diſcovery of the Myſtery, and Redemption, and Salvation, in and by him. 'Tis Genitivus objecti, that Preaching wherein Chriſt is declared and ſet out, with the Benefits accruing by him. This is the privilege the Wiſdom of God reſerved for the latter times, which the Old Teſtament-Church had only under a vail.

6. 'Tis a part of the Excellency of the Goſpel, that it had the Son of God for its Publiſher: The Preaching of Jeſus Chriſt. It was firſt preached to Adam in Paradiſe by God, and afterwards publiſh'd by Chriſt in Perſon to the Inhabitants of Judea. It was not the Invention of Man, but Copied from the boſom of the Father by him that lay in his boſom. The Goſpel we have, is the ſame which our Saviour himſelf preached when he was in the World: He preached it not to the Romans; but the ſame Goſpel he preached is tranſmitted to the Romans. It therefore Commands our reſpect, who ever ſlights it, 'tis as much as if he ſlighted Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, were he in Perſon to ſound it from his own Lips. The validity of a Proclamation is derived from the Authority of the Prince that dictates it and orders it; yet the greater the Perſon that publiſheth it, the more diſhonour is caſt upon the Authority of the Prince that enjoyns it, if it be contemn'd. The Everlaſting God ordain'd it, and the Eternal Son publiſh'd it.

7. The Goſpel was of an Eternal Reſolution, though of a temporary Revelation. Verſe 25. According to the Revelation of the Myſtery, which was kept ſecret ſince the World began. 'Tis an Everlaſting Goſpel. It was a Promiſe before the world began, Tit. 1. 2. It was not a new Invention, but only kept ſecret among the Arcana, in the breaſt of the Almighty. It was hidden from Angels, for the depths of it are not yet fully made known to them; their deſire to look into it, ſpeaks yet a deficiency in their Knowledg of it *. It was publiſh'd in Paradiſe, but in ſuch words as Adam did not fully underſtand: It was both diſcover'd and clouded in the Smoke of Sacrifices: It was wrapped up in a Vail under the Law, but not open'd till the Death of the Redeemer: it was then plainly ſaid to the Cities of Judah, behold your God comes. The whole Tranſaction of it between the Father and the Son, which is the Spirit of the Goſpel, was from Eternity; the Creation of the World was in order to the manifeſtation of it. Let us not then regard the Goſpel as a Novelty; the conſideration of it, as one of Gods Cabinet Rarities, ſhould enhance our Eſtimation of it. No Traditions of Men, no invention of vain Wits, that pretend to be wiſer than God, ſhould have the ſame Credit with that which bears date from Eternity.

* 1 Pet. 1. 12.

8. Obſerve, That Divine Truth is Myſterious. According to the revelation of the myſtery, Chriſt manifeſted in the fleſh. The whole Scheme of Godlineſs is a Myſtery. No Man or Angel could imagine, how two Natures ſo diſtant as the Divine and Human, ſhould be united; how the ſame Perſon ſhould be Criminal and Righteous; how a Juſt God ſhould have a Satisfaction, and ſinful man a Juſtification; how the Sin ſhould be puniſh'd and the Sinner ſaved. None could imagine ſuch a way of juſtification, as the Apoſtle in this Epiſtle declares: It was a Myſtery, when hid under the ſhadows of the Law; and a Myſtery to the Prophets, when it ſounded from their Mouths; they ſearched it, without being able to comprehend it *.

* 1 Pet. 1. 10, 11.

If it be a myſtery, 'tis humbly to be ſubmitted to: Myſteries ſurmount Human Reaſon. The ſtudy of the Goſpel muſt not be with a yawning and careleſs frame. Trades you call Myſteries, are not learned ſleeping and nodding; diligence is required, we must be Disciples at Gods Feet. As it had God for the Author, so we must have God for the Teacher of it; the Contrivance was his, and the Illumination of our Minds must be from him. As God only manifested the Gospel, so he only can open our Eyes to see the Mysteries of Christ in it.

Diligence

In Verse 26. we may observe,

1. The Scriptures of the Old Testament verifie the substance of the New, and the New doth evidence the Authority of the Old. By the Scriptures of the Prophets made known. The Old Testament credits the New, and the New illustrates the Old, The New Testament is a Comment upon the Prophetick part of the Old. The Old shews the Promises and Predictions of God, and the New shews the Performance: What was foretold in the Old, is fulfilled in the New; the predictions are cleared by the Events. The Predictions of the Old are Divine, because they are above the reason of man to foreknow: None but an Infinite knowledg could foretell them, because none but an Infinite Wisdom could order all things for the accomplishment of them.

The Christian Religion hath then the surest Foundation, since the Scriptures of the Prophets, wherein it is foretold, are of undoubted Antiquity, and owned by the Jews and many Heathens, which are and were the great Enemies of Christ. The Old Testament is therefore to be read for the strengthning of our Faith. Our Blessed Saviour himself draws the Streams of his Doctrine from the Old Testament: He clears up the Promise of Eternal Life, and the Doctrine of the Resurrection, from the words of the Covenant, I am the God of Abraham, &c. Mat. 22. 32. And our Apostle clears up the Doctrin of justification by Faith from Gods Covenant with Abraham, Rom. 4. It must be read, and it must be read as it is writ: It was writ to a Gospel end, it must be studied with a Gospel Spirit The Old Testament was writ to give Credit to the New, when it should be manifested in the world. It must be read by us to give strength to our Faith, and establish us in the Doctrin of Christianity. How many view it as a bare story, an Almanack out of date, and regard it as a dry Bone, without sucking from it the Evangelical Marrow? Christ is, in Genesis, Abrahams Seed; in Davids Psalms and the Prophets, the Messiah and Redeemer of the World.

2. Observe the Antiquity of the Gospel is made manifest by the Scriptures of the Prophets. It was of as Ancient a date as any prophesie: The first prophesie was nothing else but a Gospel Charter; it was not made at the Incarnation of Christ, but made manifest. It then rose up to its Meridian lustre, and sprung out of the Clouds, wherewith it was before obscur'd. The Gospel was preached to the Ancients by the Prophets, as well as to the Gentiles by the Apostles; Heb. 4. 2. Unto us was the Gospel preached, as well as unto them. To them first, to us after; to them indeed more cloudy, to us more clear; but they as well as we, were Evangeliz'd, as the word signifies.

The Covenant of grace was the same in the Writings of the Prophets, and the Declarations of the Evangelists and Apostles. Though by our Saviours Incarnation, the Gospel Light was clearer, and by his Ascension, the Effusions of the Spirit fuller and stronger; yet the Believers under the Old Testament, saw Christ in the Swadling Bands of Legal Ceremonies, and the Lattice of prophetical Writings; they could not offer one Sacrifice, or read one prophesie with a Faith of the right stamp. Abrahams Justifying Faith had Christ for its Object, though it was not so Explicit as ours, because the manifestation was not so clear as ours.

3. All Truth is to be drawn from Scripture. The Apostle refers them here to the Gospel and the Prophets: The Scripture is the Source of Divine Knowledg; not the Traditions of Men, nor Reason separate from Scripture. Whosoever brings another Doctrine, coyns another Christ; nothing is to be added to what is written, nothing detracted from it. He doth not send us for truth, to the puddles of Human Inventions, to the Enthusiasms of our brain; nor to the See of Rome, no nor to the Instructions of Angels; but the Writings of the Prophets, as they clear up the Declarations of the Apostles. The Church of Rome is not made here the Standard of truth; but the Scriptures of the Prophets are to be the Touch-stone to the Romans, for the trial of the Truth of the Gospel.

4. How

4. How great is the goodneſs of God? The Borders of Grace are enlarged to the Gentiles, and not hid under the Skirts of the Jews. He that was ſo long the God of the Jews, is now alſo manifeſt to be the God of the Gentiles: The Goſpel is now made known to all Nations, according to the Commandment of the Everlaſting God. Not only in a way of Common Providence, but ſpecial Grace; in Calling them to the knowledg of himſelf, and a Juſtification of them by Faith, He hath brought Strangers to him, to the Adoption of Children, and lodged them under the Wings of the Covenant, that were before alienated from him through the univerſal Corruption of Nature. Now he hath manifeſted himſelf a God of Truth, mindful of his promiſe in bleſſing all Nations in the Seed of Abraham. The Fury of Devils, and the Violence of men, could not hinder the propagation of this Goſpel: Its Light hath been diſperſed as far as that of the Sun; and that Grace that ſounded in the Gentiles Ears, hath bent many of their Hearts to the Obedience of it

5. Obſerve, That Libertiniſm and Licentiouſneſs find no encouragement in the Goſpel. It was made known to all Nations for the Obedience of Faith. The Goodneſs of God is publiſh'd, that our Enmity to him may be parted with. Chriſts Righteouſneſs is not offered to us to be put on, that we may roll more warmly in our Luſts. The Doctrin of Grace commands us to give up ourſelves to Chriſt to be accepted through him, and to be ruled by him. Obedience is due to God, as a Soveraign Lord in his Law; and 'tis due out of gratitude, as he is a God of Grace in the Goſpel. The diſcovery of a further perfection in God weakens not the right of another, nor the obligation of the Duty the former Attribute claims at our hands. The Goſpel frees us from the Curſe, but not from the Duty and ſervice: We are delivered from the hands of our Enemies, that we might ſerve God in Holineſs and Righteouſneſs, Luke. 1. 74. This is the will of God in the Goſpel, even our Sanctification. When a Prince ſtrikes off a Malefactors chains, though he deliver him from the puniſhments of his Crime, he frees him not from the Duty of a Subject: His pardon adds a greater obligation, than his Protection did before while he was Loyal. Chriſts Righteouſneſs gives us a Title to Heaven; but there muſt be a Holineſs to give us a fitneſs for Heaven.

6. Obſerve, That Evangelical Obedience, or the Obedience of Faith is only acceptable to God. Obedience of Faith; Genitivus ſpeciei, noting the kind of Obedience God requires; an Obedience ſpringing from Faith, animated and influenced by Faith. Not Obedience of Faith, as though Faith were the Rule, and the Law were abrogated; but to the Law as a Rule, and from Faith as a Principle. There is no true Obedience before Faith: Heb. 11. 6. Without Faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God; and therefore without Faith impoſſible to obey him. A good Work cannot proceed from a defil'd Mind and Conſcience; and without Faith every mans mind is darkned, and his Conſcience polluted *. Faith is the Band of Union to Chriſt, and Obedience is the Fruit of Union; we cannot bring forth fruit without being Branches *, and we cannot be Branches without Believing. Legitimate Fruit follows upon Marriage to Chriſt, not before it: Rom. 7. 4. That you ſhould be married to another, even to him that is raiſed from the dead, that you ſhould bring forth fruit unto God. All Fruit before Marriage is Baſtard, and Baſtards were excluded from the Sanctuary. Our Perſons muſt be firſt accepted in Chriſt, before our Services can be acceptable; thoſe Works are not acceptable where the Perſon is not pardoned. Good Works flow from a pure Heart; but the Heart cannot be pure before Faith. All the Good Works reckoned up in the 11*th Chapter* of the Hebrews were from this Spring; thoſe Heroes firſt believed, and then obeyed. By Faith Abel was righteous before God, without it his Sacrifice had been no better than Cains: By Faith Enoch pleaſed God, and had a Divine Teſtimony to his Obedience before his tranſlation: By Faith Abraham offered up Iſaac, without which he had been no better than a Murderer. All Obedience hath its Root in Faith, and is not done in our own ſtrength, but in the ſtrength and virtue of another, of Chriſt, whom God hath ſet forth as our Head and Root.

* Tit. 1. 15.

* John 15. 4, 5.

7. Obſerve, Faith and Obedience are diſtinct, though inſeparable: The Obedience of Faith. Faith indeed is Obedience to a Goſpel Command, which enjoyns us to believe; but it is not all our Obedience. Juſtification and Sanctification are diſtinct acts of God; Juſtification reſpects the Perſon, Sanctification the Nature; Juſtification is firſt in order of Nature, and Sanctification follows: They are diſtinct but inſeparable; every Juſtified Perſon hath a Sanctified Nature, and every Sanctified Nature ſuppoſeth a Juſtified Perſon. So Faith and Obedience are diſtinct; Faith as the Principle, Obedience as the Product; Faith as the Cauſe, Obedience as the Effect; the Cauſe and the Effect are not the ſame. By Faith we own Chriſt as our Lord; by Obedience we regulate our ſelves according to his Command. The acceptance of the Relation to him as a Subject, precedes the performance of our Duty: By Faith we receive his Law, and by Obedience we fullfil it. Faith makes us Gods Children, Gal. 3. 26. Obedience manifeſts us to be Chriſts Diſciples, John 15. 8. Faith is the Touchſtone of Obedience; the Touchſtone, and that which is tried by it, are not the ſame. But though they are diſtinct, yet they are inſeparable. Faith and Obedience are joyned together; Obedience follows Faith at the heels. Faith purifies the heart, and a pure Heart cannot be without pure Actions. Faith unites us to Chriſt, whereby we partake of his Life; and a living Branch cannot be without fruit in its ſeaſon, and much fruit, John 15. 5. and that naturally from a newneſs of Spirit Rom. 7. 9. not conſtrained by the rigors of the Law, but drawn forth from a ſweetneſs of Love; for Faith works by Love. The Love of God is the ſtrong Motive, and Love to God is the quickning Principle; as there can be no Obedience without Faith, ſo no Faith without Obedience.

After all this, the Apoſtle ends with the celebration of the Wiſdom of God; To God only wiſe, be glory through Jeſus Chriſt for ever. The rich Diſcovery of the Goſpel, cannot be thought of by a gracious Soul, without a return of Praiſe to God, and Admiration of his ſingular Wiſdom.

Wiſe God.] His Power before, and his Wiſdom here, are mentioned in conjunction (in which his Goodneſs is included, as intereſted in his eſtabliſhing Power) as the ground of all the Glory and Praiſe God hath from his Creatures.

Only VViſe.] As Chriſt ſaith, Mat. 19. 17. None is good, but God; ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, None VViſe, but God. As all Creatures are unclean in regard of his Purity; ſo they are all Fools in regard of his VViſdom, yea the glorious Angels themſelves*. VViſdom is the Royalty of God; the proper Dialect of all his Ways and Works. No Creature can lay claim to it; He is ſo Wiſe, that he is VViſdom it ſelf.

* Job 4. 18.

Be glory through Jeſus Chriſt.] As God is only known in and by Chriſt, ſo he muſt be only worſhipped and celebrated in and through Chriſt. In him we muſt Pray to him, and in him we muſt Praiſe him. As all Mercies flow from God through Chriſt to us, ſo all our Duties are to be preſented to God through Chriſt.

In the Greek, verbatim, it runs thus; To the alone VViſe God, through Jeſus Chriſt, to him be glory for ever. But we muſt not underſtand it, as if God were Wiſe by Jeſus Chriſt; but that Thanks is to be given to God through Chriſt, becauſe in and by Chriſt God hath revealed his Wiſdom to the World. The Greek hath a Repetition of the Article ᾧ not expreſt in the Tranſlation, To him be glory. Beza expungeth this Article, but without reaſon, for ᾧ is as much as αὐτῷ, To him; and joyning this, The only VViſe God with the 25*th* Verſe, To him that is of Power to eſtabliſh you; Reading it thus, To him that is of Power to eſtabliſh you, the only VViſe God, leaving the reſt in a Parentheſis, it runs ſmoothly, To him be glory through Jeſus Chriſt. And Crellius the Socinian obſerves, that this Article ᾧ, which ſome leave out, might be induſtriouſly inſerted by the Apoſtle, to ſhew, that the Glory we aſcribe to God, is alſo given to Chriſt.

We may Obſerve, That neither in this place, nor any where in Scripture, is the Virgin Mary, or any of the Saints, aſſociated with God or Chriſt in the Glory aſcrib'd to them.

In the Words there is,

1. An Appropriation of Wiſdom to God, and a Remotion of it from all Creatures; Only wiſe God.

2. A Glorifying him for it.

The Point I ſhall inſiſt upon, is,

That Wiſdom is a tranſcendent Excellency of the Divine Nature. We have before ſpoken of the Knowledg of God, and the infiniteneſs of it: The next Attribute is the Wiſdom of God. Moſt confound the Knowledg and Wiſdom of God together; but there is a manifeſt diſtinction between them in our conception.

I ſhall handle it thus;

1. Shew what Wiſdom is. Then lay down,
2. Some Propoſitions about the Wiſdom of God. And ſhew,
3. That God is Wiſe, and and only Wiſe.
4. Wherein his Wiſdom appears.
5. The Uſe.

I. What VViſdom is. Wiſdom among the Greeks, firſt ſignified an eminent Perfection in any Art or Myſtery; ſo a good Statuary, Engraver, or Limner, was called VViſe, as having an excellent Knowledg in his particular Art. But afterwards the Title of VViſe was appropriated to thoſe that devoted themſelves to the contemplation of the higheſt things, that ſerved for a foundation to Speculative Sciences*. But ordinarily we count a Man a Wiſe Man, when he conducts his Affairs with diſcretion, and governs his paſſions with moderation, and carries himſelf with a due proportion and harmony in all his concerns.

* Amyrant. Moral. Tom. 3. p. 123.

But in Particular, VViſdom conſiſts,

1. In acting for a right End. The chiefeſt part of Prudence is in fixing a right End, and in chuſing fit Means, and directing them to that ſcope: To ſhoot at random is a mark of Folly. As he is the wiſeſt Man, that hath the nobleſt End and fitteſt Means; ſo God is Infinitely Wiſe; as he is the moſt excellent Being, ſo he hath the moſt excellent End. As there is none more excellent than himſelf, nothing can be his End but himſelf: As he is the Cauſe of all, ſo he is the End of all; and he puts a true Byaſs into all the Means he uſeth to hit the Mark he aims at: Of him, and through him, and to him are all things, Rom. 11. 36.

2. Wiſdom conſiſts, in obſerving all Circumſtances for Action. He is counted a Wiſe man, that lays hold of the fitteſt Opportunities to bring his deſigns about, that hath the fulleſt foreſight of all the little Intrigues which may happen in a Buſineſs he is to manage, and Times every part of his Action in an exact harmony with the proper minutes of it. God hath all the Circumſtances of things in one entire Image before him; he hath a proſpect of every little Creek in any deſign. He ſees what Second Cauſes will act, and when they will act this or that; yea, he determines them to ſuch and ſuch Acts; ſo that it is impoſſible he ſhould be miſtaken, or miſs of the due Seaſon of bringing about his own Purpoſes. As he hath more Goodneſs, than to deceive any; ſo he hath more Underſtanding, than to be miſtaken in any thing. Hence the Time of the Incarnation of our Bleſſed Saviour, is called the Fulneſs of Time, the proper Seaſon for his coming. Every Circumſtance about Chriſt was Tim'd according to the Predictions of God; even ſo little a thing as not parting his Garment, and the giving him Gall and Vinegar to drink: And all the Bleſſings he ſhowrs down upon his People, according to the Covenant of Grace, are ſaid to come in his due ſeaſon, Ezek. 34. 25, 26.

3. Wiſdom conſiſts, In willing and acting according to the right Reaſon, according to a right Judgment of things. We never count a Willful man a Wiſe man, but him only that acts according to a right Rule, when right Counſels are taken and vigorouſly executed. The reſolves and Ways of God are not meer Will, but Will guided by the Reaſon and Counſel of his own Infinite Underſtanding; Eph. 1. 11. VVho works all things according to the counſel of his own will. The Motions of the Divine Will are not raſh, but follow the Propoſals of the Divine Mind: He chooſes that which is fitteſt to be done, ſo that all his Works are graceful, and all his Ways have a comelineſs and decorum in them. Hence all his Ways are ſaid to be Judgment, Deut. 32. 4. not meer Will.

Hence it appears, that VViſdom and Knowledg are two diſtinct Perfections. Knowledg hath its ſeat in the Speculative Underſtanding, VViſdom in the Practical. Wiſdom and Knowledg are evidently diſtinguiſh'd as two ſeveral gifts of the Spirit in Man, 1 Cor. 12. 8. To one is given by the Spirit the word of VViſdom, to another another the word of Knowledg by the ſame Spirit. Knowledg is an underſtanding of general Rules, and Wiſdom is a drawing Concluſions from thoſe Rules in order to particular caſes. A Man may have the Knowledg of the whole Scripture, and have all Learning in the Treaſury of his Memory, and yet be deſtitute of Skill to make uſe of them upon particular Occaſions, and unty thoſe knotty Queſtions which may be propoſed to him, by a ready application of thoſe Rules.

Again, Knowledg and Wiſdom may be diſtinguiſh'd in our Conception, as two diſtinct Perfections in God: The Knowledg of God is his Underſtanding of all things; his Wiſdom is the Skillful reſolving and acting of all things. And the Apoſtle, in his Admiration of him, owns them as diſtinct, Oh the depths of the riches, both of the Wiſdom and Knowledg of God, Rom. 11. 33. Knowledg is the Foundation of Wiſdom, and antecedent to it; Wiſdom, the Superſtructure upon Knowledg: Men may have knowledg without Wiſdom, but not Wiſdom without Knowledg; according to our common Proverb, The greateſt Clerks are not the wiſeſt Men. All Practical Knowledg is founded in Speculation, either Secundum rem, as in a Man; or Secundum rationem, as in God. They agree in this, that they are both Acts of the Underſtanding; but Knowledg is the Apprehenſion of a thing, and Wiſdom is the Appointing and Ordering of things. Wiſdom is the ſplendor and luſtre of Knowledg ſhining forth in Operations, and is an Act both of underſtanding and Will; Underſtanding in Counſelling and Contriving, Will in Reſolving and Executing: Counſel and Will are link'd together, Epheſ. 1. 11.

II. The ſecond thing is to lay down ſome propoſitions in general, concerning the Wiſdom God.

1. There is an Eſſential and a Perſonal Wiſdom of God. The Eſſential Wiſdom, is the Eſſence of God; the Perſonal Wiſdom, is the Son of God. Chriſt is called Wiſdom by himſelf, Luke 7.35. The Wiſdom of God by the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 1. 24. The Wiſdom I ſpeak of belongs to the Nature of God, and is conſidered as a neceſſary perfection. The perſonal VViſdom is called ſo, becauſe he opens to us the Secrets of God. If the Son were that Wiſdom whereby the Father is wiſe, the Son would be alſo the Eſſence whereby the Father is God. If the Son were the Wiſdom of the Father, whereby he is Eſſentially wiſe; the Son would be the Eſſence of the Father, and the Father would have his Eſſence from the Son, ſince the Wiſdom of God is the Eſſence of God; and ſo the Son would be the Father, if the VViſdom and Power of the Father were originally in the Son.

2. Therefore Secondly, The Wiſdom of God is the ſame with the Eſſence of God. Wiſdom in God is not a Habit added to his Eſſence, as it is in man, but it is his Eſſence. 'Tis like the ſplendor of the Sun, the ſame with the Sun it ſelf; or like the brightneſs of Chryſtal, which is not communicated to it by any thing elſe, as the Brightneſs of a Mountain is by the Beam of the Sun, but it is one with the Chryſtal it ſelf. 'Tis not a Habit ſuperadded to the Divine Eſſence; that would be repugnant to the ſimplicity of God, and ſpeak him compounded of divers Principles; it would be contrary to the Eternity of his perfections: If he be Eternally Wiſe, his Wiſdom is his Eſſence; for there is nothing Eternal, but the Eſſence of God. * As the Sun melts ſome things, and hardens others; blackens ſome things, and whitens others, and produceth contrary qualities in different Subjects; yet it is but one and the ſame quality in the Sun, which is the cauſe of thoſe contrary Operations: So the perfections of God ſeem to be divers in our Conceptions, yet they are but one and the ſame in God. The wiſdom of God, is God acting Prudently; as the Power of God, is God acting Powerfully, and the Juſtice of God, is God acting Righteouſly: And therefore 'tis more truly ſaid, that God is Wiſdom, Juſtice, Truth, Power, than that he is Wiſe, Juſt, True, &c. as if he were compounded of ſubſtance and qualities. All the Operations of God proceed from one ſimple Eſſence; as all the Operations of the mind of man, though various, proceed from one faculty of Underſtanding.

* Maimon. Mor. Part 1. cap. 53.

3. Wiſdom is the property of God alone. He is only Wiſe. 'Tis an Honour peculiar to him. Upon the account that no man deſerved the title of Wiſe, but that it was a Royalty belonging to God *, Pythagoras would not be called σοφὸς, a Title given given to their Learned Men; but φιλόσοφος. The Name Philoſopher, aroſe out of a reſpect to this tranſcendent Perfection of God.

* Laert. lib. 1. Proem.

1. God is only Wiſe neceſſarily. As He is neceſſarily God, ſo he is neceſſarily VViſe; for the Notion of VViſdom is inſeparable from the Notion of a Deity. VVhen we ſay God is a Spirit, is True, Righteous, Wiſe; we underſtand that he is tranſcendently theſe, by an intrinſick and abſolute neceſſity, by virtue of his own Eſſence, without the Efficiency of any other, or any Efficiency in and by himſelf. God doth not make himſelf VViſe, no more than he makes himſelf God. As he is a neceſſary Being in regard of his Life, ſo he is neceſſarily VViſe in regard of his Underſtanding. Syneſius ſaith, that God is Eſſentiated, οὐσιοῦσθαι, by his Underſtanding. He places the Subſtance of God in Underſtanding and Wiſdom: Wiſdom is the firſt vital Operation of God. He can no more be Unwiſe than he can be Untrue; for Folly in the Mind is much the ſame with Falſity in Speech. VViſdom among Men is gained by Age and Experience, furthered by Inſtructions and Exerciſe; but the VViſdom of God is his Nature, As the Sun cannot be without Light, while it remains a Sun; and as Eternity cannot be without Immortality; So neither can God be without VViſdom. As he only hath Immortality, 1 Tim 6.16. not arbitrarily, but neceſſarily; ſo he only hath Wiſdom: Not becauſe he will be Wiſe, but becauſe he cannot but be VViſe. He cannot but contrive Counſels, and exert Operations, becoming the Greatneſs and Majeſty of his Nature.

2. Therefore only Wiſe originally. God is αὐθιδακτος αὐτόσοφος. Men acquire Wiſdom by the loſs of their faireſt years; but his Wiſdom is the Perfection of the Divine Nature, not the birth of Study or the growth of Experience, but as neceſſary, as Eternal, as his Eſſence. He goes not out of himſelf to ſearch VViſdom: He needs no more the Brains of Creatures in the contrivance of his Purpoſes, than he doth their Arm in the execution of them. He needs no Counſel, he receives no Counſel from any; Rom. 11. 34. Who hath been his Counſellor? and *Iſai.*40.14. With whom took he counſel, and who inſtructed him, or taught him in the path of Judgment, and taught him Knowledg, and ſhewed to him the path of Underſtanding? He is the only Fountain of Wiſdom to others; Angels and Men have what VViſdom they have, by communication from him. All created VViſdom is a ſpark of the Divine Light, like that of the Stars borrowed from the Sun. He that borrows VViſdon from another, and doth not originally poſſeſs it in his own Nature, cannot properly be called Wiſe. As God is the only Being, in regard that all other Beings are derived from him; ſo he is only VViſe, becauſe all other VViſdom flows from him. He is the Spring of Wiſdom to all; none the Original of VViſdom to him.

3. Therefore only Wiſe perfectly. There is no cloud upon his Underſtanding. He hath a diſtinct and certain Knowledg of all things that can fall under action. As he hath a perfect Knowledg without Ignorance, ſo he hath a Beautiful VViſdom without Mole or Wart. Men are wiſe, yet have not an Underſtanding ſo vaſt as to graſp all things; nor a Perſpicacity ſo clear, as to penetrate into the depths of all Beings. Angels have more delightful and lively ſparks of VViſdom, yet ſo imperfect, that in regard of the VViſdom of God they are charged with folly Job 4. 18. Their VViſdom as well as their Holineſs is vailed in the Preſence of God. It vaniſheth, as the glowing of a Fire doth before the beauty of the Sun; or as a Light of a Candle in the midſt of a Sunſhine contracts it ſelf, and none of its Rays are ſeen, but in the body of the Flame. The Angels are not perfectly VViſe, becauſe they are not perfectly Knowing: The Goſpel, the great Diſcovery of Gods VViſdom, was hid from them for Ages.

4. Therefore only Wiſe univerſally. VViſdom in one Man is of one ſort, in another of another ſort; one is a wiſe Tradeſman, another a wiſe Stateſman, and another a wiſe Philoſopher: One is wiſe in the buſineſs of the VVorld, another is wiſe in Divine Concerns. One hath not ſo much of plenty of one ſort, but he may have a ſcantineſs in another; one may be wiſe for Invention, and fooliſh in Execution; an Artificer may have ſkill to frame an Engine, and not skill to uſe it: The ground that is fit for Olives, may not be fit for Vines; that will bear one ſort of Grain and not another. But God hath an Univerſal VViſdom, becauſe his Natures VV*iſe*; 'tis not limited, but hovers over every thing, ſhines in every Being.

Being. His Executions are as wiſe as his Contrivances: He is Wiſe in his Reſolves, and wiſe in his Ways; Wiſe in all the varieties of his Works of Creation, Government, Redemption. As his Will wills all things, and his Power effects all things; ſo his wiſdom is the univerſal Director of the motions of his will, and the executions of his power: As his Righteouſneſs is the meaſure of the matter of his Actions, ſo his VViſdom is the Rule that directs the manner of his Actions. The abſolute power of God is not an unruly power: His VViſdom orders all things, ſo that nothing is done, but what is fit and convenient, and agreeable to ſo excellent a Being: As he cannot do an unjuſt thing becauſe of his righteouſneſs, ſo he cannot do an unwiſe act, becauſe of his infinite wiſdom. Though God be not neceſſitated to any Operation without himſelf, as to the Creation of any thing, yet ſuppoſing he will act, his wiſdom neceſſitates him to do that which is congruous, as his righteouſneſs neceſſitates him to do that which is juſt: So that though the will of God be the principle, yet his wiſdom is the rule of his Actions. We muſt in our conceiving of the order, ſuppoſe wiſdom antecedent to will: None that acknowledges a God, can have ſuch an impious thought, as to affix temerity and raſhneſs to any of his proceedings.

All his Decrees are drawn out of the infinite Treaſury of VViſdom in himſelf. * He reſolves nothing about any of his Creatures without Reaſon; but the reaſon of his purpoſes is in himſelf, and ſprings from himſelf, and not from the Creatures: There is not one thing that he wills, but he wills by counſel, and works by counſel, Eph. 1. 11. Counſel writ down every line, every letter, in his eternal Book; and all the Orders are drawn out from thence by his wiſdom and will: VVhat was illuſtrious in the contrivance, glitters in the execution. His underſtanding and will are infinite; what is therefore the act of his will, is the reſult of his underſtanding, and therefore rational: His underſtanding and will joyn hands; there is no conteſt in God, Will againſt Mind, and Mind againſt Will; they are one in God, one in his reſolves, and one in all his works.

* Polhil. againſt Sherlock, p. 377.

5. Therefore he is only wiſe perpetually. As the wiſdom of man is got by ripeneſs of Age, ſo it is loſt by decay of years; 'tis got by inſtruction, and loſt by dotage. The perfecteſt minds, when in the wane, have been darkned with folly: Nebuchadnezzar that was wiſe for a man, became as fooliſh as a Brute. But the Ancient of days is an unchangeable Poſſeſſor of Prudence; his wiſdom is a mirrour of brightneſs, without a defacing ſpot. It was poſſeſſed by him in the beginning of his ways, before his works of old, Prov. 8. 22. and he can never be diſpoſſeſſed of it in the end of his works. 'Tis inſeparable from him: The Being of his Godhead may as ſoon ceaſe, as the Beauty of his Mind; with him is wiſdom, Job 12. 13. it is inſeparable from him, therefore as durable as his Eſſence. 'Tis a wiſdom infinite, and therefore without increaſe or decreaſe in it ſelf. The experience of ſo many Ages in the Government of the VVorld, hath added nothing to the immenſity of it; as the ſhining of the Sun ſince the Creation of the World, hath added nothing to the light of that glorious Body. As ignorance never darkens his knowledg, ſo Folly never diſgraces his Prudence, God infatuates men, but neither Men nor Devils can infatuate God; he his unerringly wiſe; his Counſel doth not vary and flatter; 'tis not one day one Counſel, and another day another, but it ſtands like an immovable Rock, or a Mountain of Braſs. The Counſel of the Lord ſtands for ever, and the thoughts of his heart to all Generations, Pſal. 33. 11.

6. He is only incomprehenſibly wiſe. His thoughts are deep, Pſal. 92. 5. His judgments unſearchable, his ways paſt finding out, Rom. 11. 33. Depths that cannot be fathomed. A ſplendor, more dazling to our dim minds, than the light of the Sun to our weak eyes. The wiſdom of one man may be comprehended by another, and over comprehended; and often men are underſtood by others to be wiſer in their Actions, than they underſtand themſelves to be. And the wiſdom of one Angel may be meaſured by another Angel of the ſame perfection, But as the Eſſence, ſo the wiſdom of God is incomprehenſible to any Creature; God is only comprehended by God: The ſecrets of wiſdom in God are double to the expreſſions of it in his works, Job 11. 6, 7. Canſt thou by ſearching find out God.

There

There is an unfathomable depth in all his Decrees, in all his Works; we cannot comprehend the reaſon of his VVorks, much leſs that of his Decrees, much leſs that in his Nature; becauſe his VViſdom being infinite as well as his power, can no more act to the higheſt pitch, than his power. As his power is not terminated by what he hath wrought, but he could give further teſtimonies of it; ſo neither is his wiſdom, but he could furniſh us with infinite expreſſions and pieces of his skill. As in regard of his Immenſity, he is not bounded by the limits of place; in regard of his Eternity, not meaſured by the minutes of Time; in regard of his Power, not terminated with this or that number of Objects; ſo in regard of his Wiſdom, he is not confin'd to this or that particular mode of working; ſo that in regard of the reaſon of his Actions, as well as the Glory and Majeſty of his Nature, he dwells in unapproachable light, 1 Tim. 6. 16. and whatſoever we underſtand of his wiſdom in Creation and Providence, is infinitely leſs than what is in himſelf, and his own unbounded Nature.

Many things in Scripture are declar'd chiefly to be the acts of the Divine will, yet we muſt not think that they were acts of meer will without wiſdom, but they are repreſented ſo to us, becauſe we are not capable of underſtanding the infinite Reaſon of its acts: His Soveraignty is more intelligible to us than his VViſdom. VVe can better know the Commands of a Superiour, and the Laws of a Prince, than underſtand the reaſon that gave birth to thoſe Laws. VVe may know the Orders of the Divine will, as they are publiſh'd, but not the ſublime Reaſon of his will. Though Election be an act of God's Soveraignty, and he hath no cauſe from without to determine him; yet his infinite wiſdom ſtood not ſilent while meer Dominion acted. VVhatſoever God doth, he doth wiſely, as well as ſoveraignly; though that wiſdom which lies in the ſecret places of the Divine Being, be as incomprehenſible to us, as the effects of his Soveraignty and Power in the VVorld are viſible: God can give a reaſon of his proceeding, and that drawn from himſelf, though we underſtand it not.

The cauſes of things viſible lye hid from us; Doth any man know how to diſtinguiſh the ſeminal vertue of a ſmall Seed from the Body of it, and in what nook and corner that lies, and what that is that ſpreads it ſelf in ſo fair a Plant, and ſo many Flowers? Can we comprehend the Juſtice of God's proceedings in the proſperity of the wicked, and the afflictions of the Godly? Yet as we muſt conclude them the fruits of an unerring righteouſneſs, ſo we muſt conclude all his actions the fruits of an unſpotted wiſdom, though the concatenation of all his counſels is not intelligible to us; for he is as eſſentially and neceſſarily wiſe, as he is eſſentially and neceſſarily good and righteous.

God is not only ſo wiſe that nothing more wiſe can be conceiv'd, but he is more wiſe than can be imagin'd; ſomething greater in all his Perfections than can be comprehended by any Creature. 'Tis a fooliſh thing therefore to queſtion that which we cannot comprehend: we ſhould adore inſtead of diſputing againſt it; and take it for granted, that God would not order any thing, were it not agreeable to the Soveraignty of his wiſdom, as well as that of his will. Though the reaſon of man proceed from the wiſdom of God, yet there is more difference between the reaſon of man, and the wiſdom of God, than between the light of the Sun, and the feeble ſhining of the Glow-worm; yet we preſume to cenſure the ways of God, as if our purblind reaſon had a reach above him.

7. God is only wiſe infallibly. The wiſeſt men meet with rubs in the way, that make them fall ſhort of what they aim at; they often deſign, and fail; then begin again, and yet all their counſels end in ſmoak, and none of them arrive at perfection. If the wiſeſt Angels lay a plot, they may be diſappointed; for though they are higher and wiſer than man, yet there is one higher and wiſer than they, that can check their Projects. God always compaſſeth his end, never fails of any thing he deſigns and aims at; all his undertakings are counſel and will; as nothing can reſiſt the efficacy of his will, ſo nothing can countermine the ſkill of his counſel; There is no wiſdom, nor underſtanding, nor counſel againſt the Lord, Prov. 21. 30. He compaſſeth his ends by thoſe actions of Men and Devils, wherein they think to croſs him; they ſhoot at their own Mark, and hit his. Lucifer's plot by Divine wiſdom fullfilled God's purpoſe againſt

Lucifer's

Lucifer's mind. The counſel of Redemption by Chriſt, the end of the Creation of the World, rode into the World upon the back of the Serpents Temptation. God never miſtakes the means, nor can there be any diſappointements, to make him vary his Counſels, and pitch upon other means than what before he had ordain'd. His word that goeth forth of his mouth ſhall not return to him void, but it ſhall accompliſh that which he pleaſes, and it ſhall proſper in the thing whereto he ſent it., Iſa. 55. 11. What is ſaid of his word, is true of his Counſel, it ſhall proſper in the thing for which it is appointed; it cannot be defeated by all the Legions of Men and Devils; for as he thinks, ſo ſhall it come to paſs; and as he hath purpoſed, ſo ſhall it ſtand; The Lord hath purpoſed, and who ſhall diſannul it? Iſa. 14. 24, 27. The wiſdom of the Creature is a drop from the wiſdom of God, and is like a drop to the Ocean, and a ſhadow to the Sun; and therefore is not able to mate the wiſdom of God, which is infinite and boundleſs. No wiſdom is exempted from miſtakes, but the Divine: He is wiſe in all his Reſolves, and never calls back his words and purpoſes, Iſa. 31. 2.

III. The third General is to prove that God is Wiſe.

This is aſcrib'd to God in Scripture; Dan. 2. 20. Wiſdom and might are his; Wiſdom to contrive, and Power to effect. * Where ſhould Wiſdom dwell, but in the head of a Deity: and where ſhould Power triumph, but in the arm of Omnipotency? All that God doth, he doth artificially, ſkilfully: whence he is called the Builder of the Heavens, Heb. 11. 10. Τεχνίτης, an artificial and curious Builder, a Builder by Art. And that word, Prov. 8. 30. meant of Chriſt, Then I was by him as one brought up with him; ſome render it, Then was I the curious Artificer; and the ſame word is tranſlated a cunning workman, Cant. 7. 5. For this cauſe Counſel is aſcrib'd to God *; not properly; for Counſel implies ſomething of Ignorance, or irreſolution, antecedent to the conſultation, and a poſture of will afterwards, which was not before. Counſel is properly a laborious deliberation, and a reaſoning of things: An invention of means for the attainment of the end, after a diſcuſſing and reaſoning of all the doubts which ariſe pro re natâ, about the matter in counſel: But God hath no need to deliberate in himſelf, what are the beſt means to accompliſh his ends, He is never ignorant, or undetermin'd, what courſe he ſhould take, as men are before they conſult. But it is an expreſſion in condeſcenſion to our Capacity, to ſignifie that God doth nothing but with reaſon and underſtanding, with the higheſt prudence, and for the moſt glorious ends, as men do after conſultation, and the weighing of every foreſeen circumſtance.

* Culverwell. light of Nature, p. 30.

* Iſa. 46. 10. Jer. 32. 19. Great in counſel. Job 12. 13. He hath counſel and underſtanding.

Though he acts all things Soveraignly by his will, yet he acts all things wiſely by his underſtanding; and there is not a decree of his will, but he can render a ſatisfactory reaſon for in the face of Men and Angels. As he is the Cauſe of all things, ſo he hath the higheſt wiſdom for the ordering of all things. If wiſdom among men be the knowledg of Divine and Human things, God muſt be infinitely wiſe, ſince knowledg is moſt radiant in him; he knows what angels and men do, and infinitely more; what is known by them obſcurely, is known by him clearly: What is known by man after it is done, was known by God before it was wrought. By his wiſdom as much as by any thing, he infinitely differs from all his Creatures; as by wiſdom Man differs from a Brute. We cannot frame a notion of God, without conceiving him infinitely wiſe. We ſhould render him very inconſiderable, to imagine him furniſht with an infinite knowledg, and not have an infinite wiſdom to make uſe of that knowledg; or to fancy him with a mighty power, deſtitute of prudence. Knowledg without prudence is an eye without motion; and power without diſcretion, is an arm without a head; a hand to act, without underſtanding to contrive and model; a ſtrength to act, without reaſon to know how to act: It would be a miſerable notion of a God, to fancy him with a brutiſh and unguided power. The Heathens therefore had, and could not but have this natural notion of God. Plato therefore calls him Mens *, and Cleanthes uſed to call God Reaſon, and Socrates thought the titleof Λογὸς too magnificent to be attributed to any thing elſe but God alone.

* Eugub. per. Philoſoph. lib. 1. cap. 5.

Arguments to prove that God is wiſe.

Reaſ. 1. God could not be infinitely perfect without wiſdom. A rational Nature is better than an irrational Nature. A man is not a perfect man without reaſon; how how can God without it, be an infinitely perfect God. Wiſdom is the moſt eminent of all Vertues; all the other perfections of God without this, would be as a body without an eye, a ſoul without underſtanding. A Chriſtian's Graces want their luſter, when they are deſtitute of the guidance of wiſdom: Mercy is a feebleneſs, and Juſtice a cruelty, Patience a timerouſneſs, and Courage a madneſs, without the conduct of wiſdom; ſo the Patience of God would be cowardiſe, his Power an oppreſſion, his Juſtice a tyranny, without wiſdom as the Spring, and Holineſs as the Rule. No attribute of God could ſhine with a due luſtre and brightneſs without it. Power is a great perfection, but wiſdom a greater *. Wiſdom may be without much power, as in Bees and Ants; but power is a tyrannical thing without wiſdom and righteouſneſs. The Pilot is More valuable becauſe of his skill, than the Gally Slave becauſe of his ſtrength; and the conduct of a General more eſtimable than the might of a private Souldier. Generals are choſen more by their skill to guide, than their ſtrength to act; What a Clod is a man without Prudence; what a Nothing would God be without it? This is the Salt that gives reliſh to all other perfections in a Creature: This is the Jewel in the Ring of all the Excellencies of the Divine Nature, and Holineſs is the ſplendor of that Jewel.

*Licet magnum ſit poſſe, majus tamen eſt ſapere.

Now God being the firſt Being, poſſeſſes whatſoever is moſt noble in any Being. If therefore Wiſdom, which is the moſt noble perfection in any Creature, were wanting to God, he would be deficient in that which is the higheſt Excellency. God being the living God, as he is frequently termed in Scripture, he hath therefore the moſt perfect manner of living, and that muſt be a pure and intellectual life: Being eſſentially living, he is eſſentially in the higheſt degree of living. As he hath an infinite life above all Creatures; ſo he hath an infinite intellectual life, and therefore an infinite Wiſdom; whence ſome have called God not ſapientem, but ſuper-ſapientem *, not only wiſe, but above all wiſdom.

*Suarez. Vol. 1. lib. 1. cap. 3. p. 10.

Reaſ. 2. Without infinite Wiſdom he could not govern the World. Without wiſdom in forming the Matter, which was made by Divine power, the World could have been no other than a Chaos; and without wiſdom in Government, it could have been no other than a heap of Confuſion; without wiſdom the World could not have been created in the poſture it is. Creation ſuppoſeth a determination of the will putting power upon acting; the determination of the will ſuppoſeth the counſel of the underſtanding, determining the will: No work, but ſuppoſeth underſtanding as well as will in a rational Agent. As without skill things could not be created, ſo without it things cannot be governed. Reaſon is a neceſſary perfection to him that preſides over all things: Without knowledg there could not be in God a foundation for Government, and without wiſdom there could not be an exerciſe of Government; and without the moſt excellent wiſdom, he could not be the moſt excellent Governour. He could not be an univerſal Governour, without a univerſal wiſdom, nor the ſole Governour without an unimitable wiſdom; nor an independant Governour without an original and independent wiſdom; nor a perpetual Governour without an incorruptible wiſdom. He would not be the Lord of the World in all points, without skill to order the affairs of it. Power and wiſdom are foundations of all Authority and Government: Wiſdom to know how to rule, and command; Power to make thoſe Commands obeyed: No regular Order could iſſue out without the firſt, nor could any order be enforced without the ſecond. A feeble wiſdom, and a brutiſh power, ſeldom or never produce any good effect, Magiſtracy without wiſdom, would be a frantick power, a raſh conduct; like a ſtrong arm when the eye is out, it ſtrikes it knows not what, and leads it knows not whither. Wiſdom without power, would be like a great body without feet *, like the knowledg of a Pilot that hath loſt his arm, who though he knows the Rule of Navigation, and what Courſe to follow in his Voyage, yet cannot manage the Helm: But when thoſe two, wiſdom and power are link't together, there ariſeth from both a fitneſs for Government: There is wiſdom to propoſe an end, and both wiſdom and power to employ means that conduct to that end. And therefore when God demonſtrates to Job his right of Government, and the unreaſonableneſs of Job's quarrelling with his proceedings, he chiefly urgeth upon him the conſideration of thoſe two excellencies of his Nature, power and wiſdom, which

*Amirant. moral.

Which are expreſt in his works *. A Prince without Wiſdom, is but a Title Without a Capacity to perform the Office; no man without it is fit for government: Nor could God without Wiſdom, exerciſe a juſt Dominion in the World. He hath therefore the higheſt Wiſdom, ſince he is the univerſal Governour. That Wiſdom which is able to govern a Family, may not be able to govern a City; and that Wiſdom which governs a City, may not be able to govern a Nation or Kingdom, much leſs a World. The bounds of God's government being greater than any, his Wiſdom for government muſt needs ſurmount the Wiſdom of all. * And though the Creatures be not in number actually infinite, yet they cannot be well governed, but by one endowed with infinite Diſcretion. Providential government can be no more without infinite Wiſdom, than infinite VViſdom can be without Providence.

* Chap. 38, 39, 40, 41.

* Amyrald. deſert. Theol. p 111.

Reaſ. 3. The Creatures working for an end, without their own knowledg, demonſtrates the Wiſdom of God that guides them. All things in the VVorld work for ſome end; the ends are unknown to them, though many of their ends are viſible to us. As there was ſome prime Cauſe, which by his power inſpir'd them with their ſeveral inſtincts, ſo there muſt be ſome ſupream VViſdom, which moves and guides them to their end. As their Being manifeſts his power that endowed them, ſo the acting according to the rules of their Nature, which they themſelves underſtand not, manifeſts his wiſdom in directing them. (Every thing that acts for an end, muſt know that end, or be directed by another to attain that end.) The Arrow doth not know who ſhoots it, or to what end it is ſhot, or what Mark is aimed at; but the Archer that puts it in, and darts it out of the Bow, knows. A Watch hath a regular motion, but neither the Spring nor the Wheels that move, know the end of their motion; no man will judge a wiſdom to be in the VVatch, but in the Artificer that diſpos'd the VVheels and Spring, by a joynt combination to produce ſuch a motion for ſuch an end. Doth either the Sun that enlivens the Earth, or the Earth that travels with the Plant, know what plant it produceth in ſuch a Soil, what temper it ſhould be of, what fruit it ſhould bear, and of what colour? VVhat Plant knows its own medicinal qualities, its own beautiful flowers, and for what uſe they are ordain'd? When it ſtrikes up its head from the Earth, doth it know what proportion of them there will be? Yet it produceth all theſe things in a ſtate of ignorance. The Sun warms the Earth, concocts the humours, excites the vertue of it, and cheriſhes the Seeds, which are caſt into her lap, yet all unknown to the Sun or the Earth. Since therefore that Nature, that is the immediate cauſe of thoſe things, doth not underſtand its own quality, nor operation, nor the end of its action, that which thus directs them muſt be conceived to have an infinite wiſdom. (VVhen things act by a Rule they know not, and move for an end they underſtand not, and yet work harmoniouſly together for one end, that all of them, we are ſure, are ignorant of, it mounts up our minds to acknowledg the VViſdom of that ſupream Cauſe, that hath rang'd all theſe inferior Cauſes in their order, and imprinted upon them the Laws of their motions, according to the Ideas in his own Mind, who orders the Rule by which they act, and the end for which they act, and directs every motion according to their ſeveral Natures, and therefore is poſſeſſed with infinite wiſdom in his own Nature.)

Reaſ. 4. God is the fountain of all Wiſdom in the Creatures and therefore is infinitely wiſe himſelf. As he hath a fulneſs of being in himſelf, becauſe the ſtreams of being are derived to other things from him; So he hath a fulneſs of VViſdom, becauſe he is the ſpring of wiſdom to Angels and men. That being muſt be infinitely wiſe from whence all other wiſdom derives its original: For nothing can be in the effect, which is not eminently in the cauſe; the cauſe is alway more perfect than the effect, If therefore the creatures are wiſe, the Creator muſt be much more wiſe. If the Creator were deſtitute of wiſdom, the creature would be much more perfect than the Creator. If you conſider the wiſdom of the Spider in her web, which is both her houſe and net; the artifice of the Bee in her Comb, which is both her chamber and granary; the proviſion of the Piſmire in her repoſitories for corn; the wiſdom of the Creator is illuſtrated by them; whatſoever excellency you ſee in any creature, is an image of ſome excellency in God. The skill of the Artificer is viſible in the fruits of his Art; a workman tranſcribes his ſpirit in the work of his hands. But the wiſdom of rational creatures, as men, doth more illuſtrate it: All arts among men are the rayes of divine VViſdom ſhining upon them, and by a common gift of the Spirit enlightning their minds to curious inventions, as Prov. 8. 12. I wiſdom find out the knowledg of witty inventions; that is, I give a faculty to men to find them out; without my wiſdom, all things would be buried in darkneſs and ignorance: VVhatſoever wiſdom there is in the world, it is but a ſhadow of the wiſdom of God, a ſmall Rivulet derived from him, a ſpark leaping out from Uncreated VViſdom. Iſa. 54. 16. He created the Smith that bloweth the coals in the fire, and makes the Inſtruments: The skill to uſe thoſe weapons in VVar-like Enterpriſes is from him, I have created the waſter to deſtroy; 'Tis not meant of creating their perſons, but communicating to them their Art; he ſpeaks it there to expell fear from the Church of all war-like preparations againſt them: He had given Men the skill to form and uſe VVeapons, and could as well ſtrip them of it, and defeat their purpoſes: The Art of husbandry is a fruit of divine teaching, Iſa. 28. 24, 25. If thoſe lower kinds of knowledg, that are common to all Nations, and eaſily learn'd by all, are diſcoveries of Divine wiſdom, much more the nobler Sciences, intellectual and Political VViſdom, Dan. 2. 21. He gives Wiſdom to the Wiſe, and knowledg to them that know underſtanding; ſpeaking of the more abſtruſe parts of knowledg; The inſpiration of the Almighty gives Underſtanding, Job. 32. 8. Hence the wiſdom which Solomon expreſt in the Harlots caſe, 1 Kings 3. 28. was in the Judgment of all Iſrael, the Wiſdom of God; that is, a fruit of Divine VViſdom, a beam communicated to him from God. Every mans Soul is endowed more or leſs with thoſe noble qualities: The Soul of every man exceeds that of a Brute; If the ſtreams be ſo excellent, the Fountain muſt be fuller and clearer. The firſt Spirit muſt infinitely more poſſeſs, what other Spirits derive from him by Creation; where the VViſdom of all the Angels in Heaven and men on Earth collected in one Spirit, it muſt be infinitely leſs than what is in the Spring; for no Creature can be equal to the Creator. As the higheſt Creature already made, or that we can conceive may be made by Infinite Power, would be infinitely below God in the Notion of a Creature, ſo it would be infinitely below God in the Notion of VViſe.

IV. The fourth Thing is, Wherein the Wiſdom of God appears.

It appears (1.) In Creation, (2.) In Government, (3.) In Redemption.

1. In Creation. As in a Muſical Inſtrument, there is firſt the skill of the workman in the frame; then the skill of the Muſician in ſtringing it proper for ſuch Muſical Notes as he will expreſs upon it; and after that the tempering of the Strings by various ſtops to a delightful Harmony: So is the Wiſdom of God ſeen in framing the World, then in tuning it, and afterwards in the motion of the ſeveral Creatures. The Fabrick of the world is called the Wiſdom of God; 1 Cor. 1. 21. After that in the Wiſdom of God the World by Wiſdom knew not God; i. e. by the Creation the world knew not God; the framing Cauſe is there put for the Effect and the work framed: Becauſe the divine Wiſdom ſtept forth in the Creatures to a publick appearance, as if it had preſented it ſelf in a viſible ſhape to Man, giving Inſtructions in and by the Creatures, to know and adore him. What we tranſlate 1 Gen. 1. In the beginning God Created the Heaven and the earth, the Targum expreſſeth, In the Wiſdom God created the Heaven and the Earth. Both bear a ſtamp of this perfection on them: And when the Apoſtle tells the Romans, Rom. 1. 20. the inviſible things of God were clearly underſtood by the things that are made: the word he uſes is, ποιήμασι, not ἔργοις this ſignifies a work of labour, but ποίημα a work of skill, or a Poem. The whole Creation is a Poem, every Species a Stanza, and every individual Creature a Verſe in it. The Creation preſents us with a proſpect of the Wiſdom of God, as a Poem doth the Reader with the wit and fancy of the Compoſer: By wiſdom he created the Earth, Pro. 3. 19. and ſtretched out the Heavens by diſcretion, Jer. 10. 12. There is not any thing ſo mean, ſo ſmall, but Glitters with a beam of Divine skill; and the conſideration of them would juſtly make every man ſubſcribe to that of the Pſalmiſt, O Lord, how manifold are thy works! in Wiſdom haſt thou made them all. Pſal. 104. 24. All, the leaſt as well well as the greateſt, and the meaneſt as well as the nobleſt; even thoſe creatures which ſeem ugly and deformed to us, as Toads, &c. becauſe they fall ſhort of theſe perfections which are the dowry of other Animals: In theſe there is a foot-ſtep of Divine Wiſdom, ſince they were not produc'd by him at random, but determin'd to ſome particular end, and deſign'd to ſome uſefulneſs, as parts of the World in their ſeveral natures and ſtations. God could never have had a ſatisfaction in the review of his works, and pronounc'd them good or comly, as he did, Gen. 1. 31. had they not been agreeable to that eternal original Copy in his own mind: 'Tis ſaid he was refreſht, viz. with that review, Exod. 31. 17. which could not have been, if his peircing eye had found any defect in any thing, which had ſprung out of his hand, or an unſutableneſs to that end for which he created them. He ſeems to do as a man that hath made a curious and polite work, with exact care to peer about every part and line, if he could perceive any imperfection in it, to rectifie the miſtake: But no defect was found by the infinitely wiſe God upon his ſecond examination.

* Omne opus naturæ eſt opus intelligentiæ.

This Wiſdom of the Creation appears,

(1.) In the variety, (2.) In the beauty, (3.) The fitneſs of every Creature for its uſe, (4.) The ſubordination of one Creature to another, and the joynt concurrence of all to one common end.

1. In the Variety. Pſal. 104. 24. O Lord how manifold are thy works! How great a variety is there of Animals and Plants, with a great variety of Forms, Shapes, Figurations, colours various ſmells, vertues and qualites! and this variety is produced from one and the ſame Matter, as Beaſts and Plants from the Earth; Gen. 1. 11, 24. Let the earth bring forth living Creatures; and the earth brought forth graſs and the herb yeilding ſeed after his kind: Such diverſity of Fowl and Fiſh from the water; Gen. 1. 20. Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving Creature that hath life, and Fowl that may fly; Such a beautiful and active variety from ſo dull a matter as the Earth; ſo ſolid a variety from ſo fluid a matter as the Water; ſo noble a piece as the Body of Man, with ſuch variety of members, fit to entertain a more excellent Soul as a gueſt, from ſo mean a matter as the duſt of the ground, Gen. 2. 7. This extraction of ſuch variety of forms out of one ſingle and dull matter, is the Chymiſtry of Divine Wiſdom: 'Tis a greater skill to frame noble Bodies of vile Matter, as varieties of precious veſſels of Clay and Earth, than of a nobler Matter, as Gold and Silver.

Again, all thoſe varieties propagate their kind in every particular and quality of their nature, and uniformly bring forth exact copies acccording to the firſt patern God made of the kind, Gen. 1. 11, 12, 24. Conſider alſo how the ſame piece of ground is garniſht with Plants and Flowers of ſeveral vertues, fruits, colours, ſcents, without our being able to perceive any variety in the earth that breeds them, and not ſo great a difference in the Roots that bears them. Add to this, the diverſities of Birds of different colours, ſhapes, Notes conſiſting of various parts, Wings like Oars to cut the Air, and Tails as the Rudder of a Ship to guide their motion.

How various alſo are the endowments of the Creatures? ſome have vegetation, and the power of growth; others have the addition of Senſe, and others the excellency of Reaſon; ſomething wherein all agree, and ſomething wherein all differ; variety in unity, and unity in variety: The wiſdom of the Workman had not been ſo conſpicuous, had there been only one degree of goodneſs: The greateſt skill is ſeen in the greateſt variety.

The comlineſs of the Body is viſible in the variety of members, and their uſefulneſs to one another; What an inform thing had man been, had he been all ear, or all eye? If God had made all the Stars to be Suns, it would have been a demonſtration of his Power, but perhaps leſs of his Wiſdom; No Creatures, with the Natures they now have, could have continued in being under ſo much heat: There was no leſs wiſdom went to the frame of the leaſt, than to the greateſt Creature. It ſpeaks more art in a Limner to paint a Landskip exactly, than to draw the Sun, though the Sun be a more glorious Body.

I might inſtance alſo in the different Characters and Features imprinted upon the Countenances of men and women, the differences of Voices and Statures, whereby they are diſtinguiſht from one another: Theſe are the Foundations of Order and of Human Society and adminiſtration of Juſtice; what confuſion would have been if a grown-up Son could not be known from his Father, the Magiſtrate from the Subject, the Creditor from the Debtor, the Innocent from the Criminal? The Laws God hath given to Mankind, could not have been put in execution: This variety ſpeaks the Wiſdom of God.

2. The Wiſdom of the Creation appears in the Beauty, and Order, and Scituation of the ſeveral Creatures. Eccleſ. 3. 11. He hath made every thing beautiful in his time. As their Being was a fruit of Divine Power, ſo their Order is a fruit of Divine Wiſdom. All Creatures are as members in the great body of the World, proportion'd to one another, and contributing to the beauty of the whole; * ſo that if the particular forms of every thing, the union of all for the compoſition of the World, and the Laws which are eſtabliſhed in the Order of Nature for its conſervation, be conſidered, it would raviſh us with an admiration of God: All the Creatures are as ſo many Pictures or Statues, exactly fram'd by line; Pſal. 19. 4. Their Line is gone through all the Earth; Their Line a meaſuring, Line, or a Carpenters Rule, whereby he proportions ſeveral pieces to be exactly linkt and coupled together. Their Line, that is their harmonious proportion, and the inſtruction from it is gone forth through all the Earth. Upon the account of this harmony, ſome of the ancient Heathens framed the Images of their Gods with muſical Inſtruments in their hands, ſignifying that God wrought all things in a due proportion *.

* Amyrant. Moral. Vol. 1. p. 257.

* Montag. againſt Selden, p. 11.

The Heavens ſpeak this Wiſdom in their Order.

The Revolutions of the Sun and Moon determine the Seaſons of the Year, and make Day and Night in an orderly ſucceſſion. The Stars beautifie the Heavens, and influence the Earth, and keep their Courſes, Judges 5. 20. They keep their ſtations without interfereing with one another; and tho they have roll'd about for ſo many Ages, they obſerve their diſtinct Laws, and in the variety of their Motions have not diſturb'd one anothers Functions.

Plutarch calls God ἐμμονικὸς καὶ μυσικὸς he ſaith, nothing was made without muſick.

* Charleton Light of Nature p. 57.

* The Sun is ſet as the heart in the midſt of this great body, to afford warmth to all: Had it been ſet lower, it had long ſince turned the Earth into flame and aſhes: Had it been placed higher, the Earth would have wanted the nouriſhment and refreſhment neceſſary for it. Too much nearneſs had ruin'd the Earth by parching heat, and too great a diſtance had deſtroyed the Earth by ſtarving it with cold.

The Sun hath alſo its appointed Motion; had it been fixed without motion, half of the Earth had been unprofitable; there had been perpetual darkneſs in a moiety of it; nothing had been produc'd for nouriſhment, and ſo it had been rendred uninhabitable: But now by this motion, it viſites all the Climates of the World, runs its Circuit, ſo that nothing is hid from the heat thereof, Pſal. 19. 6. It imparts its vertue to every Corner of the world in its daily and yearly viſits. Had it been fixed, the fruits of the Earth under it had been parch'd and deſtroy'd before their maturity; but all thoſe inconveniencies are provided againſt by the perpetual motion of the Sun.

* Daille. mel. part. 1. p. 483.

This motion is orderly*; It makes its daily Courſe from Eaſt to Weſt, its yearly motion from North to South: It goes to the North, till it comes to the Point God hath ſet it, ond then turns back to the South, and gains ſome point every day: It never riſeth nor ſets in the ſame place one day, where it did the day before. The World is never without its light; ſome ſee it Riſing the ſame moment we ſee its ſetting.

* Amyraut. Predeſtin. p. 9.

The Earth alſo ſpeaks the Divine Wiſdom; 'tis the Pavement of the VVorld, as the Heaven is the Ceiling of Fretwork. * Tis placed lowermoſt, as being the heavieſt body, and fit to receive the weightieſt Matter, and provided as an Habitation proper for thoſe Creatures, which derive the matter of their bodies from it, and partake of its Earthy nature; and garniſht with other Creatures for the profit and pleaſure of man.

The Sea alſo ſpeaks the ſame Divine VViſdom. He ſtrengthened the Fountains of the Deep, and gave the Sea a decree, that it ſhould not paſs his Command, Prov. 8. 28, 29. He hath given it certain Bounds, that it ſhould not overflow the the Earth, Job 28. 11. It contains it ſelf in the ſituation wherein God hath placed it, and doth not tranſgreſs its bounds. What if ſome part of a Country, a little Spot, hath been overflowed by it, and groaned under its waves? Yet for the main, it retains the ſame Channels wherein it was at firſt lodged.

All Creatures are cloathed with an outward Beauty, and endowed with an inward Harmony; there is an agreement in all parts of this great Body; every one is beautiful and orderly; but the beauty of the World reſults from all of them diſpos'd and linkt together.

3. This Wiſdom is ſeen in the fitneſs of every thing for its end, and the uſefulneſs of it. Divine Wiſdom is more illuſtrious in the fitneſs and uſefulneſs of this great variety, than in the Compoſure of their diſtinct parts: As the Artificers Skill is more eminent in fitting the Wheels, and ſetting them in order for their due motion, than in the external Fabrick of the Materials which compoſe the Clock.

After the moſt diligent inſpection, there can be found nothing in the Creation unprofitable; nothing but is capable of ſome Service, either for the ſupport of our Bodies, recreation of our Senſes, or Moral Inſtruction of our Minds. Not the leaſt Creature but is formed and ſhap'd and furniſh'd with Members and Parts, in a due proportion for its end and ſervice in the World; nothing is ſuperfluous, nothing defective.

The Earth is fitted in its parts *; the Valleys are appointed for Granaries, the Mountains to ſhadow them from the ſcorching heat of the Sun; the Rivers like veins, carry refreſhment to every Member of this Body; Plants and Trees thrive on the face of the Earth, and Metals are ingendred in the Bowels of it, for Materials for Building and other uſes for the ſervice of Man. There he cauſes the Graſs to grow for the Cattle, and Herb for the Service of Man, that he may bring forth food out of the Earth, Pſal. 104. 14.

* Amyrant, ſur diverſes Text. p. 127.

The Sea is fitted for uſe; 'tis a Fiſh-pond for the nouriſhment of Man; a Boundary for the dividing of Lands and ſeveral Dominions; It joyns together Nations far diſtant: A great Veſſel for Commerce, Pſal. 104. 26. There go the Ships. It affords Vapours to the Clouds, wherewith to water the Earth, which the Sun draws up, ſeparating the finer from the ſalter parts, that the Earth may be fruitful, without being burthened with barrenneſs by the ſalt. The Sea hath alſo its Salt, its ebbs and flouds; the one as Brine, the other as Motion, to preſerve it from Putrification, that it may not be Contagious to the reſt of the World.

Showers are appointed to refreſh the bodies of living Creatures, to open the Womb of the Earth, and water the Ground to make it fruitful, Pſal. 104. 3. The Clouds therefore are called the Chariots of God; he rides in them in the manifeſtation of his goodneſs and Wiſdom.

* Winds are fitted to purifie the Air, to preſerve it from Putrefaction; to carry the Clouds to ſeveral parts, to refreſh the parched Earth, and aſſiſt her Fruits: And alſo to ſerve for the Commerce of one Nation with another by Navigation. God in his Wiſdom and goodneſs walks upon the wings of the Wind, Pſal. 104. 3.

* Leſſius.

* Rivers are appointed to bathe the Ground, and render it freſh and lively; they fortifie Cities, are the limits of Countreys, ſerve for Commerce, they are the Watring-pots of the Earth, and the Veſſels for Drink for the living Creatures that dwell upon the Earth, God cut thoſe Channels for the wild Aſſes, the Beaſts of the Deſart, which are his Creatures as well as the reſt, Pſal. 104. 10, 12, 13.

* Daille melan. part. 2. p. 472, 473.

Trees are appointed for the Habitation of Birds, ſhadows for the Earth, Nouriſhment for the Creatures, Materials for building, and Fuel for the relief of man againſt Cold.

The Seaſons of the Year have their uſe; the Winter makes the Juice retire into the Earth, fortifies Plants, and fixes their Roots: It moyſtens the Earth that was dried before by the heat of the Summer, and cleanſeth and prepares it for a new fruitfulneſs. The ſpring calls out the Sap in new Leaves and Fruit: The Summer conſumes the ſuperfluous moiſture, and produceth Nouriſhment for the Inhabitants of the World.

The

* Daille melang. part. 1. p. 477, &c,

* The Day and Night have alſo their uſefulneſs: The Day gives Life to Labour, and is a guide to Motion and Action. Pſal. 104. 23. The Sun ariſeth, man goeth forth to his labour until the Evening. It warms the Air, and quickens Nature; without day the World would be a Chaos, an unſeen Beauty. The Night indeed caſts a Vail upon the bravery of the Earth, but it draws the Curtains from that of Heaven; though it darkens below, it makes us ſee the Beauty of the World above, and diſcovers to us a glorious part of the Creation of God, the Tapiſtry of Heaven, and the Motion of the Stars, hid from us by the eminent light of the Day. It procures a Truce from labour, and refreſheth the Bodies of Creatures, by recruiting the Spirits which are ſcattered by watching. It prevents the ruin of Life, by a reparation of what was waſted in the Day. It takes from us the ſight of Flowers and Plants, but it waſheth their Face with Dews for a new Appearance next Morning. The length of the Day and Night, is not without a Mark of Wiſdom; were they of a greater length, as the length of a Week or Month, the one would too much dry, and the other too much moiſten; and for want of Action, the members would be ſtupified. The perpetual Succeſſion of Day and Night, is an Evidence of the Divine Wiſdom, in tempering the travel and reſt of Creatures. Hence the Pſalmiſt tells us, Pſal. 74. 16, 17, The day is thine, and the night is thine; thou haſt prepared the light of the Sun, and made Summer and Winter; i. e. they are of God's framing, not without a wiſe counſel and end.

Hence let us aſcend to the Bodies of living Creatures, and we ſhall find every member fitted for uſe. What a curioſity is there in every Member? Every one fitted to a particular uſe in their ſituation, form, temper, and mutual agreement for the good of the whole: The Eye to direct, the ear to receive directions from others, the hands to act, the feet to move. Every Creature hath members fitted for that Element wherein it reſides: And in the Body, ſome parts are appointed to change the Food into blood, others to refine it, and others to diſtribute and convey it to ſeveral parts for the maintenance of the whole: The Heart to mint vital ſpirits for preſerving Life, and the Brain to coyn Animal Spirits for Life and motion; the Lungs to ſerve for the cooling the heart, which elſe would be parcht as the ground in Summer. The Motion of the Members of the Body by one act of the Will, and alſo without the Will by a natural Inſtinct, is an admirable Evidence of Divine Skill in the ſtructure of the Body; ſo that well might the Pſalmiſt cry out, Pſal. 139. 14. I am fearfully and wonderfully made.

But how much more of this Divine Perfection is ſeen in the Soul? A Nature furniſht with a Faculty of Underſtanding to judg of things, to gather in things that are diſtant, and to reaſon and draw Concluſions from one thing to another, with a Memory to treaſure up things that are paſt, with a Will to apply it ſelf ſo readily to what the mind judges fit and comely, and fly ſo ſpeedily from what it judges ill and hurtful. The whole World is a Stage, every Creature in it hath a part to act, and a Nature ſuted to that part and end 'tis deſign'd for; and all concur in a joint Language to publiſh the Glory of Divine VViſdom, they have a Voice to proclaim the Glory of God, Pſal. 19. 1, 3. And it is not the leaſt part of God's Skill, in framing the Creatures ſo, that upon Man's Obedience, they are the Channels of his Goodneſs; and upon Man's Diſobedience, they can in their Natures be the Miniſters of his Juſtice for the puniſhing of offending Creatures.

4. Fourthly, The VViſdom is apparent in the linking all theſe uſeful parts together, ſo that one is ſubordinate to the other for a common end. All parts are exactly ſuted to one another, and every part to the whole, though they are of different Natures, as Lines diſtant in themſelves, yet they meet in one common Center, the good and the preſervation of the Univerſe; they are all joynted together, as the word tranſlated framed * ſignifies; knit by fit Bands and Ligaments to contribute mutual Beauty, Strength and Aſſiſtance to one another; like ſo many links of a Chain coupled together, that though there be a diſtance in place, there is a unity in regard of connexion and end, there is a conſent in the whole. Hoſea 2. 21, 22. The Heavens hear the Earth, and the Earth hears the Corn, and the Wine, and

* Heb. 11. 3.

the

the Oyl. The Heavens communicate their qualities to the Earth, and the Eearth conveys them to the Eruits ſhe bears: * The Air diſtributes Light, Wind and Rain to the Earth; the Earth and the Sea render to the Air exhalations and Vapours, and all together charitably give to the Plants and Animals that which is neceſſary for their nouriſhment and refreſhment. The Influences of the Heavens animate the Earth, and the Earth affords matter in part for the Influences it receives from the Regions above. Living Creatures are maintain'd by Nouriſhment; Nouriſhment is conveyed to them by the Fruits of the Earth; the Fruits of the Earth are produced by means of Rain and Heat; matter for Rain and Dew is raiſed by the heat of the Sun; and the Sun by its motion diſtributes heat, and quickning vertue to all parts of the Earth. So colours are made for the pleaſure of the Eye, Sounds for the delight of the Ear: Light is formed, whereby the Eye may ſee the one, and Air to convey the Species of Colours to the Eye, and Sound to the Ear; all things are like the Wheels of a Watch compacted: And though many of the Creatures be endowed with contrary qualities, yet they are joyned in a Marriage-knot for the Publick Security, and Subſerviency to the Preſervation and Order of the Univerſe: As the variety of Strings upon an Inſtrument, ſending forth various and diſtinct ſounds, are temper'd together, for the framing excellent and delightful Airs. In this univerſal conſpiring of the Creatures together to one end, is the wiſdom of the Creator apparent; in tuning ſo many Contraries as the Elements are, and preſerving them in their Order, which if once broken, the whole Frame of Nature would crack, and fall in pieces; all are ſo interwoven and inlaid together, by the Divine Workmanſhip, as to make up one intire Beauty in the whole Fabrick: As every part in the Body of Man hath a diſtinct Comelineſs, yet there is beſides, the Beauty of the whole, that reſults from the union of divers parts exactly faſhion'd to one another, and linkt together.

* Daille. 15. Serm. p. 170.

By the way,

Uſe. How much may we ſee of the perfection of God in every thing that preſents it ſelf to our eyes? And How ſhould we be convinc'd of our unworthy neglect of aſcending to him with reverent and admiring thoughts, upon the proſpect of the Creatures? What dull Scholars are we, when every Creature is our Teacher, every part of the Creature a lively Inſtruction! Thoſe things that we tread under our feet, if uſed by us according to the full deſign of their Creation, would afford rich matter, not only for our heads, but our hearts. As Grace doth not deſtroy Nature, but elevate it, ſo neither ſhould the freſher and fuller diſcoveries of Divine VViſdom in Redemption, deface our thoughts of his VViſdom in Creation. Though the greater Light of the Sun, obſcures the leſſer ſparkling of the Stars, yet it gives way in the Night to the diſcovery of them, that God may be ſeen, known, and conſidered in all his VVorks of VVonder, and Miracles of Nature. No part of Scripture is more ſpiritual than the Pſalms; none filled with clearer Diſcoveries of Chriſt in the Old Teſtament; yet how often do the Penmen conſider the Creation of God, and find their Meditations on him to be ſweet, as conſider'd in his VVorks? Pſal. 104. 34. My meditation of him ſhall be ſweet. VVhen? VVhy, after a ſhort Hiſtory of the Goodneſs and VViſdom of God in the Frame of the VVorld, and the Species of the Creatures.

2. The VViſdom of God appears in his Government of his Creatures. The regular motion of the Creatures ſpeaks for this Perfection, as well as the exact Compoſition of them. If the exquiſiteneſs of the Frame conducts us to the skill of the Contriver; the exactneſs of their Order, according to his VVill and Law, ſpeaks no leſs the wiſdom of the Governour. It cannot be thought that a raſh and irrational Power preſides over a world ſo well diſpoſed: The diſpoſition of things hath no leſs characters of skill, than the Creation of them. No man can hear an excellent Leſſon upon a Lute, but muſt preſently reflect upon the Art of the Perſon that touches it. The Prudence of man appears in wraping up the Concerns of a Kingdom in his mind, for the well-ordering of it; and ſhall not the VViſdom of God ſhine forth, as he is the Director of the VVorld?

I ſhall omit his Government of Inanimate Creatures, and confine the Diſcourſe to his Government of Man, as Rational, as Sinful, as Reſtor'd.

1. In his Government of man as a Rational Creature.

1. In the Law he gives to man. Wiſdom framed it, though Will enacted it. The will of God is the Rule of Righteouſneſs to us, but the Wiſdom of God is the Foundation of that Rule of Righteouſneſs which he preſcribes us. * The Compoſure of a Muſician is the Rule of ſinging to his Scholars; yet the Conſent and Harmony in that Compoſure, derives not it ſelf from his will, but from his underſtanding; he would not be a Muſician, if his Compoſures were contrary to the Rules of true Harmony: So the Laws of men are compos'd by VViſdom though they are enforc'd by will and Authority.

* Caſtellio Dialog. l. 4. p. 46.

The Moral Law, which was the Law of Nature, the Law imprinted upon Adam, is ſo framed, as to ſecure the Rights of God as Supream, and the Rights of Men in their diſtinctions of Superiority and Equality: 'Tis therefore called holy and good, Rom. 7. 12. holy, as it preſcribes our duty to God in his VVorſhip; good, as it regulates the offices of human life, and preſerves the common intereſt of Mankind.

1. 'Tis ſuted to the Nature of Man. As God hath given a Law of Nature, a fixed order to Inanimate Creatures, ſo he hath given a Law of Reaſon to Rational Creatures: Other Creatures are not capable of a Law differencing good and evil, becauſe they are deſtitute of Faculties and Capacities to make diſtinction between them. It had not been agreeable to the VViſdom of God to propoſe any Moral Law to them, who had neither underſtanding to diſcern, nor will to chuſe, 'Tis therefore to be obſerved, that whilſt Chriſt exhorted others to the embracing his Doctrine, yet he exhorted not little Children, though he took them in his Arms, becauſe though they had Faculties, yet they were not come to ſuch a Maturity, as to be capable of a Rational Inſtruction. But there was a neceſſity for ſome Command for the Government of man; ſince God had made him a Rational Creature, it was not agreeable to his VViſdom to govern him as a Brute, but as a Rational Creature, capable of knowing his Precepts, and voluntarily walking in them; and without a Law, he had not been capable of any exerciſe of his Reaſon in Services reſpecting God.

He therefore gives him a Law with a Covenant annext to it, whereby man is obliged to Obedience, and ſecured of a Reward. This was enforced with ſevere Penalties, Death, with all the Horrours attending it, to deter him from Tranſgreſſion, Gen. 2. 17. wherein is implied a Promiſe of continuance of Life, and all its Felicities, to allure him to a mindfulneſs of his Obligation. So perfect a Hedge did Divine Wiſdom ſet about him, to keep him within the bounds of that Obedience, which was both his Debt and Security, that whereſoever he looked, he ſaw either ſomething to invite him, or ſomething to drive him to the payment of his Duty, and perſeverance in it. Thus the Law was exactly framed to the Nature of man; man had twiſted in him a deſire of Happineſs; the Promiſe was ſuted to cheriſh this natural Deſire. He had alſo the Paſſion of Fear; the proper Object of this was any thing deſtructive to his Being, Nature, and Felicity; this the threatning met with. In the whole it was accommodated to man as rational: Precepts to the Law in his mind, promiſes to the natural Appetite, threatnings to the moſt prevailing Affection, and to the implanted Deſires of preſerving both his Being and Happineſs in that Being. Theſe were rational Motives fitted to the nature of Adam, which was above the life God had given Plants, and the ſenſe he had given Animals.

The Command given man in Innocence, was ſuted to his ſtrength and power; God gave him not any Command, but what he had ability to obſerve: And ſince we want not power to forbear an Apple in our corrupted and impotent State, he wanted not ſtrength in his ſtate of Integrity. The VViſdom of God Commanded nothing, but what was very eaſie to be obſerved by him, and inferior to his natural Ability. It had been both unjuſt and unwiſe to have commanded him to fly up to the Sun, when he had not wings; or ſtop the Courſe of the Sea, when he had not ſtrength.

2. 'Tis

2. 'Tis ſuted to the happineſs and benefit of man. God's Laws are not an act of meer Authority reſpecting his own Glory, but of wiſdom and goodneſs reſpecting mans Benefit. They are perfective of mans Nature, conferring a Wiſdom upon him; rejoycing his Heart, enlightning his eyes, Pſal. 19. 7, 8. affording him both a knowledg of God, and of himſelf. To be without a Law, is for man to be as Beaſts, without Juſtice and without Religion: Other things are for the good of the Body, but the Laws of God for the good of the Soul: the more perfect the Law, the greater the benefit. The Laws given to the Jews were the honour and excellency of that Nation; Deut. 1. 8. What Nation is there ſo great, that hath Statutes and Judgments ſo righteous? They were made States-men in the Judicial Law, Eccleſiaſticks in the Ceremonial, honeſt men in the Second Table, and Divine in the Firſt. All his Laws are ſuted to the true ſatisfaction of man, and the good of Human Society. Had God framed a Law only for one Nation, there would have been the Characters of a particular Wiſdom; but now an univerſal wiſdom appears, in accommodating his Law, not only to this or that particular Society or Corporation of men, but to the benefit of all mankind in the variety of Climates, and Countries wherein they live: Every thing that is diſturbing to Human Society is provided againſt; nothing is enjoin'd, but what is ſweet, rational and uſeful: It orders us not to attempt any thing againſt the life of our Neighbour, the honour of his Bed, propriety in his Goods, and the clearneſs of his Reputation; and if well obſerved, would alter the face of the World, and make it look with another hue. The World would be alter'd from a bruti ſh to a human World: It would change Lions and Wolves, men of Lion-like and Wolviſh diſpoſition, into reaſon and ſweetneſs. And becauſe the whole Law is ſum'd up in love, it obligeth us to endeavour the preſervation of one anothers Beings, the favouring of one anothers Intereſts, and increaſing the Goods, as much as Juſtice will permit, and keeping up one anothers Credits; becauſe love, which is the Soul of the Law, is not ſhewn by a ceſſation from action, but ſignifies an order upon all occaſions in doing good. I ſay were this Law well obſerved, the World would be another thing than it is. It would become a Religious Fraternity, the Voice of Enmity and the Noiſe of Groans and Curſings would not be heard in our Streets: Peace would be in all Borders; plenty of Charity in the midſt of Cities and Countries; Joy and ſinging would ſound in all habitations. Mans advantage was deſign'd in Gods Laws, and doth naturally reſult from the obſervance of them. God ſo ordered them by his Wiſdom, that the obedience of man ſhould draw forth his Goodneſs, and prevent thoſe ſmarting Judgments, which were neceſſary to reduce the Creature to order, that would not voluntarily continue in the order God had appointed. The Laws of men are often unjuſt, oppreſſive, cruel; ſometimes againſt the Law of nature: But an univerſal wiſdom and righteouſneſs glitters in the Divine Law: There is nothing in it, but what is worthy of God, and uſeful for the Creature; ſo that we may well ſay with Job, Who teaches like God, Job. 36. 22. or as ſome render it, who is a law-giver like God? Who can ſay to him, thou haſt wrough iniquity or folly among men? His Precepts where framed for the preſervation of man in that rectitude wherein he was Created, in that likeneſs to God wherein he was firſt made, that there might be a correſpondance between the Integrity of the Creature and the Goodneſs of his Creator, by the Obedience of man; that man might exerciſe his Faculties in Operations worthy of him, and beneficial to the World.

3. The Wiſdom of God is ſeen in ſuting his Laws to the Conſciences, as well as the Intereſt of all Mankind. Rom. 2. 14. The Gentiles do by nature the things contained in the Law; ſo great an affinity there is between the wiſe Law and the Reaſon of man.

There is a natural Beauty emerging from them, and darting upon the Reaſons, and Conſciences of men, which dictates to them that this Law is worthy to be obſerved in it ſelf. The two main Principles of the Law, The Love and worſhip of God, and doing as we would be done by, have an indelible impreſſion in the Conſciences of all men in regard of the Principle; though they are not ſutably expreſt in the Practiſe. Were there no Law outwardly publiſht, yet every mans Conſcience would dictate to him, that God was to be acknowledged, worſhipped, loved, as naturally as his Reaſon would acquaint him that there was ſuch a Being as God. This ſutableneſs of them to the Conſciences of men, is manifeſt, in that the Laws of the beſt governed Nations among the Heathen have had an agreement with them. Nothing can be more exactly compoſed, according to the Rules of right and exact Reaſon than this; no man but approves of ſomething in it, yea of the whole when he exerciſeth that dim Reaſon which he hath. Suppoſe any man, (not an abſolute Atheiſt) he cannot but acknowledg the reaſonableneſs of worſhipping God. Grant him to be a Spirit, and it will preſently appear abſurd to repreſent him by any Corporeal Image, and derogate from his Excellency by ſo mean a reſemblance; with the ſame eaſineſs he will grant a reverence due to the Name of God; that we muſt not ſerve our turn of him, by calling him to witneſs to a lie in a ſolemn Oath. That as Worſhip is due to him, ſo ſome ſtated time is a circumſtance neceſſary to the performance of that Worſhip. And as to the Second Table, will any man in his right reaſon quarrel with that Command that engageth his Inferiors to honour him; that ſecures his Being from a violent murder, and his goods from unjuſt rapine? and though by the fury of his Luſts he break the Laws of Wedlock himſelf, yet he cannot but approve of that Law, as it prohibits every man from doing him the like injury and diſgrace. The ſutableneſs of the Law to the Conſciences of men, is further evidenced by thoſe furious reflections and ſtrong alarms of Conſcience upon a tranſgreſſion of it, and that in all parts of the World, more or leſs in all men: So exactly hath Divine wiſdom fitted the Law to the Reaſon and Conſciences of men, as one Tally to another. Indeed, without ſuch an agreement, no mans Conſcience could have any ground for a Hue and Cry, nor need any man be ſtartled with the Records of it. This manifeſts the wiſdom of God in framing his Law ſo, that the Reaſons and Conſciences of all men do one time or other ſubſcribe to it. What Governour in the World is able to make any Law diſtinct from this revealed by God, that ſhall reach all places, all perſons, all Hearts?

We may add to this the extent of his Commands in ordering goodneſs at the root, not only in action but affection; not only in the motion of the Members, but the diſpoſition of the Soul; which ſuting a Law to the inward frame of man, is quite out of the compaſs of the wiſdom of any Creature.

4. His Wiſdom is ſeen in the incouragements he gives for the ſtudying and obſerving his will, Pſal. 19. 11. In keeping the Commandments there is great reward. The variety of them; there is not any particular Genius in man, but may find ſomething ſutable to win upon him in the revealed will of God. There is a ſtrain of Reaſon to ſatisfie the Rational; of Eloquence, to gratifie the Fanciful; of Intereſt to allure the Selfiſh; of Terror, to ſtartle the obſtinate. As a skillful Angler ſtores himſelf with Baits, according to the Appetites of the ſorts of fiſh he intends to catch; ſo in the Word of God, there are varieties of Baits, according to the varieties of the Inclinations of men; Threatnings to work upon Fear; Promiſes to work upon Love; Examples of holy men ſet out for Imitation; and thoſe plainly, neither his Threatnings nor his Promiſes are dark as the Heathen Oracles; but peremptory, as becomes a Soveraign Law-giver; and plain, as was neceſſary for the underſtanding of a Creature: As he deals graciouſly with men in exhorting and incouraging them; ſo he deals wiſely herein, by taking away all Excuſe from them if they ruine the intereſt of their Souls by denying Obedience to their Soveraign.

Again, the Rewards God propoſeth are accommodated, not to the Brutiſh parts of man, his Carnal Senſe and Fleſhly Appetite; but to the Capacity of a Spiritual Soul, which admits only of Spiritual Gratifications; and cannot in its own Nature, without a ſordid ſubjection to the Humors of the Body, be moved by Senſual Propoſals. God backs his Precepts with that which the Nature of Man longed for, and with Spiritual Delights; which can only ſatisfie a rational Appetite: And thereby did as well gratifie the nobleſt Deſires in man, as Oblige him to the nobleſt Service and Work *. Indeed Vertue and Holineſs being perfectly amiable, ought chiefly to affect our Underſtandings, and by them draw our Wills to the eſteem and purſuit of them. But ſince the deſire of Happineſs is inſeparable from the Nature of Man, as impoſſible to be diſ-joyn'd, as an Inclination to deſcend to be ſevered from heavy Bodies, or an inſtinct to aſcend from Light and Airy of Subſtances; God ſerves himſelf of the Inclination of our Natures to happineſs, to ingender in us an eſteem and affection to the Holineſs he doth require. He propoſeth the enjoyment of a ſupernatural Good and everlaſting Glory, as a Bait to that inſatiable longing our Natures have for Happineſs, to receive the impreſſion of Holineſs into our Souls. And beſides, he doth proportion Rewards according to the degrees of mens Induſtry, Labour, and Zeal for him; and weighs out a recompence, not only ſuted to, but above the ſervice. He that improves five Talents, is to be ruler over five Cities; that is, a greater proportion of Honour and Glory than another, Luke 19. 17, 18. As a wiſe Father excites the affection of his Children to things worthy of Praiſe, by varieties of Recompenſes according to their ſeveral Actions. And it was the VViſdom of the Steward; in the Judgment of our Saviour, to give every one the portion that belonged to him, Luke 12. 42. There is no part of the Word wherein we meet not with the will and Wiſdom of God, varieties of Duties, and varieties of encouragement mingled together.

* Amyrant.

to

5. The Wiſdom of God is ſeen In fitting the Revelations of his will to after-times, and for the preventing of the foreſeen Corruptions of men. The whole Revelation of the mind of God is ſtored with Wiſdom in the VVords, connexion, ſence; It looks backwards to paſt, and forwards to Ages to come: A hidden wiſdom lies in the bowels of it, like Gold in a Mine.

The Old Teſtament was ſo compoſed, as to fortifie the New, when God ſhould bring it to light. The Foundations of the Goſpel were laid in the Law: The Predictions of the Prophets, and figures of the Law were ſo wiſely framed and laid down in ſuch clear expreſſions, as to be Proofs of the Authority of the New Teſtament, and Convictions of Jeſus his being the Meſſiah, Luke 24. 14. Things concerning Chriſt were written in Moſes, the Prophets, and Pſalmes, and do to this day ſtare the Jews ſo in the face, that they are fain to invent abſurd and Nonſenſical Interpretations to excuſe their Unbelief, and continue themſelves in their obſtinate Blindneſs. And in purſuance of the efficacy of thoſe Predictions, it was a part of the VViſdom of God to bring forth the Tranſlation of the Old Teſtament, (by the means of Ptolomy King of Egypt ſome hundreds of years before the coming of Chriſt,) into the Greek Language, the Tongue the moſt known in the World; And why? to prepare the Gentiles by the reading of it, for that gracious Call he intended them, and for the entertainment of the Goſpel, which ſome few years after was to be publiſht among them; that by reading the Predictions ſo long before made, they might more readily receive the accompliſhment of them in their due time.

The Scripture is written in ſuch a manner, as to obviate Errors foreſeen by God to inter into the Church. It may be wondred, why the Univerſal Particle ſhould be inſerted by Chriſt, in the giving the Cup in the Supper, which was not in the diſtributing the Bread, Mat. 26. 27. Drink ye all of it; Not at the diſtributing the Bread, Eat you all of it: And Mark in his Relation tells us, They all drank of it, Mark 11. 23. The Church of Rome hath been the occaſion of diſcovering to us the Wiſdom of our Saviour in inſerting that Particle all, ſince they were ſo bold to exclude the Communicants from the Cup by a trick of Concomitancy. Chriſt foreſaw the Error, and therefore put in a little word to obviate a great Invaſion: And the Spirit of God hath particularly left upon record, that Particle, as we may reaſonably ſuppoſe to ſuch a purpoſe. And ſo in the deſcription of the bleſſed Virgin, Luke 1. 27. There is nothing of her Holineſs mentioned, which is with much diligence recorded of Elizabeth; Verſ. 6. Righteous, walking in all the commandments of God blameleſs; Probably to prevent the ſuperſtition which God foreſaw would ariſe in the World. And we do not find more undervaluing ſpeeches, uttered by Chriſt to any of his Diſciples in the exerciſe of his Office, than to her, except to Peter. As when ſhe acquainted him with the want of Wine at the Marriage in Cana, ſhe receives a ſlighting anſwer: Woman, what have I to do with thee? John 2. 4. And when one was admiring the bleſſedneſs of her that bare him, he turns the diſcourſe another way, to pronounce a bleſſedneſs rather belonging to them that hear the Word of God and keep it, Luke 11. 27, 28. in a mighty VViſdom to Antidote his people againſt any conceit of the prevalency of the Virgin over him in Heaven, in the Exerciſe of his Mediatory Office.

2. As his VViſdom appears in his Government by his Laws, ſo it appears in the various inclinations and conditions of Men. As there is a diſtinction of ſeveral Creatures, and ſeveral qualities in them, for the Common good of the World; ſo among men there are ſeveral inclinations and ſeveral Abilities, as Donatives from God, for the Common advantage of Human Society; As ſeveral Chanels cut out from the ſame River run ſeveral wayes, and refreſh ſeveral Soils; one Man is qualified for one Employment, another marked out by God for a different Work, yet all of them fruitful to bring in a Revenue of Glory to God, and a harveſt of Profit to the reſt of Mankind. How unuſeful would the Body be, if it had but one Member? 1 Cor. 12. 19. How unprovided would a Houſe be, if it had not Veſſels of Diſhonour as well as of Honour? The Corporation of Mankind would be as much a Chaos, as the Matter of the Heavens and the Earth was, before it was diſtinguiſht by ſeveral forms breathed into it at the Creation. Some are inſpired with a particular Genius for one Art, ſome for another: Every man hath a diſtinct Talent. If all were Huſband-men, where would be the inſtruments to Plow and Reap? If all were Artificers: where would they have Corn to nouriſh themſelves? All men are like Veſſels, and Parts in the Body, deſign'd for diſtinct Offices and Functions for the good of the whole, and mutually return an advantage to one another.

As the variety of Gifts in the Church is a fruit of the Wiſdom of God, for the preſervation and increaſe of the Church, ſo the variety of Inclinations and Employments in the World is a fruit of the Wiſdom of God, for the preſervation and ſubſiſtance of the World by mutual Commerce: VVhat the Apoſtle largely diſcourſeth of the former, in 1 Cor. 12. may be applied to the other.

The various Conditions of men is alſo a fruit of Divine VViſdom. Some are Rich, and ſome Poor; the Rich have as much need of the Poor, as the Poor have of the Rich: If the Poor depend upon the Rich for their livelyhood, the Rich depend upon the Poor for their Conveniencies. Many Arts would not be learn'd by men, if Poverty did not oblige them to it; and many would faint in the learning of them, if they were not thereunto encouraged by the Rich.

The Poor labour for the Rich, as the Earth ſends Vapours into the vaſter and fuller Air; and the Rich return advantages again to the Poor, as the Clouds do the Vapours in Rain upon the Earth. As Meat would not afford a nouriſhing Juyce without Bread, and Bread without other Food would immoderately fill the Stomach, and not be will digeſted; ſo the Rich would be unprofitable in the Commonwealth without the Poor, and the Poor would be burthenſom to a Commonwealth without the Rich: The Poor could not be eaſily govern'd without the Rich, nor the Rich ſufficiently and conveniently provided for without the Poor. If all were Rich, there would be no Objects for the exerciſe of a Noble part of Charity: If all were Poor, there were no Matter for the exerciſe of it. Thus the Divine Wiſdom planted various Inclinations, and diverſified the Conditions of Men for the publick advantages of the VVorld.

II. Gods Wiſdom appears, in the government of Men, as Fallen and Sinful; or in the government of Sin. After the Law of God was broke, and Sin invaded and conquer'd the VVorld; Divine VViſdom had another Scene to act in, and other Methods of Government were neceſſary. The Wiſdom of God is then ſeen in ordering thoſe Jarring Diſcords, drawing Good out of Evil, and Honour to himſelf out of that, which in its own Nature tended to the ſupplanting of his Glory. God being a Soveraign Good, would not ſuffer ſo great an Evil, to enter, But to ſerve himſelf of it for ſome greater End; for all his Thoughts are full of Goodneſs and Wiſdom.

Now though the Permiſſion of Sin be an Act of his Soveraignty, and the Puniſhment of Sin be an Act of his Juſtice; yet the Ordination of Sin to good, is an Act of his Wiſdom, whereby he doth diſpoſe the Evil, over-rules the malice, and orders the Events of it to his own Purpoſes. Sin in it ſelf is a Diſorder, and therefore God doth not permit Sin for it ſelf; for in its own Nature it hath nothing of

Amiable-

Amiableneſs; but he wills it for ſome Righteous End, which belongs to the manifeſtation of his Glory, which is his aim in all the acts of his Will: He wills it not as Sin, but as his Wiſdom can order it to ſome greater Good than was before in the World, and make it contribute to the beauty of the Order he intends. As a dark Shadow is not delightful and pleaſant in it ſelf, nor is Drawn by a Painter for any Amiableneſs there is in the Shadow it ſelf, but as it ſerves to ſet forth that beauty, which is the main deſign of his Art; ſo the glorious Effects which ariſe from the Entrance of Sin into the World, are not from the Creatures Evil, but the Depths of Divine Wiſdom.

Particularly,

1. Gods VViſdom is ſeen in the bounding of Sin. As it is ſaid of the VVrath of Man, it ſhall praiſe him, and the remainder of VVrath God doth reſtrain, Pſal. 76. 10. He ſets limits to the boyling Corruption of the Heart, as he doth to the boiſterous VVaves of the Sea, Hitherto ſhalt thou go, and no further. As God is the Rector of the VVorld, he doth ſo reſtrain Sin, ſo temper and direct it, as that Human Society is preſerved, which elſe would be overflown with a Deluge of VVickedneſs, and Ruine would be brought upon all Communities. The VVorld would be a Shambles, a Brothel-houſe, if God by his VViſdom and Goodneſs, did not ſet bars to that VVickedneſs which is in the Hearts of Men: The whole Earth would be as bad as Hell. Since the Heart of Man is a Hell of Corruption, by that, the Souls of all Men would be excited to the acting the worſt Villanies; ſince every thought of the heart of Man is only evil, and that continnally, Gen. 6. 5. if the VViſdom of God did not ſtop theſe Floud-gates of Evil in the Hearts of men, it would overflow the World, and fruſtrate all the Gracious Deſigns he carries on among the Sons of Men. VVere it not for this Wiſdom, every Houſe would be filled with Violence, as well as every Nature is with Sin. VVhat harm would not ſtrong and furious Beaſts do, did not the Skill of Man tame and bridle them? How often hath Divine VViſdom reſtrain'd the Viciouſneſs of Human Nature, and let it run, not to that point they deſign'd, but to the end he propoſed? Laban's Fury, and Eſau's Enmity againſt Jacob, were pent in within bounds for Jacobs ſafety, and their Hearts over-ruled from an intended deſtruction of the good Man to a perfect Amity *. * Gen. 31. 29. & Gen. 32.

2. Gods Wiſdom is ſeen, in the bringing glory to himſelf out of Sin.

(1.) Out of Sin it ſelf. God erects the Trophies of Honour upon that, which is a Natural means to hinder and deface it. His glorious Attributes are drawn out to our view, upon the occaſion of Sin, which otherwiſe had lain hid in his own Being. Sin is altogether black and abominable; but by the Admirable Wiſdom of God, he hath drawn out of the dreadful darkneſs of Sin, the ſaving Beams of his Mercy, and diſplayed his Grace in the Incarnation and Paſſion of his Son for the Atonement of Sin. Thus he permitted Adams Fall, and wiſely order'd it: for a fuller diſcovery of his own Nature, and a higher elevation of Mans good, that as Sin reigned to death, ſo might Grace reign through Righteouſneſs to Eternal life, by Jeſus Chriſt, Rom. 5. 21. The unbounded Goodneſs of God could not have appeared without it. His Goodneſs in rewarding Innocent Obedience, would have been manifeſted; but not his Mercy, in pardoning Rebellious Crimes: An Innocent Creature is the Object of the Rewards of Grace, as the ſtanding Angels are under the Beams of Grace; but not under the Beams of Mercy, becauſe they were never Sinful, and conſequently never Miſerable. Without Sin the Creature had not been Miſerable: Had Man remained Innocent, he had not been the Subject of Puniſhment; and without the Creatures Miſery, Gods Mercy in ſending his Son to ſave his Enemies, could not have appeared. The abundance of Sin is a Paſſive occaſion for God to manifeſt the abundance of his Grace.

The Power of God in the changing the Heart of a Rebellious Creature, had not appeared, had not Sin infected our Nature. We had not clearly known the Vindictive Juſtice of God, had no Crime been committed; for that is the proper Object of Divine VVrath. The Goodneſs of God could never have permitted Juſtice to exerciſe it ſelf upon an Innocent Creature, that was not guilty either Perſonally, or by Imputation. Pſal. 11. 7. The righteous Lord loveth Righteouſneſs, his countenance doth behold the upright. VViſdom is illuſtrious hereby. God ſuffered Man to fall into a Mortal Diſeaſe, to ſhew the vertue of his own Reſtoratives ſtoratives to cure Sin, which in it ſelf is Incurable by the Art of any Creature. And otherwiſe this Perfection whereby God draws Good out of Evil, had been utterly uſeleſs, and would have been deſtitute of an Object wherein to diſcover it ſelf.

Again Wiſdom in ordering a Rebellious head-ſtrong VVorld to its own ends, is greater than the ordering an Innocent VVorld, exactly obſervant of his Precepts, and complying with the End of the Creation. Now, without the entrance of Sin, this VViſdom had wanted a Stage to act upon. Thus God raiſed the Honour of his VViſdom, while Man ruin'd the Integrity of his Nature; and made uſe of the Creatures breach of his Divine Law, to eſtabliſh the Honour of it in a more ſignal and ſtable manner, by the Active and Paſſive Obedience of the Son of his Boſom. Nothing ſerves God ſo much, as an occaſion of glorifying himſelf, as the entrance of Sin into the VVorld; by this occaſion God communicates to us the knowledg of thoſe Perfections of his Nature, which had elſe been folded up from us in an Eternal Night; his Juſtice had lain in the dark, as having nothing to puniſh; his Mercy had been obſcure, as having none to pardon; a great part of his VViſdom had been ſilent, as having no ſuch Object to order.

2. His Wiſdom appears, In making uſe of ſinful Inſtruments. He uſes the Malice and Enmity of the Devil to bring about his own Purpoſes, and makes the ſworn Enemy of his Honour contribute to the Illuſtrating of it againſt his will. This great Crafts-Maſter he took in his own net; and defeated the Devil by the Devils Malice; by turning the Contrivances he had hatch'd and accompliſh'd againſt Man, againſt himſelf. He uſed him as a Tempter, to grapple with our Saviour in the Wilderneſs, whereby to make him fit to ſuccour us; and as the God of this World, to inſpire the wicked Jews to Crucifie him, whereby to render him actually the Redeemer of the World, and ſo made him an Ignorant Inſtrument of that Divine Glory he deſign'd to ruin.

* Moulins Serm. Decad. 10. p. 231, 232.

* 'Tis more Skill to make a curious piece of Workmanſhip with ill condition'd Tools, than With Inſtruments naturally fitted for the work: 'Tis no ſuch great wonder for a Limner to draw an exact piece with a fit Pencil and ſutable Colours, as to begin and perfect a beautiful work with a Straw and Water, things improper for ſuch a deſign. This Wiſdom of God is more admirable and aſtoniſhing, than if a Man were able to rear a vaſt Palace by Fire, whoſe nature is to conſume Combuſtible matter, not to erect a Building.

To make thinks ſerviceable contrary to their own Nature, is a Wiſdom peculiar to the Creator of Nature. Gods making uſe of Devils, for the glory of his Name, and the good of his People, is a more amazing piece of Wiſdom, than his Goodneſs in employing the Bleſſed Angels in his work. To promiſe, that the World, (which includes the God of the World) and Death, and Things preſent, let them be as Evil as they will, ſhould be ours, that is, for our good, and for his glory, is an act of Goodneſs; but to make them ſerviceable to the Honour of Chriſt, and the good of his People, is a Wiſdom that may well raiſe our higheſt Admirations*: They are for Believers, as they are for the glory of Chriſt, and as Chriſt is for the glory of God.

* 1 Cor. 3. 22.

To Chain up Satan wholly, and fruſtrate his Wiles, would be an Argument of Divine Goodneſs; but to ſuffer him to run his riſque, and then improve all his Contrivances for his own glorious and gracious Ends and Purpoſes, manifeſts beſides his Power and Goodneſs, his Wiſdom alſo. He uſes the Sins of Evil Inſtruments for the glory of his Juſtice, Iſa. 10. 5, 6, 7. Thus he ſerved himſelf of the Ambition and Covetouſneſs, of the Aſſyrians, Chaldeans, and Romans, for the Correction of his People and Puniſhment of his Rebels. Juſt as the Roman Magiſtrates uſed the fury of Lions and other wild Beaſts, in their Theatres, for the Puniſhment of Criminals: The Lions acted their Natural temper in tearing thoſe that were expos'd to them for a Prey; but the intent of the Magiſtrates was to puniſh their Crimes. The Magiſtrate inſpir'd not the Lions with their Rage, that they had from their Natures; but ſerved themſelves of that Natural Rage, to execute Juſtice.

3. Gods Wiſdom is ſeen in bringing good to the Creature out of Sin. He hath ordered Sin to ſuch an end as Man never dreamt of, the Devil never imagin'd, and

Sin

Sin in its own Nature could never attain. Sin in its own Nature tends to no good, but that of Puniſhment, whereby the Creature is brought into order. It hath no relation to the Creatures good in it ſelf, but to the Creatures miſchief: But God, by an act of Infinite Wiſdom brings good out of it to the Creature, as well as glory to his Name, contrary to the Nature of the Crime, the Intention of the Criminal, and the Deſign of the Tempter.

(God willed Sin, that is, he willed to permit it, that he might communicate himſelf to the Creature in the moſt excellent manner.) He willed the Permiſſion of Sin, as an occaſion to bring forth the Myſtery of the Incarnation and Paſſion of our Saviour; as he permitted the Sin of Joſephs Brethren that he might uſe their Evil to a good end. He never, becauſe of his Holineſs, wills Sin as an End; but in regard of his Wiſdom he wills to permit it as a Means and Occaſion: And thus, to draw good out of thoſe things which are in their own Nature moſt contrary to Good, is the higheſt pitch of Wiſdom.

1. The Redemption of Man in ſo excellent a way, was drawn from the occaſion of Sin. The greateſt Bleſſing that ever the World was bleſt with, was uſher'd in by Contrarieties, by the Luſt and irregular Affection of Man; the firſt Promiſe of the Redeemer by the Fall of Adam, Gen. 3. 15. and the bruiſing the heel of that Promiſed Seed, by the blackeſt Tragedy acted by wicked Rebels, the Treachery of Judas, and the Rage of the Jews; the higheſt Good hath been brought forth by the greateſt Wickedneſs. As God out of the Chaos of rude and indigeſted Matter framed the firſt Creation; ſo from the Sins of Men, and Malice of Satan, he hath erected the Everlaſting Scheme of Honour in a New Creation of all things by Jeſus Chriſt.

The Devil inſpir'd Man, to content his own fury in the Death of Chriſt; and God order'd it to accompliſh his own deſign of Redemption in the Paſſion of the Redeemer: The Devil had his Diabolical Ends, and God over-powers his Action to ſerve his own Divine ends. The Perſon that betrayed him, was admitted to be a Spectator of the moſt private Actions of our Saviour, that his Innocence might be juſtified; to ſhew, that he was not afraid to have his Enemies Judges of his moſt retir'd Privacies. While they all thought to do their own Wills, Divine Wiſdom orders them to do Gods Will. Acts 2. 23. Him being delivered by the determinate Counſel and Fore-knowledg of God, you have taken, and by wicked hands have Crucified and ſlain. And wherein the Crucifiers of Chriſt ſinned, in ſhedding the richeſt Blood, upon their Repentance they found the expiation of their Crimes, and the diſcovery of a ſuperabundant Mercy. Nothing but Blood was aimed at by them: The beſt Blood was ſhed by them; but Infinite Wiſdom makes the Croſs the Scene of his own Righteouſneſs, and the Womb of Mans Recovery.

By the occaſion of Mans Lapſed ſtate, there was a way open to raiſe Man to a more excellent Condition, than that whereinto he was put by Creation: And the depriving Man of the happineſs of an Earthly Paradiſe, in a way of Juſtice, was an occaſion of advancing him to a Heavenly Felicity, in a way of Grace. The Violation of the Old Covenant, occaſionally introduc'd a better: The loſs of the firſt Integrity, uſher'd in a more ſtable Righteouſneſs, an Everlaſting Righteouſneſs, Dan. 9. 24. And the falling of the Firſt Head, was ſucceeded by one whoſe ſtanding could not but be Eternal.

The fall of the Devil was ordered by Infinite Wiſdom, for the good of that Body from which he fell. 'Tis ſuppoſed by ſome, that the Devil was the Chief Angel in Heaven, the Head of all the reſt; and that he Falling, the Angels were left as a Body without a Head; and after he had Politically beheaded the Angels, he endeavoured to deſtroy Man, and rout him out of Paradiſe: But God takes the opportunity to ſet up his Son, as the Head of Angels and Men. And thus whilſt the Devil endeavoured to ſpoil the Corporation of Angels, and make them a Body contrary to God, God makes Angels and Men one Body under one Head, for his Service.

The Angels in loſing a defectible Head, attained a more excellent and glorious Head in another Nature, which they had not before; though of a Lower Nature in his Humanity, yet of a more glorious Nature in his Divinity: From whence many many ſuppoſe they derive their Confirming Grace, and the ſtability of their ſtanding. All things in Heaven and Earth are gathered together in Chriſt, Eph. 1. 10. ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι, All united in him, and reduced under one Head: That though our Saviour be not properly their Redeemer, for Redemption ſuppoſeth Captivity, yet in ſome ſenſe he his their Head and Mediator; ſo that now the Inhabitants of Heaven and Earth are but one Family, Epheſ. 3. 15. And the Innumerable Company of Angels are parts of that Heavenly and Triumphant Jeruſalem, and that General Aſſembly, whereof Jeſus Chriſt is Mediator, Heb. 12. 22, 29.

2. The Good of a Nation often, by the skill of Divine Wiſdom, is promoted by the Sins of ſome Men. The Patriarchs ſelling Joſeph to the Midianites *, was without queſtion a Sin, and a breach of Natural Affection; yet by Gods Wiſe Ordination, it proved the Safety of the whole Church of God in the World, as well as the Egyptian Nation*.

* Gen. 37. 28.

* Gen. 45. 5, 8. & Gen. 50. 30.

The Jews Unbelief was a ſtep whereby the Gentiles aroſe to the knowledg of the Goſpel: As the ſetting of the Sun in one place, is the riſing of it in another*. He uſes the Corruptions of Men Inſtrumentally to propagate his Goſpel: He built up the True Church by the Preaching of ſome out of envy, Phil. 1. 15. as he bleſſed Iſrael out of the Mouth of a Falſe Prophet, Numb. 23. How often have the Hereſies of Men been the occaſion of clearing up the Truth of God, and fixing the more lively Impreſſions of it on the Hearts of Believers?

* Mat. 22. 9.

Neither Judah nor Tamar, in their Luſt, dreamt of a Stock for the Redeemer; yet God gave a Son from that Unlawful Bed, whereof Chriſt came according to the fleſh; Gen. 38. 29. compared with Mat. 1. 3.

Jonahs Sin was probably the firſt and remote occaſion of the Ninivites giving credit to his Propheſie: His Sin was the cauſe of his Puniſhment, and his being flung into the Sea might facilitate the reception of his Meſſage, and excite the Ninivites Repentance, whereby a Cloud of ſevere Judgment was blown away from them.

'Tis thought by ſome, That when Jonah paſſed through the Streets of Niniveh with his Proclamation of Deſtruction, he might be known by ſome of the Mariners of that Ship, from whence he was caſt Over-board into the Sea, and might after their Voyage be occaſionally in that City, the Metropolis of the Nation, and the place of ſome of their Births; and might acquaint the People, that this was the ſame Perſon they had caſt into the Sea by his own conſent, for his acknowledg'd running from the Preſence of the Lord; for that he had told them Jonah 1. 10. and the Mariners Prayer, Verſe 14. evidenceth it, whereupon they might conclude his Meſſage worthy of Belief, ſince they knew from ſuch Evidences, that he had ſunk into the Bowels of the Waters, and now ſaw him ſafe in their Streets, by a Deliverance unknown to them; and that therefore that Power that delivered him, could eaſily verifie his Word in the threatned Judgment.

Had Jonah gone at firſt without committing that Sin, and receiving that Puniſhment, his Meſſage had not been judged a Divine Prediction, but a fruit of ſome Enthuſiaſtick madneſs: His Sin upon this account was the firſt occaſion of averting a Judgment from ſo great a City.

3. The good of the Sinner himſelf is ſometimes promoted by Divine Wiſdom, ordering the Sin. As God had not permitted Sin to enter upon the World, unleſs to bring Glory to himſelf by it; ſo he would not let Sin remain in the little World of a Believers Heart, if he did not intend to order it for his good. What is done by Man to his damage and diſparagement, is directed by Divine wiſdom to his advantage; not that it is the intent of the Sin, or the Sinner; but it is the event of the Sin, by the ordination of Divine Wiſdom and Grace.

As without the Wiſdom of God permitting Sin to enter into the World, ſome Attributes of God had not been Experimentally known; ſo ſome Graces could not have been exercis'd: For where had there been an Object for that Noble Zeal, in vindicating the Glory of God, had it not been invaded by an Enemy? The intenſeneſs of Love to him could not have been ſo ſtrong, had we not an Enemy to hate for his ſake. Where had there been any place for that Noble part of Charity in holy Admonitions and Compaſſion to the Souls of our Neighbours, and Endeavours to reduce them out of a deſtructive to a happy Path?

Path? Humility would not have had ſo many grounds for its growth and exerciſe, and holy Sorrow had had no fewel.

And as without the appearance of Sin, there had been no exerciſe of the Patience of God; ſo without Afflictions, the Fruits of Sin, there had been no ground for the exerciſe of the Patience of a Chriſtian, one of the Nobleſt parts of Valour. Now Sin being Evil, and ſuch as cannot but be Evil, hath no reſpect in it ſelf to any good, and cannot work a gracious End, or any thing profitable to the Creature; nay it is a hindrance to any good, and therefore what good comes from it, is Accidental, occaſioned indeed by Sin, but efficiently cauſed by the over-ruling Wiſdom of God, taking occaſion thereby to diſplay it ſelf and the Divine Goodneſs.

The Sins and Corruptions remaining in the Heart of a Man, God orders for good, and there are good effects by the direction of his Wiſdom and Grace.

I. As the Soul reſpects God.

1. God often brings forth a ſenſibleneſs of the neceſſity of Dependance on him. The Nurſe often lets the Child ſlip, that it may the better know who ſupports it, and may not be too venturous and confident of its own ſtrength. Peter would truſt in Habitual Grace, and God ſuffers him to Fall, that he might truſt more in Aſſiſting Grace; Mat. 26. 35. Though I ſhould die with thee, yet I will not deny thee. God leaves ſometimes the brighteſt Souls in an Eclipſe, to manifeſt, that their Holineſs, and the peſervation of it, depend upon the darting out his Beams upon them,

As the Falls of Men are the effects of their coldneſs and remiſneſs in acts of Faith and Repentance; ſo the fruit of theſe Falls is often a running to him for Refuge, and a deeper ſenſibleneſs where their Security lies. It makes us Lower our ſwelling Sails, and come under the Lee and Protection of Divine Grace. When the Pleaſures of Sin anſwer not the expectations of a Revolted Creature, he reflects upon his former ſtate, and ſticks more cloſe to God, when before God had little of his Company; Hoſ. 2. 7. I will return to my firſt huſband, for then it was better with me than now.

As God makes the Sins of Men ſometimes an occaſion of their Converſion; ſo he ſometimes makes them an occaſion of a further Converſion. Oneſimus run from Philemon, and was met with by Paul, who proved an Inſtrument of his Converſion, Philem. 10. My Son Oneſimus, whom I have begotten in my Bonds. His flight from his Maſter, was the occaſion of his Regeneration by Paul a Priſoner.

The Falls of Believers God orders to their further ſtability: He that is fallen for want of uſing his Staff, will Lean more upon it to preſerve himſelf from the like Diſaſter.

God, by permitting the Lapſes of Men, doth often make them deſpair of their own ſtrength to ſubdue their Enemies, and rely upon the ſtrength of Chriſt, wherein God hath laid up Power for us, and ſo becomes ſtronger in that ſtrength which God hath ordained for them.

We are very apt to truſt in our ſelves, and have confidence in our own worth and ſtrength; and God lets looſe Corruptions to abate this ſwelling humor. This was the reaſon of the Apoſtle Pauls Thorn in the fleſh, 2. Cor. 12. 9. whether it were a Temptation, or Corruption, or Sickneſs, that he might be ſenſible of his own inability, and where the ſufficiency of Grace for him was placed.

He that is in danger of Drowning, and hath the Waves come over his head, will with all the might he hath, lay hold upon any thing near him, which is capable to Save him. God lets his People ſometimes ſink into ſuch a condition, that they may lay the faſter hold on him who is near to all that call upon him.

2. God hereby raiſeth higher Eſtimations of the value and vertue of the Blood of Chriſt. As the great Reaſon why God permitted Sin to enter into the World, was to honour himſelf in the Redeemer; ſo the Continuance of Sin, and the Conqueſts it ſometimes makes in Renewed Men, are to honour the Infinite value and vertue of the Redeemers Merit, which God from the beginning intended to magnifie: The Value of it, in taking off ſo much ſucceſſive Guilt; and the Vertue of it, in waſhing away ſo much daily filth.

The Wiſdom of God hereby keeps up the Credit of Imputed Righteouſneſs, and manifeſts the Immenſe Treaſure of the Redeemers Merit to pay ſuch daily Debts. Were we perfectly Sanctified, we ſhould ſtand upon our own Bottom, and imagine no need of the continual and repeated Imputation of the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt for our Juſtification: We ſhould confide in Inherent Righteouſneſs, and ſlight Imputed.

If God ſhould take off all Remainders of Sin, as well as the Guilt of it, we ſhould be apt to forget that we are Fallen Creatures, and that we had a Redeemer: But the Reliques of Sin in us, mind us of the neceſſity of ſome higher ſtrength to ſet us right: They mind us both of our own Miſery, and the Redeemers perpetual benefit. God by this keeps up the Dignity and Honour of our Saviours Blood to the height, and therefore ſometimes lets us ſee, to our own coſt, what filth yet remains in us for the imployment of that Blood, which we ſhould elſe but little think of, and leſs admire. Our Gratitude is ſo ſmall to God, as well as Man, that the firſt Obligations are ſoon forgot, if we ſtand not in need of freſh ones ſucceſſively to ſecond them; we ſhould loſe our Thankful Remembrance of the firſt vertue of Chriſts Blood in waſhing us, if our Infirmities did not mind us of freſh Reiterations and Applications of it.

Our Saviours Office of Advocacy was erected eſpecially for Sins committed after a Juſtified and Renewed ſtate *. We ſhould ſcarce remember we had an Advocate, and ſcarce make uſe of him without ſome ſenſible Neceſſity; but our Remainders of Sin diſcover our Impotency, and an impoſſibility for us either to expiate our Sin, or conform to the Law, which neceſſitates us to have recourſe to that Perſon whom God hath appointed, to make up the breaches between God and us.

* 1 John 2. 1.

So the Apoſtle wraps up himſelf in the Covenant of Grace and his Intereſt in Chriſt, after his conflict with Sin, Rom. 7. ult. I thank God through Jeſus Chriſt. Now, after ſuch a Body of Death, a Principle within me that ſends up daily ſteams; yet as long as I ſerve God with my Mind, as long as I keep the main Condition of the Covenant, there is no Condemnation *: Chriſt takes my part, procures my acceptance, and holds the Band of Salvation firm in his hands. The brightneſs of Chriſts Grace, is ſet off by the darkneſs of our Sin. We ſhould not underſtand the Soveraignty of his Medicines, if there were no Reliques of Sin for him to exerciſe his Skill upon: The Phyſicians Art is moſt experimented, and therefore moſt valued in Relapſes, as dangerous as the former Diſeaſe. As the Wiſdom of God brought our Saviour into Temptation, that he might have Compaſſion to us; ſo it permits us to be overcome by Temptation, that we might have due Valuations of him.

* Rom. 8. 1.

3. God hereby often engageth the Soul to a greater Induſtry for his glory. The higheſt Perſecuters, when they have become Converts, have been the greateſt Champions for that Cauſe they both hated and oppreſt. The Apoſtle Paul is ſuch an Inſtance of this, that it needs no enlargement. By how much they have failed of anſwering the end of their Creation in glorifying God; by ſo much the more they ſummon up all their Force for ſuch an end, after their Converſion; to reſtore as much as they can of that Glory to God, which they by their Sin had robb'd him of. Their Sins, by the order of Divine Wiſdom, prove Whetſtones to ſharpen the edge of their Spirits for God. Paul never remembred his Perſecuting Fury, but he doubled his Induſtry for the Servive of God, which before he trampled under his feet. The further we go back, the greater Leap many times we take forward.

Our Saviour, after his Reſurrection, put Peter upon the exerciſe of that Love to him, which had ſo lately ſhrunk his head out of Suffering *; and no doubt, but the conſideration of his baſe Denial, together with a reflection upon a gracious Pardon, engag'd his ingenuous Soul to ſtronger and fiercer flames of Affection. A Believers Courage for God, is more ſharpned oftentimes by the ſhame of his Fall: He endeavours to repair the faults of his Ingratitude and Diſingenuity, by larger and ſtronger ſteps of Obedience. As a Man in a fight, having been foil'd by his Enemy, reaſſumes new Courage by his Fall; and is many times oblig'd to his Foil, both for his Spirit and his Victory. A gracious Heart will, upon the very mo-

* John 21. 15, 16, 17.

tions

tions to ſin, double its Vigor, as well as by good ones: It is uſually more quickned both in its motion to God and for God, by the Temptations and motions to Sin, which run upon it. This is another good the Wiſdom of God brings forth from Sin.

4. Again, Humility towards God, is another Good, Divine Wiſdom brings forth from the occaſion of Sin. By this God beats down all good opinion of our ſelves. Hezekiah was more humbled by his fall into Pride, than by all the Diſtreſs he had been in by Senacharibs Army, 2 Chron. 32. 26. Peters Confidence before his fall, gave way to an humble Modeſty after it: You ſee his Confidenee, Mark 14. 24. Though all ſhould be offended in thee, yet will not I; and you have the mark of his Modeſty, John 21. 17. 'Tis not then, Lord, I will love thee to the death, I will not ſtart from thee; but, Lord, thou knoweſt that I love thee. I cannot aſſure my ſelf of any thing after this miſcarriage; but, Lord, thou knoweſt there is a Principle of Love in me to thy Name: He was aſham'd, that himſelf who appeared ſuch a Pillar, ſhould bend as meanly as a Shrub to a Temptation.

The reflection upon Sin, lays a man as low as Hell in his Humiliation, as the Commiſſion of Sin did in the Merit. When David comes to exerciſe Repentance for his Sin, he begins it from the Well-head of Sin *, his Original Corruption, and draws down the ſtreams of it to the laſt commiſſion: Perhaps he did not ſo ſeriouſly humble himſelf for the Sin of his Nature all his days, ſo much as at that time; at leaſt, we have not ſuch Evidences of it. And Hezekiah humbled himſelf for the pride of his heart; not only for the Pride of his Act *, but for the Pride in the Heart, which was the Spring of that Pride in Act, in ſhewing his Treaſures to the Babyloniſh Ambaſſadors. God lets Sin continue in the Hearts of the beſt in this World, and ſometimes gives the Reins to Satan, and a mans own Corruption, to keep up a ſenſe of the ancient Sale we made of our ſelves to both.

* Pſal. 51. 5.

* 2 Chron. 32. 26.

II. In regard of our ſelves. Herein is the wonder of Divine Wiſdom, that God many times makes a Sin, which meritoriouſly fits us for Hell, a Providential occaſion to fit us for Heaven; when it is an occaſion of a more humble Faith and believing Humility, and an occaſion of a through Sanctification and growth in Grace, which prepares us for a ſtate of Glory.

1. He makes uſe of one Sin's breaking out to diſcover more; and ſo brings us to a ſelf-abhorrency and Indignation againſt ſin, the firſt ſtep towards Heaven. Perhaps David, before his groſs Fall, thought he had no Hypocriſie in him. We often find him appealing to God for his Integrity, and deſiring God to try him, if any guile could be found in his Heart, as if he could find none himſelf: But his Lapſe into that great Wickedneſs, makes him diſcern much falſeneſs in his Soul, when he deſires God to renew a right Spirit within him, and ſpeaks of Truth in the inward parts, Pſal. 51. 6, 10. The ſtirring of one Corruption, makes all the Mud at the bottom appear, which before a Soul did not ſuſpect. No man would think there were ſo great a Cloud of Smoke contain'd in a little Stick of Wood, were it not for the powerful operation of the Fire, that both diſcovers and ſeparates it. Job, that curſed the day of his Birth, and uttered many Impatient expreſſions againſt God upon the account of his own Integrity; upon his Recovery from his Affliction, and Gods cloſe application of himſelf, was wrought to a greater Abhorrency of himſelf, than ever we read he was exercis'd in before *. The Hoſtile acts of Sin increaſe the Souls hatred of it; and the deeper our Humiliations are for it, the ſtronger impreſſions of abhorrency are made upon us.

* Job 42. 6.

2. He often orders it, to make Conſcience more tender, and the Soul more watchful. He that finds by his Calamity, his Enemy to have more ſtrength againſt him than he ſuſpected, will double his Guards and quicken his Diligence againſt him. A being overtaken by ſome Sin, is by the Wiſdom of God diſpos'd to make us more fearful of cheriſhing any occaſion to enflame it, and watchful againſt every motion and ſtart of it. By a Fall, the ſoul hath more experience of the Deceitfulneſs of the Heart; and by obſerving its methods, is render'd better able to watch againſt them. 'Tis our ignorance of the Devices of Satan, and our own hearts, that makes us obnoxious to their ſurprizes. A fall into one Sin is often often a prevention of more which lay in wait for us. As the fall of a ſmall Body into an Ambuſh, prevents the deſign of the Enemy upon a greater. As God ſuffers Hereſies in the Church, to try our Faith; ſo he ſuffers Sins to remain, and ſometimes to break out, to try our Watchfulneſs. This advantage he brings from them, to ſteel our Reſolutions againſt the ſame Sins, and quicken our Circumſpection for the future againſt new Surprizes by a Temptation. Davids Sin was ever before him, Pſal. 51. 3. and made his Conſcience cry, Blood, Blood, upon every occaſion: He refuſed the Water of the Well of Bethlehem, 2 Sam. 23. 16, 17. becauſe it was gained with the hazard of Lives: He could endure nothing that had the taſte of Blood in it. Our fear of a thing depends much upon a Trial of it: A Child will not fear too near approaches to the Fire, till he feels the ſmart of it.

Mortification doth not wholly ſuppreſs the Motions of Sin, though it doth the Reſolutions to commit it; but that there will be a proneneſs in the Reliques of it, to entice a Man into thoſe Faults, which upon ſight of their blemiſhes coſt him ſo many Tears. As great Sickneſſes after the Cure are more watch'd, and the Body humour'd, that a Man might not fall from the Crazineſs they have left in him; which he is apt to do, if Relapſes are not carefully provided againſt. A man becomes more careful of any thing, that may contribute to the reſurrection of an expir'd Diſeaſe.

3. God makes it an occaſion of the Mortification of that Sin, which was the matter of the Fall. The livelineſs of one Sin in a Renewed Man, many times is the occaſion of the death of it. A wild Beaſt, while kept cloſe in a Den, is ſecure in its life; but when it breaks out to Rapine, it makes the Maſter reſolve to prevent any further miſchief by the death of it. The impetuous ſtirring of a humor in a diſeaſe, is ſometime Critical, and a Prognoſtick of the ſtrength of Nature againſt it, whereby the Diſeaſe loſeth its ſtrength by its ſtruggling, and makes room for health to take place by degrees. One Sin is uſed by God for the deſtruction both of it ſelf and others: As the Fleſh of a Scorpion cures the biting of it. It ſometimes by wounding us loſeth its Sting, and like the Bee renders it ſelf uncapable of a ſecond Revenge. Peter, after his groſs Denial, never denied his Maſter afterwards. The Sin that lay undiſcovered, is by a Fall become viſible, and ſo more obvious to a mortifying ſtroke. The Soul lays the faſter hold on Chriſt and the Promiſe, and goes out againſt that Enemy in the Name of that Lord of Hoſts of which he was too negligent of before; and therefore as he proves more ſtrong, ſo more ſucceſsful: He hath more ſtrength, becauſe he hath leſs confidence in himſelf, and more in God, the prime ſtrength of his Soul. As it was with Chriſt, ſo it is with us, while the Devil was bruiſing his Heel, he was bruiſing his Head; and while the Devil is bruiſing our heel, the God of Peace and Wiſdom is ſometimes bruiſing his head both in us and for us; ſo that the ſtrugglings of Sin, are often as the faint groans or bitings of a Beaſt that is ready to expire. 'Tis juſt with a Man ſometimes, as with a Running Fountain that hath Mud at the bottom, when it is ſtirred the Mud tinctures and defiles it all over; yet ſome of that Mud hath a vent with the Streams which run from it, ſo that when it is re-ſettled at the bottom, 'tis not ſo much in quantity as it was before. God by his Wiſdom weakens the Sin, By permitting it to ſtir and defile.

4. Sometimes Divine Wiſdom makes it an occaſion to promote a Sanctification in all parts of the Soul. As the working of one Ill-humor in the Body, is an occaſion of caſhiering not only that, but the reſt by a ſound Purge. As a Man that is a little Cold, doth not think of the Fire; but if he ſlips with one Foot into an Icy-puddle, he haſtens to the Fire, whereby not only that part, but all the reſt receive a warmth and ſtrength upon that occaſion: Or, as if a Perſon fall into the Mire, his Cloaths are waſhed; and by that means cleanſed, not only from the filth at preſent contracted, but from the former Spots that were before unregarded. God by his Wiſdom brings ſecret Sins to a diſcovery, and thereby cleanſeth the Soul of them.

Davids Fall might be ordered as an anſwer to his former Petition, Pſal. 19. 12. Cleanſe thou me from my ſecret ſins; and as he did earneſtly pray after his Fall, ſo no doubt but he endeavour'd a thorough Sanctification, Pſal. 51. 7. Purge me, waſh waſh me; and that he meant not only a Sanctification from that ſingle Sin, but from all, Root and Branch, is evident by that Complaint of the flaw in his Nature verſe. 5. the Droſs and Chaff which lies in the heart is hereby diſcovered, and an opportunity adminiſtred of throwing it out, and ſearching all the corners of the Heart to diſcover where it lay. As God ſometime takes occaſion from one Sin to reckon with Men in a way of Juſtice for others; ſo he ſometimes takes occaſion from the commiſſion of one Sin, to bring out all the actions againſt the Sinner, to make him, in a way of gracious Wiſdom, ſet more cordially upon the work of Sanctification.

A great Fall ſometimes hath been the occaſion of a Mans Converſion. The Fall of Mankind occaſioned a more bleſſed Reſtoration; and the Falls of particular Believers, oft-times occaſion a more extenſive Sanctification. Thus the only wiſe God makes poyſons in Nature, to become Medicines in a way of Grace and Wiſdom.

5. Hereby the growth in Grace is furthered. 'Tis a wonder of Divine Wiſdom, to ſubſtract ſometimes his Grace from a Perſon, and let him fall into Sin, thereby to occaſion the increaſe of habitual Grace in him, and to augment it by thoſe ways that ſeem'd to depreſs it. By making Sins an occaſion of a more vigorous acting the contrary Grace, the wiſdom of God makes our corruptions in their own nature deſtructive, to become profitable to us. Grace often breaks out more ſtrongly afterwards, as the Sun doth with its heat, after it hath been mask'd and interrupted with a Miſt: They often, through the mighty working of the Spirit make us more humble, and Humility fits us to receive more Grace from God *. How doth Faith, that ſunk under the Waves, lift up its head again, and carry the Soul out with a greater livelineſs? What ardours of Love, what flouds of Repenting Tears, what ſeverity of Revenge, what horrours at the remembrace of the Sin, what Tremblings at the appearance of a ſecond Temptation? So that Grace ſeems to be awaken'd to a new and more vigorous life *. The broken Joynt is many times ſtronger in the Rupture, than it was before. The Luxuriancy of the Branches of Corruption, is an occaſion of purging, and purging is with a deſign to make Grace more fruitful; John 15.2. He purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit.

* James 4. 6.

* 2 Cor. 7. 11.

Thus Divine Wiſdom doth both ſharpen and brighten us by the duſt of Sin, and ripen and mellow the fruits of Grace by the dung of Corruption. Grace grows the ſtronger by oppoſition, as the Fire burns hotteſt and cleareſt, when it is moſt ſurrounded by a cold Air; and our natural heat reaſſumes a new ſtrength by the coldneſs of the Winter. The ſoyl under a Diamond, though an imperfection in it ſelf, increaſeth the beauty and luſtre of the Stone. The Enmity of Man was a commendation of the Grace of God: It occaſioned the breaking out of the Grace of God upon us; and is an occaſion, by the Wiſdom and Grace of God, of the increaſe of Grace many times in us.

How ſhould the Conſideration of Gods Incomprehenſible Wiſdom, in the management of Evil, ſwallow us up in Admiration; who brings forth ſuch beauty, ſuch eminent Diſcoveries of himſelf, ſuch excellent good to the Creature, out of the bowels of the greateſt Contrarieties, making dark ſhadows ſerve to diſplay and beautifie to our apprehenſions the Divine Glory? If Evil were not in the World, Men would not know what Good is: They would not behold the luſtre of Divine VViſdom; as without Night we could not underſtand the beauty of the Day.

Thugh God is not the Author of Sin, becauſe of his Holineſs, yet he is the Adminiſtrator of Sin by his VViſdom, and accompliſheth his own Purpoſes, by the Iniquities of his Enemies, and the Lapſes and Infirmities of his Friends.

Thous much for the Second, The Government of Man in his Lapſed ſtate, and the Government of Sin, wherein the Wiſdom of God doth wonderfully appear.

III. The Wiſdom of God appears in the Government of Man in his Converſion and Return to him. If there be a Counſel in framing the loweſt Creature, and in the minuteſt paſſages of Providence; there muſt needs be a higher Wiſdom in the government of the Creature to a ſupernatural end, and framing the Soul to be a monument of his Glory. The Wiſdom of God is ſeen with more Admirations,

and

* Eph. 3. 10. and in more varieties by the Angels in the Church, than in the Creation * ; that is, informing a Church out of the Rubbiſh of the World, out of Contrarieties and Contradictions to him ; which is greater than the framing a Celeſtial and Elementary World out of a rude Chaos. The moſt glorious bodies in the world, even thoſe of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, have not ſuch ſtamps of Divine Skill upon them, as the Soul of Man; nor is there ſo much of Wiſdom in the Fabrick and faculties of that, as in the reduction of a blind, wilful, rebellious Soul to its own happineſs, and Gods glory ; Eph. 1. 11, 12. He worketh all things according to the counſel of his own Will, that we ſhould be for the praiſe of his glory. If all things, then this, which is none of the leaſt of his works : To the praiſe of the glory of his Goodneſs in his work, and to the praiſe of the Rule of his work, his Counſel, in both the act of his Will, and the act of his Wiſdom. The reſtoring of the Beauty of the Soul, and its fitneſs for its true end, ſpeaks no leſs Wiſdom, than the firſt draught of it in Creation : And the application of Redemption, and bringing forth the fruits of it is as well an act of his Prudence, as the contrivance was of his Counſel.

Divine Wiſdom appears,

First, In the Subjects of Converſion. His Goodneſs reigns in the very Duſt, and he erects the Walls and Ornaments of his Temple from the Clay and Mud of the World : He paſſes over the Wiſe, and Noble, and Mighty, that may pretend ſome grounds of boaſting in their own natural or acquired Endowments ; and pitches upon the moſt contemptible Materials, wherewith to build a ſpiritual Tabernacle for himſelf, 1 Cor. 1. 26, 27. The fooliſh, and weak things of the World ; thoſe that are naturally moſt unfit for it, and moſt refractory to it. Herein lies the skill of an Architect, to render the moſt knotty, crooked, and inform pieces, by his art, ſubſervient to his main purpoſe and deſign. Thus God hath ordered from the beginning of the World, contrary Tempers, various Humors, divers Nations, as Stones of ſeveral Natures, to be a Building for himſelf, filthy framed together, and
* 1 Cor. 3. 9. to be his own Family *. Who will queſtion the skill that alters a black Jet into a clear Chryſtal, a Glow-worm into a Star, a Lion into a Lamb, and a Swine into a Dove? The more intricate and knotty any buſineſs is, the more eminent is any Nans ability and Prudence, in untying the knots and bringing it to a good Iſſue. The more deſperate the Diſeaſe, the more admirable is the Phyſicians Skill in the Cure.

He pitches upon Men for his ſervice, who have Natural diſpoſitions to ſerve him in ſuch ways as he diſpoſeth of them, after their Converſion : So Paul was naturally a Conſcientious man ; what he did againſt Chriſt was from the dictates of an erroneous Conſcience, ſoak'd in the Phariſaical Interpretations of the Jewiſh Law : He had a ſtrain of Zeal to proſecute what his depraved Reaſon and Conſcience did inform him in. God pitches upon this Man, and works him in the Fire for his Service : He alters not his Natural diſpoſition, to make him of a Conſtitution and Temper contrary to what he was before ; but directs it to another object, claps in another Byaſs into the Bowl, and makes his Ill-governed Diſpoſitions move in a new way of his own appointment, and guided that Natural heat to the ſervice of that Intereſt, which he was before ambitious to extirpate. As a high metled Horſe, when left to himſelf, creates both diſturbance and danger. But under the conduct of a wiſe Rider, moves regularly ; not by a change of his Natural fierceneſs, but a skilful management of the Beaſt to the Riders purpoſe.

2. In the ſeaſons of Converſion. The Prudence of Man conſiſts in the Timing the execution of his Counſels ; and no leſs doth the Wiſdom of God conſiſt in this. As he is a God of Judgment, or Wiſdom, he waits to introduce his Grace into the Soul in the fitteſt Seaſon.

This Attribute, Paul in the ſtory of his own Converſion puts a particular remark upon, which he doth not upon any other, in that Catalogue he reckons up 1 Tim. 1. 17. Now unto the King Eternal, Immortal, Inviſible, the only Wiſe God, be Honour and Glory for ever and ever, Amen. A moſt ſolemn Doxology, wherein wiſdom ſits upon the Throne above all the reſt, with a ſpecial Amen to the glory of it ; which refers to the Timing of his Mercy ſo to Paul, as made moſt for the glory of his Grace, and the encouragement of others from him as the Patern. God took him at a time when he was upon the brink of Hell ; when he was ready to devour the New-born Infant Church at Damaſcus; when he was Arm'd with all the Authority from without, and fired with all the Zeal from within, for the proſecution of his Deſign: Then God ſeizeth upon him, and runs him in a Chanel for his own Honour, and his Creatures happineſs.

was

'Tis obſervable * how God ſet his Eye upon Paul all along in his furious courſe, and lets him have the Reins, without putting out his hand to bridle him; yet no motion he could take, but the Eye of God runs along with him: He ſuffered him to kick againſt the pricks of Miracles, and the convincing Diſcourſe of Stephen, at his Martyrdom. There were many that Voted for Stephens Death, as the Witneſſes that flung the Stones firſt at him; but they are not named, only Saul, who teſtified his Approbation as well as the reſt, and that by watching the Witneſſes Cloaths while they were about that bloody work, Acts 7. 58. The Witneſſes laid their cloaths at a young Mans feet, named Saul. Again, though Multitudes were conſenting to his Death, yet Acts 8. 1. Saul only is mentioned. Gods Eye is upon him, yet he would not at that time ſtop his Fury: He goes on further, and makes havock of the Church, Acts 8. 3. He had ſurely many more Accomplices, but none are named (as if none regarded with any deſign of Grace) but Saul: Yet God would not reach out his hand to Change him, but Eyes him; waiting for a fitter opportunity, which in his Wiſdom he did foreſee. And therefore Acts 9. 1. the Spirit of God adds a Yet; Saul yet breathing out Threatnings. It was not Gods time yet, but it would be ſhortly. But when Saul was putting in execution his deſign againſt the Church of Damaſcus, when the Devil was at the top of his Hopes, and Saul in the height of his Fury, and the Chriſtians ſunk into the depth of their Fears; the Wiſdom of God lays hold of the opportunity, and by Pauls Converſion at this Seaſon, defeats the Devil, diſappoints the High Prieſts, ſhields his People, diſcharges their Fears by pulling Saul out of the Devils hands, and forming Satans Inſtrument to a holy Activity againſt him.

* Which I have upon another Occaſion noted.

3. The Wiſdom of God appears, In the manner of Converſion. So great a Change God makes, not by a deſtruction, but with a preſervation of, and ſutableneſs to Nature. As the Devil Tempts us, not by offering violence to our Natures, but by propoſing things convenient to our Corrupt Natures; ſo doth God ſolicite us to a Return, by propoſals ſuted to our Faculties. As he doth in Nature convey Nouriſhment to Men, by means of the Fruits of the Earth, and produceth the Fruits of the Earth by the Influences of Heaven; the Influences of Heaven do not force the Earth, but excite that Natural virtue and ſtrength which is in it. So God produceth Grace in the Soul by the Means of the Word, fitted to the capacity of Man, as Man, and proportion'd to his Rational faculties, as Rational.

It would be contrary to the Wiſdom of God, to move Man like a Stone, to invert the order and priviledge of that Nature which he ſettled in Creation; for then God would in vain have given Man Underſtanding and Will: Becauſe without moving Men according to thoſe Faculties, they would remain unprofitable and unuſeful in Man. * God doth not reduce us to himſelf, as Logs, by a meer force; or as Slaves forced by a Gudgel, to go forth to that place, and do that work which they have no ſtomach to: But he doth accommodate himſelf to thoſe Foundations he hath laid in our Nature, and guides us in a way agreeable thereunto, by an Action as ſweet as powerful; clearing our Underſtandings of dark Principles whereby we may ſee his Truth, our own Miſery, and the Seat of our Happineſs; and bending our Wills according to this Light, to deſire and move conveniently to this End of our Calling: Efficaciouſly, yet agreeably; powerfully, yet without impoſing on our Natural Faculties; *ſweetly without Violence in ordering the Means, but effectually without Failing in accompliſhing the End. And therefore the Scripture calleth it, Teaching, John 6. 45. Alluring, Hoſ. 2. 14. Calling us to ſeek the Lord, Pſal. 27. 8. Teaching, is an act of Wiſdom: Alluring, an act of Love; Calling, an act of Authority: But none of them argue a violent conſtraint. The principles that moves the Will is Supernatural; but the Will, as a Natural Faculty, concurs in the act or motion.

* Daillé ſur Philip. Part. 1. p. 545, 546.

* Sanderſon, Part 2. p. 205.

God doth not act in this in a way of Abſolute Power, without an Infinite Wiſdom, dom, ſuting himſelf to the Nature of the things he acts upon: He doth not change the Phyſical Nature, though he doth the Moral. As in the Government of the World, he doth not make heavy things aſcend, nor light things deſcend, ordinarily; but guides their Motions according to their Natural qualities: So God doth not ſtrain the Faculties beyond their due pitch. He lets the nature of the Faculty remain; but changes the Principle in it: The Underſtanding remains Underſtanding, and the Will remains Will. But where there was before Folly in the Underſtanding, he put in a Spirit of Wiſdom; and where there was before a ſtoutneſs in the Will, he forms it to a pliableneſs to his offers. He hath a Key to fit every Ward in the Lock, and opens the Will without injuring the Nature of the Will.

He doth not change the Soul by an alteration of the Faculties, but by an alteration of ſomething in them: Not by an Inroad upon them, or by meer power, or a blind Inſtinct; but by propoſing to the Underſtanding ſomething to be known, and informing it of the Reaſonableneſs of his Precepts, and the Innate goodneſs and excellency of his Offers, and by inclining the Will to love and embrace what is propoſed. And things are propos'd under thoſe Notions, which uſually move our Wills and Affections. We are moved by things as they are good, pleaſant, profitable; we entertain things as they make for us, and deteſt things as they are contrary to us. Nothing effects us but under ſuch qualities; and God ſutes his Encouragements to theſe Natural Affections which are is us: His Power and Wiſdom go hand in hand together; his Power to act what his Wiſdom orders, and his Wiſdom to conduct what his Power executes. He brings Men to him in ways ſuted to their Natural diſpoſitions. The ſtubborn he tears like a Lion, the gentle he wins like a Turtle, by ſweetneſs; he hath a Hammer to break the ſtout, and a Cord of Love to draw the more pliable Tempers: He works upon the more Rational in a way of Goſpel Reaſon; upon the more Ingenuous in a way of kindneſs, and draws them by the Cords of Love.

The Wiſe-men were led to Chriſt by a Star, and Means ſuted to the knowledg and ſtudy that thoſe Eaſtern Nations uſed, which was much in Aſtronomy: He worketh upon others by Miracles accommodated to every ones ſenſe, and ſo proportions the Means according to the Nature of the Subjects he works upon.

4. The Wiſdom of God is apparent in his Diſcipline, and Penal Evils. The Wiſdom of Human Governments it ſeen in the matter of their Laws, and in the Penalties of their Laws, and in the proportion of the Puniſhment to the Offence, and in the good that redounds from the Puniſhment either to the Offender, or to the Community.

The Wiſdom of God is ſeen in the Penalty of Death upon the Tranſgreſſion of his Law; both in that it was the greateſt Evil that Man might fear, and ſo was a convenient means to keep him in his due bound, and alſo in the proportion of it to the Tranſgreſſion. Nothing leſs could be in a Wiſe Juſtice inflicted upon an Offender for a Crime againſt the higheſt Being, and the Supream Excellency: But this hath been ſpoken of before, in the Wiſdom of his Laws. I ſhall only mention ſome few, it would be too tedious to run into all.

1. His Wiſdom appears in Judgments, in the ſuting them to the qualities of Perſons, and nature of Sins. He deviſeth evil, Jer. 18. 11. his Judgments are fruits of Counſel. He alſo is wiſe, and will bring Evil, Iſai. 31. 2. Evil ſutable to the Perſon offending, and Evil ſutable to the Offence committed: As the Huſbandman doth his Threſhing Inſtruments to the Grain: He hath a Rod for the Cummin, a tenderer Seed, and a Flayl for the harder; ſo hath God greater Judgments for the obdurate Sinner, and lighter for thoſe that have ſomething of tenderneſs in their Wickedneſs, Iſai. 28. 27, 29. Becauſe he is wonderful in Counſel, and excellent in working; ſo Some underſtand the place, With the froward, he will ſhew himſelf froward.

He proportions puniſhment to the Sin, and writes the cauſe of the Judgment in the Forehead of the Judgment it ſelf. Sodom burned in Luſt, and was conſumed by Fire from Heaven. The Jews ſold Chriſt for Thirty pence; and at the Taking of Jeruſalem, Thirty of them were ſold for a Penny. So Adonibezek cut

Cut off the Thumbs and great Toes of others, and he is ſerved in the ſame kind, Judg. 1. 7. The Bable Builders deſign'd an indiſſoluble union, and God brings upon them an unintelligible Confuſion. And in Exod. 9. 9. the Aſhes of the Furnace, where the Iſraelites burnt the Egyptian Bricks ſprinkled towards Heaven, brought Boyls upon the Egyptian Bodies, that they might feel in their own, what Pain they had cauſed in the Iſraelites fleſh; and find by the ſmart of the inflamed Scab, what they had made the Iſraelites endure. The Waters of the River Nilus are turned into Blood, wherein they had ſtifled the breath of the Iſraelites Infants: And at laſt the Prince, and the flower of their Nobility, are drowned in the Red Sea.

'Tis part of the Wiſdom of Juſtice to proportion puniſhment to the Crime, and the degrees of Wrath to the degrees of malice in the Sin. Afflictions alſo are wiſely proportion'd: God, as a wiſe Phyſician, conſiders the nature of the humor and ſtrength of the Patient, and ſutes his Medicines both to the one and the other, 1 Cor. 10. 13.

2. In the ſeaſons of Puniſhments and Afflictions. He ſtays till Sin be ripe, that his Juſtice may appear more equitable, and the Offender more inexcuſable; Dan. 9. 14. he watches upon the evil to bring it upon Men. To bring it in the juſt Seaſon and order, for his righteous and gracious purpoſe; his Righteous purpoſe on the Enemies, and his Gracious purpoſe on his people.

Jeruſalems Calamity came upon them, when the City was full of people at the Solemnity of the Paſſeover, that he might mow down his Enemies at once, and Time their Deſtruction to ſuch a moment wherein they had Timed the Crucifixion of his Son. He watched over the Clouds of his Judgements, and kept them from pouring down, till his people the Chriſtians were provided for, and had departed out of the City to the Chambers and retiring places God had provided for them. He made not Jeruſalem the Shambles for his Enemies, till he had made Pella and other places, the Ark of his Friends. As Pliny tells us, the providence of God holds the Seas in a calm for fifteen days, that the Halcyons, little Birds, that frequent the Shoar, may build their Neſts, and hatch up their Young. The Judgment upon Sodom was ſuſpended for ſome hours, till Lot was ſecured.

* God ſuffer'd not the Church to be Invaded by Violent Perſecutions, till ſhe was eſtabliſh'd in the Faith: He would not expoſe her to ſo great Combats, while ſhe was weak and feeble, but gave her time to fortifie her ſelf, to be render'd more capable of bearing up under them. He ſtifled all the motions of paſſion the Idolaters might have for their Superſtition, till Religion was in ſuch a condition, as rather to be increaſed and purified, than extinguiſh'd by Oppoſition. Paul was ſecur'd from Nero's Chains, and the Nets of his Enemies, till he had broke off the Chain of the Devil from many Cities of the Gentles, and catched them by the Net of the Goſpel out of the Sea of the World. * Daille ſur 1 Cor. 10. p. 390.

Thus the Wiſdom of God is ſeen in the Seaſons of Judgments and Afflictions.

3. It is apparent in the gracious iſſue of Afflictions and Penal Evils. It is a part of Wiſdom to bring Good out of the Evil of puniſhment, as well as to bring Good out of Sin. The Church never was ſo like to Heaven, as when it was moſt Perſecuted by Hell: The Storms often cleans'd it, and the Lance often made it more healthful. Jobs Integrity had not been ſo clear, nor his Patience ſo illuſtrious, had not the Devil been permitted to afflict him. God by his Wiſdom outwits Satan; when he by his Temptations intends to pollute us and buffet us, God orders it to purifie us; he often brings the cleareſt light out of the thickeſt darkneſs, makes Poyſons to become Medicines. * Death it ſelf, the greateſt puniſhment in this Life, and the entrance into Hell in its own Nature, he hath by his Wiſe contrivance, made to his People the Gate of Heaven, and the paſſage into Immortality. Penal Evils in a Nation often end in a publick Advantage: Troubles and Wars among a people are many times not deſtroying, but Medicinal, and cure them of that Degeneracy, Luxury, and Effeminateneſs, they contracted by a long peace. * Turretin, Serm. p. 53.

4. This Wiſdom is evident, In the various Ends which God brings about by Afflictions. The attaiment of various Ends by one and the ſame Means, is the fruit of the Agents Prudence. By the ſame Affliction, the wiſe God corrects ſometimes for ſome baſe Affection, excites ſome ſleepy Grace, drives out ſome lurking Corruption, refines the Soul, and ruines the luſt; diſcovers the greatneſs of a Crime, the Vanity of the Creature, and the Sufficiency in himſelf.

The Jews bind Paul, and by the Judge he is ſent to Rome; while his Mouth is ſtopt in Judea, 'tis open'd in one of the greateſt Cities of the World, and his Enemies unwittingly contribute to the increaſe of the knowledge of Chriſt by thoſe Chains, in that City * that triumphed over the Earth. And his Afflictive Bonds added Courage and reſolution to others, Phil. 1. 14. Many waxing confident by my Bonds; which could not in their own Nature produce ſuch an effect, but by the order and contrivance of Divine Wiſdom: In their own nature, they would rather make them diſguſt the Doctrine he ſuffered for, and cool their Zeal in the propagating of it, for fear of the ſame diſgrace and hardſhip they ſaw him ſuffer*. But the Wiſdom of God changed the nature of theſe Fetters, and conducted them to the glory of his Name, the encouragement of others, the increaſe of the Goſpel, and the comfort of the Apoſtle himſelf. Phil. 1. 12, 13, 18. The Sufferings of Paul at Rome confirm'd the Philippians, a People at a diſtance from thence, in the Doctrine they had already received at his hands.

* Acts 28. 31.

* Daille ſur Phlip. Parta. pag. 116, 117.

Thus God makes Sufferings ſometimes which appear like Judgments, to be like the Viper on Pauls hand, Acts 28. 6. A means to clear up Innocence, and procure favour to the Doctrine among thoſe Barbarians. How often hath he multiplied the Church by Death and Maſſacres, and increaſed it by thoſe means uſed to annihilate it?

5. The Divine Wiſdom is apparent in the Deliverances he affords to other parts of the World, as well as to his Church. There are delicate compoſures, curious threds in his Webs, and he works them like an Artificer. A goodneſs wrought for them, curiouſly wrought, Pſal. 31. 19.

1. In making the Creatures ſubſervient in their Natural order to his gracious Ends and Purpoſes. He orders things in ſuch a manner, as not to be neceſſitated to put forth an extraordinary Power in things, which ſome part of the Creation might accompliſh. Miraculous productions would ſpeak his power; but the ordering the Natural courſe of things, to occaſion ſuch effects they were never intended for, is one part of the glory of his Wiſdom. And that his Wiſdom may be ſeen in the courſe of Nature, he conducts the Notions of Creatures, and acts them in their own ſtrength; and doth that by various windings and turnings of them, which he might do in an inſtant by his Power, in a Supernatural way. Indeed ſometimes he hath made Invaſions on Nature, and ſuſpended the Order of their Natural Law for a ſeaſon, to ſhew himſelf the Abſolute Lord and Governour of Nature: Yet if frequent Alterations of this nature were made, they would impede the knowledg of the nature of things, and be ſome bar to the diſcovery and glory of his VViſdom; which is beſt ſeen by moving the wheels of inferior Creatures, in an exact regularity to his own Ends. He might, when his little Church in Jacobs Family was like to ſtarve in Canaan, have for their preſervation turn'd the Stones of the Country into Bread; but he ſends them down to Egypt to procure Corn, that a way may be opened for their removal into that Country; the Truth of his Prediction in their Captivity accompliſh'd, and a way made after the declaration of his great Name Jehovah, both in the fidelity of his VVord, and the greatneſs of his power, in their deliverance from that Furnace of Affliction. He might have ſtruck Goliah, the Captain of the Philiſtines Army, with a Thunderbolt from Heaven, when he Blaſphemed his Name and ſcar'd his people; but he uſeth the Natural ſtrength of a Stone, and the Artificial motion of a Sling, by the Arm of David, to confront the Giant, and thereby to free Judea from the ravage of a potent Enemy. He might have delivered the Jews from Babylon by as ſtrange Miracles, as he uſed in their Deliverance from Egypt: He might have plagu'd their Enemies, gather'd his people into a Body, and protected them by the bulwark of a Cloud and a Pillar of Fire, againſt the Aſſaults of their Enemies. But he uſes the differences between the Perſians and thoſe of Babylon, to accompliſh his Ends. How ſometimes hath the veering about of the wind on a ſudden been the loſs of a Navy, when it hath been upon the point of Victory, and driven back back the Deſtruction upon thoſe which intended it for others? And the accidental ſtumbling, or the Natural fierceneſs of a Horſe, flung down a General in the midſt of a Battle, where he hath loſt his life by the throng, and his death hath brought a defeat to his Army, and deliverance to the other party, that were upon the brink of ruine? Thus doth the Wiſdom of God link things together according to Natural order, to work out his intended preſervation of a People.

2. In the ſeaſon of deliverance. The Timing of Affairs is a part of the Wiſdom of Man, and an eminent part of the Wiſdom of God. It is in due ſeaſon he ſends the former and the latter Rain, when the Earth is in the greateſt Indigence, and when his Influences may moſt contribute to the bringing forth and ripening the Fruit. The dumb Creatures have their meat from him in due ſeaſon :* And in his due ſeaſon have his darling People their Deliverance. When Paul was upon his Journey to Damaſcus with a Perſecuting Commiſſion, he is ſtruck down for the ſecurity of the Church in that City. The Nature of the Lion is changed in due ſeaſon for the preſervation of the Lambs from worrying. The Iſraelites are miraculouſly reſcued from Egypt, when their Wits were at a loſs, when their danger to Human underſtanding was unavoidable; when Earth and Sea refus'd protection, then the Wiſdom and Power of Heaven ſtept in to effect that, which was paſt the skill of the Conductors of that multitude. And when the Lives of the Jews lay at the ſtake, and their Necks were upon the Block at the mercy of their Enemies Swords by an Order from Shuſhan; not only a reprieve, but a Triumph arrives to the Jews, by the Wiſdom of God guiding the Affair, whereby of Perſons deſign'd to execution, they are made Conquerors, and have opportunity to exerciſe their Revenge inſtead of their Patience, proving Triumphers where they expected to be ſufferers*. How ſtrangely doth God by ſecret ways bow the hearts of Men, and the nature of things to the execution of that which he deſigns, notwithſtanding all the reſiſtance of that which would traverſe the ſecurity of his People? How often doth he trap the wicked in the work of their own hands, make their confidence to become their ruine, and enſnare them in thoſe Nets they wrought and laid for others? Pſal. 9. 16. The wicked is ſnared in the works of his own hands. He ſcatters the proud in the imagination of their hearts, Luke. 1. 51. in the height of their hopes, when their deſigns have been laid ſo deep in the foundation, and knit, and cemented ſo cloſe in their ſuperſtructure, that no Human Power or Wiſdom could raze them down: He hath then diſappointed their projects, and befool'd their Craft. How often hath he kept back the Fire, when it hath been ready to devour; broke the Arrows when they have been prepared in the Bow; turned the Spear into the bowels of the Bearers, and wounded them at the very inſtant they were ready to wound others.

* Pſal. 104. 27

* Eſth. 8, & 9.

3. In ſuting Inſtruments to his purpoſe. He either finds them fit, or makes them on a ſuddain fit for his gracious ends. If he hath a Tabernacle to build, he will fit a Bezaleel and Aholiab, with the Spirit of Wiſdom and Underſtanding in all cunning workmanſhip, Exod. 31. 3, 6. If he finds them crooked pieces, he can, like a wiſe Architect, make them ſtrait Beams for the rearing his Houſe, and for the honour of his Name.

He ſometimes picks out men, according to their natural Tempers, and employs them in his work: Jehu, a man of a furious Temper, and ambitious Spirit, is called out for the deſtruction of Ahab's Houſe. Moſes, a man furniſht with all Egyptian wiſdom, fitted by a generous Education, prepared alſo by the Affliction he met with in his flight, and one who had had the benefit of converſation with Jethro, a man of more than an ordinary wiſdom and goodneſs, as appears by his prudent and religious Counſel; this man is called out to be the Head and Captain of an oppreſt people, and to reſcue them from their Bondage, and ſettle the firſt National Church in the world. So Elijah, a high ſpirited man, of a hot and angry temper, one that ſlighted the Frowns, and undervalued the Favour of Princes, is ſet up to ſtem the Torrent of the Iſraelitiſh Idolatry. So Luther, a man of the ſame temper, is drawn out by the ſame VViſdom to encounter the Corruptions in the Church, againſt ſuch Oppoſition, which a milder Temper would have ſunk under. The Earth in Rev. 12. 16. Is made an Inſtrument to help the woman: When the Grandees of that Age transferred the Imperial power upon Conſtantine; who became afterwards a protecting and nurſing Father to the Church, an end which many of his Favourers never deſign'd, nor ever dreamt of: But God by his infinite Wiſdom made theſe ſeveral Deſigns like ſeveral Arrows ſhot at Rovers, meet in one Mark to which he directed them, viz. in bringing forth an Inſtrument to render Peace to the World, and Security and Increaſe to his Church.

III. The Wiſdom of God doth wonderfully appear in Redemption. His Wiſdom in Creation raviſheth the Eye and Underſtanding; his Wiſdom in Government, doth no leſs affect a curious Obſerver of the Links and Concatenation of the means; but his wiſdom in Redemption mounts the Mind to a greater aſtoniſhment. The works of Creation are the Footſteps of his Wiſdom; the work of Redemption is the Face of his Wiſdom: A man is better known by the Features of his Face, than by the Prints of his Feet. We with open face, or a revealed face, beholding the glory of the Lord, 2 Cor. 3. 18. Face there, refers to God, not to us; the glory of God's wiſdom is now open, and no longer covered and vailed by the ſhadows of the Law. As we behold the Light glorious, as ſcattered in the Air before the appearance of the Sun, but more glorioufly in the Face of the Sun, when it begins its Race in our Horizon. All the Wiſdom of God in Creation and Government in his variety of Laws, was like the light, the three firſt days of the Creation, diſperſt about the World, but the fourth day it was more glorious, when all gathered into the Body of the Sun, Gen. 1. 4, 16. So the Light of Divine wiſdom and glory, was ſcattered about the VVorld, and ſo more obſcure, till the fourth Divine day of the VVorld about the four thouſandth year, it was gathered into one Body, the Sun of Righteouſneſs, and ſo ſhone out more glorioufly to Men and Angels. All things are weaker, the thinner they are extended, but ſtronger, the more they are united and compacted in one Body and Appearance. In Chriſt, in the diſpenſation by him, as well as in his Perſon, were hid all the treaſures of Wiſdom and knowledg, Coloſſ. 2. 3. Some Doles of VViſdom were given out in Creation, but the Treaſures of it opened in Redemption; the higheſt degrees of it that ever God did exert in the VVorld. Chriſt is therefore called the wiſdom of God, as well as the power of God, 1 Cor. 1. 24. aud the Goſpel is called the wiſdom of God. Chriſt is the wiſdom of God principally, and the Goſpel inſtrumentally, as it is the power of God inſtrumentally to ſubdue the heart to himſelf. This is wrapped up in the appointing Chriſt as Redeemer, and open'd to us in the revelation of it by the Goſpel.

1. It is a hidden wiſdom. In this regard God is ſaid in the Text, to be only wiſe; and it is ſaid to be a hidden wiſdom, 1 Tim. 1. 17. and wiſdom in a myſtery, 1 Cor. 2. 7. incomprehenſible to the ordinary Capacity of an Angel, more than the abſtruſe qualities of the Creatures are to the underſtanding of man. No wiſdom of Men or Angels is able to ſearch all the Veins of this Mine, to tell all the threds of this VVeb, or to underſtand the luſtre of it; they are as far from an ability fully to comprehend it, as they were at firſt to contrive it. That wiſdom that invented it, can only comprehend it. In the uncreated Underſtanding only there is a clearneſs of light without any ſhadow of darkneſs. VVe come as ſhort of full apprehenſions of it, as a Child doth of the Counſel of the wiſeſt Prince. It is ſo hidden from us, that without Revelation, we could not have the leaſt imagination of it, and though it be revealed to us, yet without the help of an Infiniteneſs of Underſtanding, we cannot fully fathom it, 'Tis ſuch a tractate of Divine wiſdom, that the Angels never before had ſeen the Edition of it, till it was publiſh'd to the VVorld, Eph. 3. 10. To the intent that now unto Principalities and Powers in heavenly places might be known by the Church, the manifold Wiſdom of God. Now made known to them, not before; and now made known to them in the heavenly places. They had not the knowledg of all heavenly Myſteries, though they had the poſſeſſion of heavenly Glory: They knew the Prophecies of it in the VVord, but attained not a clear Interpretation of thoſe Prophecies, till the things that were prophecied of came upon the Stage.

2. Manifold wiſdom: So 'tis called. As manifold as myſterious. Variety in the Myſtery, and Myſtery in every part of the Variety. It was not one ſingle act, but a variety of Counſels met in it; a conjunction of excellent ends and excellent means means. The glory of God, the ſalvation of Man, the defeat of the Apoſtate Angels, the diſcovery of the bleſſed Trinity in their Nature, Operations, their combin'd and diſtinct Acts and Expreſſions of Goodneſs: The means are the conjunction of two Natures infinitely diſtant from one another; the union of Eternity and Time, of Mortality and Immortality: Death is made the way to Life, and Shame the path to Glory. The weakneſs of the Croſs is the reparation of man; and the Creature is made wiſe by the fooliſhneſs of preaching; fallen man grows rich by the poverty of the Redeemer, and man is filled by the emptineſs of God: The Heir of Hell made a Son of God, by God's taking upon him the form of a Servant; the Son of Man advanc'd to the higheſt degree of Honour, by the Son of God becoming of no reputation.

'Tis called Eph. 1. 8. abundance of Wiſdom and Prudence. Wiſdom in the Eternal Counſel, contriving a way; Prudence in the Temporary Revelation, ordering all Affairs and Occurrences in the World for the attaining the end of his Counſel. Wiſdom refers to the Myſtery; Prudence to the manifeſtation of it in fit ways and convenient ſeaſons. Wiſdom, to the contrivance and order; Prudence, to the execution and accompliſhment. In all things God acted as became him, as a wiſe and juſt Governour of the World, Heb. 2. 10. Whether the wiſdom of God might not have found out ſome other way, or whether he were, in regard of the neceſſity and naturalneſs of his Juſtice, limited to this, is not the queſtion: But that it is the beſt and wiſeſt way for the manifeſtation of his glory, is out of queſtion.

This wiſdom will appear in the different Intereſts reconciled by it. In the Subject, the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity, wherein they were reconciled: In the two Natures, wherein he accompliſh'd it; whereby God is made known to man in his Glory, Sin eternally condemned, and the repenting and believing ſinner eternally reſcued. The honour and righteouſneſs of the Law vindicated both in the Precept and penalty. The Devil's Empire overthrown by the ſame Nature he had overturned, and the Subtilty of Hell defeated by that Nature he had ſpoiled: The Creature engaged in the very act to the higheſt Obedience and Humility, that as God appears as a God upon his Throne, the Creature might appear in the loweſt poſture of a Creature, in the depths of reſignation and dependance; the publication of this made in the Goſpel, by ways congruous to the wiſdom which appeared in the execution of his Counſel, and the Conditions of enjoying the fruit of it, moſt wiſe and reaſonable.

1. The greateſt different Intereſts are reconcil'd, Juſtice in puniſhing, and Mercy in pardoning. For man had broken the Law, and plung'd himſelf into a Gulf of miſery: The Sword of Vengeance was unſheathed by Juſtice, for the puniſhment of the Criminal: The Bowels of Compaſſion were ſtirred by mercy, for the reſcue of the miſerable. Juſtice ſeverely beholds the Sin, and mercy compaſſionately reflects upon the miſery. Two different claims are entred by thoſe concerned Attributes: Juſtice votes for deſtruction, and Mercy votes for ſalvation. Juſtice would draw the Sword, and drench it in the blood of the Offender; Mercy would draw the Sword, and turn it from the breaſt of the Sinner. Juſtice would edge it, and mercy would blunt it. The Arguments are ſtrong on both ſides.

1. Juſtice pleads. I arraign, before the Tribunal, a Rebel, who was the glorious Work of thy hands, the Center of thy rich Goodneſs, and a Counterpart of they own Image; he is indeed miſerable, whereby to excite thy Compaſſion; but he is not miſerable, without being Criminal. Thou didſt create him in a ſtate, and with ability to be otherwiſe: The riches of thy Bounty aggravate the blackneſs of his Crime. He is a Rebel, not by neceſſity, but will. What conſtraint was there upon him to liſten to the Counſels of the Enemy of God? What force could there be upon him, ſince it is without the compaſs of any Creature to work upon, or conſtrain the Will? Nothing of ignorance can excuſe him; the Law was not ambiguouſly expreſſ'd, but in plain words, both as to Precept and Penalty it was writ in his nature in legible Characters: Had he received any diſguſt from thee after his Creation, it would not excuſe his Apoſtacy, ſince, as a Soveraign, thou wert not obliged to thy Creature. Thou hadſt provided all things richly for him; he was crowned with glory and honour: Thy infinite power had beſtowed upon him an Habitation richly furniſhed, and varieties of Servants to attend him. Whatever he viewed without, and whatever he viewed within himſelf, were ſeveral Marks of thy Divine Bounty, to engage him to Obedience: Had there been ſome reaſon of any diſguſt, it could not have ballanced that kindneſs which had ſo much reaſon to oblige him: However, he had received no courteſie from the fallen Angel to oblige him to turn into his Camp. Was it not enough, that one of thy Creatures would have ſtript thee of the glory of Heaven, but this alſo muſt deprive thee of thy glory upon Earth, which was due from him to thee as his Creator? Can he charge the difficulty of the Command? No: It was rather below, than above his ſtrength. He might rather complain that it was no higher, whereby his obedience and Gratitude might have a larger ſcope, and a more ſpacious Field to move in, than a Precept ſo light, ſo eaſie, as to abſtain from one Fruit in the Garden. What excuſe can he have, that would prefer the liquoriſhneſs of his Senſe before the dictates of his reaſon, and the Obligations of his Creation? The Law thou didſt ſet him, was righteous and reaſonable, and ſhall Righteouſneſs and Reaſon be rejected by the Supream and Infallible Reaſon, becauſe the rebellious Creature hath trampled upon it? What? Muſt God abrogate his holy Law, becauſe the Creature hath ſlighted it? What Reflection will this be upon the Wiſdom that enacted it; And upon the Equity of the Command and Sanction of it? Either Man muſt ſuffer, or the Holy Law be expunged, and for ever out of date. And is it not better, Man ſhould Eternally ſmart under his Crime, than any diſhonourable Reflections of Unrighteouſneſs be caſt upon the Law, and of folly, and want of foreſight upon the Lawgiver? Not to puniſh, would be to approve the Devils Lye, and juſtifie the Creatures Revolt. It would be a Condemnation of thy own Law as unrighteous, and a Sentencing thy own Wiſdom as imprudent. Better Man ſhould for ever bear the Puniſhment of his Offence, than God bear the diſhonour of his Attributes: Better Man ſhould be miſerable, than God ſhould be unrighteous, unwiſe, falſe, and tamely bear the denial of his Soveraignty. But what advantage would it be to gratifie Mercy by Pardoning the Malefactor? Beſides the irreparable diſhonour to the Law, the falſifying thy veracity in not executing the denounced threatning, he would receive incouragement by ſuch a grace to ſpurn more at thy Soveraignty, and oppoſe thy Holineſs by running on in a courſe of ſin with hopes of Impunity: If the Creature be reſtored, it cannot be expected, that he that hath fared ſo well, after the breach of it, ſhould be very careful of a future obſervance: His eaſie readmiſſion would abet him in the repetition of his Offence, and thou ſhalt ſoon find him caſt off all Moral dependance on thee. Shall he be reſtored without any Condition, or Covenant; He is a Creature not to be governed without a Law, and a Law is not to be enacted without a Penalty. What future regard will he have to thy Precept, or what fear will he have of thy Threatning, if his Crime be ſo lightly paſt over? Is it the ſtability of thy Word? What reaſon will he have to give credit to that, which he hath found already diſregarded by thy ſelf? They Truth in future Threatnings will be of no force with him, who hath experienced thy laying it aſide in the former. 'Tis neceſſary therefore that the rebellious creature ſhould be puniſhed for the preſervation of the honour of the Law and the honour of the Lawgiver, with all thoſe perfections that are united in the compoſure of it.

for

2. Secondly, Mercy doth not want a Plea. 'Tis true indeed, the ſin of man wants not its aggravations: He hath ſlighted thy Goodneſs, and accepted thy Enemy as his Counſellor; but it was not a pure act of his own, as the Devils revolt was: He had a Tempter, and the Devil had none: He had, I acknowledge, an Underſtanding to know thy Will, and a Power to obey it; yet he was mutable and had a capacity to fall. It was no difficult task that was ſet him, nor a hard yoke that was laid upon; yet he had a brutiſh part, as well as a rational, and ſenſe as well as Soul; whereas the fallen Angel was a pure intellectual Spirit. Did God create the World to ſuffer an eternal diſhonour, in leting himſelf be outwitted by Satar, and his work wreſted out of his hands? Shall the work of eternal nal Counſel preſently ſink into irreparable deſtruction, and the honour of an Almighty and wiſe Work be loſt in the ruine of the Creature? This would ſeem contrary to the nature of thy Goodneſs, to make Man only to render him miſerable: To deſign him in his Creation for the Service of the Devil, and not for the Service of his Creator. What elſe could be the iſſue, if the chief work of thy Hand, defaced preſently after the erecting, ſhould for ever remain in this marred condition; What can be expected upon the continuance of his miſery, but a perpetual hatred, and enmity of thy Creature againſt thee? Did God in Creation deſign his being hated, or his being loved by his Creature? Shall God make a holy Law, and have no obedience to that Law from that Creature whom it was made to govern? Shall the curious workmanſhip of God, and the excellent Engravings of the Law of Nature in his heart, be ſo ſoon defaced, and remain in that blotted condition for ever? This fall thou couldſt not but in the treaſures of thy Infinite Knowledg foreſee; Why hadſt thou Goodneſs then to Create him in an Integrity, if thou wouldſt not have Mercy to pity him in Miſery? Shall thy Enemy for ever trample upon the honour of thy Work, and triumph over the Glory of God, and applaud himſelf in the ſucceſs of his ſubtility? Shall thy Creature only paſſively glorifie thee as an Avenger, and not actively as a Compaſſionater? Am not I a perfection of thy Nature as well as Juſtice? Shall Juſtice ingroſs all, and I never come into view? 'Tis reſolved already, that the fallen Angels ſhall be no Subjects for me to exerciſe my ſelf upon; and I have now leſs reaſon than before to plead for them: They fell with a full conſent of will, without any motion from another; and not content with their own Apoſtacy they envy thee, and thy glory upon Earth, as well as in Heaven, and have drawn into their party the beſt part of the Creation below: Shall Satan plunge the whole Creation in the ſame irreparable ruine with himſelf; If the Creature be reſtored, will he contract a boldneſs in ſin by impurity? Haſt thou not a Grace to render him ingenuous in Obedience, as well as a Compaſſion to recover him from Miſery? What will hinder, but that ſuch a Grace, which hath eſtabliſhed the ſtanding Angels, may eſtabliſh this recovered Creature? If I am utterly excluded from exerciſing my ſelf on men, as I have been from Devils, a whole Species is loſt; nay, I can never expect to appear upon the Stage: If thou wilt quite ruine him by Juſtice, and create another World, and another man, if he ſtand, they Bounty will be eminent, yet there is no room for mercy to act unleſs by the Commiſſion of ſin, he expoſeth himſelf to Miſery; and if ſin enter into another World, I have little hopes to be heard then, if I am rejected now. VVorlds will be perpetually created by Goodneſs, Wiſdom, and Power: Sin entring into theſe Worlds, will be perpetually puniſhed by Juſtice; and Mercy, which is a perfection of thy Nature, will for ever be commanded ſilence, and lie wrapt up in an eternal Darkneſs. Take occaſion now therefore to expoſe me to the knowledg of thy Creature, ſince without miſery, mercy can never ſet foot into the VVorld.

Mercy pleads, if man be ruined, the Creation is in vain; Juſtice pleads, if man be not ſentenced, the Law is in vain; Truth backs Juſtice, and Grace abets Mercy. VVhat ſhall be done in this ſeeming Contradiction? Mercy is not manifeſted, if man be not pardoned; Juſtice will complain, if man be not puniſhed.

3. An expedient is found out by the Wiſdom of God to anſwer theſe Demands, and adjuſt the Differences between them. The wiſdom of God anſwers, I will ſatisfie your Pleas. The Pleas of Juſtice ſhall be ſatisfied in puniſhing, and the pleas of Mercy ſhall be received in pardoning. Juſtice ſhall not complain for want of puniſhment, nor mercy for want of Compaſſion. I will have an infinite Sacrifice to content Juſtice; and the Vertue and Fruit of that Sacrifice ſhall delight mercy. Here ſhall Juſtice have puniſhment to accept, and Mercy ſhall have pardon to beſtow. The Rights of both are preſerved, and the Demands of both amicably accorded in puniſhment and pardon, by transferring the puniſhment of our Crimes upon a ſurety, exacting a Recompence from his Blood by Juſtice, and conferring life and ſalvation upon us by Mercy without the expence pence of one drop of our own. This is Juſtice ſatisfied in its Severities, and Mercy in its Indulgences. The riches of Grace are twiſted with the terrors of Wrath. The bowels of Mercy are wound about the flaming Sword of Juſtice, and the Sword of Juſtice protects and ſecures the bowels of Mercy. Thus is God righteous without being cruel, and merciful without being unjuſt; his Righteouſneſs inviolable, and the World recoverable. Thus is a reſplendent Mercy brought forth in the midſt of all the Curſes, Confuſions, and VVrath threatned to the Offender.

Thus is the admirable temperament found out by the VViſdom of God, His Juſtice is honoured in the Sufferings of Man's Surety; and his Mercy is honoured in the application of the propitiation to the Offender. Rom. 3. 24, 25. Being juſtified freely by his Grace, through the Redemption that is in Jeſus Chriſt: Whom God hath ſet forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſneſs for the remiſſion of ſins that are paſt, through the forbearance of God. Had we in our perſons been Sacrifices to Juſtice, Mercy had for ever been unknown; had we been ſolely foſtered by Mercy, Juſtice had for ever been ſecluded; had we, being guilty, been abſolved, Mercy might have rejoyced, and Juſtice might have complained; had we been ſolely puniſhed, Juſtice would have triumphed, and mercy grieved. But by this medium of Redemption, neither hath ground of Complaint: Juſtice hath nothing to charge, when the puniſhment is inflicted; Mercy hath whereof to boaſt when the Surety is accepted. The Debt of the Sinner is transferred upon the Surety, that the Merit of the Surety may be conferred upon the Sinner; ſo that God now deals with our ſins in a way of conſuming Juſtice, and with our Perſons in a way of relieving Mercy, 'Tis highly better, and more glorious, than if the Claim of one had been granted, with the excluſion of the demand of the other: It had then been either an unrighteous Mercy, or a mercileſs Juſtice: 'Tis now a righteous Mercy, and a merciful Juſtice.

2. The Wiſdom of God appears in the Subject or Perſon wherein theſe were accorded; The ſecond Perſon in the bleſſed Trinity. There was a congruity in the Sons undertaking and effecting it rather than any other Perſon, according to the order of the Perſons, and the ſeveral functions of the perſons, as repreſented in Scripture. The Father, after Creation, is the Law-giver, and preſents man with the Image of his own Holineſs and the way to his Creatures happineſs: But after the Fall, man was too impotent to perform the Law, and too polluted to enjoy a Felicity. Redemption was then neceſſary; not that it was neceſſary for God to redeem man, but it was neceſſary for man's happineſs, that he ſhould be recovered. To this the ſecond Perſon is appointed, that by Communion with him, man might derive a happineſs, and be brought again to God. But ſince man was blind in his Underſtanding, and an Enemy in his will to God, there muſt be the exerting of a Vertue to enlighten his mind, and bend his Will to underſtand, and accept of this Redemption: And this work is aſſigned to the third perſon, the Holy Ghoſt.

1. It was not congruous that the Father ſhould aſſume Human Nature, and ſuffer in it for the Redemption of man. He was firſt in order, he was the Lawgiver, and therefore to be the Judge. As Lawgiver, it was not convenient he ſhould ſtand in the ſtead of the Law-breaker; and as a Judge, it was as little convenient he ſhould be reputed a Malefactor: That he who had made a Law againſt ſin, denounced a Penalty upon the commiſſion of ſin, and whoſe part it was actually to puniſh the ſinner, ſhould become ſin for the wilful Tranſgreſſor of his law, He being the Rector, how could he be an Advocate and Interceſſor to himſelf? How could he be the Judge and the Sacrifice? A Judge, and yet a Mediator to himſelf? If he had been the Sacrifice, there muſt be ſome Perſon to examine the validity of it, and pronounce the Sentence of acceptance. Was it agreeable that the Son ſhould ſit upon a Throne of Judgment, and the Father ſtand at the Bar, and be reſponſible to the Son? That the Son ſhould be in the place of a Governour, and the Father in the place of the Criminal? That the Father ſhould be bruiſed *by the Son, as the Son was by the Father; * that the Son ſhould awaken a Sword againſt the Father, as the Father did againſt the Son; that the Father ſhould be ſent by the Son as the Son was by the Father *: The order of the perſons in the bleſſed Trinity

* Iſa. 53. 10.
* Zach. 13. 70.
* Gal. 4. 4.

Trinity had been inverted and diſturbed. Had the Father been ſent, he had not been firſt in order; the Sender is before the Perſon ſent: As the Father begets, and the Son is begotten, Joh. 1. 14. ſo the Father ſends, and the Son is ſent. He whoſe order is to ſend, cannot properly ſend himſelf.

2. Nor was it congruous that the Spirit ſhould be ſent upon this Affair. If the Holy Ghoſt had been ſent to redeem us, and the Son to apply that Redemption to us, the order of the Perſons had alſo been inverted: The Spirit then, who was third in order, had been ſecond in Operation. The Son would then have received of the Spirit, as the Spirit doth now of Chriſt, and ſhew it unto us, Joh. 1. 15. As the Spirit proceeded from the Father and the Son, ſo the proper Function and Operation of it, was in order after the Operations of the Father and the Son: Had the Spirit been ſent to redeem us, and the Son ſent by the Father and the Spirit to apply that Redemption to us; the Son in his acts had proceeded from the Father and the Spirit; the Spirit, as Sender, had been in order before the Son; whereas the Spirit is called the Spirit of Chriſt, as ſent by Chriſt from the Father, Gal. 4. 6. Joh. 15. 27. But as the order of the Works, ſo the order of the Perſons is preſerved in their ſeveral Operations. Creation, and a Law to govern the Creature, precedes Redemption. Nothing, or that which hath no being, is not capable of a redeemed being. Redemption ſuppoſeth the exiſtence and the miſery of a Perſon redeemed. As Creation precedes Redemption, ſo Redemption precedes the application of it. As Redemption ſuppoſeth the being of the Creature, ſo application of Redemption ſuppoſeth the efficacy of Redemption. According to the order of theſe Works is the order of the Operations of the three Perſons. Creation belongs to the Father, the firſt Perſon. Redemption, the ſecond work, is the Function of the Son, the ſecond Perſon. Application, the third work, is the Office of the Holy Ghoſt, the third Perſon. The Father orders it, the Son acts it, the Holy Ghoſt applies it. He purifies our Souls to underſtand, believe, and love theſe Myſteries. He forms Chriſt in the womb of the Soul, as he did the Body of Chriſt in the womb of the Virgin. As the Spirit of God moved upon the waters, to garniſh and adorn the World, after the matter of it was formed, Gen. 1. 2. ſo he moves upon the heart, to ſupple it to a complyance with Chriſt, and draws the Lineaments of the new Creation in the Soul, after the Foundation is laid.

* Amyraut. Moral. Tom. 5. p. 478, 479, 480.

The Son pays the price that was due from us to God, and the Spirit is the earneſt of the Promiſes of Life and Glory purchaſed by the Merit of that Death.* 'Tis to be obſerved, that the Father, under the diſpenſation of the Law, propoſed the Commands, with the Promiſes and Threatnings, to the Underſtandings of Men; and Chriſt, under the diſpenſation of Grace, when he was upon the Earth, propoſeth the Goſpel as the Means of Salvation, exhorts to Faith as the Condition of ſalvation; but it was neither the Function of the one, or the other, to diſplay ſuch an efficacy in the Underſtanding, and Will to make men believe and obey, and therefore there were ſuch few Converſions in the time of Chriſt, by his Miracles: But this work was reſerved, for the fuller and brighter appearance of the Spirit, whoſe Office it was to convince the World of the neceſſity of a Redeemer, becauſe of their loſt condition; of the Perſon of the Redeemer, the Son of God; of the ſufficiency and efficacy of Redemption, becauſe of his righteouſneſs and acceptation by the Father. The Wiſdom of God is ſeen in preparing and preſenting the Objects, and then in making impreſſion of them upon the Subjects he intends. And thus is the order of the three Perſons preſerved.

2. The ſecond Perſon had the greateſt congruity to this work. He by whom God created the World, was moſt conveniently imployed in reſtoring the defaced World: Who more fit to recover it from its lapſed ſtate, than he that had erected it in its primitive ſtate? Hebr. 1. 2. He was the light of men in Creation, and therefore it was moſt reaſonnable he ſhould be the light of men in Redemption. Who fitter to reform the Divine Image, than he that firſt formed it? Who fitter to ſpeak for us to God, than he who was the Word? Joh. 1. 1. Who could better intercede with the Father, than he who was the only begotten and beloved Son? Who ſo fit to redeem the forfeited Inheritance as the Heir of all things? Who fitter and better to prevail for us to have the right of Children, than he that poſſeſſed it by Nature? We fell from being the Sons of God, and who fitter to introduce us into an adopted ſtate: than the Son of God? Herein was an expreſſion of the richer Grace, becauſe the firſt ſin was immediately againſt the wiſdom of God, by an ambitious affectation of a Wiſdom equal to God: That that Perſon, who was the wiſdom of God, ſhould be made a Sacrifice for the expiation of the ſin againſt wiſdom.

John. 1. 4.

3. The wiſdom of God is ſeen in the two Natures of Chriſt, whereby this Redemption was accompliſhed. The Union of the two Natures was the Foundation of the Union of God, and the fallen Creature.

1. The Union it ſelf is admirable: The Word is made Fleſh, Joh. 1. 14. One equal with God in the form of a Servant, Phil. 2. 7. When the Apoſtle ſpeaks of God manifeſted in the fleſh, he ſpeaks the Wiſdom of God in a Myſtery, 1 Tim. 3. 16. That which is incomprehenſible to the Angels, which they never imagined before it was revealed, which perhaps they never knew till they beheld it. I am ſure, under the Law the Figures of the Cherubims were placed in the Sanctuary with their faces looking towards the Propitiatory, in a perpetual poſture of Contemplation and Admiration, Exod. 37. 9. to which the Apoſtle alludes, 1 Pet. 1. 12.

Myſterious is the wiſdom of God to unite Finite and infinite, Almightineſs and Weakneſs, Immortality and Mortality, Immutability with a Thing ſubject to Change; to have a Nature from Eternity, and yet a Nature ſubject to the Revolutions of Time; a Nature to make a Law, and a Nature to be ſubjected to the Law; to be God bleſſed for ever, in the boſom of his Father, and an Infant expoſed to Calamities from the Womb of his Mother: Terms ſeeming moſt diſtant from union, moſt uncapable of conjunction, to ſhake hands together, to be moſt intimately conjoyned; Glory and Vileneſs, Fulneſs and Emptineſs, Heaven and Earth; the Creature with the Creator; he that made all things, in one Perſon with a Nature that is made; Immanuel, God and Man in one: That which is moſt Spiritual to partake of that which is Carnal fleſh and blood: * One with the Father in his Godhead, one with us in his Manhood: The Godhead to be in him in the fulleſt Perfection, and the Manhood in the greateſt Purity: The Creature one with the Creator, and the Creator one with the Creature. Thus is the incomprehenſible Wiſdom of God declared in the Word being made Fleſh.

* Heb. 2. 14.

2. In the manner of this Union. A Union of two Natures, yet no Natural Union. It tranſcends all the Unions viſible among Creatures *: It is not like the Union of Stones in a Building, or of two pieces of timber faſtned together, which touch one another only in their Superficies and outſide, without any intimacy with one another. By ſuch a kind of Union, God would not be man: The World could not ſo be made Fleſh. Nor is it Union of Parts to the whole, as the Members and the Body; the Members are Parts, the Body is the whole; for the whole reſults from the Parts, and depends upon the Parts: But Chriſt being God, is independent upon any thing. The parts are in order of Nature before the whole, but nothing can be in order of Nature before God. Nor is it as the Union of two Liquors, as when Wine and Water are mixed together; for they are ſo Incorporated, as not to be diſtinguiſh'd from one another; no man can tell which Particle is Wine, and which is Water. But the Properties of the Divine Nature are diſtinguiſhable from the Properties of the Humane. Nor is it as the Union of the Soul and Body, ſo as that the Deity is the form of the Humanity, as the Soul is the form of the Body: For as the Soul is but a part of the Man, ſo the Divinity would be then but a part of the Humanity; and as a form, or the Soul is in a ſtate of Imperfection, without that which it is to inform; ſo the Divinity of Chriſt would have been Imperfect, till it had aſſumed the Humanity. And ſo the perfection of an Eternal Deity would have depended on a Creature of Time.

* Savana triump. crucis Lib. 3. cap. 7. p. 211.

This Union of two Natures in Chriſt is incomprehenſible: And it is a myſtery we cannot arrive to the top of, How the Divine Nature, which is the ſame with that of the Father and the Holy Ghoſt, ſhould be united to the human Nature; without its being ſaid, that the Father and the Holy Ghoſt were united to the Fleſh; but the Scripture doth not encourage any ſuch Notion; It ſpeaks only of the Word, the Perſon of the Word being made Fleſh. And in his being made Fleſh, diſtinguiſheth him from the Father, as the only begotten of the Father, John 1. 14. The Perſon of the Son was the term of this Union.

tures;

1. This Union doth not confound the Properties of the Deity, and thoſe of the Humanity. They remain diſtinct and entire in each other. The Deity is not changed into Fleſh, nor the Fleſh transform'd into God: They are diſtinct and yet united: They are conjoyned, and yet unmixt: The Dues of either Nature are preſerved. 'Tis impoſſible that the Majeſty of the Divinity can receive an alteration: 'Tis as impoſſible that the meanneſs of the Humanity can receive the Impreſſions of the Deity, ſo as to be changed into it; and a creature be metamorphos'd into the Creator, and Temporary Fleſh become Eternal, and Finite mount up into Infinity: As the Soul and Body are united, and make one Perſon; yet the Soul is not changed into the perfections of the Body, nor the Body into the perfections of the Soul. There is a change made in the Humanity by being advanced to a more Excellent Union, but not in the Deity; as a change is made in the Air, when it is enlightned by the Sun, not in the Sun, which communicates that brightneſs to the Air. Athanaſius makes the burning Buſh to be a type of Chriſts Incarnation, Exod. 3. 2. The Fire ſignifying the Divine Nature, and the Buſh the human. The Buſh is a branch ſpringing up from the Earth, and the Fire deſcends from Heaven; as the Buſh was united to the Fire, yet was not hurt by the flame, nor converted into Fire, there remained a difference between the Buſh and the Fire, yet the proporties of the Fire ſhined in the Buſh, ſo that the whole Buſh ſeemed to be on Fire. So in the Incarnation of Chriſt, the Human Nature is not ſwallowed up by the Divine, nor changed into it, nor confounded with it; But ſo united, that the properties of both remain firm, Two are ſo become one that they remain two ſtill: One perſon in Two Natures, containing the glorious perfections of the Divine, and the weakneſſes of the Humane. The fulneſs of the Deity dwells bodily in Chriſt, Col. 2. 9.

2. The Divine Nature is united to every part of the Humanity. The whole Divinity to the whole Humanity; ſo that no part but may be ſaid to be the Member of God, as well as the Blood is ſaid to be the Blood of God, Acts 20. 28. By the ſame reaſon it may be ſaid, the Hand of God, the Eye of God, the Arm of God. As God is infinitely preſent every where, ſo as to be excluded from no place; ſo is the Deity hypoſtatically every where in the Humanity not excluded from any part of it; As the light of the Sun in every part of the Air; as a ſparkling ſplendor in every part of the Diamond. Therefore it is concluded by all that acknowledg the Deity of Chriſt, that when his Soul was ſeparated from the Body, the Deity remained united both to Soul and Body, as light doth in every part of a broken Chryſtal.

3. Therefore perpetually united, Coloſſ. 2. 9. The fulneſs of the Godhead dwells in him bodily. It Dwells in him, not lodges in him as a Traveller in an Inn, It reſides in him as a fixed habitation. As God deſcribes the perpetuity of his preſence in the Ark by his habitation or dwelling in it, Exod. 29. 44. ſo doth the Apoſtle the inſeparable duration of the Deity in the Humanity, and the indiſſoluble Union of the Humanity with the Deity. It was united on Earth, it remains united in Heaven. It was not an Image or an Apparition, as the Tongues wherein the Spirit came upon the Apoſtles, were a Temporary Repreſentation, not a thing united perpetually to the perſon of the Holy Ghoſt.

4. It was a perſonal Union. It was not an union of perſons, though it was a perſonal union; So Davenant expounds, Col. 2. 9. Chriſt did not take the Perſon of Man, but the Nature of Man into ſubſiſtance with himſelf. The body and Soul of Chriſt were not united in themſelves, and no ſubſiſtence in themſelves, till they were united to the Perſon of the Son of God. If the Perſon of a Man were united to him, the Human Nature would have been the Nature of the Perſon ſo united to him, and not the Nature of the Son of God, Heb. 2. 14, 16. For aſmuch then as the Children are partakers of fleſh and blood, he alſo himſelf likewiſe took part of the ſame, that through death he might deſtroy him, that had the power of death, that is, the Devil. For verily he took not on him the nature of Angels: but he took on him the ſeed of Abraham. He took fleſh and blood to be his own Nature, perpetually to ſubſiſt in the Perſon of the Λόγος, which muſt be by a Perſonal Union, or no way: The Deity united to the Humanity, and both Natures to be one Perſon. This is the myſterious and manifold Wiſdom of God.

3. The end of this Union.

1. He was hereby fitted to be Mediator. He hath ſomething like to Man, and ſomething like to God. If he were in all things only like to Man, he would be at a diſtance from God: If he were in all things only like to God, he would be at a diſtance from Man. He is a true Mediator between Mortal Sinners, and the Immortal Righteous One. He was near to us by the Infirmities of our Nature, and near to God by the Perfections of the Divine; as near to God in his Nature, as to us in ours; as near to us in our Nature as he is to God in the Divine. Nothing that belongs to the Deity, but he poſſeſſes; nothing that belongs to the Human Nature, but he is clothed with.

He had both the Nature which had offended, and that Nature which was offended; a Nature to pleaſe God, and a Nature to pleaſure us: A Nature whereby he experimentally knew the excellency of God, which was injured, and underſtood the Glory due to him, and conſequently the Greatneſs of the Offence, which was to be meaſur'd by the Dignity of his Perſon: And a Nature whereby, he might be ſenſible of the Miſeries contracted by, and endure the calamities due to the Offender, that he night both have Compaſſion on him, and make due Satisfaction for him. * He had two diſtinct Natures, capable of the Affections and Sentiments of the two Perſons he was to accord; he was a juſt Judge of the Rights of the one, and the demerit of the other. He could not have this full and perfect Underſtanding, if he did not poſſeſs the Perfections of the one, and the Qualities of the other: The one fitted him for things appertaining to God, Heb. 5. 1. and the other furniſht him with a ſenſe of the Infirmities of man, Heb. 4. 15.

* Gomb. de relig. p. 42.

2. He was hereby fitted for the working out the happineſs of man. A Divine Nature to communicate to man, and a Human Nature to carry up to God.

1. He had a Nature whereby to ſuffer for us, and a Nature whereby to be meritorious in thoſe Sufferings. A Nature to make him capable to bear the Penalty, and a Nature to make his Sufferings ſufficient for all that embraced him. A Nature capable to be expoſed to the flames of Divine Wrath, and another Nature uncapable to be cruſht by the weight, or conſum'd by the heat of it: A Human Nature to ſuffer, and ſtand a Sacrifice in the ſtead of Man; a Divine Nature to ſanctifie theſe ſufferings, and fill the Noſtrils of God with a ſweet ſaviour, and thereby atone his wrath: The one to bear the ſtroak due to us, and the other to add merit to his Sufferings for us. Had he not been Man, he could not have filled our place in ſuffering; and could be otherwiſe have ſuffered, his ſufferings had not been applicable to us; and had he not been God, his Sufferings had not been meritoriouſly and fruitfully applicable. Had not his Blood been the Blood of God, it had been of as little advantage as the Blood of an ordinary Man, or the Blood of the *Legal Sacrifices. Nothings leſs than God, could have ſatisfied God for the injury done by Man. Nothing leſs than God, could have countervail'd the Torments due to the offending Creature: Nothing leſs than God, could have reſcued us out of the hands of the Jaylor, too powerful for us.

* Heb. 9. 12.

2. He had therefore a Nature to be compaſſionate to us, and victorious for us. A Nature ſenſibly to compaſſionate us, and another Nature to render thoſe Compaſſions effectual for our Relief; he had the Compaſſions of our Nature to pity us, and the Patience of the Divine Mature to bear with us. He hath the affections of a Man to us, and the power of a God for us: A Nature to diſcern the Devil for us, and another Nature to be ſenſible of the working of the Devil in us, and againſt us. If he had been only God, he would not have had an experimental ſenſe of our Miſery; and if he had been only Man, he could not have vanquiſh'd our Enemies: Had he been only God, he could not have died; and had he been only Man, he could not have conquered Death.

3. A Nature efficaciouſly to inſtruct us. As Man, he was to inſtruct us ſenſibly; as God, he was to inſtruct us infallibly. A Nature whereby he might converſe with us, and a Nature whereby he might influence us in thoſe Converſes. A Human Mouth to miniſter Inſtructions to Man, and a Divine Power to imprint it with efficacy.

4. A Nature to be a patern to us. A Patern of Grace as Man, as Adam was to have been to his Poſterity. * A Divine Nature ſhining in the Human, the Image of the inviſible God in the glaſs of our Fleſh, that he might be a perfect Copy for our Imitation, Col. 1. 15. The Image of the inviſible God, and the firſt-born of every Creature in conjunction. The Vertues of the Deity are ſweetned and tempered by the Union with the Humanity, as the Beams of the Sun are by ſhining through a colour'd Glaſs, which condeſcends more to the weakneſs of our eye.

* Amyraut moral. Tom. 5. p. 468, 469.

Thus the Perfections of the inviſible God, breaking through the firſt-born of every Creature, glittering in Chriſt's created ſtate, became more ſenſible for Contemplation by our Mind; and more imitable for Conformity in our practiſe.

5. A Nature to be a ground of confidence in our approach to God. A Nature wherein we may behold him, and wherein we may approach to him. A Nature for our comfort, and a Nature for our confidence. Had he been only Man, he had been too feeble to aſſure us; and had he been only God, he had been too high to attract us: But now we are allured by his Human Nature, and aſſured by his Divine, in our drawing near to Heaven. Communion with God was deſired by us, but our Guilt ſtifled our hopes, and the Infinite Excellency of the Divine Nature, would have dampt our hopes of ſpeeding; but ſince theſe two Natures, ſo far diſtant, are met in a Marriage knot, we have a ground of hope, nay, an earneſt that the Creator and believing Creature ſhall meet and converſe together.

And ſince our ſins are expiated by the Death of the Human Nature in conjunction with the Divine, our Guilt, upon believing, ſhall not hinder us from this comfortable approach. Had he been only Man, he could not have aſſured us an approach to God, Had he been only God, his Juſtice would not have admitted us to approach to him; he had been too terrible for guilty Perſons, and too holy for polluted Perſons to come near to him: But by being made Man, his Juſtice is tempered, and by his being God and Man, his Mercy is enſured. A Human Nature he had, one with us, that we might be related to God, as one with him.

6. A Nature to derive all good to us. Had he not been Man, we had had no ſhare or part in him: A Satisfaction by him had not been imputed to us. If he were not God, he could not communicate to us Divine Graces and Eternal Happineſs; he could not have had power to convey ſo great a good to us, had he been only Man; and he could not have done it, according to the Rule of inflexible righteouſneſs, had he been only God. As Man, he is the way of Conveyance; as God, he is the ſpring of Conveyance. From this Grace of Union, and the Grace of Unction, we find Rivers of Waters flowing, to make glad the City of God. Believers are his Branches, and draw Sap from him as he is their Root in his Human Nature, and have an endleſs duration of it from his Divine. Had he not been Man, he had not been in a ſtate to obey the Law: Had he not been God as well as Man, his Obedience could not have been valuable to be imputed to us.

How ſhould this Myſtery be ſtudied by us, which would afford us both Admiration and Content! Admiration in the incomprehenſibleneſs of it; Contentment in the fitneſs of the Mediator. By this Wiſdom of God we receive the props of our Faith, and the fruits of Joy and Peace. Wiſdom conſiſts in chuſing fit means, and conducting them in ſuch a method, as may reach with good ſucceſs the variety of Marks which are aimed at. Thus hath the Wiſdom of God ſet forth a Mediator, ſuted to our wants, fitted for our ſupplies, and ordered ſo the whole Affair by the union of theſe two Natures in the Perſon of the Redeemer, that there could be no diſappointement, by all the buſtle Hell and helliſh Inſtruments could raiſe againſt it.

4. The

4. The Wiſdom of God is ſeen in this way of Redemption, in vindicating the Honour and Righteouſneſs of the Law, both as to Precept and Penalty. The firſt and irreverſible deſign of the Law, was Obedience. The Penalty of the Law had only entrance upon Trangreſſion. Obedience was the deſign, and the Penalty was added to enforce the obſervance of the Precept. Gen. 2. 17. Thou ſhalt not eat; there is the Precept: In the day thou eateſt thereof thou ſhalt dye; There is the Penalty. Obedience was our Debt to the Law, as Creatures; Puniſhment was due from the Law to us, as Sinners: We were bound to endure the Penalty for our firſt Tranſgreſſion, but the Penalty did not Cancel the Bond of future Obedience: The Penalty had not been incurr'd without tranſgreſſing the Precept; yet the Precept was not abrogated by enduring the Penalty. Since Man ſo ſoon revolted, and by his Revolt fell under the threatning, the Juſtice of the Law had been honoured by Man's ſufferings, but the holineſſe, and equity of the Law had been honoured by mans Obedience. The Wiſdom of God finds out a Medium to ſatisfie both: The Juſtice of the Law is preſerved in the Execution of the Penalty; and the Holineſs of the Law is honoured in the obſervance of the Precept.

The Life of our Saviour is a Conformity to the Precept, and his Death is a Conformity to the Penalty; the Precepts are exactly performed, and the Curſe punctually executed, by a voluntary obſerving the one, and a voluntary undergoing the other. It is obeyed, as if it had not been tranſgreſt, and executed as if it had not been obeyed.

It became the Wiſdom, Juſtice, and Holineſs of God, as the Rector of the World, to exact it, Heb. 2. 10. and it became the holineſs of the Mediator to fulfill all the righteouſneſs of the Law *. And thus the Honour of the Law was vindicated in all the parts of it. The Tranſgreſſion of the Law was Condemned in the Fleſh of the Redeemer, and the Righteouſneſs of the Law was fulfilled in his Perſon: And both theſe acts of Obedience, being counted as one Righteouſneſs, and imputed to the Believing ſinner, render him a ſubject to the Law, both in its preceptive and minatory part. By Adams ſinful acting we were made ſinners, and by Chriſt's righteous acting we are made righteous. Rom. 5. 10. As by one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners, ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous. The Law was obeyed by him, that the righteouſneſs of it might be fulfilled in us, Rom. 8. 4. 'Tis not fulfilled in us, or in our actions, by inherency, but fulfilled in us by imputation of that righteouſneſs which was exactly fulfilled by another. As he died for us, and roſe again for us, ſo he lived for us. The Commands of the Law were as well obſerved for us, as the Threatnings of the Law were endured for us. This juſtification of a ſinner, with the preſervation of the holineſs of the Law in truth, in the inward parts, in ſincerity of intention, as well as the conformity in action, is the wiſdom of God, the Goſpel-wiſdom which David deſires to know, Pſal. 51. 6. Thou deſireſt truth in the inward parts, and in the hidden part thou ſhalt make me to know wiſdom; or as ſome render it, the hidden things of wiſdom. Not an inherent wiſdom in the acknowledgments of his ſin, which he had confeſt before; but the wiſdom of God in providing a Medicine, ſo as to keep up the holineſs of the Law in the obſervance of it in Truth, and the averting the Judgment due to the ſinner. In and by this way methodiz'd by the wiſdom of God, all doubs and troubles are diſcharg'd. Naturally if we take a view of the Law to behold its Holineſs and Juſtice; and then of our hearts, to ſee the contrariety in them to the command, and the pollution repugnant to its holineſs; and after this caſt our eyes upward, and behold a flaming Sword, edg'd with Curſes and Wrath; Is there any matter, but that of terrour, afforded by any of theſe? But when we behold, in the life of Chriſt, a conformity to the Mandatory part of the Law, and in the Croſs of Chriſt, a ſuſtaining the minatory part of the Law; this wiſdom of God gives a well-grounded and rational diſmiſs to all the horrors that can ſeize upon us.

* Rom. 8. 3. Matth. 3. 15.

5. The wiſdom of God in Redemption is viſible in manifeſting two contrary Affections at the ſame time, and in one act: The greateſt hatred of Sin, and the greateſt love to the Sinner. In this way he puniſhes the ſin without ruining the ſinner, and repairs the ruins of the ſinner, without indulging the ſin. Here is eternal love, and eternal hatred; a condemning the ſin to what it merited, and an advancing the ſinner to what he could not expect. Herein is the choiceſt love, and the deepeſt hatred manifeſt. An implacableneſs againſt the ſin, and a placableneſs to the ſinner. His hatred of ſin hath been diſcovered in other ways; in puniſhing the Devil without remedy; ſentencing Man to an expulſion from Paradiſe, though ſeduced by another; in accurſing the Serpent, an irrational Creature, though but a miſguided Inſtrument. The whole tenor of his Threatnings declare his loathing of ſin, and the ſprinklings of his Judgments in the World, and the horrible expectations of terrified Conſciences confirm it. But what are all theſe Teſtimonies to the higheſt evidence that can poſſibly be given in the ſheathing the Sword of his wrath in the heart of his Son? If a Father ſhould order his Son to take a mean Garb below his Dignity, order him to be dragg'd to Priſon, ſeem to throw off all Affection of a Father for the ſeverity of a Judge, condemn his Son to a horrible Death, be a Spectator of his bleeding Condition, withhold his hand from aſſwaging his Miſery, regard it rather with Joy than Sorrow, give him a better Cup to drink, and ſtand by to ſee him drink it off to the bottom, dregs and all, and flaſh frowns in his face all the while; and this not for any fault of his own, but the Rebellion of ſome Subjects he undertook for, and that the Offenders might have a pardon ſeal'd by the blood of the Son the ſufferer; all this would evidence his deteſtation of the Rebellion, and his affection to the Rebels; his hatred to their Crime, and his love to their Welfare. This did God do; He delivered Chriſt up for our Offences, Rom. 8. 32. the Father gave him the Cup, John 18. 18. the Lord bruiſed him with pleaſure, Iſa. 53. 10. and that for ſin: He transferr'd upon the ſhoulders of his Son the pain we had merited, that the Criminal might by reſtored to the place he had forfeited. He hates the ſin ſo, as to condemn it for ever, and wrap it up in the Curſe he had threatned; and loves the ſinner believing and repenting, ſo as to mount him to an expectation of a happineſs exceeding the firſt ſtate, both in glory and perpetuity. Inſtead of an Earthly Paradiſe, lays the Foundation of an Heavenly Manſion, brings forth a weight of Glory from a weight of Miſery, ſeparates the comfortable light of the Sun, from the ſcorching heat we had deſerved at his hands. Thus hath Gods hatred of ſin been manifeſted. He is at an eternal Defiance with ſin, yet nearer in alliance with the ſinner, than he was before the Revolt: As if Man's miſerable Fall had endeared him to the Judge. This is the wiſdom and prudence of Grace wherein God hath abounded, Eph. 1. 9. A wiſdom in twiſting the happy reſtoration of the broken Amity, with an everlaſting Curſe, upon that which made the breach, both upon ſin the Cauſe, and upon Satan the Seducer to it. Thus is hatred and love in their higheſt glory manifeſted together: Hatred to ſin, in the death of Chriſt, more than if the torments of Hell had been undergone by the ſinner; and love to the ſinner, more than if he had, by an abſolute and ſimple Bounty, beſtowed upon him the poſſeſſion of Heaven; becauſe the gift of his Son, for ſuch an end, is a greater token of his boundleſs Affections, than a reinſtating Man in Paradiſe. Thus is the wiſdom of God ſeen in Redemption; conſuming the ſin, and recovering the ſinner.

love

6. The wiſdom of God is evident in overturning the Devil's Empire, by the Nature he had vanquiſh'd, and by ways quite contrary to what that malicious Spirit could imagine. The Devil indeed read his own doom in the firſt Promiſe, and found his ruin reſolved upon, by the means of the Seed of the Woman, but by what Seed, was not ſo eaſily known to him*. And the methods whereby it was to be brought about, was a Myſtery kept ſecret from the malicious Devils, ſince it was not diſcovered to the obedient Angels. He might know from Iſa. 53. that the Redeemer was aſſured to divide the Spoil with the ſtrong, reſcue a part of the loſt Creation out of his hands; and that this was to be effected, by making his Soul an offering for ſin: But could he imagine which way his Soul was to be made ſuch an Offering? He ſhrewdly ſuſpected Chriſt juſt after his Inauguration into his Office by Baptiſm, to be the Son of God. But did he ever dream that the Meſſiah, by dying as a reputed Malefactor, ſhould be a Sacrifice for the expiation of the ſin, the Devil had introduced by his ſubtility? Did he ever imagine a Croſs ſhould diſpoſſeſs him of his Crown, and that dying groans ſhould wreſt the Victory out of his hands?

* And indeed the Heathen Oracles, managed by the Devils, declared that they were not long to hold their Scepter in the World, but the Hebrew Child ſhould vanquiſh them.

He

He was conquer'd by that Nature he had caſt headlong into ruin: A Woman, by his ſubtilty, was the occaſion of our death; and Woman, by the conduct of the only wiſe God, brings forth the Author of our Life, and the Conquerour of our Enemies. The Fleſh of the old Adam had infected us, and the Fleſh of the new Adam cures us. 1 Cor. 15. 21. By man can death; by man alſo came the reſurrection from the dead. We are killed by the old Adam, and raiſed by the new. As among the Iſraelites, a fiery Serpent gave the wound, and a brazen Serpent adminiſters the Cure. The Nature that was deceived bruiſeth the Deceiver, and razeth up the Foundations of his Kingdom. Satan is defeated by the Counſels he took to ſecure his Poſſeſſion, and loſes the Victory by the ſame means whereby he thought to preſerve it.

His tempting the Jews to the ſin of Crucifying the Son of God, had a contrary ſucceſs to his tempting Adam to eat of the Tree. The firſt death he brought upon Adam, ruined us, and the death he brought by his Inſtruments upon the ſecond Adam, reſtored us. By a Tree, if one may ſo ſay, he had Triumphed over the World, and by the fruit of a Tree, one hanging upon a Tree, he is diſcharged of his power over us, Heb. 2. 14. Through death he deſtroyed him that had the power of death. And thus the Devil ruins his own Kingdom while he thinks to confirm and inlarge it. And is defeated by his own policy, whereby he thought to continue the World under his chains, and deprive the Creator of the World of his purpoſed honour. What deeper Counſel could he reſolve upon for his own ſecurity, than to be inſtrumental in the death of him, who was God, the terror of the Devil himſelf, and to bring the Redeemer of the World to expire with diſgrace in the ſight of a multitude of men? Thus did the Wiſdom of God ſhine forth in reſtoring us by methods ſeemingly repugnant to the end he aimed at, and above the ſuſpition of a ſubtle Devil, whom he intended to Baffle.

Could he Imagine that we ſhould be healed by ſtripes, quickned by death, purified by blood, crowned by a croſs, advanced to the higheſt honour by the loweſt humility, comforted by ſorrows, glorified by diſgrace, abſolved by condemnation, and made rich by poverty? That the ſweeteſt hony ſhould at once ſpring out of the belly of a dead Lion, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, and out of the boſom of the living God? How wonderful is this Wiſdom of God! That the ſeed of the woman, born of a mean Virgin, brought forth in a ſtable, ſpending his days in affliction, miſery and poverty, without any pomp and ſplendor, paſſing ſome time in a Carpenters ſhop, with Carpenters tools and afterwards expoſed to a horrible and diſgraceful death, ſhould by this way pull down the gates of Hell, ſubvert the kingdom of the Devil, and be the hammer to break in pieces that power, which he had ſo long exerciſed over the World! Thus became he the Author of our life, by being bound for a while in the chains of death, and arrived to a principally over the moſt malicious powers by being a priſoner for us, and the anvil of their rage and fury.

* Mark 6. 6.

7. The Wiſdom of God appears, In giving us this way the ſureſt ground of comfort and the ſtrongeſt incentive to obedience. The Rebel is reconciled, and the rebellion ſhamed; God is propitiated and the ſinner ſanctified by the ſame blood. What can more contribute to our comfort and confidence, than Gods richeſt gift to us? What can more enflame our love to him, than our recovery from death by the oblation of his Son to miſery and death for us? It doth as much engage our duty as ſecure our happineſs. It preſents God glorious and gracious, and therefore every way fit to be truſted in regard of the intereſt of his own glory in it, and in regard of the effuſions of his grace by it. It renders the Creature obliged in the higheſt manner, and ſo awakens his induſtry to the ſtricteſt and nobleſt obedience. Nothing ſo effectual as a crucified Chriſt to wean us from ſin and ſtifle all motions of deſpair, a means, in regard of the Juſtice ſignaliz'd in it, to make man to hate the ſin which had ruined him; and a means, in regard of the love expreſt, to make him delight in that Law he had violated, 2 Cor. 5. 14, 15. The love of Chriſt, and therefore the love of God expreſt in it, conſtrains us no longer to live to our ſelves.

1. It is a ground of the higheſt comfort and confidence in God. Since he hath given ſuch an evidence of his impartial truth to his threatning for the honour of his

his Juſtice, we need not queſtion but he will be as punctual to his promiſe for the honour of his mercy. 'Tis a ground of confidence in God, ſince he hath redeemed us in ſuch a way as glorifies the ſteadineſs of his veracity, as well as the ſeverity of his Juſtice; VVe may well truſt him for the performance of his promiſe, ſince we have experience of the execution of his threatning; his merciful truth will as much engage him to accompliſh the one, as his juſt truth did to inflict the other. The goodneſs which ſhone forth in weaker rays in the Creation, breaks out with ſtronger beams in redemption. And the mercy which before the appearance of Chriſt was manifeſted in ſome ſmall Rivulets, diffuſeth himſelf like a boundleſs Ocean. That God that was our Creator, is our Redeemer, the Repayrer of our Breaches, and the Reſtorer of our Paths to dwell in, and the plenteous Redemption from all Iniquity, manifeſted in the Incarnation and Paſſion of the Son of God, is much more a ground of hope in the Lord, than it was in the paſt Ages, when it could not be ſaid, the Lord hath, but the Lord ſhall redeem Iſrael from all his iniquities, Pſal. 130.8. It is a full Warrant to caſt our ſelves into his Arms.

2. An incentive to obedience.

1. The Commands of the Goſpel require the obedience of the Creature. There is not one precept in the Goſpel which interferes with any rule in the Law, but ſtrengthens it, and repreſents it in its true exactneſs: The heat to ſcorch us is allaied but the light to direct us is not extinguiſht. Not the leaſt allowance to any ſin is granted; not the leaſt affection to any ſin is indulg'd. The law is temper'd by the Goſpel, but not nuli'd and caſt out of doors by it; It enacts that none but thoſe that are ſanctified, ſhall be glorified; that there muſt be Grace here, if we expect glory hereafter; that we muſt not preſume to expect an admittance to the Viſion of Gods face, unleſs our Souls be cloathed with a robe of Holineſs, Heb. 12. 14. it requires an obedience to the whole Law in our intention and purpoſe, and an endeavour to obſerve it in our actions: It promotes the honour of God, and ordains an univerſal Charity among men; it reveals the whole Counſel of God, and furniſheth men with the holieſt Laws.

2. It preſents to us the exacteſt pattern for our Obedience. The redeeming Perſon is not only a propitiation for the ſin, but a pattern to the ſinner, 1 Pet. 2. 21. The conſcience of man, after the fall of Adam, approved of the reaſon of the Law, but by the corruption of nature, man had no ſtrength to perform the Law. The poſſibility of keeping the Law by Human Nature, is evidenced by the appearance and life of the Redeemer, and an aſſurance given that it ſhall be advanc'd to ſuch a ſtate, as to be able to obſerve it: VVe aſpire to it in this life, and have hopes to attain it in a future: And while we are here, the Actor of our Redemption is the copy for our imitation. The Pattern to imitate is greater than the Law to be ruled by. VVhat a luſtre did his Vertues caſt about the world? How attractive are his Graces? VVith what high examples, for all duties hath he furniſh'd us out of the copy of his Life?

3. It preſents us with the ſtrongeſt motives to Obedience. Tit. 2. 11, 12. The Grace of God teaches us to deny ungodlineſs. VVhat Chains bind faſter and cloſer than love? Here is love to our nature, in his Incarnation; love to us though Enemies, in his death and paſſion; encouragements to Obedience by the proffers of pardon for former Rebellions: By the diſobedience of man, God introduceth his redeeming Grace, and ingageth his Creature to more Ingenious and excellent returns than his Innocent ſtate could oblige him to. In his Created ſtate he had goodneſs to move him, he hath the ſame goodneſs now to oblige him as a Creature, and a greater love and mercy to oblige him as a repaired Creature; and the terror of Juſtice is taken off, which might invenom his Heart as a Criminal. In his revolted ſtate he had miſery to diſcourage him; in his redeemed ſtate he hath love to atract him. VVithout ſuch a way, black deſpair had ſeized upon the Creature expoſed to a remedileſs miſery: And God would have had no returns of love from the beſt of his earthly VVorks: But if any ſpark of ingenuity be left, they will be excited by the efficacy of this Argument.

This willingneſs of God to receive returning ſinners, is manifeſted in the higheſt degree; and the willingneſs of a ſinner to return to him in duty hath the ſtrongeſt engagements. He hath done as much to incourage our Obedience, as to illuſtrate his Glory. VVe cannot conceive what could be done greater for the ſalvation of our Souls, and conſequently what could have been done more to enforce our obſervance. VVe have a Redeemer, as man, to copy it to us, and as God to perfect us in it. It would make the heart of any to tremble to wound him that hath provided ſuch a ſalve for our Sores, and to make Grace a warrant for Rebellion: Motives, capable to form Rocks into a flexibleneſs. Thus is the VViſdom of God ſeen in giving us a ground of the ſureſt confidence, and furniſhing us with incentives to the greateſt Obedience by the horrors of wrath, death, and ſufferings of our Saviour.

8. The VViſdom of God is apparent in the Condition he hath ſettled for the enjoying the fruits of Redemption, and this is Faith, a wiſe and reaſonable Condition: And the concomitants of it.

1. In that it is ſuted to mans lapſed ſtate and Gods Glory. Innocence is not required here; that had been a Condition impoſſible in its own nature after the Fall: The rejecting of mercy is now only condemning, where mercy is propoſed: Had the Condition of Perfection in works been required, it had rather been a condemnation than redemption. VVorks are not demanded whereby the Creature might aſcribe any thing to himſelf; but a Condition which continues in man a ſenſe of his Apoſtacy, abates all aſpiring Pride, and makes the reward of Grace not of Debt: A Condition whereby Mercy is owned, and the Creature emptied: Fleſh ſilenc'd in the Duſt, and God ſet upon his Throne of Grace and Authority: The Creature brought to the loweſt debaſement, and Divine glory raiſed to the higheſt pitch. The Creature is brought to acknowledge mercy, and ſeal to Juſtice, to own the Holineſs of God in the hatred of ſin, the Juſtice of God in the Puniſhment of ſin, and the Mercy of God in the pardoning of ſin: A condition that deſpoils Nature of all its pretended excellency: Beats down the glory of man at the foot of God, 1 Cor. 1. 29, 31. It ſubjects the Reaſon and VVill of man to the VViſdom and Authority of God; it brings the Creature to an unreſerved ſubmiſſion and intire reſignation. God is made the Soveraign Cauſe of all; the Creature continued in his emptineſs, and reduced to a greater dependence upon God than by a Creation; depending upon him for a conſtant influx for an intire happineſs. A Condition that renders God glorious in the Creature, and the fallen creature happy in God: God glorious in his Condeſcenſion to Man, and Man happy in his emptineſs before God.

Faith is made the Condition of mans recovery, that the lofty looks of man might be humbled, and the haughtineſs of man be pulled down, Iſa. 2. 11. That every towring imagination might be levelled, 2 Cor. 10. 5. Man muſt have all from without doors; he muſt not live upon himſelf, but upon anothers allowance. He muſt ſtand to the proviſion of God, and be a perpetual Sutor at his Gates.

2. A Condition oppoſite to that which was the cauſe of the Fall. VVe fell from God by an unbelief of the threatning, he recovers us by a belief of the promiſe; by Unbelief we laid the Foundation of Gods diſhonour, by Faith therefore God exalts the Glory of his free Grace. VVe loſt our ſelves by a deſire of ſelf dependence, and our return is ordered by a way of ſelf-emptineſs. 'Tis reaſonable we ſhould be reſtored in a way contrary to that whereby we fell: VVe ſinned by a refuſal of cleaving to God, 'tis a part of divine VViſdom to reſtore us in a denial of our own righteouſneſs and ſtrength*. Man having ſinned by Pride, the Wiſdom of God humbles him (ſaith one) at the very root of the Tree of Knowledg, and makes him deny his own Underſtanding, and ſubmit to Faith, or elſe, for ever to loſe his deſired Felicity.

* Laud againſt Fiſher. p. 5.

3. It is a condition ſuted to the Common Sentiment and cuſtome of the World. There is more of belief than reaſon in the world. All inſtructers and Maſters in Sciences and Arts, require firſt a belief in their Diſciples, and a reſignation of their Underſtandings and wills to them. And it is the wiſdom of God to require that of man, which his own reaſon makes him ſubmit to another which is his fellow Creature, Creature. He therefore that quarrels with the Condition of Faith, muſt quarrel with all the World, ſince Belief is the beginning of all Knowledg*; yea, and moſt of the Knowledg in the World, may rather come under the title of Belief, than of Knowledge: For what we think we know this day, we may find from others ſuch Arguments as may ſtagger our Knowledg, and make us doubt of that we thought our ſelves certain of before: Nay ſometimes we change our Opinions, our ſelves, without any Inſtructor; and ſee a reaſon to entertain an Opinion quite contrary to what we had before. And if we found a general Judgment of others to vote againſt what we think we know, it would make us give the leſs Credit to our ſelves, and our own Sentiments. All knowledg in the World, is only a belief depending upon the teſtimony or arguings of others; for indeed it may be ſaid of all men as in Job, Job 8. 9. We are but of yeſterday, and know nothing: Since therefore Belief is ſo univerſal a thing in the World, the Wiſdom of God requires that of us which every man muſt count reaſonable, or render himſelf utterly ignorant of any thing. It is a Condition that is common to all Religions. All Religions are founded upon a belief: Unleſs men did believe future things, they would not hope nor fear. A Belief and Reſignation was required in all the Idolatries in the World; ſo that God requires nothing but what an univerſal cuſtome of the World gives its ſuffrage to the reaſonableneſs of: Indeed juſtifying Faith is not ſuted to the Sentiments of men; but that Faith which muſt precede juſtifying, a belief of the Doctrine, though not comprehended by reaſon, is common to the cuſtom of the World*. 'Tis no leſs madneſs not to ſubmit our Reaſon to Faith, than not to regulate our Fancies by Reaſon.

* Bradward. 28.

* Janeway p. 88.

4. This Condition of Faith and Repentance is ſuted to the Conſciences of Men. The Law of Nature teaches us, that we are bound to believe every revelation from God, when it is made known to us: And not only to aſſent to it as true, but embrace it as good. This Nature dictates, that we are as much obliged to believe God, becauſe of his Truth, as to love him, becauſe of his Goodneſs. Every mans Reaſon tells him, he cannot obey a precept, nor depend upon a Promiſe, unleſs he Believes both the one and the other. No man's Conſcience, but will inform him upon hearing the revelation of God, concerning his excellent contritrivance of Redemption, and the way to enjoy it, that it is very reaſonable he ſhould ſtrip off all affections to ſin, lie down in Sorrow and bewail what he hath done amiſs againſt ſo tender a God. Can you expect that any man that promiſes you a great honour or a rich donative, ſhould demand leſs of you than to truſt his word, bear an affection to him, and return him kindneſs? Can any leſs be expected by a Prince than obedience from a pardoned Subject, and a redeemed Captive? If you have injured any man in his Body, Eſtate, Reputation, would you not count it a reaſonable Condition for the partaking of his Clemency and Forgiveneſs, to expreſs a hearty ſorrow for it, and a reſolution not to fall into the like Crime again? Such are the Conditions of the Goſpel, ſuted to the Conſciences of men.

5. The Wiſdom of God appears, in that this condition was only likely to attain the end. There are but two Common Heads appointed by God, Adam and Chriſt: By one we are made a living Soul, by the other a quickning Spirit: By the one we are made ſinners, by the other we are made righteous. Adam fell as a Head, and all his members, his whole Iſſue and Poſterity fell with him, becauſe they proceeded from him by natural Generation. But ſince the ſecond Adam cannot be our Head by natural Generation, there muſt be ſome other way of ingrafting us in him, and uniting us to him as our Head, which muſt be Moral and Spiritual; this cannot rationally be conceived to be by any other way than what is ſutable to a reaſonable Creature, and therefore muſt be by an act of the Will, Conſent and Acceptance, and owning the terms ſettled for an Admiſſion to that Union. And this is that we properly call Faith, and therefore called a receiving of him, John 1. 12.

1. Now this Condition of enjoying the Fruits of Redemption could not be a bare Knowledg; for that is but only an act of the Underſtanding, and doth not in it ſelf include the act of the Will, and ſo would have united only one Faculty to him, not the whole Soul: But Faith is an act both of the Underſtanding and Will too; and principally of the Will, which doth preſuppoſe an act of the Underſtanding: For there cannot be a Perſwaſion in the Will, without a propoſition from the Underſtanding. The Underſtanding muſt be convinced of the Truth and goodneſs of a thing, before the Will can be perſwaded to make any motion towards it; and therefore all the Promiſes, Invitations and Proffers are ſuted to the Underſtanding and Will; To the Underſtanding in regard of Knowledge, to the Will in regard of Appetite; to the Underſtanding as true, to the Will as good; to the Underſtanding as practical and influencing the Will.

2. Nor could it be an intire Obedience. That, as was ſaid before, would have made the Creature have ſome matter of boaſting, and this was not ſutable to the Condition he was ſunk into by the fall. Beſides, mans Nature being corrupted, was rendered uncapable to obey, and unable to have one thought of a due Obedience, 2 Cor. 3. 5.

When man turned from God, and upon that was turned out of Paradiſe, his return was impoſſible by any ſtrength of his own; his Nature was as much corrupted as his re-entrance into Paradiſe was prohibited. That Covenant, whereby he ſtood in the Garden, required a perfection of action and intention in the obſervance of all the Commands of God: But his Fall had crack'd his Ability to recover happineſs by the terms and condition of an intire Obedience; yet man being a perſon governable by a Law, and capable of happineſs by a Covenant; if God would reſtore him, and enter into a Covenant with him, we muſt ſuppoſe it to have ſome Condition, as all Covenants have. That Condition could not be works, becauſe mans Nature was polluted. Indeed, had God reduced mans Body to the duſt, and his Soul to nothing, and framed another man, he might have govern'd him by a Covenant of Works: But that had not been the ſame man that had revolted, and upon his revolt was ſtain'd and diſabled. But ſuppoſe God had by any tranſcendent Grace, wholly purified him from the ſtain of his former Tranſgreſſion, and reſtored to him the ſtrength and ability he had loſt, might he not as eaſily have rebelled again? And ſo the Condition would never have been accompliſht, the Covenant never have been performed, and Happineſs never have been enjoyed. There muſt be ſome other Condition then in the Covenant God would make for mans Security.

Now Faith is the moſt proper for receiving the Promiſe of Pardon of Sin: Belief of thoſe promiſes is the firſt natural reflection that a Malefactor can make upon a pardon offered him, an acceptance of it is the firſt conſequent from that belief. Hence is Faith entitled a perſwaſion of, and embracing the Promiſes, Heb. 11. 13. and a receiving the atonement, Rom. 5. 11.

Thus the Wiſdom of God is apparent in annexing ſuch a Condition to the Covenant, whereby man is reſtored, as anſwers the end of God for his glory, the State, Conſcience, and neceſſity of Man, and had the greateſt congruity to his recovery.

9. This Wiſdom of God is manifeſt in the manner of the publiſhing and propagating this Doctrine of Redemption.

1. In the gradual diſcoveries of it. Flaſhing a great light in the face of a ſuddain, is amazing; ſhould the Sun glare in our Eye in all its brightneſs on a ſuddain, after we have been in a thick darkneſs, it would blind us, in ſtead of comforting us: So great a Work as this muſt have ſeveral digeſtions.

God firſt reveals of what Seed the Redeeming perſon ſhould be, the Seed of the Woman. Gen. 3. 15. Then of what Nation, Gen. 26. 4. then of what Tribe; Gen. 49. 12. of the Tribe of Judah; then of what Family, the family of David; then what works he was to do, what ſufferings to undergo. The firſt predictions of our Saviour were obſcure. Adam could not well ſee the Redemption in the promiſe, for the puniſhment of death which ſucceeded in the Threatning; the promiſe exerciſed his Faith, and the Obſcurity and bodily bodily Death, his Humility. The promiſe made to Abraham was clearer than the Revelations made before, yet he could not tell how to reconcile his Redemption with his Exile. God ſupported his Faith by the promiſe, and exerciſed his Humility by making him a Pilgrim, and keeping him in a perpetual dependance upon him in all his motions.

The Declarations to Moſes are brighter than thoſe to Abraham. The delineations of Chriſt by David in the Pſalms, more illuſtrious than the former. And all thoſe exceeded by the Revelations made to the Prophet Iſaiah, and the other Prophets, according as the Age did approach, wherein the Redeemer was to enter into his Office, God wrapt up this Goſpel in a multitude of Types and Ceremonies, fitted to the Infant ſtate of the Church; Gal. 4. 3. An Infant State is uſually affected with ſenſible things; yet thoſe Ceremonies were fitted to that great end of the Goſpel, which he would bring forth in time to the World. And the Wiſdom of God in them would be amazing, if we could underſtand the analogy between every Ceremony in the Law and the thing ſignified by it. As it cannot but affect a diligent Reader to obſerve that little account of them we have by the Apoſtle Paul, ſprinkled in his Epiſtles, and more largely in that to the Hebrews. As the political Laws of the Jews flowed from the depth of the Moral Law, ſo their Ceremonal did from the depth of Evangelical Counſels, and all of them had a ſpecial relation to the honour of God, and the debaſing the Creature.

Though God formed the Maſs and Matter of the World at the firſt creation at once, yet his Wiſdom took ſix days time for the diſpoſing and adorning it. The more Illuſtrious truths of God are not to be comprehended on a ſuddain by the weakneſs of men: Chriſt did not declare all Truths to his Diſciples in the time of his life, becauſe they were not able at that preſent to bear them, John 16. 12. Ye cannot bear them now. Some were reſerved for his Reſurrection, others for the coming of the Spirit; and the full diſcovery of all kept back for another World. This Doctrine God figured out in the Law, Oracled by the Prophets, and unvail'd by Chriſt and his Apoſtles:

2. The Wiſdom of God appeared, in uſing all proper means to render the belief of it eaſie,

1. The moſt minute things that were to be tranſacted, were predicted in the ancient foregoing Age, long before the coming of the Redeemer: The vinegar and gall offered to him upon the Croſs, the parting his Garments, the not breaking of his Bones, the piercing of his Hands and Feet, the betraying of him, the ſlighting of him by the multitude, all were exactly painted and repreſented in variety of Figures. There was Light enough to good men not to miſtake him; and yet not ſo plain, as to hinder bad men from being Serviceable to the Counſels of God in the crucifying of him when he came.

2. The tranſlation of the Old Teſtament from the private Language of the Jews into the moſt publick Language of the World. That Tranſlation which we call Septuagint, from Hebrew into Greek, ſome years before the coming of Chriſt, that Tongue being moſt diffuſed at that time, by reaſon of the Macedonian Empire raiſed by Alexander, and the Univerſity of Athens, to which other Nations reſorted for Learning and Education: This was a preparation for the Sons of Japhet to dwell in the Tents of Shem. By this was the entertainment of the Goſpel facilitated: When they compar'd the Prophecies of the Old Teſtament, with the Declarations of the New, and found things ſo long predicted before they were tranſacted in the publick view.

3. By ordering concurrent Teſtimonies as to matter of Fact, that the matter of Fact was not deniable. That there was ſuch a Perſon as Chriſt, that his Miracles were ſtupendous, that his Doctrine did not incline to Sedition, that he affected not Worldly Applauſe, that he did ſuffer at Jeruſalem, was acknowledged by all: Not a man among the greateſt Enemies of Chriſtians was found, that denied the matter of Fact. And this great truth, that Chriſt is the Meſſiah and Redeemer, hath been, with univerſal conſent, owned by all the Profeſſors of Chriſtianity throughout the World: Whatever Bickerings there have been among them about ſome particular Doctrines, they all centred in that Truth of Chriſt's being the Redeemer. The firſt publication of this Doctrine was ſealed by a thouſand Miracles, and ſo illuſtrious, that he was an utter ſtranger to the World that was ignorant of them.

Meſſiah

3. In keeping up ſome Principles and Opinions in the World to facilitate the belief of this, or render men inexcuſable for rejecting of it. The Incarnation of the Son of God could not be ſo ſtrange to the World, if we conſider the general belief of the Appearances * of their Gods among them; that the Epicureans, and others that denied any ſuch Appearances, were counted Atheiſts *. And Pythagoras was eſteemed to be one, not of the inferior Genij and Lunar Dæmons, but one of the higher Gods, who appeared in a Human Body, for the curing and rectifying mortal Life *. And himſelf tells Abaris the Scythian, that he was ἀνθρωπόμορφος, that he took the fleſh of man, that men might not be aſtoniſhed at him, and in a fright fly from his Inſtructions. It was not therefore accounted an irrational thing among them, that God ſhould be Incarnate: But indeed the great ſtumbling block was a crucified God. But had they known the holy and righteous Nature of God, the Malice of ſin, the univerſal Corruption of Human Nature, the firſt threatning and the neceſſity of Vindicating the honour of the Law, and clearing the Juſtice of God; the Notion of his crucifixion would not have appeared ſo incredible, ſince they believed the poſſibility of an Incarnation.

* Ἐπιφάνειαι

* Dioniſ. Halicar. Antiq. l. 2. p. 128.
* Iamblych. Vit. Pythag. l. 1. cap. 6 p. 44. & lib. 2. c. 19. p. 94.

Another Principle was that univerſal One of Sacrifices for Expiation, and rendring God propitious to man, and was practiced among all Nations. I remember not any wherein this Cuſtom did not prevail; for it did even among thoſe People where the Jews, as being no trading Nation, had not any Commerce; and alſo in America, found out in theſe latter Ages. It was not a Law of Nature, no man can find any ſuch thing written in his own heart, but a Tradition from Adam. Now that among the loſs of ſo many other Doctrines, that were handed down from Adam to his immediate Poſterity, as in particular that of the Seed of the Woman, which one would think a neceſſary Appendix to that of Sacrificing; This latter ſhould be preſerved as a fragment of an ancient Tradition, ſeems to be an Act of Divine Wiſdom, to prepare men for the entertainment of the Doctrine of the great Sacrifice for the Expiation of the ſin of the World. And as the Apoſtle forms his Argument from the Jewiſh Sacrifices in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, for the convincing them of the end of the death of Chriſt, ſo did the Ancient Fathers make uſe of this practiſe of the Heathen, to convince them of the ſame Doctrine.

5. The wiſdom of God appeared in the time and circumſtances of the firſt ſolemn publication of the Goſpel by the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem. The Relation you may read in Acts 2. from verſe 1. to the 12*th*. The Spirit was given to the Apoſtles on the day of Pentecoſt; a time wherein there were multitudes of Jews from all Nations, not only near, but remote, that heard the great things of God ſpoken in the ſeveral Languages of thoſe Nations, where their habitations were fixed; and that by twelve illiterate men. That two or three hours before knew no Language but that of their Native Country.

It was the cuſtom of the Jews, that dwelt among other Nations, at a diſtance from Jeruſalem, to aſſemble together at Jeruſalem at the Feaſt of Pentecoſt: And God-pitched upon this Seaſon, that there might be Witneſſes of this Miracle in many parts of the VVorld: There were ſome of every Nation under Heaven; verſe 5. That is, of that known part of the VVorld, ſo ſaith the Text. Fourteen ſeveral Nations are mentioned; and Proſelytes as well as Jews by Birth. They are called devout men, men of Conſcience, whoſe teſtimony would carry weight with it among their Neighbours at their return, becauſe of their Reputation by their Religious Carriage.

Again

Again, this was not heard and ſeen by ſome of them at one time, and ſome at another, by ſome one hour, by others the next ſucceſſively *, but altogether in a Solemn Aſſembly, that the teſtimony of ſo many witneſſes at a time, might be more valid, and the truth of the Doctrine appear more illuſtrious and undeniable. And it muſt needs be aſtoniſhing to them, to hear that Perſon magnified in ſo miraculous a manner, who had ſo lately been condemned by their Countrymen as a Malefactor.

* Faucheur in loc. p. 294, 295.

VViſdom conſiſts in the timing of things. And in this Circumſtance doth the wiſdom of God appear, in furniſhing the Apoſtles with the Spirit at ſuch a time, and bringing forth ſuch a Miracle, as the gift of Tongues, on a ſuddain, that every Nation might hear in their own Language, the wonder of Redemption, and as VVitneſſes at their returns into their own Countreys, report it to others; that the credit they had, in their ſeveral places, might facilitate the belief and entertainment of the Goſpel, when the Apoſtles, or others, ſhould arrive to thoſe ſeveral Charges and Dioceſſes appointed for them to preach the Goſpel in. Had this Miracle been wrought in the preſence only of the Inhabitants of Judea, that underſtood only their own Language, or one or two of the Neighbouring Tongues, it had been counted by them rather a Madneſs than a Miracle. Or had they underſtood all the Tongues which they ſpoke, the news of it had ſpread no further than the limits of their own Habitations, and had been confin'd within the narrow bounds of the Land of Judea. But now it is carried to ſeveral remote Nations, where any of thoſe Auditors then aſſembled had their Reſidence.

As God choſe the time of the Paſſeover for the Death of Chriſt, that there might be the greateſt Number of the Inhabitants of the Country, as Witneſſes of the Matter of fact, the Innocence and Sufferings of Chriſt, ſo he choſe the time of Pentecoſt for the firſt publiſhing the value and end of this Blood to the World.

Thus the Evangelical Law was given in a Confluence of People from all Parts and Nations, becauſe it was a Covenant with all Nations: And the variety of Languages ſpoken by a Company of poor Galileans, bred up at the Lake of Tiberias, and in poor corners of Canaan, without the Inſtructions of men for ſo great a Skill, might well evidence to the hearers, that God, that brought the Confuſion of Languages firſt at Babel, did only work that Cure of them, and combine all together at Jeruſalem.

3. The wiſdom of God is ſeen in the Inſtruments he employed in the publiſhing the Goſpel. He did not employ Philoſophers, but Fiſhermen, uſed not acquired Arts, but infus'd wiſdom and courage. This Treaſure was put into, and preſerved in Earthen Veſſels, that the Wiſdom, as well as the Power of God, might be magnified. The weaker the means are which attain the end, the greater is the skill of the Conductor of them.

Wiſe Princes chooſe men of moſt Credit, Intereſt, VViſdom, and Ability to be Miniſters of their Affairs and Ambaſſadors to others. But what were theſe that God choſe for ſo great a VVork, as the publiſhing a new Doctrine to the VVorld? VVhat was their quality but mean, what was their Authority, without Intereſt? VVhat was their Ability, without eminent Parts for ſo great a VVork, but what Divine Grace in a ſpecial manner endowed them with? Nay, what was their diſpoſition to it? As dull and unweildly. VVitneſs the frequent rebukes for their ſlow heartedneſs, from their Maſter, when he converſed in the Fleſh with them. And One of the greateſt of them, ſo fond of the Jewiſh Ceremonies and Phariſaical Principles, wherein he had been more than ordinarily principled, that he hated the Chriſtian Religion to extirpation, and the Profeſſors of it to death; by thoſe ways which were out of the Rode of Human wiſdom, and would be accompted the greateſt abſurdity to be practis'd by men that have a repute for diſcretion, did God advance his VViſdom. 1 Cor. 1. 25. The fooliſhneſs of God is wiſer than man. By this means it was indiſputably evidenc'd to unbyaſſed Minds, that the Doctrine was Divine. It could not rationally be imagined, that Inſtruments deſtitute of all human Advantages, ſhould be able to vanquiſh the VVorld, confound Judaiſm, overturn Heatheniſm, chaſe away the the Devils, ſtrip them of their Temples, alienate the minds of men from their ſeveral Religions, which had been rooted in them by Education, and eſtabliſhed by a long ſucceſſion. It could not, I ſay, reaſonably be imagined to be without a Supernatural Aſſiſtance, an heavenly and efficacious working: Whereas, had God taken a Courſe agreeable to the prudence of Man, and uſed thoſe that had been furniſhed with Learning, tip'd with Eloquence, and armed with Human Authority, the Doctrines would have been thought to have been of a Human Invention, and to be ſome ſubtle Contrivance for ſome unworthy and ambitious end: The nothingneſs and weakneſs of the Inſtruments manifeſt them to be conducted by a Divine Power, and declare the Doctrine it ſelf to be from Heaven.

When we ſee ſuch feeble inſtruments proclaiming a Doctrine repugnant to Fleſh and Blood, ſounding forth a crucified Chriſt to be believed in, and truſted on, and declaiming againſt the Religion and Worſhip, under which the Roman Empire had long flouriſhed; exhorting them to the Contempt of the World, preparation for Afflictions, denying themſelves, and their own Honours, by the hopes of an unſeen reward, things ſo repugnant to Fleſh and Blood And theſe Inſtruments concurring in the ſame Story, with an admirable Harmony in all parts, and ſealing this Doctrine with their Blood; can we upon all this aſcribe this Doctrine to a Human Contrivance, or fix any lower Author of it than the wiſdom of Heaven? 'Tis the wiſdom of God that carries on his own Deſigns in methods moſt ſutable to his own Greatneſs, and different from the Cuſtomes and modes of Men, that leſs of Humanity, and more of Divinity might appear.

4. The Wiſdom of God appears in the ways and manner, as well as in the Inſtruments of its propagation. By ways ſeemingly contrary. You know how God had ſent the Jews into Captivity in Babylon, and though he ſtruck off their Chains, and reſtored them to their Country, yet many of them had no mind to leave a Country wherein they had been born and bred. The diſtance from the place of the Original of their Anceſtors, and their affection to the Country wherein they were born, might have occaſioned their embracing the Idolatrous Worſhip of the place. Afterwards the Perſecutions of Antiochus ſcatter'd many of the Jews for their ſecurity into other Nations; yet a great part, and perhaps the greateſt, preſerved their Religion, and by that were obliged to come every year to Jeruſalem to Offer, and ſo were preſent at the effuſion of the Spirit on the day of Pentecoſt, and were witneſſes of the miraculous effects of it: Had they not been diſpers'd by Perſecution, had they not reſided in ſeveral Countries and been acquainted with their Languages, the Goſpel had not ſo eaſily been diffuſed into ſeveral Countrys of the World. The firſt Perſecutions alſo raiſed againſt the Church propagated the Goſpel; the ſcattering of the Diſciples enflamed their courage, and diſpers'd the Doctrine*, according to the Proptecy of Daniel, Dan. 12. 4. Many ſhould run to and fro, and knowledge ſhould be increaſed. The flights and hurryings of men ſhould enlarge the Territories of the Goſpel. There was not a Tribunal, but the primitive Chriſtians were cited to; not a horrible Puniſhment, but was inflicted upon them. Treated they were, as the dregs and offals of Mankind, as the common Enemies of the world; yet the Flames of the Martyrs brightned the Doctrine and the Captivity of its Profeſſors, made way for the Throne of its Empire. The impriſonment of the Ark was the downfal of Dagon. Religion grew ſtronger by Sufferings, and Chriſtianity taller by Injuries. VVhat can this be aſcribed to, but the conduct of a VViſdom ſuperior to that of Men and Devils, defeating the methods of human and helliſh policy; thereby making the wiſdom of this World fooliſhneſs with God? 1 Cor. 3. 19.

* Acts 8. 3.

Fifthly, The Uſe: I. Of information. If wiſdom be an excellency of the Divine Nature; then

1. Chriſt's Deity may hence be aſſerted. Wiſdom is the emphatical Title of Chriſt in Scripture, Prov. 8. 12, 13, 31. where Wiſdom is brought in ſpeaking as a diſtinct Perſon; aſcribing Counſel, and Underſtanding, and the Knowledg of witty Inventions to it ſelf. He is called alſo the power of God, and the wiſdom

of

Of God. * And the Ancients generally underſtood that place, Col. 2. 3. In him are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge, as an aſſertion of the Godhead of Chriſt, in regard of the infiniteneſs of his knowledg; referring wiſdom to his knowledg of Divine things; and knowledg to his underſtanding of all Human things. But the natural ſenſe of the place ſeems to be this, that all wiſdom and knowledge is diſplayed by Chriſt in the Goſpel; and the words, ἐν αὐτῷ, refer either to Chriſt, or the myſtery of God ſpoken of, verſ. 2. But the Deity of Chriſt, in regard of infinite Wiſdom, may be deduc'd from his Creation of things, and his Government of things; both which are aſcribed to him in Scripture. The firſt aſcribed to him, John 1. 3. All things were made by him; and verſe 27. Without him was not any thing made, that was made. The ſecond John 5. 22. The Father hath committed all Judgment to the Son; and both put together, Col. 2. 16, 17. * 1 Cor. 1. 24.

Now ſince he hath the Government of the World, he hath the Perfections neceſſary to ſo great a Work. As the Creation of the World, which is aſcribed to him, requires an infinite power, ſo the Government of the World requires an infinite wiſdom. That he hath the knowledg of the hearts of men, was proved in handling the Omniſcience of God. That knowledg would be to little purpoſe without wiſdom to order the motions of mens hearts, and conduct all the qualities and actions of Creatures, to ſuch an end as is anſwerable to a wiſe Government; we cannot think ſo great an Imployment can be without an Ability neceſſary for it. The Government of Men and Angels is a great part of the glory of God; and if God ſhould intruſt the greateſt part of his Glory in hands unfit for ſo great a truſt, it would be an argument of weakneſs in God, as it is in men, to pitch upon unfit Inſtruments for particular Charges: Since God hath therefore committed to him his greateſt Glory, the Conduct of all things for the higheſt end, he hath a wiſdom requiſite for ſo great an end, which can be no leſs than infinite: If then Chriſt were a finite Perſon, he would not be capable of an infinite Communication; he could not be a Subject wherein infinite wiſdom could be lodged; for the terms finite and infinite are ſo diſtant, that they cannot commence one another; finite can never be changed into infinite, no more than infinite can into finite.

2. Hence we may aſſert, The right and fitneſs of God for the Government of the World, as he is the wiſeſt Being. Among men, thoſe who are excellent in Judgment, are accounted fitteſt to preſide over, and give orders to others; the wiſeſt in a City are moſt Capable to govern a City; or at leaſt, though ignorant men may bear the Title, yet the advice of the ſoundeſt and skilfulleſt Heads ſhould prevail in all publick Affairs: We ſee in Nature, that the eye guides the body, and the mind directs the eye.

* Power and Wiſdom are the two Arms of Authority: Wiſdom knows the end, and directs the means; Power executes the means deſign'd for ſuch an end. The more ſplendid and ſtrong thoſe are in any, the more Authority reſults from thence, for the conduct of others that are of an inferiour Orb: Now God being infinitely excellent in both, his ability and right to the management of the World, cannot be ſuſpected; the whole World is but one Commonwealth, whereof God is the Monarch. Did the Government of the World depend upon the Election of Men and Angels, where could they pitch, or where would they find perfections capable of ſo great a work, but in the Supream Wiſdom? His VViſdom hath already been apparent in thoſe Laws, whereby he formed the VVorld into a Civil Society, and the Iſraelites into a Commonwealth: The one ſuted to the Conſciences and Reaſons of all his Subjects, and the other ſuted to the Genius of that particular Nation, drawn out of the Righteouſneſs of the Moral Law, and applicable to all Caſes that might ariſe among them in their Government; ſo that Moſes aſſerts, that the wiſdom apparent in their Laws enacted by God, as their chief Magiſtrate, would render them famous among other Nations, in regard of their Wiſdom, as well as their Righteouſneſs, Deut. 4. 6, 7, 9. Alſo this perfection doth evidence, that God doth actually go- * Amyraut. Moral. Tom. 1. p. 258, 259.

vern the World. It would not be a commendable thing for a man, to make a curious Piece of Clock-work, and take no care for the orderly motion of it. Would God diſplay ſo much of his Skill in framing the Heaven and Earth, and none in actual guidence of them to their particular and univerſal ends? Did he lay the Foundation in order, and fit every Stone in the building, make all things in weight and meaſure, to let them afterwards run at hap hazard; Would he bring forth his Power to view in the Creation, and let a more glorious perfection lie idle, when it had ſo large a Field to move in? Infinite wiſdom is inconſiſtent with inactivity. All Prudence doth illuſtrate it ſelf in untying the hardeſt knots, and diſpoſing the moſt difficult Affairs to a happy and ſucceſsful Iſſue: All thoſe various Arts and Inventions among men, which lend their aſſiſting hand to one another, and thoſe various Employments, their ſeveral Genius's led them to, whereby they ſupport one anothers welfare, are Beams and inſtincts of Divine wiſdom in the Government of the World. He that made all things in wiſdom, * would not leave his works to act and move only according to their own folly, and idly behold them jumble together, and run counter to that end he deſigned them for; we muſt not fancy a Divine Wiſdom to be deſtitute of Activity.

* Pſal. 104. 24

3. Here we may ſee a ground of Gods Patience. The moſt impotent perſons are the moſt impatient, when un-foreſeen Emergencies ariſe, or at Events expected by them, when their feeble Prudence was not a ſufficient match to conteſt with them, or prevent them. But the wiſer any man is, the more he bears with thoſe things which ſeem to croſs his Intentions, becauſe he knows he graſps the whole Affair, and is ſure of attaining the end he propoſeth to himſelf; yet as a finite wiſdom can have but a finite patience, ſo an infinite wiſdom poſſeſſes an infinite patience.

The wiſe God intends to bring glory to himſelf, and good to ſome of his Creatures, out of the greateſt evils that can happen in the World: He beholds no exhorbitant Afflictions and monſtrous Actions, but what he can diſpoſe to a good and glorious end, even to *work together for good to them that love God; and therefore doth not preſently fall foul upon the Actors, till he hath wrought out that temporary Glory to himſelf and Good to his People which he deſigns. The times of Ignorance God winks at, till he had brought his Son into the World, and manifeſted his wiſdom in Redemption, and when this was done, he preſſeth men to a *ſpeedy repentance; that as, he forebore puniſhing their Crimes, in order to the diſplaying his wiſdom in the deſign'd Redemption; ſo when he had effected it, they muſt forbear any longer abuſing his Patience.

* Rom. 8. 28.

* Acts 17. 30.

4. Hence appears the Immutability of God in his decrees. He is not deſtitute of a Power and Strength to change his own purpoſes; but his Infinite perfection of Wiſdom is a bar to his laying aſide his Eternal Reſolves, and forming new ones; Iſai. 46. 10. He reſolves the end from the beginning, and his counſel ſtands; ſtands immovable, becauſe it is Counſel. 'Tis an impotent Counſel, that is ſubject to a dayly thwarting it ſelf. Inconſtant Perſons are accounted by Men, deſtitute of a due meaſure of prudence. If God change his Mind, 'tis either for the better or the worſe: if for the better, he was not wiſe in his former purpoſe; if for the worſe, he is not wiſe in his preſent Reſolve. No alteration can be without a reflection of weakneſs upon the former or preſent determination. God muſt either ceaſe to be as Wiſe as he was before, or begin to be wiſer than he was before the change; which to think or imagine is to deny a Deity. If any man change his Reſolution, he is apprehenſive of a flaw in his former Purpoſe, and finds an Inconvenience in it, which moves him to ſuch a change; which muſt be either for want of fore-ſight in himſelf, or want of a due conſideration of the object of his Counſel: Neither of which can be imagined of God without a denial of the Deity. No, there are no blots and blemiſhes in his purpoſes and Promiſes. Repentance indeed is an act of Wiſdom in the Creature; but it preſuppoſeth Folly in his former Actions, which is inconſiſtant with Infinite Perfection. Men are often too raſh in Promiſing; and therefore what they promiſe in haſt, they perform at leaſure, leaſure, or not at all: They conſider not before they Vow, and make After-enquiries, whether they had beſt ſtand to it.

The only wiſe God needs not any After-game: As he is Soveraignly Wiſe, he ſees no cauſe of reverſing any thing, and wants not expedients for his own Purpoſe; and as he is Infinitely Powerful, he hath no Superiour to hinder him from executing his VVill, and making his People enjoy the effects of his Wiſdom If he had a recollectionof Thoughts (as Man hath) and ſaw a neceſſity to mend them, he were not Infinitely VViſe in his firſt Decrees. As in Creation, he looked back upon the ſeveral Pieces of that goodly Frame he had erected, and ſaw them ſo exact, that he did not take up his Penſil again to mend any Particle of the firſt Draught; ſo his Promiſes are made with ſuch Infinite VViſdom and Judgment, that what he writes is Irreverſible and for Ever, as the Decrees of the Medes and Perſians. All the words of God are Eternal, becauſe they are the Births of Righteouſneſs and Judgment, Hoſ. 2. 19. I will betroth thee to me for ever, in Righteouſneſs and Judgment. He is not of a wavering and flitting Diſcretion: If he Threatens, he wiſely conſiders what he Threatens, if he Promiſes, he wiſely conſiders what he Promiſes, and therefore is Immutable in both.

5. Hence it follows, that God is a fit Object for our Truſt and Confidence. For God being Infinitely VViſe, when he Promiſes any thing, he ſees every thing which may hinder, and every thing which may promote the execution of it; ſo that he cannot diſcover any thing afterwards, that may move him to take up After-thoughts, He hath more VViſdom than to promiſe any thing hand over head, or any thing wich he knows he cannot accompliſh. Though God, as True, be the Object of our Truſt; yet God, as Wiſe, is the Foundation of our Truſt. VVe truſt him in his Promiſe; the Promiſe was made by Mercy, and 'tis perform'd by Truth; but VViſdom conducts all Means to the accompliſhment of it. There are many Men, whoſe Honeſty we can confide in, but whoſe Diſcretion we are diffident of: But there is no defect either of the one or the other, which may ſcare us from a depending upon God in our concerns. The words of Mans wiſdom the Apoſtle entitles Enticing, 1 Cor. 2. 4. in oppoſition to the words of Gods Wiſdom, which are firm, ſtable, and undeniable demonſtrations. As the Power of God is an encouragement of Truſt, becauſe he is able to effect; ſo the VViſdom of God comes into the rank of thoſe Attributes which ſupport our Faith. To put a Confidence in him, we muſt be perſwaded, not only that he is Ignorant of nothing in the VVorld, but that he is VViſe to manage the whole courſe of Nature, and diſpoſe of all his Creatures, for the bringing his Purpoſes and his Promiſes to their deſigned perfection.

6. Hence appears the neceſſity of a publick review of the Management of the World, and of a Day of Judgment. As a Day of Judgment may be inferr'd from many Attributes of God; as his Soveraignty, Juſtice, Omniſcience, &c. ſo among the reſt from this of Wiſdom. How much of this Perfection will lie unvail'd and abſcure, if the Sins of Men be not brought to view, whereby the ordering the unrighteous Actions of Men, by his directing and over-ruling Hand of Providence, in ſubſerviency to his own Purpoſes and his Peoples good, may appear in all its glory? VVithout ſuch a publick Review, this part of Wiſdom will not be clearly viſible; how thoſe Actions, which had a vile foundation in the Hearts and deſigns of Men, and were formed there to gratifie ſome baſe Luſt, Ambition, and Covetouſneſs, &c. were by a ſecret Wiſdom preſiding over them, conducted to amazing Ends.

'Tis a part of Divine Wiſdom to right it ſelf, and convince Men of the reaſonableneſs of its Laws, and the unreaſonableneſs of their Contradictions to it. The execution of the Sentence, is an act of Juſtice; but the conviction of the reaſonableneſs of the Sentence, is an act of VViſdom, clearing up the Righteouſneſs of the proceeding; and this precedes, and the other follows, Jude 15. To convince all that are ungodly, of all their ungodly deeds. That Wiſdom which contrived ſatisfaction, as well as that Juſtice which required it, is concerned in righting the Law, which was enacted by it. The VViſdom of a Soveraign Law-giver is ingaged not to ſee his Law vilified and trampled on, and expoſed to the Luſts and Affronts of Men, without being concerned in vindicating the Honour of it. It would appear a Folly to enact and publiſh it, if there were not a Reſolution to right and execute it.

The Wiſdom of God can no more aſſociate Iniquity and Happineſs together, than the Juſtice of God can ſeparate Iniquity from Puniſhment. It would be defective, if it did always tamely bear the Inſolences of Offenders, without a time of remark of their Crimes, and a Juſtification of the Precept rebelliouſly ſpurn'd at. He would be Unwiſe, if he were Unjuſt; Unrighteouſneſs hath no better a Title in Scripture, than that of Folly. 'Tis no part of Wiſdom, to give birth to thoſe Laws which he will always behold ineffectual, and neither vindicate his Law by a due execution of the Penalty, nor right his own Authority, contemn'd in the violation of his Law, by a juſt Revenge. Beſides, What Wiſdom would it be for the Soveraign Judg, to lodg ſuch a Spokeſman for himſelf, as Conſcience in the Soul of Man, if it ſhould be alway found ſpeaking, and at length be found falſe in all that it ſpeaks? There is therefore an apparent proſpect of the Day of Account, from the conſideration of this Perfecton of the Divine Nature.

7. Hence we have a ground for a mighty Reverence and Veneration of the Divine Majeſty. Who can contemplate the Sparklings of this Perfection in the variety of the Works of his hands, and the exact Government of all his Creatures, without a raiſed Admiration of the Excellency of his Being, and a falling flat before him, in a poſture of Reverence to ſo great a Being? Can we behold ſo great a maſs of Matter, digeſted into ſeveral Forms, ſo exact a Harmony and Temperament in all the Creatures, the proportions of Numbers and Meaſures, and one Creature anſwering the Ends and Deſigns of another, the diſtinct Beauties of all, the perpetual Motion of all things without checking one another; the variety of the Nature of things, and all acting according to their Nature with an admirable Agreement; and all together, like differing ſtrings upon an Inſtrument, omitting divers Sounds, but all reduc'd to order in one delightful Leſſon. I ſay, Can we behold all this without Admiring and Adoring the Divine Wiſdom, which appears in all?

And from the Conſideration of this, let us paſs to the Conſideration of his Wiſdom in Redemption; in reconciling divided Intereſts, untying Hard-knots, drawing one contrary out of another; and we muſt needs acknowledg that the Wiſdom of all the Men on Earth, and Angels in Heaven, is worſe than Nothing, and Vanity in compariſon of this vaſt Ocean. And as we have a greater eſteem for thoſe that invent ſome excellent Artificial Engines; what Reverence ought we to have for him that hath ſtampt an unimitable Wiſdom upon all his Works? Nature orders us to give Honour to our Superiours in Knowledg, and confide in their Counſels; but none ought to be Reverenc'd as much as God, ſince none equals him in Wiſdom.

8. If God be Infinitely Wiſe, it ſhews us the neceſſity of our Addreſs to him, and Invocation of his Name. We are ſubject to Miſtakes, and often overſeen; we are not able rightly to Counſel our ſelves. In ſome caſes all Creatures are too ſhort-ſighted to apprehend them, and too ignorant to give Advice proper for them, and to contrive Remedies for their eaſe; but with the Lord there is Counſel, Jer. 32. 19 He is great in counſel, and mighty in working; great in Counſel to adviſe us, mighty in Working to aſſiſt us. We know not how to effect a deſign, or prevent an expected Evil. We have an Infinite Wiſdom to go to, that is every way skilful to manage any buſineſs we deſire, to avert any Evil we fear, to accompliſh any thing we commit into his hands. When we know not what to reſolve, he hath a Counſel to guide us, Pſal. 73. 24. He is not more Powerful to effect what is needful, than Wiſe to direct what is fitting. All Men ſtand in need of the Help of God; as one Man ſtands in need of the aſſiſtance of other Men, and will not do any thing without Advice; and he that takes Advice, deſerves the Title of a Wiſe man, as well as he that gives Advice. But no Man needs ſo much the Advice of another Man, as all Men need the Counſel and Aſſiſtance of God: Neither is any mans Wit and Wiſdom ſo far inferiour to the Prudence and ability of an Angel, as the Wiſdom of the wiſeſt man and the moſt ſharp-ſighted Angel, is inferiour to the Infinite Wiſdom of God. We ſee therefore, that it is beſt for us to go to the Fountain, and not content our ſelves with the Streams; to beg Advice from a Wiſdom that is Infinite and Infallible, rather than from that which is Finite and Fallible.

lity

Uſe II. If Wiſdom be the Perfection of the Divine Majeſty, How prodigious is the Contempt of it in the World?

In General.

All Sin ſtrikes at this attribute, and is in one part or other a degrading of it: The firſt Sin directed its Venom againſt this. As the Devils endeavoured to equal their Creator in Power; ſo Man endeavoured to equal him in Wiſdom: Both indeed ſcorn'd to be rull'd by his Order; but Man evidently exalted himſelf againſt the Wiſdom of God, and aſpired to be a ſharer with him in his Infinite Knowledg: Would not let him be the only wiſe God, But cheriſhed an ambition to be his Partner. Juſt as if a Beam were able to imagine, it might be as bright as the Sun; or a Spark fancy, it could be as full fraught with Heat, as the whole Element of Fire. Man would not ſubmit to the Infinite Wiſdom of God in the prohibition of one ſingle Fruit in the Garden, when by the right of his Soveraign Authority, he might have granted him only the uſe of one. All Preſumptuous ſins are of this nature, they are therefore called Reproaches of God, Numb. 15. 30. the Soul that doth ought preſumptuouſly, reproacheth the Lord. All Reproaches are either for Natural, Moral, or Intellectual defects. All Reproaches of God, muſt imply either a Weakneſs or Unrighteouſneſs in God. If Unrighteouſneſs, his Holineſs is denied; if Weakneſs, his Wiſdom is blemiſhed.

In General, All Sin ſtrikes at this Perfection two ways.

1. As it defaceth the wiſe workmanſhip of God. Every Sin is a deforming and blemiſhing our own Souls, which, as they are the prime Creatures in the lower World, ſo they have greater Characters of Divine Wiſdom in the Fabrick of them: But this Image of God is ruin'd and broken by Sin. Though the ſpoiling of it be a ſcorn of his Holineſs, 'tis alſo an affront to his Wiſdom; for though his Power was the cauſe of the production of ſo fair a Piece, yet his Wiſdom was the guide of his Power, and his Holineſs the Patern whereby he wrought it: His Power effected it, and his Holineſs was exemplified in it, but his Wiſdom contrived it.

If a Man had a curious Clock or Watch, which had coſt him many years pains and the ſtrength of his Skill to frame it; for another, after he had ſeen and conſidered it, to trample upon it, and cruſh it in pieces, would argue a contempt of the Artificers Skill. God hath ſhewn infinite Art in the Creation of Man; but Sin unbeautifies Man, and raviſheth his Excellency. It cuts and ſlaſheth the Image of God ſtampt by Divine Wiſdom, as though it were an Object only of Scorn and Contempt. The Sinner in every Sin acts, as if he intended to put himſelf in a better poſture, and in a fairer dreſs, than the Wiſdom of God hath put him in by Creation.

2. In the ſlighting his Laws. The Laws of God are highly Rational; they are drawn from the depths of the Divine Underſtanding, wherein there is no unclearneſs, and no defect. As his Underſtanding apprehends all things in their true Reaſon; ſo his Will enjoyns all things for worthy and wiſe Ends: His Laws are contrived by his Wiſdom for the happineſs of Man, whoſe Happineſs, and the Methods to it, he underſtands better than Men or Angels can do. His Laws being the Orders of the Wiſeſt Underſtanding, every breach of his Law is a flying in the Face of his Wiſdom. All Human Laws, though they are enforced by Soveraign Authority; yet they are, or ought to be in the compoſing of them, founded upon Reaſon, and ſhould be particular applications of the Law of Nature, to this or that particular emergency. The Laws of God then, who is ſumma ratio, are the birth of the trueſt Reaſon; though the Reaſon of every one of them may not be ſo clear to us.

Every Law, though it conſiſts in an act of the Will, yet doth preſuppoſe an act of the Underſtanding. The act of the Divine Underſtanding in framing the Law, Law, muſt be ſuppoſed to precede the act of his Will, in commanding the obſervance of that Law. So every Sin againſt the Law, is not only againſt the Will of God commanding, but the Reaſon of God contriving; and a cleaving to our own Reaſon, rather than the Underſtanding or Mind of God: As if God had miſtaken in making his Law, and we had more underſtanding to frame a better, and more conducing to our happineſs: As if God were not VViſe enough to govern us, and preſcribe what we ſhould do, and what we ſhould avoid; as if he deſigned not our welfare, but our misfortune.

VVhereas the Precepts of God are not tyrannical Edicts, or Acts of meer VVill, but the fruits of Counſel; and therefore every breach of them is a real declamation againſt his Diſcretion and Judgment, and preferring our own Imaginations, or the Suggeſtions of the Devil, as our Rule, before the Reſults of Divine Counſel: VVhile we acknowledg him VViſe in our Opinion, we ſpeak him Fooliſh by our Practice; when inſtead of being guided by him, we will guide our ſelves. No Man will queſtion, but it is a controuling Divine Wiſdom, to make Alterations in his Precepts; dogmatically, either to add ſome of their own, or expunge any of his: And is it not a Crime of the like reflection to alter them Practically? VVhen we will obſerve one part of the Law, and not another part; but pick and chooſe where we pleaſe our ſelves, as our Humors and Carnal Intereſt prompts us. It is to charge that part of the Law with Folly, which we refuſe to conform unto.

The more cunning any Man is in Sin, the more his ſin is againſt Divine Wiſdom, as if he thought to out-wit God. He that receives the Promiſes of God, and the Teſtimony of Chriſt, ſets to his Seal, that God is true, John 3. 33. By the like ſtrength of Argument it will undeniably follow, That he that refuſeth Obedience to his Precept, ſets to his Seal that God is fooliſh. VVere they not Rational, God would not enjoyn them; and if they are Rational, we are Enemies to Infinite VViſdom, by not complying with them. If Infinite Prudence hath made the Law, why is not every part of it obſerved; if it were not made with the beſt Wiſdom, why is any part of it obſerved? If the defacing his Image be any Sin, as being a defaming his Wiſdom in Creation; the breaking his Law is no leſs a Sin, as being a diſgracing his Wiſdom in his Adminiſtration. 'Tis upon this account, likely, that the Scripture ſo often counts Sinners Fools, ſince it is certainly inexcuſable Folly, to contradict undeniable and infallible Wiſdom; yet this is done in the leaſt Sin: And as he that breaks one tittle of the Law, is deſervedly accounted guilty of the breach of the whole, James 2. 10. ſo he that deſpiſeth the leaſt ſtamp of Wiſdom in the minuteſt part of the Law, is deſervedly counted as a Contemner of it, in the frame of the whole Statute-Book.

But in Particular, the Wiſdom of God is affronted and Invaded.

1. By introducing new Rules and Modes of VVorſhip, different from Divine Inſtitutions. Is not this a manifeſt reflection on this Perfection of God, as though he had not been Wiſe enough to provide for his own Honour, and model his own Service; but ſtood in need of our directions, and the caprichio's of our Brains? Some have obſerved, that it is a greater Sin in Worſhip to do what we ſhould not, than to omit what we ſhould perform *. The one ſeems to be out of weakneſs, becauſe of the high exactneſs of the Law; and the other out of impudence, accuſing the Wiſdom of God of Imperfection, and controuling it in its Inſtitutions. At beſt, it ſeems to be an Imputation of Human Baſhfulneſs to the Supream Soveraign; as if he had been aſhamed to preſcribe all that was neceſſary to his own Honour, but had left ſomething to the Ingenuity and Gratitude of Men.

* Strong of the Will.

Man has ever ſince the fooliſh Conceit of his old Anceſtor Adam, preſumed he could be as Wiſe as God; and if he who was created upright entertain'd ſuch Conceits, much more doth Man now, under a maſs of Corruption, ſo capable to foment them. This hath been the continual practice of Men; not ſo much to reject what once they had received as Divine, but to add ſomething of their own Inventions to it.

The Heathens renounced not the Sacrificing of Beaſts for the expiation of their offences (which the Old World had received by Tradition from Adam, and the New World, after the Deluge, from Noah.) But they had blended that Tradition with Rites of their own, and offered Creatures unclean in themſelves, and not fit to be offered to an Infinitely pure being; for the diſtinction of Clean and Unclean, was as Ancient as Noah, Gen. 8. 20. yea before, Gen. 7. 2.

Offences

So the Jews did not diſcard what they had received from God, as Circumciſion, the Paſſeover, and Sacrifices; but they would mix a heap of Heatheniſh Rites with the Ceremonies of Divine Ordination, and practice things which he had not commanded, as well as things which he had enjoyned them. And therefore 'tis obſervable, that when God taxeth them with this Sin; he doth not ſay, They brought in thoſe things which he had forbidden into his Worſhip; but thoſe things which he had not commanded, and had given no order for, to intimate, that they were not to move a ſtep without his Rule; (Jer. 7. 31. They have built the high places of Tophet, which I commanded them not, nor came it into my heart; and Levit. 10. 1. Nadabs and Abihu's ſtrange Fire was not commanded;) ſo charging them with Impudence and Raſhneſs in adding ſomething of their own, after he had revealed to them the manner of his ſervice, as if they were as Wiſe as God. So loth is Man to acknowledg the Supremacy of Divine Underſtanding, and be ſenſible of his own Ignorance.

So after the divulging of the Goſpel, the Corrupters of Religion did not fling off, but preſerved the Inſtitutions of God, but painted and patch'd them up with Pagan Ceremonies; impoſed their own Dreams with as much force, as the Revelations of God. Thus hath the Papacy turn'd the Simplicity of the Goſpel into Pagan Pomp, and Religion into Politicks; and revived the Ceremonial Law, and raked ſome Limbs of it out of the Grave, after the Wiſdom of God had rung her Knell, and honorably Interr'd her; and ſhelter'd the Heatheniſh Superſtitions in Chriſtian Temples, after the Power of the Goſpel had chas'd the Devils, with all their Trumpery, from their ancient Habitations.

VVhence ſhould this proceed, but from a partial Atheiſme, and a mean conceit of the Divine Wiſdom? As though God had not Underſtanding enough to preſcribe the Form of his own VVorſhip; and not VViſdom enough to ſupport it, without the Crutches of Human Prudence.

Human Prudence is too low to parallel Divine Wiſdom; 'tis an incompotent Judge of what is fit for an Infinite Majeſty. 'Tis ſufficiently ſeen in the ridiculous and ſenſeleſs Rites among the Heathens; and the Cruel and Deviliſh ones, fetch'd from them by the Jews. VVhat work will Human VViſdom make with Divine VVorſhip, when it will preſume to be the Director of it, as a Mate with the Wiſdom of God? VVhence will it take its meaſures, but from Senſe, Humor, and Fancy? As though what is grateful and comely to a depraved Reaſon, were as beautiful to an unſpotted, and Infinite Mind. Do not ſuch tell the VVorld, that they were of Gods Cabinet Counſel, ſince they will take upon them to judge, as well as God, what is well pleaſing to him? VVhere will it have the humility to ſtop, if it hath the preſumption to add any one thing to Revealed Modes of VVorſhip; How did God tax the Iſraelites with making Idols according to their own underſtanding? Hoſ. 13. 2. imagining their own Underſtandings to be of a finer make, and a perfecter Mould than their Creators; and that they had fetched more light from the Chaos of their own Brains, than God had from Eternity in his own Nature? How ſlight will the Excuſe be, God hath not forbidden this, or that, when God ſhall ſilence Men with the Queſtion, VVhere, or when did I command this, or that? There was no Addition to be made under the Law to the meaneſt Inſtrument God had appointed in his Service. The Sacred Perfume was not to have one Ingredient more put into it, than what God had preſcribed in the Compoſition; nor was any Man upon pain of Death to imitate it; nor would God endure, that Sacrifices ſhould be conſum'd with any other Fire, than that which came down from Heaven. So tender is God of any Invaſions of his VViſdom and Authority. In all things of this Nature, whatſoever voluntary humility and reſpect to God they may be diſguiſed with, there is a ſwelling of the fleſhly mind againſt Infinite Underſtanding, which the Apoſtle nauſeates, Coloſſ. 2. 18.

Such

Such Mixtures have not been bleſt by God: As God never proſper'd the Mixtures of ſeveral kinds of Creatures, to form and multiply a new Species, as being a diſſatisfaction with his Wiſdom, as Creator; ſo he doth not proſper Mixtures in Worſhip, as being a Conſpiracy againſt his Wiſdom, as a Law-giver. * The Deſtruction of the Jews, was judged by ſome of their Doctors to be, for preferring Human Traditions before the Written Word; which they ground on Iſa. 29. 33. Their fear of me was taught by the Precepts of Men. The Injunctions of Men were the Rule of their Worſhip, and not the Preſcripts of my Law.

* Vaſin. The Talmud takes notice, that the Court of Bethany was waſted three years before Jeruſalem, becauſe they preferred their own words before the words of the Law.

To conclude, Such as make Alterations in Religion, different from the firſt Inſtitution, are intollerable Buſie-Bodies, that will not let God alone with his own Affairs. Vain Man would be wiſer than his Maker, and be dabbling in that which is his ſole Prerogative.

2. In neglecting Means Inſtituted by God. When Men have riſings of heart againſt God Ordinances, They reject the counſel of the Lord againſt themſelves, or in themſelves, Luke 7. 30. εἰς ἑαυτοὺς. They diſannull'd the Wiſdom of God, the Spring of his Ordinances: All neglects are diſregards of Divine Preſcriptions, as impertinent and unavailable to that End for which they were appointed, as not being ſuted to the common dictates of Reaſon; ſometimes out of a Voluntary humility, ſuch as Peters was, when he denied Chriſts condeſcenſion to waſh his feet, John 13. 8. and thereby judged of the comelineſs of his Maſters intention and action. Such as continually neglect the great Inſtitution of the Lords Supper out of a ſenſe of Unworthineſs, are in the ſame rank with Peter, and do, as well as he, fall under the blame and reproof of Chriſt.

Men would be ſaved, and uſe the Means; but either Means of their own Appointment, or not all the Means of Gods ordering *. They would have Gods Wiſdom and Will condeſcend to theirs, and not theirs conformed to God. As if our blind Judgments were fitteſt to make the election of the Paths to Happineſs. Like Naaman, who when he was ordered by the Prophet, for the cure of his Leproſie, to waſh ſeven times in Jordan, would be the Prophets Director, and have him touch him with his Hand: As if a Patient ſick of a deſperate Diſeaſe, ſhould Preſcribe to his Skilful Phyſician, what Remedies he ſhould order for his Cure, and make his own infirm Reaſon, or his Guſt and Palate the Rule, rather than the Phyſicians Skill.

* Pont. Medit. part. 3. p. 366.

Mens Inquiries are, VVho will ſhew us any good? They rather faſten upon any Means, than what God hath ordained. * We invert the Order Divine Wiſdom hath eſtableiſhed, when we would have God ſave us in our own way, not in his. 'Tis the ſame thing, as if we would have God nouriſh us without Bread, and cure our Diſeaſes without Medicines, and increaſe our Wealth without our Induſtry, and cheriſh our Souls without his Word and Ordinances. 'Tis to demand of him an alteration of his Methods, and a ſeparation of that which he hath by his Eternal Judgment joyned together. Therefore for a Man to pray to God to ſave him, when he will not uſe the Means he hath appointed for Salvation, when he ſlights the Word, which is the Inſtrument of Salvation, is a Contempt of the VViſdom of Divine Inſtitutions.

* Durant. de Tent. p. 403, 404.

Alſo in Omiſſions of Prayer; when we conſult not with God upon emergent Occaſions, we truſt more to our own wiſdom than Gods, and imply, that we ſtand not in need of his Conduct, but have ability to direct our ſelves, and accompliſh our Ends without his guidance. Not ſeeking God, is by the Prophet tax'd to be a reflection upon this Perfection of God, Iſai. 31. 1, 2. They look not to the Holy One of Iſrael, neither ſeek the Lord, &c. And the like Charge he brings againſt them, Hoſ. 8. 9. They are gone up to Aſſyria, a wild Aſs alone by himſelf, not conſulting God.

3. In cenſuring Gods Revelations and Actions, if they be not according to our Schemes. When we will not ſubmit to his plain Will, without penetrating into the unrevelated Reaſon of it, nor adore his Counſels without controuling them; as if we could correct both Law and Goſpel, and frame a better Method of Redemption than that of Gods contriving. Thus Men ſlighted the VViſdom of God in the Goſpel, becauſe it did not gree with that Philoſophical Wiſdom and Reaſon

Reaſon they had ſuckt in by Education from their Maſters*, contrary to their Practice in their Superſtitious Worſhip; where the Oracles they thought Divine, were entertained with Reverence, not with Diſpute; and though ambiguous, were not counted ridiculous by the Worſhipper. How fooliſh is man in this, wherein he would be accounted wiſe? Adam in Innocence was unfit to controul the Doctrine of God, when the Eye of his Reaſon was clear; and much more are we, ſince the depravation of our Nature. * 1 Cor. 1.21 22.

The Revelations of God tower above Reaſon in its Purity; much more above Reaſon in its Mud and Earthineſs. The Rays of Divine Wiſdom are too bright for our Human Underſtandings, much more for our Sinful Underſtandings. 'Tis baſe to ſet up Reaſon, a Finite principle, againſt an Infinite Wiſdom; much baſer to ſet up a depraved and purblind Reaſon, againſt an All-ſeeing and holy Wiſdom. If we would have a Reaſon for all that God ſpeaks, and all that God acts; our Wiſdom muſt become Infinite as his, or his Wiſdom become Finite as ours.

All the Cenſures of Gods Revelations ariſe from ſome prejudicate Opinions, or Traditional Maximes, that have enthroned themſelves in our Minds, which are made the Standard whereby to judge of the things of God, and receive or reject them, as they agree with, or diſſent from, thoſe *Principles. Hence it was that the Philoſophers in the Primitive Times were the greateſt Enemies to the Goſpel: And the Contempt of Divine Wiſdom, in making Reaſon the Supream Judg of Divine Revelation, was the fruitful Mother of the Hereſies in all Ages ſpringing up in the Church, and eſpecially of that Socinianiſm, that daily inſinuates it ſelf into the minds of Men. * Coloſſ. 2. 8.

This is a wrong to the Wiſdom of God. He that cenſures the Words or Actions of another, implies, that he is in his Cenſure wiſer than the Perſon cenſured by him. 'Tis as inſupportable to determine the Truth of Gods plain Dictates by our Reaſon, as it is to meaſure the ſtableneſs or unſtableneſs of his Actions by the humour of our Will. We may ſooner think to ſpan the Sun, or graſp a Star, or ſee a Gnat ſwallow a Leviathan, than fully underſtand the Debates of Eternity.

To this we may refer too curious Enquiries into Divine Methods, and intruding into thoſe things which are not revealed, Coloſſ. 2. 18. It is to affect a Wiſdom equal with God, and an Ambition to be of his Cabinet-Counſel. We are not content to be Creatures, that is, to be every way below God; below him in Wiſdom, as well as Power

4. In preſcribing God methods of Acting. When we pray for a thing without a due ſubmiſſion to Gods Will; as if we were his Counſellors, yea his Tutors, and not his Subjects, and God were bound to follow our humors, and be ſwayed according to the Judgment of our Ignorance; when we would have ſuch a mercy which God thinks not fit to give, or have it in this method, which God deſigns to convey through another Chanel. Thus we would have the only wiſe God take his meaſures from our Paſſions: Such a controuling of God was Jonahs Anger about a Gourd, Jonah 3. 10. It diſpleaſed Jonah exceedingly, and he was very angry.

We would direct him how to diſpoſe of us; as though he that had Infinite Wiſdom to contrive, and rear the Excellent Fabrick of the World, had not Wiſdom enough, without our Diſcretion, to place us in a ſphere proper for his own Ends, and the uſe he intends us in the Univerſe. All the Speeches of Men, (Would I had been in ſuch an Office, had ſuch Charge: Would I had ſuch a Mercy, in ſuch a method, or by ſuch inſtruments) are Intrenchments upon Gods wiſe diſpoſal of Affairs.

This impoſing upon God is a Helliſh diſpoſition, and in Hell we find it. The Rich man in Hell, that pretends ſome Charity for his Brethren on Earth, would direct God a way to prevent their ruin, by ſending one from the dead to ſchool them, as a more effectual Means than Moſes and the Prophets, Luke 16. 29, 30. 'Tis a Temper alſo to be found on Earth; what elſe was the language of Sauls ſaving the Amalekites Cattle againſt the plain Command of God, 1 Sam. 15. 15. As if God in his Fury had overſhot himſelf, and overlooked his Altar, in depriving it of ſo great a Booty for its Service: As if it were an unwiſe thing in God, to loſe the Prey of ſo many ſtately Cattle, that might make the Altar ſmoke with their Entrails, and ſerve to expiate the Sins of the People; and therefore he would rectifie that which he thought to be an overſight in God, and ſo magnifies his own Prudence and Diſcretion above the Divine.

We will not let God act as he thinks fit, but will be directing him, and teaching him knowledg, Job 21. 22. As if God were a Statue, an Idol, that had Eyes and ſaw not, Hands, but acted not; and could be turned as an Image may be, to what quarter of the Heaven we pleaſe out ſelves. The Wiſdom of God is unbyaſt; he orders nothing but what is fitteſt for his End, and we would have our ſhallow Brains the byaſs of Gods acting. And will not God reſent ſuch an Indignity, as a reflection upon his Wiſdom as well as Authority, when we intimate that we have better Heads than he, and that he comes ſhort of us in Underſtanding?

5. In Murmuring and Impatience. One demands a Reaſon, why he hath this or that Croſs? Why he hath been deprived of ſuch a Comfort, loſt ſuch a Venture, languiſheth under ſuch a Sickneſs, is tormented with ſuch Pains, oppreſt by Tyrannical Neighbours, is unſucceſsful in ſuch Deſigns? In theſe, and ſuch like the Wiſdom of God is queſtioned and defam'd. All Impatience, is a ſuſpicion, if not a condemnation of the Prudence of Gods Methods, and would make Human Feebleneſs and Folly the Rule of Gods dealing with his Creatures. This is a preſuming to inſtruct God, and a reproving him for Unreaſonableneſs in his Proceedings, when his dealings with us do not exactly anſwer our Fancies and Wiſhes; as if God, who made the World in Wiſdom, wanted Skill for the management of his Creatures in it. Job 40. 2. Shall he that contends with the Almighty inſtruct him? he that reproveth God, let him anſwer it. VVe that are not wiſe enough to know our ſelves, and what is needful for us; preſume to have VVit enough to guide God in his dealing with us. The Wiſdom of God rendred Job more uſeful to the VVorld by his Afflictions, in making him a Pattern of Patience, than if he had continued him in a confluence of all VVorldy Comforts, wherein he had been beneficial only in communicating his Morſels to his Poor Neighbours. All Murmuring is a faſtening Error upon unerring Wiſdom.

6. In Pride and Haughtineſs of Spirit. No Proud man, but ſets his Heart as the heart of God, Ezek. 28. 2, 3. The Wiſdom of God hath given to Men divers Offices, ſet them in divers places; ſome have more honourable Charges, ſome meaner. Not to give that reſpect their Offices and Places call for, is to quarrel with the Wiſdom of God, and overturn the Rank and Order wherein he hath placed things.

'Tis unfit we ſhould affront God in the diſpoſal of his Creatures, and intimate to him by our Carriage, that he had done more wiſely in placing another, and that he hath done fooliſhly in placing this or that Man in ſuch a Charge. Sometimes Men are unworthy the Place they fill; they may be ſet there in Judgment to themſelves and others: But the Wiſdom of God in his management of things, is to be honoured and regarded.

'Tis an infringing the Wiſdom of God, when we have a vain Opinion of our ſelves, and are blind to others. VVhen we think our ſelves Monarchs, and treat others as Worms or Flies in compariſon of us. He who would reduce all things to his own honour, perverts the Order of the VVorld, and would conſtitute another Order than what the Wiſdom of God hath eſtabliſhed; and move them to an End contrary to the intention of God, and charges God with want of Diſcretion and Skill.

7. Diſtruſt of Gods Promiſe is an impeachment of his Wiſdom. A ſecret Reviling of it, as if he had not taken due conſideration before he paſt his VVord; or a ſuſpition of his Power, as if he could not accompliſh his VVord. VVe truſt the Phyſicians Skill with our Bodies, and the Lawyers Counſel with our Eſtates; but are loath to rely upon God for the concerns of our Lives. If he be VViſe to diſpoſe of us, why do we diſtruſt him? If we diſtruſt him, why do we embrace an opinion of his VViſdom.

Unbelief alſo is a contradiction to the Wiſdom of God in the Goſpel, &c. but that I have already handled in a Diſcourſe of the Nature of Unbelief

III. Uſe

III. Uſe of Comfort. God hath an Infinite VViſdom, to conduct us in our Affairs, rectifie us in our Miſtakes, and aſſiſt us in our Straits. 'Tis an ineſtimable priviledg to have a God in Covenant with us; ſo VViſe, to communicate all Good to prevent all Evil; who hath Infinite ways to bring to paſs his gracious Intentions towards us. How unſearchable are his Judgments, and his ways paſt finding out? Rom. 11. 33. His Judgment or Decrees are incomprehenſibly VViſe, and the ways of effecting them, are as wiſe as his Reſolves effected by them. VVe can as little ſearch into his Methods of Acting, as we can into his VViſdom of Reſolving; both his Judgments and VVays are unſearchable.

1. Comfort in all Straits and Afflictions. There is a VViſdom in inflicting them, and a VViſdom in removing them. He is wiſe to ſute his Medicines to the humor of our Diſeaſe, though he doth not to the humor of our VVills: He cannot miſtake the nature of our Diſtemper, or the vertue of his own Phyſick. Like a skilful Phyſician, he ſometimes preſcribes bitter Potions, and ſometimes cheering Cordials, according to the ſtrength of the Malady, and neceſſity of the Patient to reduce him to health. As nothing comes from him, but what is for our good; ſo nothing is acted by him in a raſh and temerarious way. His VViſdom is as Infinite as his Goodneſs; and as exact in managing; as his Goodneſs in plentiful in ſtreaming out to us. He underſtands our Griefs, weighs our Neceſſities, and no Remedies are beyond the reach of his Contrivance. VVhen our feeble VVits are bewildred in a maze, and at the end of their Line for a reſcue; the Remedies unknown to us, are not unknown to God. VVhen we know not how to prevent a Danger, the VViſe God hath a Thouſand Blocks to lay in the way: VVhen we know not how to free our ſelves from an oppreſſive Evil, he hath a Thouſand ways of Relief.

He knows how to Time our Croſſes, and his own Bleſſings. The heart of a VViſe God, as well as the heart of a wiſe Man, diſcerns both time and judgment, Eccleſ. 8. 5. There is as much Judgment in ſending them, as Judgment in removing them. How comfortable is it to think, that our Diſtreſſes, as well as our Deliverances, are the fruits of Infinite Wiſdom? Nothing is done by him too ſoon or too ſlow; but in the true point of Time, with all its due circumſtances, moſt conveniently for his glory and our good. How VViſe is God, to bring the glory of our Salvation out of the depths of a ſeeming Ruin, and make the Evils of Affliction ſubſervient to the good of the Afflicted?

2. In Temptations, his Wiſdom is no leſs employed in permitting them, than in bringing them to a good iſſue. His VViſdom in leading our Saviour to be Tempted of the Devil, was to fit him for our ſuccour; and his Wiſdom in ſuffering us to be Tempted, is to fit us for his own Service, and our Salvation. He makes a Thorn in the fleſh to be an occaſion of a refreſhing Grace to the Spirit, and brings forth cordial Grapes from thoſe pricking Brambles, and magnifies his Grace by his Wiſdom, from the deepeſt ſubtilties of Hell. Let Satans Intentions be what they will, he can be for him at every turn, to out-wit him in his Stratagems, to baffle him in his Enterprizes; to make him inſtrumental for our good, where he deſigns nothing but our hurt. The Lord hath his methods of Deliverance from him, 2. Pet. 2. 9. The Lord knows how to deliver the godly out of Temptation.

3. In Denials, or delays of Anſwers of Prayer. He is gracious to Hear; but he is wiſe to Anſwer in an acceptable time, and ſuccour us in a day proper for our ſalvation, 2 Cor. 6. 2. We have partial Affections to our ſelves, Ignorance is natural to us, Rom. 8. 26, We ask we know not what, becauſe we aſk out of Ignorance. God grants what he knows, what is fit for him to do, and fit for us to receive; and the exact ſeaſon wherein it is fitteſt for him to beſtow a Mercy. As God would have us bring forth our Fruit in ſeaſon, ſo he will ſend forth his Mercies in ſeaſon.

He is wiſe to ſute his Remedy to our Condition, to Time it ſo, as that we ſhall have an evident proſpect of his Wiſdom in it; that more of Divine Skill, and leſs of Human, may appear in the Iſſue. He is ready at our Call; but he will not Anſwer, till he ſee the Seaſon fit to reach out his hand. He is wiſe to prove our Faith, to humble us under the ſenſe of our own Unworthineſs, to whet our Affections, to ſet a better eſtimate on the Bleſſings prayed for, and that he may double the Bleſſing, as we do our Devotion: But when his Wiſdom ſees us fit to receive his Goodneſs, he grants what we ſtand in need of. He is Wiſe to chuſe the fitteſt Time, and Faithful to give the beſt Covenant Mercy.

4. In all Evils threatned to the Church by her Enemies. He hath Knowledg to fore-ſee them, and Wiſdom to diſappoint them; Job 5. 13. He taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs, and the counſel of the froward is carried headlong.

The Church hath the Wiſdom of God, to enter the Liſts with the Policy of Hell. He defeated the Serpent in the firſt Net he laid, and brought a glorious Salvation out of Hells Rubbiſh; and is yet as Skilful to diſappoint the Aftergame of the Serpentine-brood. The Policy of Hell, and the Subtilty of the World, are no better than Folly with God, 1 Cor. 3. 19. All Creatures are Fools, as Creatures, in compariſon with the Creator. The Angels he chargeth with Folly, much more us Sinners.

Depraved Underſtandings are not fit Mates for a pure and unblemiſh'd Mind. Pharaoh, with his wiſdom, finds a Grave in the Sea; and Achitophels Plots are finiſhed in his own murder: He breaks the Enemies by his Power, and orders them by his Skill to be a feaſt to his People. Pſal. 74. 14. Thou brakeſh the Head of the Leviathan, and gaveſt him to be meat to the people in the Wilderneſs. The Spoils of the Egyptians Carkaſſes caſt upon the ſhore ſerved the Iſraelites Neceſſities (or were as Meat to them;) as being a Deliverance the Church might feed upon in all Ages, in a Wilderneſs Condition, to maintain their Faith, the vital Principle of the Soul.

There is a Wiſdom ſuperiour to the ſubtilities of Men, which laughs at their Follies, and hath them in deriſion, Pſal. 2. 4. There is no wiſdom or counſel againſt the Lord, Prov. 21. 30. You never queſtion the wiſdom of an Artiſt, to uſe his File, when he takes it into his hand: Wicked Inſtruments are Gods Axes and Files; let him alone, he hath Skill enough to manage them: God hath too much Affection to deſtroy his People, and Wiſdom enough to beautifie them by the worſt Tools he uſes. He can make all things conſpire in a perfect harmony for his own Ends, and his Peoples good, when they ſee no way to eſcape a Danger feared, or attain a Bleſſing wanted.

Uſe IV.

I. For Exhortation.

1. Meditate on the VViſdom of God in Creation and Government. How little do we think of God when we behold his Works? Our Senſe dwells upon the ſurface of Plants and Animals, beholds the variety of their Colours, and the progreſs in their Motion: Our Reaſon ſtudies the qualities of them; our Spirits ſeldom take a flight to the Divine VViſdom which framed them. Our Senſes engroſs our Minds from God, that we ſcarce have a Thought free to beſtow upon the Maker of them, but only on the by. The conſtancy of ſeeing things that are common, ſtifles our admiration of God, due upon the ſight of them. How ſeldom do we raiſe our Souls as far as Heaven in our views of the Order of the World, the Revolutions of the Seaſons, the Natures of the Creatures that are common among us, and the mutual Aſſiſtances they give to each other? Since God hath manifeſted himſelf in them, to neglect the Conſideration of them, is to neglect the Manifeſtation of God, and the way whereby he hath tranſmitted ſomething of his Perfections to our Underſtanding. It renders Men inexcuſably guilty of not glorifying of God, Rom. 1. 19, 20. We can never neglect the meditation of the Creatures, without a blemiſh caſt upon the Creators Wiſdom. As every River can conduct us to the Sea; ſo every Creature points us to an Ocean of Infinite VViſdom. Not the minuteſt of them, but rich tracts of this may be obſerved in them, and a due ſenſe of God reſult from them. They are expoſed to our view, that ſomething of God may be lodged in our Minds; that as our Bodies extract their quinteſſence for our Nouriſhment, ſo our Minds may extract a quinteſſence for the Makers Praiſe.

Though God is principally to be praiſed in and for Chriſt; yet as Grace doth not raze out the Law of Nature, ſo the operations of Grace put not the dictates ſtates of Nature to ſilence, nor ſuſpend the Homage due to God upon our inſpection of his Works. God hath given full Teſtimonies of this Perfection in the Heavenly Bodies, diſperſing their Light, and diſtributing their Influences to every part of the World: In framing Men into Societies, giving them various Diſpoſitions, for the preſervation of Governments; making ſome VViſe for Counſel, others Martial for Action; changing Old Empires, and raiſing New. VVhich way ſoever we caſt our Eyes, we ſhall find frequent occaſions to cry out, Oh the depth of the Riches, both of the VViſdom and Knowledg of God, Rom. 11. 33.

To this purpoſe, we muſt not only look upon the bulk and outſide of his Works, but conſider from what Principles they were raiſed, in what order diſpoſed, and the exact ſymmetry and proportion of their parts. VVhen a Man comes into a City or Temple, and only conſiders the ſurface of the Buildings, they will amaze his Senſe, but not better his Underſtanding; unleſs he conſiders the Methods of the Work, and the Art whereby it was erected.

1. This was an End for which they were created. God did not make the World for Mans uſe only, but chiefly for his own Glory; for Mans uſe to enjoy his Creatures, and for his own Glory to be acknowledged in his Creatures, that we may conſider his Art in framing them, and his Skill in diſpoſing them; and not only gaze upon the Glaſs without conſidering the Image it repreſents, and acquainting our ſelves whoſe Image it is. The Creatures were not made for themſelves, but for the ſervice of the Creator, and the ſervice of Man. Man was not made for himſelf, but for the Service of the Lord that created him. He his to conſider the beauty of the Creation, that he may thereby glorifie the Creator. He knows in part their excellency; the Creatures themſelves do not. If therefore Man be idle and unobſervant of them, he deprives God of the glory of his VViſdom, which he ſhould have by his Creatures.

The Inferiour Creatures themſelves cannot obſerve it. If Man regard it not, what becomes of it; his Glory can only be handed to him by Man. The other Creatures cannot be active Inſtruments of his Glory, becauſe they know not themſelves, and therefore cannot render him an active Praiſe. Man is therefore bound to praiſe God for himſelf, and for all his Creatures; becauſe he only knows himſelf, and the Perfections of the Creatures, and the Author both of himſelf and them.

God Created ſuch Variety, to make a Report of himſelf to us; we are to receive the Report, and to reflect it back to him. To what purpoſe did he make ſo many things, not neceſſary, for the ſupport and pleaſure of our Lives, but that we ſhould behold him in them, as well as in the other?

We cannot behold the VViſdom of God in his own Eſſence and Eternal Idea's, but by the reflection of it in the Creatures: As we cannot ſteadily behold the Sun with our Eye, but either through a Glaſs, or by reflection of the Image of it in the Water. God would have us meditate on his Perfections; he therefore choſe the ſame Day wherein he reviewed his Work, and reſted from it, to be celebrated by Man for the contemplation of him, Gen. 2. 2, 3. that we ſhould follow his Example, and rejoyce as himſelf did, in the frequent reviews of his Wiſdom and Goodneſs in them. In vain would the Creatures afford Matter for this ſtudy, if they were wholly neglected.

God offers ſomething to our Conſideration in every Creature: Shall the Beams of God ſhine round about us, and ſtrike our Eyes and not affect our Minds? Shall we be like Ignorant Children, that view the Pictures, or point to the Letters in a Book without any ſenſe and meaning? How ſhall God have the homage due to him from his Works, if Man hath no care to obſerve them? The 148. Pſalm. is an Exhortation to this, The view of them ſhould often extract from us a wonder of the like nature of that of Davids, Pſal. 104.24. Oh Lord, how wonderful are the VVorks, in wiſdom haſt thou made them all. The World was not Created to be forgotten, nor Man created to be unobſervant of it.

2. If we obſerve not the VViſdom of God in the views of the Creatures, we do no more than Brutes. To look upon the Works of God in the World, is no higher an act than meer Animals perform. The Glories of Heaven, and Beauties of the Earth, are viſible to the ſenſe of Beaſts and Birds. A Brute beholds the motion of a Man, as it may ſee the Wheels of a Clock, but underſtands not the inward Springs of Motion; the End for which we move, or the Soul that acts us in our motion; much leſs that Inviſible Power which preſides over the Creatures, and conducts their motion. If a Man do no more than this, he goes not a ſtep beyond a Brutiſh Nature, and may very well acknowledg himſelf with Aſaph, a fooliſh and ignorant Beaſt before God, Pſal. 73. 22. The World is viewed by Beaſts, but the Author of it to be contemplated by Man. Since we are in a higher rank than Beaſts, we owe a greater Debt than Beaſts; not only to enjoy the Creatures, as they do, but behold God in the Creatures, which they cannot do.

of

The Contemplation of the Reaſon of God in his Works, is a noble and ſutable employment for a Rational Creature: We have not only Senſe to perceive them, but Souls to mind them. The Soul is not to be without its operation: Where the operation of ſenſe ends, the work of the Soul ought to begin. We travel over them by our Senſes, as Brutes; but we muſt pierce further by our Underſtandings, as men, and perceive and praiſe him that lies Inviſible, in his viſible Manufactures. Our Senſes are given us as Servants to the Soul, and our Souls, beſtowed upon us for the knowledg and praiſe of their and our Common Creator.

3. This would be a means to increaſe our Humility. We ſhould then flag our Wings, and vail our Sails, and acknowledg our own wiſdom to be as a drop to the Ocean, and a Shadow to the Sun. We ſhould have mean thoughts of the Nothingneſs of our Reaſon, when we conſider the ſublimity of the Divine Wiſdom. Who can ſeriouſly conſider the Sparks of Infinite Skill in the Creature, without falling down at the feet of the Divine Majeſty, and acknowledging himſelf a dark and fooliſh Creature, Pſal. 8. 4, 5. VVhen the Pſalmiſt conſidered the Heavens, the Moon and Stars, and Gods ordination and diſpoſal of them, the uſe that reſult from it, is, VVhat is Man, that thou art mindful of him? We ſhould no more think to mate him in Prudence, or ſet up the ſpark of our Reaſon to vie with the Sun. Our Reaſon would more willingly ſubmit to the Revelation, when the Characters of Divine VViſdom are ſtampt upon it, when we find his VViſdom in Creation incomprehenſible to us.

4. It would help us in our acknowledgments of God, for his Goodneſs to us. When we behold the Wiſdom of God in Creatures below us, and how ignorant they are of what they poſſeſs. It will cauſe us to reflect upon the deeper Impreſſions of Wiſdom in the frame of our own Bodies and Souls, an excellency far ſuperiour to theirs; this would make us admire the magnificence of his Wiſdom and Goodneſs, and ſound forth his Praiſe for advancing us in dignity above other Works of his hands, and ſtamping on us by Infinite Art, a Nobler Image of himſelf.

And by ſuch a Compariſon of our ſelves with the Creatures below us, we ſhould be induced to act excellently, according to the nature of our Souls; not brutiſhly, according to the nature of the Creatures God hath put under our feet.

5. By the Contemplation of the Creatures, we may receive ſome aſſiſtance in clearing our knowledg in the VViſdom of Redemption. Though they cannot of themſelves inform us of it; yet ſince God hath revealed his Redeeming Grace, they can illuſtrate ſome particulars of it to us. Hence the Scripture makes uſe of the Creatures, to ſet forth things of a higher orb to us: Our Saviour is called a Sun, a Vine, and a Lion; the Spirit likened to a Dove, Fire, and VVater. The Union of Chriſt and his Church, is ſet forth by the Marriage Union of Adam and Eve.

God hath placed in Corporeal things the Images of Spiritual, and wrapped up in his Creating VViſdom the repreſentations of his Redeeming Grace: Whence ſome call the Creatures, Natural Types of what was to be tranſacted in a new formation of the World, and Alluſions to what God intended in and by Chriſt.

6. The Meditation of Gods VViſdom in the Creatures, is in part a beginning of

Heaven

Heaven upon Earth. No doubt but there will be a perfect opening of the Model of Divine Wiſdom. Heaven is for clearing what is now obſcure, and a full diſcovering of what ſeems at preſent intricate. Pſal. 36.9. In his light ſhall we ſee light: All the Light in Creation, Government, and Redemption. The Wiſdom of God in the New Heavens, and the New Earth, would be to little purpoſe if that alſo were not to be regarded by the Inhabitants of them. As the Saints are to be reſtored to the ſtate of Adam and higher; ſo they are to be reſtored to the employment of Adam, and higher: But his employment, was to behold God in the Creatures. The World was ſo ſoon depraved, that God had but little joy in, and Man but little knowledg of his Works.

And ſince the Wiſdom of God in Creation is ſo little ſeen by our Ignorance here, would not God loſe much of the glory of it, if the glorified Souls ſhould loſe the underſtanding of it above; When their Darkneſs ſhall be expelled, and their Advantages improved; when the Eye that Adam loſt, ſhall be fully reſtored, and with a greater clearneſs; when the Creature ſhall be reſtored to its true End, and Reaſon to its true Perfection *; when the Fountains of the depths of Nature and Government ſhall be opened, Knowledg ſhall increaſe, and according to the increaſe of our Knowledg, ſhall the admiration of Divine Wiſdom increaſe alſo.

* Rom. 8. 21. 22.

The Wiſdom of God in Creation, was not ſurely intended to lie wholly unobſerved in the greateſt part of it; but ſince there was ſo little time for the full obſervation of it, there will be a time wherein the Wiſdom of God ſhall enjoy a reſurrection, and be fully contemplated by his underſtanding and glorified Creature.

II. Exhortation. Study and admire the Wiſdom of God in Redemption. This is the Duty of all Chriſtians. We are not called to underſtand the great depth of Phyloſophy; we are not called to a skill in the Intricacies of Civil Government, or underſtand all the methods of Phyſick: but we are called to the Chriſtians, that is, Studiers of Divine Evangelical Wiſdom. There are firſt Principles to be learned; but not thoſe Principles to be reſted in, without a further progreſs. Heb. 6. 1. Therefore leaving the principles of the Doctrine of Chriſt, let us go on to perfection. Duties muſt be practiſed, but knowledg is not to be neglected. The ſtudy of Goſpel Myſteries, the harmony of Divine Truths, the ſparkling of Divine Wiſdom, in their mutual combination to the great ends of Gods Glory and Mans Salvation, is an Incentive to Duty, a Spur to Worſhip, and particularly to the greateſt and higheſt part of Worſhip, that part which ſhall remain in Heaven; the Admiration and Praiſe of God, and Delight in him. If we acquaint not our ſelves with the Impreſſions of the Glory of Divine Wiſdom in it, we ſhall not much regard it as worthy our obſervance in regard of that Duty.

The Goſpel is a Myſtery; and as a Myſtery hath ſomething Great and Magnificent in it, worthy of our daily inſpection; we ſhall find freſh Springs of New wonders, which we ſhall be invited to adore with a Religious Aſtoniſhment. It will both raiſe and ſatisfie our Longings. Who can come to the depths of God manifeſted in the fleſh? How amazing is it, and unworthy of a ſlight thought, that the Death of the Son of God ſhould purchaſe the happy Immortality of a Sinful Creature, and the glory of a Rebel be wrought by the Ignominy of ſo great a Perſon? That our Mediator, ſhould have a Nature whereby to Covenant with his Father, and a Nature whereby to be a Surety for the Creature? How admirable is it, that the Fallen Creature ſhould receive an advantage by the Forfeiture of his Happineſs? How Myſterious is it, that the Son of God ſhould bow down to Death upon a Croſs, for the ſatisfaction of Juſtice; and riſe Triumphantly out of the Grave, as a declaration, that Juſtice was contented and ſatisfied? That he ſhould be exalted to Heaven, to Intercede for us; and at laſt return into the World, to receive us, and inveſt us with a Glory for ever with himſelf?

Are theſe things worthy of a Careleſs regard, or a Blockiſh amazement? What Underſtanding can pierce into the depths of the Divine Doctrine of the Incarnation and Birth of Chriſt; the indiſſoluble Union of the two Natures? What Capacity Capacity is able to meaſure the miracles of that Wiſdom, found in the whole Draught and Schem of the Goſpel? Doth it not merit then to be the Object of our daily Meditation? How comes it to paſs then, that we are ſo little curious to concern our thoughts in thoſe wonders, that we ſcarce taſte, or ſip of theſe Delicacies? That we buſie our ſelves in Trifles, and conſider what we ſhall eat, and in what faſhion we ſhall be dreſt; pleaſe our ſelves with the ingeniouſneſs of a Lace or Feather; admire a Moth-eaten Manuſcript, or ſome Half-worn piece of Antiquity; and think our time Ill-ſpent in the contemplating and celebrating that wherein God hath buſied himſelf, and Eternity is deſign'd for the perpetual expreſſions of?

How Inquiſitive are the Bleſſed Angels? with what vigour do they renew their daily Contemplations of it, and receive a freſh Contentment from it; ſtill learning, and ſtill enquiring? 1 Pet. 1. 12. their Eye is never off the Mercy Seat; they ſtrive to ſee the bottom of it, and employ all the Underſtanding they have to conceive the VVonders of it. Shall the Angels be raviſht with it, and bend, themſelves down to ſtudy it, who have but little intereſt in it in compariſon of us, for whom it was both contrived and diſpenſed? And ſhall not our Pains be greater for this hidden Treaſure? Is not that worthy the ſtudy of a Rational Creature, that is worthy the ſtudy of the Angelical? There muſt indeed be pains, 'tis expreſt by Digging, Prov. 2. 4, A lazy Arm will not ſink to the depth of a Mine The neglect of meditating on it is inexcuſable, ſince it hath the Title and Character of the Wiſdom of God,

* Pet. 1. 10. The Ancient Prophets ſearched into it, when it was folded up in Shadows, when they ſaw only the fringes of Wiſdoms Garment *; and ſhall not we, ſince the Sun hath mounted up in our Horizon, and ſenſibly ſcattered the light of the knowledg of this and the other Perfections of God? As the Jewiſh Sabbath was appointed to celebrate the Perfections of God, diſcovered in Creation; ſo is the Chriſtian Sabbath appointed to meditate on, and bleſs God for the diſcovery of his Perfections in Redemption. Let us therefore receive it according to its worth; let it be our only Rule to walk by. 'Tis worthy to be valued above all other Counſels; and we ſhould never think of it without the Doxology of the Apoſtle, to the only wiſe God be glory through Jeſus Chriſt, for ever; that our Speculations may end in affectionate Admirations, and Thankſgivings, for that which is ſo full of VVonders! VVhat a little proſpect ſhould we have had of God, and the Happineſs of Man had not his VViſdom and Goodneſs revealed things to us? The Goſpel is a marvellous Light, and ſhould not be regarded with a ſtupid Ignorance, and purſued with a duller Practice.

III. Exhortation, Let none of us be proud of, or truſt in our own wiſdom. Man by affecting VViſdom out of the way of God, got a crack in his Head, which hath continued Five thouſand years and upwards; and ever ſince our own Wiſdom and knowledg hath perverted us, Iſai. 47. 10. To be guided by this, is to be under the conduct of a blind Leader, and follow a Traytor and Enemy to God and our Selves. Mans Prudence often proves hurtful to him: He often accompliſheth his ruine, while he deſigns his eſtabliſhment; and finds his Fall, where he thought to ſettle his Fortune: Such bad Eyes hath Human Wiſdom often in its own Affairs. Thoſe that have been heightned with a conceit of their own Cunning, have at laſt proved the greateſt Fools. God delights to make fooliſh the Wiſdom of this World, 1 Cor. 1. 20.

Thus God writ Folly upon the crafty Brains of Achitophel, and Simplicity upon the ſubtil Projects of Herod againſt our Saviour; and the Devil, the Prince of Carnal Wiſdom, was befool'd into a furthering our Redemption by his own Projects to hinder it. Carnal Policy, againſt the Preſcripts of Divine VViſdom; never proſpers: 'Tis like an Ignis fatuus, which leads Men out of the way of Duty, and out of the way of Security, and perverts them into the Mire, and dangerous Precipices.

Then Jeroboam would coyn a religion to ſerve his intereſt of State, he tore up the Foundations both of his Kingdom and Family. The way the Jews took to prevent a freſh Invaſion of the Romans, by the Crucifying Chriſt, brought the Judgment more ſwift upon them *. There is no Man ruin'd here, or damn'd hereafter, but by his own wiſdom and will. Prov. 3. 5, 7. The fear of the Lord and departure from evil, are inconſiſtent with an overweening conceit of our own wiſdom; and leaning to our own underſtanding, is inconſiſtent with a truſting in the Lord with all our hearts. 'Tis as much a Deifying our ſelves, to truſt to our own wit, as it is a Deifying the Creature to affect or confide in it, ſuperior to God, or equally with him.

Judgment

* Joh. 11. 48.

The true way to Wiſdom is to be ſenſible of our own folly, 1 Cor. 3. 18. If any man be wiſe, let him become a fool. He that diſtruſts his own guidance, will more ſecurely and ſucceſsfully follow the Counſel of another in whom he confides. The more water, or any other Liquor, is poured out of a Veſſel, the more Air enters. The more we diſtruſt our own VViſdom, the more capable we are of the conduct of Gods.

Had Jehoſophat relied upon his own policy, he might have found a Defeat when he met with a Deliverance; but he diſowned his own skill and ſtrength, in telling God, We know not what to do, but our eyes are towards thee, 2 Chron. 20. 12. Let us therefore with Augur, diſeſteem our own Underſtanding to eſteem Divine. Human Prudences is like a Spiders-web, eaſily blown away, and ſwept down by the Beſom of ſome unexpected Revolution. God by his infinite wiſdom can croſs the wiſdom of Man, and make a Mans own prudence hang in his own light. Iſaiah 29. 14. The underſtanding of their Prudent Men ſhall be hid.

IV. Exhortation. Seek to God for Wiſdom. The VViſdom we have by Nature is like the weeds the Earth brings forth without Tillage. Our VViſdom ſince the Fall, is the wiſdom of the Serpent, without the Innocency of the Dove: It flows from ſelf-love, runs into Self-intereſt. 'Tis the wiſdom of the Fleſh, and a prudence to manage means for the contenting our Luſts. Our beſt Wiſdom is imperfect, a meer nothing and Vanity, in compariſon of the Divine, as our Beings are in compariſon of his Eſſence. VVe muſt go to God for a Holy and Innocent VViſdom, and fill our Ciſterns from a pure Fountain. The VViſdom that was the glory of Solomon, was the Donation of the moſt High. James 1. 5. If any man want Wiſdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it ſhall be given him. The faculty of Underſtanding is from Gody by Nature; but a heavenly light to direct the Underſtanding is from God by Grace. Children have an Underſtanding, but ſtand in need of wiſe Maſters to rectifie it, and form Judicious Notions in it.

There is a Spirit in man, but the inſpiration of the Almighty gives him underſtanding, Job 32. 8. VVe muſt beg of God, Wiſdom. The Goſpel is the Wiſdom of God; the concerns of it great and Myſterious, not to be known without a New underſtanding, 1 John 5. 20. A new Underſtanding is not to be had but from the Creator of the firſt. The Spirit of God is the Searcher of the deep things of God; the Revealer of them to us, and the enlightner of our Minds to apprehend them; and therefore called, a Spirit of Wiſdom and revolution, Eph. 1. 17. Chriſt is made Wiſdom to us, as well as Righteouſneſs; not only by Imputation, but Effuſion *. Seek to God therefore for that wiſdom which is like the Sun, and not that worldly wiſdom which is like a Shadow: For that wiſdom whoſe effects are not ſo outwardly glorious, but inwardly ſweet, ſeek it from him, and ſeek it in his VVord, that is the Tranſcript of Divine VViſdom; through his Precepts underſtanding is to be had *. As the wiſdom of Men appears in their Laws; ſo doth the VViſdom of God in his Statutes.

* Seamans Sermon before the Parliamen.

* Pſal. 119. 104.

By this means we arrive to a heavenly ſagacity. If theſe be rejected, what wiſdom can be in us? A dream and conceit only; Jer. 8. They have rejected the word of the Lord, and what VViſdom is in them? VVho knows how to order any concerns as he ought, or any one faculty of his Soul? Therefore deſire Gods direction in outward concerns, in perſonal, family, in Private and Publick: He hath not only a wiſdom for our Salvation, but for our outward Direction. He doth not only guide us in the one, and leave Satan to manage us in the other. Thoſe that go with Saul to a VVitch of Endor, go to Hell for craft, and prefer the Wiſdom of the hoſtile Serpent, before the holy Counſel of a Faithful Creator. If you want health in your Body, you adviſe with a Phyſitian; if directions for your Eſtate, you reſort to a Lawyer; If paſſage for a voyage, you addreſs to a Pilot; why not much more your ſelves, your all, to a Wiſe God. As Pliny ſaid concerning a wiſe man, Oh, ſir, how many Cato's are there in that wiſe perſon? how much more Wiſdom than men or Angels poſſeſs, is infinitely centred in the VViſe God?

5. Submit to the Wiſdom of God in all caſes. What elſe was inculcated in the firſt Precept forbidding man to eat of the Fruit of the tree of Knowledge of good and evil; but that he ſhould take heed of the ſwelling of his mind againſt the VViſdom of God? Tis a VViſdom Incomprehenſible to fleſh and blood: VVe ſhould adore it in our minds, and reſign up our ſelves to it in our practice: How unreaſonable are repinings againſt God, whereby a Creatures Ignorance endites and judges a Creators Prudence? VVere God weak in VViſdom, and only mighty in Power, we might ſuſpect his Conduct. Power without VViſdom and goodneſs is an unruly and ruinous thing in the world. But God being Infinite in one, as well as the other, we have no reaſon to be jealous of him, and repine againſt his methods; why ſhould we quarrel with him that we are not as high, or as wealthy as others; that we have not preſently the Mercy we want? If he be wiſe, we ought to ſtay his time, and wait his leaſure, becauſe he is a God of Judgment. Eſa. 30. 18. Preſume not to ſhorten the time which his diſcretion hath fixed, 'tis a folly to think to do it. By impatience we cannot haſten relief; we alienate him from us by debaſing him to ſtand at our bar, diſturb our ſelves, loſe the comfort of our lives and the ſweetneſs of his mercy. Submiſſion to God we are in no caſe exempted from, becauſe there is no caſe wherein God doth not direct all the acts of his VVill by Counſel. VVhatſoever is drawn by a ſtrait rule muſt be right and ſtrait; the rule that is right in it ſelf, is the meaſure of the ſtraitneſs of every thing elſe: VVhatſoever is wrought in the world by God, muſt be Wiſe, Good, Righteous; becauſe God is eſſentially Wiſdom, Goodneſs, and Righteouſneſs.

Submit to God, (1.) in his Revelations.

1. Meaſure them Not by Reaſon: The truths of the Goſpel muſt be received with a ſelf emptineſs and annihilation of the Creature. If our Reaſon ſeems to lift up it ſelf againſt Revelation, becauſe it finds no teſtimony for it in its own light; Conſider how Crazy it is in natural and obvious things, and therefore ſure it is not ſtrong enough to enter into the depths of Divine Wiſdom: The Wiſdom of God in the Goſpel is too great an Ocean to be contained or laved out by a Cockleſhell. It were not infinite, if it were not beyond our finite reach; our Reaſon muſt as well ſtoop to his VViſdom, as our VVills to his Soveraignty. How great a vanity is it for a Glow-worm to boaſt, that it is as full of light as the Sun in the firmament? for reaſon to leave its proper ſphear, is to fall into confuſion, and thicken its own darkneſs. We ſhould ſettle our ſelves in the belief of the Scripture, and confirm our ſelves by a meditation on thoſe many undeniable arguments, for its divine authority. The fulfilling of its predictions, the antiquity of the writing, the holineſs of the precepts, the heavenlineſs of the Doctrine, the glorious effects it hath produced, and doth yet produce, different from human methods of ſucceſs; and ſubmit our reaſon to the voice of ſo high a Majeſty,

2. Not to be too curiouſly inquiſitive into what is not Revealed. There is ſomething hid in whatſoever is Revealed. VVe know the Son of God was begotten from Eternity, but how he was begotten, we are ignorant. VVe know there is a Union of the Divine Nature with the Human, and that the Fulneſs of the Godhead dwells in him bodily; but the manner of its inhabitation we are in a great part ignorant of. We know God hath choſen ſome and refuſed others, and that he did it with Counſel; but the reaſon why he choſe this man and not that, we know not; we can refer it to nothing but Gods Soveraign pleaſure. 'Tis revealed that there will be a day wherein God ſhall Judge the World; but the particular time is not revealed. We know that God Created the World in Time; but why he did not create the World millions of years before, we are ignorant of, and our reaſons would be bewildred bewildred in their too much curioſity. If we ask why he did not create it before, we may as well ask why he did create it then? And may not the ſame queſtion be ask'd, if the World had been Created million of years before it was? That he Created it in ſix days, and not in an inſtant, is revealed; but why he did not do it in a moment, ſince we are ſure he was able to do it, is not revealed. Are the reaſons of a wiſe mans proceedings hid from us, and ſhall we preſume to dive into the reaſon of the proceedings of an only wiſe God, which he hath Judged not expedient to diſcover to us? Some ſparks of his Wiſdom he hath cauſed to iſſue out, to exerciſe and delight our minds; others he keeps within the center of his own breaſt: We muſt not go about to unlock his Cabinet. As we cannot reach to the utmoſt lines of his Power; ſo we cannot graſp the intimate reaſons of his Wiſdom. We muſt ſtill remember, that which is Finite can never be able to comprehend, the Reaſons, Motives, and Methods of that which is Infinite. It doth not become us to be reſty, becauſe God hath not admitted us into the debates of Eternity. We are as little to be curious at what God hath hid, as to be careleſs of what God hath manifeſted. Too great an inquiſitiveneſs beyond our line, is as much a provoking arrogance, as a blockiſh negligence of what is revealed, is a ſlighting ingratiude.

2. Submit to God in his Precepts and Methods. Since they are the reſults of Infinite Wiſdom, diſputes againſt them are not tolerable: What orders are given out by infallible VViſdom are to be entertained with reſpect and reverence, though the reaſon of them be not viſible to our purblind minds. Shall God have leſs reſpect from us than Earthly Princes, whoſe Laws we obſerve without being able to pierce into the exact reaſon of them all? Since we know he hath not a Will without an Underſtanding, our obſervance of him muſt be without Repining; we muſt not think to mend our Creators Laws, and preſume to judg and condemn his Righteous Statues: If the fleſh riſe up in oppoſition, we muſt croſs its motions, and Silence its murmurings; his Will ſhould be an acceptable VVill to us, becauſe it is a VViſe VVill in it ſelf. God hath no need to impoſe upon us and deceive us; he hath juſt and righteous wayes to attain his glory and his Creatures good. To deceive us, would be to diſhonour himſelf and contradict his own nature. He cannot impoſe falſe injurious Precepts or unavailable to his ſubjects happineſs; not falſe, becauſe of his Truth; not injurious becauſe of his Goodneſs; not vain, becauſe of his VViſdom. Submit therefore to him in his precepts, and in his Methods too. The honour of his VViſdom and the intereſt of our happineſs calls for it. Had Noah diſputed with God about building an Ark, and liſtned to the ſcoffs of the ſenſeleſs world, he had periſhed under the ſame fate and loſt the honour of a Preacher and worker of righteouſneſs. Had not the Iſraelites been their own enemies, if they had been permitted to be their own guides, and returned to the Egyptian bondage and furnaces, inſtead of a liberty and earthly felicity in Canaan? Had our Saviour gratified the Jews by deſcending from the Croſs and freeing himſelf from the power of his Adverſaries, he might have had that Faith from them which they promiſed him, but it had been a faith to no purpoſe, becauſe without ground; they might have believed him to be the Son of God, but he could not have been the Saviour of the world: His death the great ground and object of Faith, had been unaccompliſhed, they had believed a God pardoning without a content to his Juſtice, and ſuch a Faith could not have reſcued them from falling into eternal Miſery. The Precepts and Methods of divine VViſdom muſt be ſubmitted to.

3. Submit to God in all Croſſes and Revolutions. Infinite VViſdom cannot err in any of his paths, or ſtep the leaſt hairs breadth from the way of Righteouſneſs: There is the underſtanding of God in every motion; an Eye in every VVheel, the VVheel that goes over us and cruſheth us. VVe are led by fancy more than reaſon: VVe know no more what we ask or what is fit for us, than the Mother of Zebedees children did, when ſhe petitioned Chriſt for her ſons advancement, when he came into his temporal Kingdom *: The things we deſire might pleaſure our Fancy or appetite, but impair our health: One man complains for want of Children, but knows not whether they may prove Comforts or Croſſes: Another for want of Health, but knows not whether the health of his body may not prove the diſeaſe of his Soul. We might loſe in Heavenly things, if we poſſeſs in Earthly things what we long for. God in regard of his infinite Wiſdom is fitter to carve out a condition than we our ſelves; our Shallow reaſon, and ſelf-love, would wiſh for thoſe things, that are injurious to God, to our ſelves, to the World; but God alwaies chooſes what is beſt for his Glory, and what is beſt for his Creatures, either in regard of themſelves, or as they ſtand in relation to him, or to others, as parts of the World.

* Mat. 20. 21.

We are in danger from our ſelf-love, in no danger in complying with Gods Wiſdom: When Rachel would die, if ſhe had no Children, ſhe had Children, * Gen. 30. 1. but Death with one of them *. Good men may conclude, that whatſoever is done by God in them or with them, is beſt and fitteſt for them; becauſe by the Covenant which makes over God to them, as their God, the conduct of his Wiſdom is aſſured to them as well as any other Attribute: And therefore, as God in every tranſaction appears as their God, ſo he appears as their wiſe Director, and by this Wiſdom he extracts good out of evil, makes the affliction which deſtroys our outward Comforts, conſume our inward Defilements; And the waves which threatned to ſwallow up the veſſel, to caſt it upon the ſhore: And when he hath occaſion to manifeſt his anger againſt his people, his Wiſdom directs his wrath. In Judgment he hath a work to do upon Zion, and when that * Iſai. 10. 12. work is done, he puniſhes the fruit of the ſtout heart of the King of Aſſyria *; As in the anſwers of Prayer he doth give oftentimes above what we ask, or think, Eph. 3. 20. ſo in outward concerns he doth above what we can expect, or by our ſhort-ſightedneſs conclude will be done; Let us therefore in all things frame our minds to the Divine Wiſdom, and ſay with the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 47. 4. The Lord ſhall chuſe our inheritance and condition for us.

6. Exhortation. Cenſure not God in any of his wayes. Can we Underſtand the full ſcope of Divine Wiſdom in Creation, which is perfected before our Eyes? Can we by a rational knowledg walk over the whole Surface of the Earth, and wade through the Sea? Can we Underſtand the Nature of the Heavens? Are all, or moſt, or the thouſandth part of the particles of Divine Skill known by us, yea or any of them throughly known? How can we then Underſtand his deeper methods in things, that are but of yeſterday, that we have not had a time to View? We ſhould not be too quick or too raſh in our Judgments of him: The beſt that we attain to, is but feeble conjectures at the deſigns of God.

As there is ſomething hid in whatſoever is revealed in his VVord, ſo there is ſomething inacceſſible to us in his VVorks, as well as in his Nature and Majeſty. In our Saviours act in waſhing his Diſciples feet, he checkt Peters contradiction, John 13. 7. What I do, thou knoweſt not now, but thou ſhalt know hereafter. God were not infinitely wiſe if the reaſon of all his acts were obvious to our Shallowneſs. He is no profound States-man, whoſe inward intention can be ſounded by vulgar Heads at the firſt act he ſtarts in his deſigned method. The wiſe God is in this like wiſemen, that have not breaſts like glaſſes of Chryſtal, to diſ- * Job 11. 6. cover all that they intend. There are *ſecrets of Wiſdom above our reach ; nay when we ſee all his acts, we cannot ſee all the draughts of his skill in them. An unskilful hearer of a muſical leſſon may receive the melody with his Ear, and underſtand not the rarities of the compoſition as it was wrought by the Muſitians mind. Under the old Teſtament there was more of Divine Power, and leſs of his wiſdom apparent in his acts: As his Laws, ſo his acts were more fitted to their Senſe. Under the new Teſtament there is more of wiſdom and leſs of power; as his Laws ſo his acts are more fitted to a ſpiritual mind; wiſdom is leſs diſcernable than power. Our wiſdom therefore in this caſe, as it doth in other things, conſiſts in ſilence and expectation of the end and event of a work. VVe owe that honour to God that we do to men wiſer than our ſelves, to imagin he hath reaſon to do what he doth, though our ſhallowneſs cannot comprehend it. VVe muſt ſuffer God to be wiſer than our ſelves, and acknowledg that there is ſomething ſoveraign in his wayes not to be meaſured by the feeble reed of our weak underſtandings, And therefore we ſhould acquieſce in his proceedings; take heed we be not found ſlanderers of God, but be adorers inſtead of Cenſurers; and lift up our hands in admiration of him and his wayes, inſtead of citing him to anſwer it at our Bar. Many things in the firſt appearance may ſeem to be raſh and unjuſt, which in the iſſue appear comely and regular. If it had been plainly ſpoke before that the Son of God ſhould die, that a moſt holy perſon ſhould be crucified; it would have ſeemed cruel to expoſe a Son to miſery; unjuſt to inflict puniſhment upon one that was no Criminal; to joyn together exact goodneſs and Phyſical evil; that the Soveraign ſhould die for the Malefactor, and the Obſerver of the Law for the Idolators of it. But when the whole deſign is unravelled, what an admirable conjunction is there of Juſtice and Mercy, Love and Wiſdom, which before would have appeared abſurd to the muddied reaſon of man?

it

We ſee the Gardiner pulling up ſome delightful Flowers by the roots, digging up the Earth, overwhelming it with Dung; an ignorant perſon would imagine him wild, out of his wits, and charge him with ſpoiling his Garden: But when the Spring is arrived, the ſpectator will acknowledge his skill in his former Operations.

The truth is, the whole deſign and methods of God are not to be judged by us in this world; the full declaration of the whole contexture is reſerved for the other world, to make up a part of good mens happineſs in the amazing views of divine Wiſdom, as well as the other perfections of his nature. We can no more perfectly underſtand his Wiſdom, than we can his Mercy and Juſtice, till we ſee the laſt lines of all drawn, and the full expreſſions of them: we ſhould therefore be ſober and modeſt in the conſideration of Gods ways; his Judgments are unſearchable, and his ways paſt finding out. The riches of his wiſdom are paſt our counting, his depths not to be fathomed, yet they are depths of righteouſneſs and equity: Though the full manifeſtation of that equity, the grounds and methods of his proceedings are unknown to us. As we are too ſhort, fully to know God, ſo we are too ignorant fully to comprehend the acts of God: Since he is a God of Judgment, we ſhould wait till we ſee the iſſue of his works, Eſa. 30. 18. And in the mean time, with the Apoſtle in the Text, give him the Glory of all, in the ſame expreſſions; To the only wiſe God be glory, through Jeſus Chriſt for ever Amen.

A DISCOURSE UPON THE Power of GOD.

Job 26. 14.

Loe, theſe are parts of his ways, but how little a portion is heard of him? (but the thunder of his power who can underſtand?)

BILDAD had in the foregoing Chapter entertain'd Job with a Diſcourſe of the Dominion and Power of God, and the purity of his Righteouſneſs, whence he argues an impoſſibility of the juſtification of man in his preſence, who is no better than a VVorm. Job in this Chapter acknowledges the greatneſs of Gods power, and deſcants more largely upon it than Bildad had done; but doth Preface it with a kind of Ironical ſpeech, as if he had not acted a friendly part, or ſpake little to the purpoſe, or the matter in hand: the ſubject of Job's Diſcourſe was the worldly happineſs of the Wicked, and the Calamities of the Godly: And Bildad reads him a Lecture of the extent of Gods Dominion, the number of his Armies, and the unſpotted rectitude of his Nature, in compariſon of which the pureſt Creatures are foul and crooked. Job therefore from verſe 1. to verſe 4. taxeth him in a kind of ſcoffing manner, that he had not touched the Point, but rambled from the Subject in hand, and had not applyed a Salve proper to his Sore: Verſe 2. How haſt thou helped him that is without power? How ſaveſt thou the arm of him that hath no ſtrength? &c. your diſcourſe is ſo impertinent, that it will neither ſtrengthen a weak perſon, nor inſtruct a ſimple one*. But ſince Bildad would take up an Argument of Gods power and diſcourſe ſo ſhort of it, Job would ſhew that he wanted not his Inſtructions in that kind, and that he had more diſtinct Conceptions of it than his Antagoniſt had uttered: And therefore from verſe 5. to the end of the Chapter, he doth magnificently treat of the Power of God in ſeveral Branches. And verſe 5. he begins with the loweſt.

* Munſter.

Dead things are formed from under the waters, and the inhabitants thereof. You read me a lecture of the Power of God in the heavenly Hoſt: Indeed it is viſible there, yet of a larger extent; and Monuments of it are found in the lower parts. What do you think of thoſe dead things under the Earth and Waters, of the Corn that dies, and by the moyſtning influences of the Clouds ſprings up again with a numerous progeny and increaſe for the nouriſhment of man? What do you think of thoſe varieties of Metals and Minerals conceived in the bowels of the Earth; thoſe Pearls and riches in the depths of the Waters, midwifred by this Power of God? Add to theſe thoſe more prodigious Creatures in the Sea, the inhabitants of the Waters, with their vaſtneſs and variety, which are all the Births of Gods Power; both in their firſt Creation by his mighty Voice, and their propagation by his cheriſhing Providence.

of

Stop not here, but conſider alſo that his Power extends to Hell; either the Graves, the Repoſitories of all the crumbled duſt that hath yet been in the World (for ſo Hell is ſometimes taken in Scripture: Verſe 6. Hell is naked before him, and deſtruction hath no covering) The ſeveral lodgings of deceaſed men are known to him: No skreen can obſcure them from his ſight, nor their diſſolution be any bar to his power, when the time is come to compact thoſe mouldred Bodies to entertain again their departed Souls, either for weal or woe. The Grave, or Hell, the place of puniſhment, is naked before him; as diſtinctly diſcern'd by him, as a naked body in all its lineaments by us, or a diſſected Body is in all its parts by a skilful Eye. Deſtruction hath no covering; none can free himſelf from the Power of his Hand. Every perſon in the bowels of Hell; every perſon puniſhed there, is known to him, and feels the power of his Wrath.

From the lower parts of the World he aſcends to the conſideration of the power of God in the Creation of Heaven and Earth, *He ſtretches out the North over the empty places. The North or the North-pole over the Air, which by the Greeks was called void or empty, becauſe of the tenuity and thinneſs of that Element; and he mentions here the North, or North-pole, for the whole Heaven, becauſe it is more known and apparent than the Southern-pole. And hangs the Earth upon nothing: The maſſie and weighty Earth hangs like a thick Globe in the midſt of a thin Air, that there is as much Air on the one ſide of it, as on the other. The Heavens have no prop to ſuſtain them in their height, and the Earth hath no baſis to ſupport it in its place. The Heavens are as if you ſaw a curtain ſtretched ſmooth in the Air without any hand to hold it; and the Earth is as if you ſaw a Ball hanging in the Air without any ſolid Body to under-prop it, or any Line to hinder it from falling; both ſtanding Monuments of the Omnipotence of God.

* Verſe. 7.

He then takes notice of his daily Power in the Clouds. *He binds up the waters in his thick Clouds, and the Cloud is not rent under them. He compacts the Waters together in Clouds, and keeps them by his Power in the Air againſt the force of their natural gravity and heavineſs, till they are fit to flow down upon the Earth, and perform his pleaſure in the places for which he deſigns them. The Clouds is not rent under them; the thin Air is not ſplit aſunder by the weight of the Waters contain'd in the Cloud above it. He cauſes them to diſtil by drops, and ſtrains them as it were through a thin Lawn, for the refreſhment of the Earth; and ſuffers them not to fall in the whole lump, with a violent torrent, to waſte the induſtry of man, and bring famine upon the World, by deſtroying the Fruits of the Earth. What a wonder would it be to ſee but one intire drop of water hang it ſelf but one Inch above the ground, unleſs it be a bubble which is preſerved by the Air inclos'd within it? What a wonder would it be to ſee a Gallon of water contain'd in a thin Cobweb as ſtrongly as in a Veſſel or Braſs? Greater is the wonder of Divine power in thoſe thin Bottles of Heaven, as they are called *; and therefore called his Clouds here, as being daily Inſtances of his Omnipotence: That the Air ſhould ſuſtain thoſe rouling Veſſels, as it ſhould ſeem, weightier than it ſelf: That the force of this Maſs of waters ſhould not break ſo thin a Priſon, and haſten to its proper place which is below the Air: That they ſhould be daily confin'd againſt their natural inclination, and held by ſo ſlight a Chain: That there ſhould be ſuch a gradual and ſucceſſive falling of them, as if the Air were pierced with holes like a Gardiners watring-pot, and not fall in one intire body to drown or drench ſome parts of the Earth. Theſe are hourly Miracles of Divine Power, as little regarded as clearly viſible.

* Verſe. 8.

* Job 38. 37.

He proceeds, Verſe 9. He holds back the face of his Throne, and ſpreads the Cloud upon it. The Clouds are deſign'd as Curtains to cover the Heavens, as well as Veſſels to *water the Earth. As a Tapeſtry Curtain between the Heavens, the Throne of God Iſa. 66. 1. and the Earth his Footſtool: The Heavens are called his Throne, becauſe his Power doth moſt ſhine forth there, and magnificently declare the glory of God; and the Clouds are as a skreen between the ſcorching heat of the Sun, and the tender plants of the Earth, and the weak Bodies of Men.

* Pſal. 147. 8.

From

From hence he deſcends to the Sea, and conſiders the Divine Power apparent in the bounding of it: Verſe 10. He hath compaſſed the Waters with bounds, till the day and night come to an end. This is ſeveral times mention'd in Scripture, as a ſignal mark of Divine *ſtrength. He hath meaſured a place for the Sea, and ſtruck the Limits of it as with a Compaſs, that it might not mount above the Surface of the Land, and ruine the ends of the Earths Creation; and this while day and night have their mutual turns, till he ſhall make an end of time by removing the meaſures of it. The bounds of the tumultuous Sea are in many places as weak as the Bottles of the upper Waters; the one is contain'd in thin Air, and the other reſtrain'd by weak Sands in many places, as well as by ſtubborn Rocks in others; that though it ſwells, foams, roars, and the waves encourag'd and egg'd on by ſtrong Winds, come like Mountains againſt the Shore, they overflow it not, but humble themſelves when they come near to thoſe Sands, which are ſet as their Liſts and Limits, and retire back to the Womb that brought them forth, as if they were aſhamed, and repented of their proud Invaſion: Or elſe it may be meant of the Tides of the Sea, and the ſtated time God hath ſet it for its ebbing and flowing, till night and day come to an end †; both that the fluid Waters ſhould contain themſelves within due bounds, and keep their perpetual orderly motion, are amazing Arguments of Divine Power.

* Job 38. 8. Prov. 8. 27.

† Coccei in loc.

He paſſes on to the Conſideration of the Commotions in the Air and Earth, raiſed and ſtill'd by the Power of God; The Pillars of Heaven tremble, and are aſtoniſhed at his reproof. By pillars of Heaven are not meant Angels, as ſome think; but either the Air called the Pillars of Heaven in regard of place, as it continues and knits together the parts of the World, as Pillars do the upper and nether parts of a Building. As the loweſt parts of the Earth are called the Foundations of the Earth; ſo the loweſt parts of the Heaven may be called the pillars of Heaven*. Or elſe by that phraſe may be meant Mountains, which ſeem at a diſtance to touch the Sky, as Pillars do the top of a Structure; and ſo it may be ſpoken according to vulgar Capacity, which imagines the Heavens to be ſuſtained by the two extream parts of the Earth, as a Convex Body, or to be arch'd by Pillars; whence the Scripture, according to common apprehenſions, mentions the Ends of the Earth, and the utmoſt parts of the Heavens, tho they have properly no end, as being round. The Power of God is ſeen in thoſe Commotions in the Air and Earth, by Thunders, Lightnings, Storms, Earth-quakes, which rack the Air, and make the Mountains and Hills tremble as Servants before a frowning and rebuking Maſter.

* Coccei.

And as he makes motions in the Earth and Air, ſo is his Power ſeen in their Influences upon the Sea; He judges the Sea with his power, and by his underſtanding he ſmites through the proud †. At the Creation he put the Waters into ſeveral Channels, and cauſed the dry Land to appear bare-fac'd for a Habitation for Man and Beaſts; or rather he ſplits the Sea by Storms, as though he would make the bottom of the deep viſible, and rakes up the Sands to the Surface of the Waters, and marſhals the Waves into Mountains and Valleys. After that, he ſmites through the proud, that is, humbles the proud Waves, and by allaying the ſtorm reduceth them to their former Level: The Power of God is viſible, as well in rebuking, as in awakning the winds; he makes them ſenſible of his Voice, and according to his Pleaſure exaſperates or calms them. The ſtriking through the proud here, is not probably meant of the deſtruction of the Egyptian Army; for ſome gueſs that Job died that year †, or about the time of the Iſraelites coming out of Egypt: So that this Diſcourſe here being in the time of his Affliction, could not point at that which was done after his reſtoration to his temporal Proſperity.

† Verſe 12.

† Druſius in loc.

And now at laſt he ſums up the Power of God in the chiefeſt of his Works above, and the greateſt wonder of his Works below: Verſe 13. By his Spirit he hath garniſht the Heavens; his hand hath formed the crooked Serpent, &c. The greater and leſſer Lights, Sun, Moon, and Stars, the Ornaments and Furniture of Heaven; and the Whale, a prodigious Monument of Gods Power often mention'd in Scripture to this purpoſe, and in particular in this Book of *Job, and called by the ſame name of Crooked Serpent, Iſa. 27. 1. where it is applied by way of Metaphor to the King of Assyria or Egypt, or all Oppressors of the Church. Various Interpretations there are of this crooked Serpent: Some understanding that Constellation in Heaven, which Astronomers call the Dragon; some that Combination of weaker Stars, which they call the Galaxia, which winds about the Heavens: But it is most probable that Job, drawing near to a conclusion of his Discourse, joyns the two greatest Testimonies of Gods Power in the World, the highest Heavens, and the lowest Leviathan, which is here called a bar Serpent * in regard of his strength and hardness, as mighty Men are called bars in Scripture, Jer. 51. 30. Her bars are broken things. And in regard of this Power of God in the Creation of this Creature, 'tis particularly mention'd in the Catalogue of Gods Works. Gen. 1. 21. And God created great Whales; all the other Creatures being put into one sum, and not particularly expresst.

* Job 41.

* As the word signifies in the Hebrew.

And now he makes the use of this Lecture in the Text, Lo, these are parts of his ways, but how little a portion is heard of him? but the thunder of his Power who can understand? This is but a small Landskip of some of his Works of Power, the outsides and extremities of it; more glorious things are within his Palaces: Though those things argue a stupendous Power of the Creator in his Works of Creation and Providence, yet they are nothing to what may be declared of his Power. And what may be declared, is nothing to what may be conceived; and what may be conceived, is nothing to what is above the conceptions of any Creature. These are but little Crumbs and Fragments, of that infinite Power which is in his Nature, like a drop in comparison of the mighty Ocean; a hiss or whisper, in comparison of a mighty Voice of Thunder †. This which I have spoken is but like a spark to the fiery Region, a few lines by the by, a drop of speech.

† Oecolamp.

The thunder of his Power: Some understand it of Thunder literally, for material Thunder in the Air: The Thunder of his Power, that is according to the Hebrew Dialect, his powerful Thunder. This is not the sense; the nature of Thunder in the Air doth not so much exceed the capacity of humane understanding; 'tis therefore rather to be understood Metaphorically, The Thunder of his Power, that is, the greatness and immensity of his Power manifested in the magnificent miracles of Nature, in the consideration whereof men are astonished, as if they had heard an unusual Clap of Thunder. So Thunder is used, Job 39. 25. The Thunder of the Captains; that is, strength and force of the Captains of an Army. And verse 19. God speaking to Job of a Horse, saith, Hast thou cloathed his neck with Thunder? that is, strength. And Thunder being a mark of the Power of God, some of the Heathen have called God by the name of a Thunderer *. As Thunder pierceth the lowest places, and alters the state of things; so doth the Power of God penetrate into all things whatsoever; the Thunder of his Power; that is, the Greatness of his Power: as the strength of Salvation, Psal. 20. 6. that is, a mighty Salvation.

* The antient Gawls worshiped him under the name of Taranis. The Greeks called Jupiter Βροντάι & and Thor: whence our Thursday is derived, signifieth Thunderer, a Title the Germans gave their god. And Toran in the British Language signifieth Thunder. Voss. Idolo. lib. 2. cap. 33. Camb. Britan. p. 17.

Who can understand? Who is able to count all the Monuments of his Power? How doth this little, which I have spoken of, exceed the capacity of our Understanding, and is rather the matter of our astonishment, than the object of our comprehensive knowledge? The Power of the greatest Potentate or the mightiest Creature, is but of small extent: None but have their limits: It may be understood, how far they can act, in what sphere their activity is bounded: But when I have spoken all of Divine Power that I can; when you have thought all that you can think of it, your Souls will prompt you to conceive something more, beyond what I have spoken, and what you have thought. His Power shines in every thing, and is beyond every thing. There is infinitely more Power lodged in his Nature, not expresst to the World. The understanding of Men and Angels centred in one Creature, would fall short of the perception of the Immensness of it. All that can be comprehended of it, are but little Fringes of it, a small Portion. No man ever discours'd, or can, of Gods Power according to the magnificence of it. No Creature can conceive it; God himself only comprehends it; God himself is only able to express it. Mans Power being limited, his Line is too short to measure the Incomprehensible Omnipotence of God. The thunder of his Power, who can understand? that is, none can.

The Text is a lofty Declaration of the Divine Power, with a particular note of Attention, Loe.

1. In the expreſſions of it, in the works of Creation and Providence; [Loe, theſe are his ways; Ways and Works excelling any created ſtrength, referring to the little ſummary of them he had made before. 1.
2. In the Inſufficiency of theſe ways to meaſure his Power; [but how little a portion is heard of him? 2.
3. In the Incomprehenſibleneſs of it; [The thunder of his Power who can underſtand? 3.

Infinite and Incomprehenſible Power pertains to the Nature of God, and is expreſt in part in his Works: or, Though there be a mighty expreſſion of Divine Power in his Works, yet an Incomprehenſible Power pertains to his Nature. Doct.

The thunder of his Power, who can underſtand?

His Power glitters in all his Works, as well as his Wiſdom; Pſal. 62. 11. Twice have I heard this, that Power belongs unto God. In the Law and in the Prophets, ſay ſome: But why Power twice, and not Mercy, which he ſpeaks of in the following Verſe? He had heard of Power twice, from the voice of Creation, and from the voice of Government. Mercy was heard in Government after Man's Fall, not in Creation; Innocent man was an object of Gods goodneſs, not of his Mercy till he made himſelf miſerable: Power was expreſt in both; or Twice have I heard that Power belongs to God, that is, it is a certain and undoubted Truth, that Power is eſſential to the Divine Nature. 'Tis true, Mercy is eſſential, Juſtice is eſſential; but Power more apparently eſſential, becauſe no acts of Mercy, or Juſtice, or Wiſdom, can be exerciſed by him without Power: The repetition of a thing confirms the certainty of it. Some obſerve, that God is called Almighty Seventy times in Scripture*. Though his Power be evident in all his Works, yet he hath a Power beyond the expreſſion of it in his Works, which, as it is the glory of his Nature, ſo it is the comfort of a Believer. To which purpoſe the Apoſtle expreſſeth it by an excellent Periphraſis for the honour of the Divine Nature; Eph. 3. 20. Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we can ask or think, unto him be glory in the Churches. We have reaſon to acknowledge him Almighty, who hath a Power of acting above our Power of underſtanding. Who could have imagin'd ſuch a powerful operation in the propagation of the Goſpel, and the Converſion of the Gentiles, which the Apoſtle ſeems to hint at in that place? His Power is expreſt by Horns in his hands, Hab. 3. 4. becauſe all the Works of his hands are wrought with Almighty ſtrength. Power is alſo uſed as a Name of of God, Mark 14. 62. The Son of Man ſitting on the right hand of Power, that is, at the right hand of God: God and Power are ſo inſeparable that they are reciprocated. As his Eſſence is Immenſe not to be confin'd in Place, as it is Eternal, not to be meaſur'd by Time; ſo it is Almighty, not to be limited in regard of Action.

*Leſſius, de perfect. Divin. lib. 5. cap. 1.

1. 'Tis Ingeniouſly illuſtrated by ſome by a Unit†; all Numbers depend upon it, it makes Numbers by Addition, Multiplies them unexpreſſibly; when one Unit is removed from a Number, how vaſtly doth it diminiſh it? It gives perfection to all other Numbers, it receives perfection from none. If you add a Unit before 100, how doth it multiply it to 1100? If you ſet a Unite before Twenty Millions, it preſently makes the Number ſwell up to an hundred and twenty Millions: and ſo powerful is a Unit by adding it to Numbers, that it will infinitely inlarge them to ſuch a vaſtneſs, that ſhall tranſcend the capacity of the beſt Arithmetician to count them. By ſuch a Meditation as this, you may have ſome proſpect of the Power of that God who is only Unity; the Beginning of all things, as a Unit is the beginning of all Numbers; and can perform as many things really, as a Unit can numerically, that is, can do as much in the making of Creatures, as a Unit can do in the multiplying of Numbers. The Omnipotence of God was ſcarce denied by any Heathen, that did not deny the Being of a God, and that was Pliny, and that upon weak Arguments. 1.

† Fotherby, Atheomaſtic. p. 306, 307.

2. Indeed we cannot have a conception of God, if we conceive him not moſt Powerful, as well as moſt Wiſe: He is not a God, that cannot do what he will, and perform all his pleaſure. If we imagine him reſtrain'd in his Power, we imagine 2.

him limited in his Essence. As he hath an infinite Knowledge to know what is possible, he cannot be without an infinite Power to do what is possible. As he hath a Will to resolve what he sees good, so he cannot want a Power to effect what he sees good to decree. As the Essence of a Creature cannot be conceiv'd without that activity that belongs to his nature; as when you conceive Fire, you cannot conceive it without a power of burning and warming; and when you conceive Water, you cannot conceive it without a power of moistning and cleansing: So you cannot conceive an infinite Essence without an Infinite Power of activity. And therefore a Heathen could say, If you know God, you know he can do all things; and therefore saith Austin, Give me not only a Christian but a Jew, not only a Jew but a Heathen, that will deny God to be Almighty. A Jew, a Heathen may deny Christ to be Omnipotent, but no Heathen will deny God to be Omnipotent, and no Devil will deny either to be so: God cannot be conceiv'd without some Power, for then he must be conceiv'd without Action: Whose then are those products and effects of Power which are visible to us in the World? to whom do they belong? who is the Father of them? God cannot be conceiv'd without a Power suitable to his Nature and Essence; if we imagine him to be of an Infinite Essence, we must imagine him to be of an Infinite Power and Strength.

In particular, I shall shew,

1. The Nature of God's Power.
2. Reasons to prove that God must needs be Powerful.
3. How his Power appears; in Creation, in Government, in Redemption.
4. The Use.

I. What this Power is; or the Nature of it.

1. 1. Power sometimes signifies Authority: And a Man is said to be Mighty and Powerful in regard of his Dominion, and the right he hath to Command multitudes of other persons to take his part; but Power taken for Strength, and Power taken for Authority, are distinct things, and may be separated from one another: Power may be without Authority, as in successful Invasions that have no just foundation: Authority may be without Power; as in a just Prince, expell'd by an unjust Rebellion, the Authority resides in him, though he be over-power'd, and is destitute of Strength to support and exercise that Authorty. The Power of God is not to be understood of his Authority and Dominion, but his Strength to act, and the word in the Text properly signifies Strength.

גבורתו
Sept. δύναμις.

2. This Power is divided ordinarily into Absolute and Ordinate. Absolute, is that Power whereby God is able to do that which he will not do, but is possible to be done: Ordinate, is that Power whereby God doth that which he hath decreed to do, that is, which he hath ordained or appointed to be exercised *. Which are not distinct Powers, but one and the same Power; his Ordinate Power is a part of his Absolute; for if he had not a Power to do every thing that he could will, he might not have a Power to do every thing that he doth will.

* Scaliger, Publ. exercit. 365. §. 8.

The Object of his Absolute Power is all things possible; such things that imply not a contradiction, such that are not repugnant in their own nature to be done: and such as are not contrary to the Nature and Perfections of God to be done: Those things that are repugnant in their own nature to be done are several, as to make a thing which is past not to be past. As for example, The World is created; God could have chose whether he would create the World, and after it is created he hath Power to dissolve it; but after it was created, and when it is dissolved, it will be eternally true, that the World was created, and that it was dissolved: for it is impossible, that that which was once true, should ever be false: If it be true that the World was created, it will for ever be true that it was created, and cannot be otherwise. And also, if it be once true that God hath decreed, 'tis impossible in its own nature to be true that God hath not decreed. Some things are repugnant to the Nature and Perfections of God: As it is impossible for his Nature to die and perish; impossible for him in regard of Truth, to lye and deceive. But of this hereafter; only at present to understand the Object of Gods Absolute Power to be things possible, that is, possible in Nature; not by any strength in themselves, or of themselves; for nothing hath no strength, and every thing is nothing before it comes into being †: So God by his Absolute Power might have prevented the Sin of the fallen Angels, and ſo have preſerved them in their firſt habitation. He might by his Abſolute Power have reſtrained the Devil from tempting of Eve, or reſtrained Her and Adam from ſwallowing the Bait, and joyning hands with the Temptation. By his Abſolute Power, God might have given the reins to Peter to betray his Maſter, as well as to deny him; and employed Judas in the ſame glorious and ſucceſsful Service, wherein he employed Paul. By his Abſolute Power he might have created the World Millions of years before he did create it, and can reduce it into its empty Nothing this moment. This the Baptiſt affirms, when he tells us, That God is able of theſe Stones (meaning the Stones in the Wilderneſs, and not the People which came out to him out of Judea, which were Children of Abraham) to raiſe up Children to Abraham, Mat. 3. 9. that is, there is a poſſibility of ſuch a thing, there is no contradiction in it, but that God is able to do it if he pleaſe.

† Estius in Sent. lib. 1. dist. 43. §. 2.

But now the Object of his Ordinate Power, is all things ordained by him to be done, all things decreed by him; and becauſe of the Divine ordination of things this Power is called Ordinate; and what is thus ordained by him he cannot but do, becauſe of his Unchangeableneſs. Both thoſe Powers are expreſt, Mat. 26. 53, 54. My Father can ſend twelve legions of Angels, there is his Abſolute Power; but how then ſhall the Scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it muſt be? there is his Ordinate Power. As his Power is free from any act of his Will, 'tis called Abſolute; as it is joyned with an act of his Will, it is called Ordinate. His Abſolute Power is neceſſary, and belongs to his Nature; his Ordinate Power is free, and belongs to his Will; a Power guided by his Will; not, as I ſaid before, that they are two diſtinct Powers, both belonging to his Nature, but the latter is the ſame with the former, only it is guided by his Will and Wiſdom.

3. It follows then, That the Power of God is that ability and ſtrength, whereby he can bring to paſs whatſoever he pleaſe. Whatſoever his infinite Wiſdom can direct, and whatſoever the infinite purity of his Will can reſolve. Power, in the primary notion of it, doth not ſignify an act, but an ability to bring a thing into act; 'tis Power, as able to act before it doth actually produce a thing: As God had an Ability to create before he did create, he had Power before he acted that Power without. Power notes the principle of the Action, and therefore is greater than the Act it ſelf. Power exercis'd and diffus'd, in bringing forth and nurſing up its particular Objects without, is unconceivably leſs than that Strength which is Infinite in himſelf, the ſame with his Eſſence, and is indeed Himſelf: By his Power exercis'd he doth whatſoever he actually Wills; but by the Power in his Nature, he is able to do whatſoever he is able to Will. The Will of Creatures may be, and is more extenſive than their Power; and their Power more contracted and ſhortened, than their Will: But, as the Prophet ſaith, His Counſel ſhall ſtand, and he will do all his pleaſure, Iſai. 46. 10. His Power is as great as his Will, that is, whatſoever can fall within the verge of his Will, falls within the compaſs of his Power. Though he will never actually Will this or that, yet ſuppoſing he ſhould Will it, he is able to perform it: So that you muſt in your notion of Divine Power, enlarge it further than to think, God can only do what he hath reſolved to do; but that he hath as Infinite a Capacity of Power to act, as he hath an Infinite Capacity of Will to reſolve. 3.

Beſides, this Power is of that nature, that he can do whatſoever he pleaſes without difficulty, without reſiſtance; it cannot be checked, reſtrained, fruſtrated *. As he can do all things poſſible in regard of the Object, he can do all things eaſily in regard of the manner of acting: What in humane Artificers is Knowledge, Labour, Induſtry, that in God is his Will; his Will works without labour, his Works ſtand forth as he Wills them. Hands and Arms are aſcribed to him for our Conceptions, becauſe our power of acting is diſtinct from our Will; but Gods Power of acting is not really diſtinct from his Will; 'tis ſufficient to the exiſtence of a thing, that God Wills it to exiſt; he can act what he will only by his Will, without any Inſtruments. He needs no Matter to work upon, becauſe he can make ſomething from nothing; all Matter owes it ſelf to his Creative Power: He needs no time to work in, for he can make Time, when he pleaſes to begin to work: He needs no Copy to work by, Himſelf is his own Pattern and Copy in his Works. All created

* Cra. Syntag. lib. 3. cap. 17. p. 611.

Agents

Agents want Matter to work upon, Inſtruments to work with, Copies to work by; Time to bring either the births of their Minds, or the works of their hands to perfection. But the Power of God needs none of theſe things, but is of a vaſt and Incomprehenſible nature, beyond all theſe. As nothing can be done without the compaſs of it, ſo it ſelf is without the compaſs of every created Underſtanding.

4. 4. This Power is of a diſtinct conception from the Wiſdom and Will of God. They are not really diſtinct, but according to our Conceptions. We cannot diſcourſe of Divine things, without obſerving ſome proportion of them with humane, aſcribing unto God the Perfections, ſifted from the Imperfections of our Nature. In Us there are three Orders, of Underſtanding, Will, Power; and accordingly three Acts, Counſel, Reſolution, Execution; which though they are diſtinct in Us, are not really diſtinct in God. In our Conceptions, the Apprehenſion of a thing belongs to the Underſtanding of God; Determination to the Will of God; Direction, to the Wiſdom of God; Execution, to the Power of God. The Knowledge of God regards a thing as poſſible, and as it may be done; the Wiſdom of God regards a thing as fit, and convenient to be done; the Will of God reſolves that it ſhall be done; the Power of God is the application of his Will, to effect what it hath reſolved. Wiſdom is a fixing the Being of things, the meaſures and Perfections of their ſeveral Beings; Power is a conferring thoſe Perfections and Beings upon them. His Power is his ability to act, and his Wiſdom is the Director of his action: His Will orders, his Wiſdom guides, and his Power effects. His Will as the ſpring, and his Power as the worker, are expreſt Pſal. 115. 3. He hath done whatſoever he pleaſed. He commanded, and they were created, Pſal. 140. 5. and all three expreſt, Eph. 1. 11. Who works all things according to the counſel of his own Will: So that the Power of God is a Perfection (as it were) ſubordinate to his Underſtanding and Will, to execute the reſults of his Wiſdom and the orders of his Will; to his Wiſdom, as directing, becauſe he works skilfully, to his Will as moving and applying, becauſe he works voluntarily and freely. The exerciſe of his Power depends upon his Will: His Will is the ſupream cauſe of every thing that ſtands up in Time, and all things receive a Being as he wills them. His Power is but Will perpetually working, and diffuſing it ſelf in the ſeaſon his Will hath fixed from Eternity; 'tis his Eternal Will in perpetual and ſucceſſive ſprings and ſtreams in the Creatures; 'tis nothing elſe but the conſtant efficacy of his Omnipotent Will. This muſt be underſtood of his Ordinate Power: But his Abſolute Power is larger than his Reſolving Will: for though the Scripture tells us, He hath done whatſoever he will; yet it tells us not, that he hath done whatſoever he could: He can do things that he will never do.

Again, his Power is diſtinguiſht from his Will, in regard of the exerciſe of it, which is after the act of his Will: His Will was converſant about Objects, when his Power was not exercis'd about them. Creatures were the objects of his Will from Eternity, but they were not from Eternity the effects of his Power. His purpoſe to Create was from Eternity, but the execution of his Purpoſe was in Time. Now this execution of his Will we call his Ordinate Power: His Wiſdom and his Will are ſuppoſed antecedent to his Power, as the Counſel and Reſolve, as the Cauſe precedes the performance of the Purpoſe, as the Effect.

* Gamachæus. * Some diſtinguiſh his Power from his Underſtanding and Will, in regard that his Underſtanding and Will are larger than his Abſolute Power; for God underſtands Sins, and wills to permit them, but he cannot himſelf do any Evil or unjuſt action, nor have a power of doing it. But this is not to diſtinguiſh that Divine Power, but Impotence; for to be unable to do Evil is the perfection of Power; and to be able to do things Unjuſt and Evil, is a weakneſs, imperfection, and inability. Man indeed wills many things that he is not able to perform, and underſtands many things that he is not able to effect; he underſtands much of the Creatures, ſomething of Sun, Moon, and Stars; he can conceive many Suns, many Moons, yet is not able to create the leaſt Atom: But there is nothing that belongs to Power but God underſtands, and is able to effect. To ſum this up, The Will of God is the Root of all, the Wiſdom of God is the Copy of all, and the Power of God is the framer of all.

5. The

5. The Power of God gives activity to all the other perfections of his Nature, and is of a larger extent and efficacy, in regard of its Objects, than some perfections of his Nature. I put them both together. 5.

1. It contributes Life and Activity to all the other perfections of his Nature. 1.
How vain would be his Eternal Counsels, if Power did not step in to execute them? His Mercy would be a feeble pity, if he were destitute of Power to relieve; and his Justice a slighted scare-Crow, without Power to punish; his promises an empty sound, without Power to accomplish them. As Holiness is the Beauty, so Power is the Life of all his Attributes in their exercise; and as Holiness, so Power is an Adjunct belonging to All, a Term that may be given to All. God hath a powerful Wisdom to attain his Ends, without interruption: He hath a powerful Mercy to remove our Misery; a powerful Justice to lay all Misery upon Offenders: He hath a powerful Truth to perform his Promises; an Infinite Power to bestow Rewards and inflict Penalties. 'Tis to this purpose Power is first put in the two things which the Psalmist had heard, Psal. 62. 11, 12. Twice have I heard, or Two things have I heard; first Power, then Mercy and Justice included in that expression, Thou rendrest to every man according to his work: In every perfection of God he heard of Power. This is the Arm, the Hand of the Deity, which all his other Attributes lay hold on, when they would appear in their Glory; this hands them to the World; by this they act, in this they triumph. Power framed every stage for their appearance in Creation, Providence, Redemption.

2. 'Tis of a larger extent in regard of its Objects, than some other Attributes. 2.
Power doth not alway suppose an Object, but constitutes an Object. It supposeth an Object in the act of Preservation, but it makes an Object in the act of Creation; but Mercy supposeth an Object miserable, yet doth not make it so. Justice supposeth an Object Criminal, but doth not constitute it so: Mercy supposeth him Miserable, to relieve him; Justice supposeth him Criminal, to punish him: but Power supposeth not a thing in real existence, but as possible; or rather, it is from Power that any thing hath a possibility, if there be no repugnancy in the nature of the thing.

Again, Power extends further than either Mercy or Justice. Mercy hath particular Objects, which Justice shall not at last be willing to punish; and Justice hath particular Objects, which Mercy at last shall not be willing to refresh: but Power doth, and alway will extend to the Objects of both Mercy and Justice. A Creature, as a Creature, is neither the object of Mercy nor Justice, nor of Rewarding Goodness: A Creature, as Innocent, is the Object of Rewarding Goodness; a Creature, as Miserable, is the Object of Compassionate Mercy; a Creature, as Criminal, is the Object of Revenging Justice: but all of them the Objects of Power, in conjunction with those Attributes of Goodness, Mercy, and Justice, to which they belong. All the Objects that Mercy, and Justice, and Truth, and Wisdom, exercise themselves about, have a possibility and an actual Being from this perfection of Divine Power. 'Tis Power first frames a Creature in a capacity of Nature for Mercy or Justice, though it doth not give an immediate qualification for the exercise of either. Power makes Man a rational Creature, and so confers upon him a Nature mutable, which may be Miserable by its own fault, and punishable by Gods Justice; or pityable by Gods Compassion, and relievable by Gods Mercy: but it doth not make him Sinful, whereby he becomes miserable and punishable.

Again, Power runs through all the degrees of the states of a Creature. As a thing is possible, or may be made, 'tis the Object of Absolute Power; as it is facible, or ordered to be made, 'tis the Object of Ordinate Power: As a thing is actually made, and brought into Being, it is the Object of preserving Power. So that Power doth stretch out its Arms to all the Works of God, in all their Circumstances, and at all times. When Mercy ceaseth to relieve a Creature, when Justice ceaseth to punish a Creature, Power ceaseth not to preserve a Creature. The Blessed in Heaven, that are out of the reach of punishing Justice, are for ever maintained by Power in that Blessed Condition: the Damned in Hell, that are cast out of the Bosom of Intreating Mercy, are for ever sustained in those remediless Torments by the Arm of Power.

6. This

6. 6. This Power is Originally and Eſſentially in the Nature of God, and not diſtinct from his Eſſence. 'Tis Originally and Eſſentially in God. The ſtrength and power of Great Kings is originally in their People, and managed and ordered by the Authority of the Prince for the common good. Though a Prince hath Authority in his perſon to Command, yet he hath not ſufficient Strength in his perſon, without the aſſiſtance of others, to make his Commands to be obeyed. He hath not a ſingle Strength in his own perſon to conquer Countries and Kingdoms, and increaſe the number of his Subjects: He muſt make uſe of the Arms of his own Subjects, to over-run other places, and yoke them under his Dominion: But the power of all things that ever were, are, or ſhall be, is Originally and Eſſentially in God. 'Tis not deriv'd from any thing without him, as the Power of the greateſt Potentates in the World is: Therefore Pſal. 62. 11. it is ſaid, Power belongs unto God, that is, ſolely, and to none elſe. He hath a power to make his Subjects, and as many as he pleaſes; to create Worlds, to enjoyn Precepts, to execute Penalties, without calling in the ſtrength of his Creatures to his Aid. The Strength that the Subjects of a mortal Prince have, is not deriv'd to them from the Prince, though the exerciſe of it for this or that end, is ordered and directed by the Authority of the Prince: But what ſtrength ſoever any thing hath to act as a Means, it hath from the power of God as Creator, as well as whatſoever Authority it hath to act is from God, as a Rector and Governour of the World. God hath a ſtrength to act without means, and no means can act any thing without his power and ſtrength communicated to them. As the Clouds in the 8*th* Verſe before the Text, are called Gods Clouds, his Clouds: So all the ſtrength of Creatures may be called, and truly is, Gods ſtrength and power in them; a drop of Power ſhot down from Heaven, originally only in God. Creatures have but a little mite of power; ſomewhat communicated to them, ſomewhat kept and reſerved from them, of what they are capable to poſſeſs. They have limited Natures, and therefore a limited Sphere of Activity. Cloaths can warm us, but not feed us; Bread can nouriſh us, but not cloath us. One Plant hath a Medicinal quality againſt one Diſeaſe, another againſt another; but God is the poſſeſſor of Univerſal Power, the common Exchequer of this Mighty Treaſure. He acts by Creatures, as not needing their power, but deriving power to them: What he acts by them, he could act himſelf without them: And what they act as from themſelves, is derived to them from Him through Inviſible Chanels. And hence it will follow, that becauſe Power is Eſſentially in God, more Operations of God are poſſible than are exerted.

† Rationi ſummæ actualitatis eſſentiæ. Suarez. vol. 1. p. 150, & 151.

And as Power is Eſſentially in God, ſo it is not diſtinct from his Eſſence. It belongs to God in regard of the unconceivable excellency and activity of his Eſſence. And Omnipotence is nothing but the Divine Eſſence efficacious ad extra, as his Eſſence as operative, and the immediate principle of Operation: As the power of Enlightning in the Sun, and the power of Heating in the Fire, are not things diſtinct from the Nature of them; but the Nature of the Sun bringing forth Light, and the Nature of the Fire bringing forth Heat. The power of Acting is the ſame with the Subſtance of God, though the Action from that power be terminated in the Creature. If the power of God were diſtinct from his Eſſence, he were then compounded of Subſtance and Power, and would not be the moſt Simple Being. As when the Underſtanding is inform'd in ſeveral parts of Knowledge; it is ſkill'd in the Government of Cities and Countreys, it knows this or that Art: It Learns Mathematicks, Philoſophy, this, or that Science. The Underſtanding hath a power to do this; but this power, whereby it learns thoſe excellent things, and brings forth excellent Births, is not a thing diſtinct from the Underſtanding it ſelf; we may rather call it the Underſtanding powerful, than the Power of the Underſtanding; and ſo we may rather ſay, God powerful, than ſay, the Power of God; Becauſe his power is not diſtinct from his Eſſence.

From both theſe it will follow, That this Omnipotence is incommunicable to any Creature; no Creature can inherit it, becauſe it is a contradiction for any Creature to have the Eſſence of God. This Omnipotence is a peculiar Right of God, wherein no Creature can ſhare with him. To be Omnipotent is to be Eſſen-tially God. And for a Creature to be Omnipotent, is for a Creature to be its own Creator. It being therefore the same with the Essence of the Godhead, it cannot be communicated to the Humanity of Christ, as the Lutherans say it is, without the communication of the Essenc of the Godhead *; for then the Humanity of Christ would not be Humanity, but Deity. If Omnipotence were communicated to the Humanity of Christ, the Essence of God were also communicated to his Humanity, and then Eternity would be communicated. His Humanity then was not given him in Time, his Humanity would be uncompounded, that is, his Body would be no Body, his Soul no Soul. Omnipotence is Essentially in God; 'tis not distinct from the Essence of God, 'tis his Essence, Omnipotent, able to do all things.

tially

7. Hence it follows, That this Power is infinite; Eph. 1. 19. What is the exceeding greatness of his Power, &c. According to the working of his mighty Power. God were not Omnipotent, unless his Power were Infinite; for a Finite Power is a limited Power, and a limited Power cannot effect every thing that is possible. Nothing can be too difficult for the Divine Power to effect: He hath a fulness of Power, an exceeding Strength, above all Humane Capacities; 'tis a Mighty Power †, able to do above all that we can ask or think *: That which he acts, is above the power of any Creature to act. Infinite Power consists in the bringing things forth from nothing. No Creature can imitate God in this Prerogative of Power. Man indeed can carve various Forms, and erect various pieces of Art; but from pre-existent Matter. Every Artificer hath the Matter brought to his hand, he only brings it forth in a new Figure. Chymists separate one thing from another, but create nothing, but sever those things which were before compacted and crudled together: But when God speaks a powerful Word, Nothing begins to be Something: Things stand forth from the Womb of Nothing, and obey his mighty Command, and take what Forms he is pleased to give them. The Creating one thing, though never so small and minute, as the least Fly, cannot be but by an Infinite Power; much less can the producing of such Variety we see in the World. His power is Infinite, in regard it cannot be resisted by any thing that he hath made; nor can it be confin'd by any thing he can Will to make. His Greatness is unsearchable *. 'Tis a Greatness, not of quantity, but quality. The Greatness of his power hath no end: 'Tis a vanity to imagine any limits can be affixed to it, or that any Creature can say, Hitherto it can go, and no further. 'Tis above all Conception, all Inquisition of any Created Understanding. No Creature ever had, nor ever can have that strength of Wit and Understanding, to conceive the extent of his power, and how magnificently he can work.

† Eph. 1. 19.
* Eph. 3. 20.

Psal. 145. 3.

